(B) Much is ſaid concerning this extraordinary hairyneſs of the new-born Eſau: but not to enter into the little uncertain niceties of a ſubject of this kind, it is in general thought, that he had not only hair on his head but all over his body; and that this hair was as ſtrong as briſtles; in ſhort, that he was as rough and ſhaggy as a Satyr (2): and this indeed ſeems to be the meaning of the text, which ſays, he was red all over, like an hairy garment This expreſſion has given birth to a conjecture, that the hair-garments they wore in thoſe days, were of a reddiſh colour, like the hair of Eſau (3). Inſtead of garment the LXX render it δορὰ δασύς a briſtly, ſhaggy ſkin, and the Vulgate has the ſame interpretation. It is thought, that each interpretation has an eye to the faſhion among the Arabs of wearing ſkins (4), as ſome of them do at this day, but they are ſheep ſkins, warm and ſoft, ſown together, the wool being worn innermoſt (5).

(1) Patrick's Comment. upon Gen. xxv. 26. (2) Idem. ubi ſupr. ver. 25. (3) Cleric. in Gen. Loc. ſupra cit. (4) Idem ibid. (5) Thevenot. Part. 1. lib. 2. chap. 32.

quite quite ſpent with faſting and exerciſe, and perceiving that his brother Jacob had cooked ſome pottage, begged he might have ſome of it, being quite empty and ready to die. Jacob taking advantage of his brother's diſtreſs, tells him, if he would make over his birth-right to him, he ſhould have ſome: whereupon Eſau, thinking himſelf at the point of death, and that his birth-right was of no value to himſelf, conſented to Jacob's ungenerous motion, and ſware away his birth-right to him, and accepted of a meſs of pottage in conſideration thereof; and thus is he ſaid to have deſpiſed his birth-right. Upon this occaſion he was called Edom, which ſignifies red, the colour of the pottage which Jacob ſo dearly ſold him (C).

[a] At

(C) We are well apprized of all that has been ſaid by commentators and others upon this great tranſaction between theſe brethren; but it will hardly be expected we ſhould run the ſame lengths they have, nor enter into their infinite repreſentations of this matter; and therefore we ſhall briefly touch upon ſome general points only. The pottage it ſeems was red, or yellowiſh, and made of lentils (5) from Egypt (7); of which there were two ſorts, one darker than the other (8), and both highly prized by the antients, both of the eaſt and weſt. Pliny relates from others, that equanimity is the uſual effect of feeding upon lentils: and another writer ſays, they inſpire with joy (9). It is unlucky they ſhould have kindled ſuch a ſtrife between Eſau and Jacob. To this ſome anſwer, that Eſau had never ſeen any afore (10); and this is pretended from Eſau's ſaying only, give me ſome of that red, red, as it is in the original: but this is at firſt ſight very unlikely to be true; for doubtleſs theſe lentils muſt have been a food he and the reſt of the family were well acquainted with; ſo that what the antients held concerning the harmonious effects lentils have upon the mind, muſt fall to the ground But to leave this ſubject, let us take a view of the birth-right which was exchanged for theſe lentils. The chief privilege of the Birth-right, ſay ſome, was the inheriting a double portion of the father's eſtate (11): others annex the prieſthood thereto, and ſuppoſe, that Eſau's cloaths, with which Rebekah clad Jacob, were his ſacerdotal veſtments (12); but this notion is ſtrongly repugned by what ſtands on record concerning Cain and Abel (13). Thirdly, a ſuperiority over the reſt of the children is thought to have been the principal prerogative of the Birth-right. Again, the chief privilege of the Birth-right might have been to challenge the particular bleſſing of the dying parent.

(6) Gen xxv. ver 30, 34. (7) St. Auguſt, in Pſal. xlvi. (8) Plin. Hiſtor. Nat. l. 18. c. 31. (9) Auctor Geopon. lib. 2. c. 35. p. 71. (10) See Patrick's Comment. ubi ſupr. ver. 30. (11) ver. 31. (12) Lightfoot Obſervationes in Geneſin. c. xxvii. (13) Gen. iv.

To

[a] At the age of forty years, he gave great trouble and sorrow to his parents by marrying among the daughters of Heth; he took two of them, Judith the daughter of Beeri, and Bashemath the daughter of Elon[b]; but this wore off in time, and he was received into favour with his father again. Isaac now grown old and very dim-sighted called Esau to him, and told him, that he knew not how few the remainder of his days were to be, and therefore should be glad if he would take his weapons, his quiver and his bow, and go out and get him venison, and dress it for him in a savoury manner, as he knew how, that his soul might bless him before he died (D). Esau

[a] Gen. xxv. 24—34 [b] xxvi. 34, 35.

To conclude upon this head, the prerogatives of the primogeniture were not confined to the person of the son, on whom the blessing was conferred, so as to die with him, but descended to his posterity. So the promises made to Jacob in his blessing were not fulfilled in him, but in his children after him. Such was the Pottage, and such the Birth-right, which were set in opposition to each other. The Hebrew word חלעיטני halhiteni, which Esau uses in addressing Jacob, occurs no where but in this place, and therefore there is some doubt about the true interpretation of it. The LXX render it γεῦσόν με fac me gustare, which is not thought earnest enough for a hungry man. Some, feed me with it, as if he was so thoroughly tired that he could not lift his own hand to his head. Others, give me a good deal of it, which a very hungry man might say very naturally; and this is defended by the Samaritan reading, and from the affinity of an Arabic word, which has some relation to it in sound and signification. From the same also it may be supposed, that he asked for the thickest of the Pottage. Considering the whole transaction between Jacob and Esau upon this occasion as merely human, the former was guilty of a great breach of hospitality and brotherly affection at least, and cannot be excused, as most, even divines, apprehend (14).

(D) It is thought that Isaac only sent out Esau by way of probation; that is, to try whether he had good success, or not, thereby to satisfy himself in a scruple he had whether he should bless him or no. For as by his former ill success he was reduced to the necessity of making away his birth right; so now, if the same ill luck attended him, he should take it for a sign that the blessing was to depart from him. And though he had pronounced the great blessing over Jacob, yet when he perceived that Esau had brought home the venison he sent him for, he deemed it a tacit expression of the will of God, that Esau should have his blessing also, and he blessed him accordingly (15).

(14) Vide Cleric. in Genes. ubi supr. (15) Vide Lightfoot Observat. in Genes. cap. xxvii.

obeyed,

obeyed, but while he was abſent, his mother; who heard the words which paſſed between his father and him, dreſſed her ſon Jacob in Eſau's cloaths (E), and, preparing a diſh of ſavoury meat, ſent him in with it to his father, who pronounced the irrevocable bleſſing over Jacob. Thus was Iſaac deceived, and Eſau ſupplanted, who coming in with his veniſon juſt after Jacob was gone, Iſaac in a great agony told him he had been circumvented by his brother, and that he neither could nor would recal the bleſſing. When Eſau heard this he wept bitterly, and upbraided his brother with his unnatural and ſubdolous dealing, firſt, in extorting his birth-right from him and now in robbing him of his bleſſing. However, Eſau did ſo far prevail with his tears, and his ſorrowful preſſing intreaties, that his father bleſſed him alſo to this effect; that his dwelling ſhould be the fatneſs of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above (F); that he ſhould live by the ſword, and ſerve his brother, but that he ſhould ſhake off the yoke at laſt.

It

(E) Concerning theſe cloaths, it is ſaid they had been worn by Adam in his miniſtry, and that they retained the ineffable fragrancy of paradiſe (16). Others only ſuppoſe, that they were laid up in aromatic flowers, or other perfumes, to preſerve them from moths, and to refreſh the brain, when put on; and that it is groundleſs in the Jews to imagine they deſcended from Adam to Noah, and ſo downwards to Abraham's family (17). Beſides, it may be aſked how it came to paſs, that Iſaac could part with ſo precious a relique to his ſon, during his own life-time? Perhaps this is too early to ſuppoſe there was any ſuch delicacy in apparel; but this is obviated by the near neighbourhood of Arabia (18). By the ſmell of the field ſome may underſtand a ſcent more manly than the ſteams of a perfume, eſpecially as Eſau was ſo great a hunter, and perpetually in the field; but that expreſſion is ſuppoſed to have a different import, and to mean, that his cloaths were exquiſitely ſcented; and this ſeems to be confirmed from the Samaritan reading, which after the word שדה Shadeh a field, has מלא full; and ſo the LXX have rendered it ὡς ὀσμὴ ἀγροῦ πλήρους and ſo the Vulgate has it, Sicut odor agri pleni; as the ſmell of a full field, or as it is ſupplied, as the ſmell of a field full of ſweet herbs and flowers.

(F) Some give this part of Eſau's bleſſing a quite contrary turn, and will have it, that his lot was to be in a barren land; and that his living ſhould be by rapine and violence; and accordingly, that Edom was an ungrateful ſoil, not refreſhed with timely rains (19). The interpretation of the LXX, with a trifling variation of ἀπὸ, (16) Vide Braun. de Veſtib. Hebr. ſacerd. c. 4. (17) See Patrick's Comment. upon Gen. c xxvii. 15. (18) Vide Cleric. in Gen. c. xxvii. 27. (19) Idem. ubi ſupr. ver. 39.

It was with a heavy diſcontented mind that he heard his lot, and his reſentment wrought ſo ſtrongly upon him, that at firſt he determined to kill Jacob as ſoon as their father ſhould die; which coming to the knowledge of Rebekah, ſhe ſent Jacob away to Padan-Aram, under pretence of getting him a wife there from among her own kindred [c]. But Eſau cooled again, and generouſly forgot all that had paſt, and finding that Iſaac and Rebekah had a great averſion to the daughters of Canaan, he went over to Iſhmael, and took his daughter, Mahalath the ſiſter of Nebaioth (G), adding her to the wives he had already taken [d]; and removed with his family to mount Seir, not ſo much with a deſign to ſettle there perhaps, as to ſerve a preſent conveniency. The ſpot he occupied in this country took his name, and was called the field of Edom [e], and in a few years he became a very conſiderable perſon.

FOR, when news came to him hither, that his brother Jacob was on his return from Padan-Aram, he went out to meet him on the road with a train of four hundred followers, by making it either a prepoſiton or an adverb, may be taken both ways. But, on the other hand, it is obſerved, that if we follow our own tranſlation, which is directly in the ſenſe of the Vulgate, and in the ſenſe St. Hierom took it, there will be ſtill a wide difference between Jacob's bleſſing and Eſau's; that in the latter there is no mention made of corn and wine; no ſuch dominion promiſed as in Jacob's; and that laſtly, whatſoever fatneſs was in the ſoil of his country, it did not laſt long (20). Nevertheleſs, Moſes ſeems to tell us, that the land of Edom was not ſo deſtitute as ſome may imagine; when he promiſes the king of Edom, that if he would permit the children of Iſrael to paſs through his country, they ſhould hurt neither the fields nor the vineyards (21): the fields may perhaps have been rather corn fields than paſture; and if this be true, the Edomites had their corn and wine too. As to what Malachi ſays of the infertility and deſolation of the kingdom of Edom (22), that muſt, we think, be rather attributed to the cruel effects of their unfortunate wars, than to any failure in the uſual product of the ſoil.

[c] Gen. xxviii. [d] Gen. xxviii. 6—9. [e] Gen. xxxii. 3, in the Margin.

(G) It is obſerved from hence, that Eſau paid no regard to the divine revelation, or he would not have taken the deſcendant of a bond-woman [Hagar], who could not inherit the promiſes made to Abraham and Iſaac (23).

(20) Patrick's Comment ubi ſupr. ver. 39. (21) Numb. xx. 17—20. (22) Malach. i. 3. (23) See Patrick upon Gen. xxviii. 9.

with

with which he meant to honour and assist his brother, and not inject fear into him as he did. The interview was very tender on both sides, but especially Esau, unmindful of what most men would ever have retained, accosted Jacob with tears of joy and the most melting affection: he nobly refused the presents wherewith his brother would needlessly have bribed him to a reconciliation, and pressed him to hold on his way to mount Seir, that they might be neighbours and live together; and when Jacob artfully waved this invitation, under pretence of the tediousness of his marches for the sake of the children and cattle, and seemed to say he would follow him; Esau desired he would let him at least leave some of his followers behind to assist him and conduct him on his way; but this being rejected, he with reluctance left Jacob behind him, and took the presents away which had been utterly forced upon him by his timorous brother (H); who, instead of

(H) It appears very plain from what now passed between Esau and Jacob at this meeting, that the former was not so great a reprobate, or naturally so bad a man, as some have unreasonably represented him. We had resolved to touch upon this matter in the behalf of Esau; but finding it generously done to our hands by a very worthy divine, we shall content ourselves with the substance of what he says: Esau was a plain, generous, and honest Man; nor does he seem to have been more wicked than the other men of his age and times. His generous and good temper appears by his affectionate deportment towards his brother, and his speedy and utter oblivion of the injuries and slights he received from him: and though St. Paul calls him the prophane Esau, and says he was hated by God, it cannot thence be gathered that he was a wicked man, or that God punished him for an immoral life. 1. This sentence could not extend to his posterity, and is not said to be founded upon his actions. 2. God's hatred of Esau, was not a hatred which induced him to punish him with an evil; for he was as happy in the blessings of this life as Abraham, Isaac, or Jacob, if not more. His children became masters of the land of their possession much sooner than the Israelites; and God was pleased to command the Israelites not to disturb them in their rights. And if his earthly felicity was such why should we despair of his being a partaker of the heavenly? 3. If he was excluded from being the heir of the blessing, so was Lot and Job, and other good and virtuous men. 4. St. Paul means no more than to shew the Jews, that God had all along bestowed the favours which led to the Messiah on whom he pleased; to Abraham not to Lot; to Jacob, not to Esau; to the Gentiles, not to the Jews. 5. Though Esau be called βέβηλος, or prophane, he is never called ἀσεβὴς, or ἁμαρτωλὸς, wicked, or immoral. So that the only defect in his character of following him, deceived him once more, and went another way [f]. Esau remained in Seir till he heard that his father Isaac was either dead, or upon the point to die, and went to Mamre, where he assisted Jacob at the funeral of their deceased parent, and took possession of his inheritance; for his birth-right was a spiritual prerogative, and no ways related to his father's temporal estate; by this addition to his former store, and Jacob being also very rich, and master of much cattle, they perceived it would be next to impossible to enjoy such large possessions, together in a country where they were both strangers; and therefore, as Abraham and Lot had done before, they parted. Esau returning to the country of Seir, being an hundred and twenty years old, married Aholibamah a daughter of the country, but originally of Canaan [g]; and from thenceforward took such measures as might be most conducive to the good and peaceable settlement of his descendants in this country.

Their country.

Now, though Esau might have no positive knowledge of it, yet GOD designed this land for an inheritance to his line [h], as he did that of Canaan for the line of Jacob: and this naturally leads us to give the best description we can of the realm so ordained for them; which we shall here do once for all. This country was originally, so far as we know, inhabited by a people called Horites, or Horim, whether so named from one Hor, or Hori [i], which was a name amongst them, is what we know no more, than whether mount Hor was so denominated from him, as some think [k]. It was called the mount or land of Seir from one Seir an Horite, and not from the hairyness of Esau, who came there long after, as Josephus dreamed [l]. In the Samaritan version it is called Gablah; by Jonathan's Targum Gobal; and by Josephus Gobolitis; which several appellations are derived from Geboul, signifying a border; for it did border upon the land of Canaan on the south; racter is, that he does not seem to have been so mindful of the promises made to his family as Jacob was; from whence, and from his temper, it appears, that he was not quite so fit to be the heir of the mercies peculiar to his family (24).

[f] Ibid. & xxxiii. [g] Ubi supr. xxxv, xxxvi. [h] Deut. ii, 5. Josh. xxiv. 4. [i] Gen. xxxvi. 22, 30. [k] See WELLS's Historic. Geogr. of the Old Test. vol. 1. p. 533. [l] JOSEPH. Antiq. lib. 1. c. 20.

(24) Shuckford's Connect. of the Sacr. and Profane History of the World, vol. 2. p. 198 & seq.

but the extent of the antient country of Seir we take not upon us to say; and therefore can mention no other boundary. When the children of Edom seized on this country, it grew to be universally known under the name of Edom; but we cannot gather, that they extended their limits till the time they erected their monarchy, when they built Elath and Esiongeber, as is likely, on the eastern shore of the Arabian gulf; but in the days of Moses no part of their dominion abutted upon that gulf[m]. When the antient kingdom of Edom was in its meridian, it was, as we think, bounded on the north by the land of Canaan and the Salt-sea, or lake Asphaltites, on the east by Midian, on the south by the Arabian gulf, or the Red-sea, so called from the jurisdiction this people exercised over it, as is most likely (I); on the west it was bounded by Amalek.

This

[m] See Numb. xx. 17—21. Deut. ii. 1. & seq.

(I) The Red sea, as we commonly call it, is more properly termed the Arabian gulph. By the Hebrews it was called Yam Suf, the weedy, or flaggy sea; by the Arabians Bahr Alkolzum, or the sea of Kolzum, a small town at the northermost end of it. But by the antient inhabitants of the adjacent countries it was called the sea of Edom, because it washed the southern skirts of the land of Edom. The Greeks, finding that the Phœnicians called it Yam Edom, mistook the word Edom to signify an appellative instead of a proper name; and therefore rendered it ἐρυθρὰ θαλάσσα, Mare Rubrum, and thence we have the Erythrean, or Red-sea (25). Others (26), however, derive the name from a certain king of the east, in, or towards, Persia, called Erythras; but by the Red sea they manifestly understand what we call the Indian ocean; and therefore we cannot think with Sir Isaac Newton (27), that this same Erythras is the Edom or Esau of scripture (28), and that he was actually the first that invented the vessels [rates] in which they navigated that sea. Agatharcides expatiates on this, and will have it, that the Indian ocean was called the Red sea; not because the Arabian gulph belonging to it had hills on the west of it, which when the sun shone intensely upon them, looked somewhat like burning coals; on the east he says indeed there were some red hills, and the same there are at this day; but this, he says, was not the reason why the ocean was called Red: nor was it because the sun in those parts, instead of darting forth bright and clear rays, shone

(25) See Prideaux's Connection of the Old and New Test. Part 1. Book 1. p. 10. (26) Plin. l. 6. c. 28. Strab. lib. 16. p. 766. Pompon. Mel. lib. 3. cap. 8. (27) Chronol. of antient Kingdoms amend. p. 211. (28) Apud Phot. in Biblioth. p 1, 322.

out

THIS tract is very hilly and mountainous, and great part of it desert. It has few or no open streams, but latent springs of water sufficient for the use of the inhabitants, who know where to find them [n]. Corn and wine, nevertheless, it seems to have antiently abounded with in some degree [o]; so that Esau may have enjoyed the fat of the land (K); and besides, his posterity, by their situation, were able to supply and enrich themselves with the produce of some of the finest and most fruitful soils on earth, by means of their commerce with foreigners by the Red-sea, in those days the greatest and most considerable trading water in the world. Amalekitis is by some reckoned to have been a part or province of Edom [p] (L), out only with a sanguine light, which gave a bloody hue to the surface of the sea; but he will have it derived from one Erythras, an obscure and fabulous prince, concerning whom he tells a very absurd and puerile story, with a very grave air. From this it appears, that the Erythrean, or Red-sea of the antients is the Indian ocean of our days, and that what we call the Red sea was considered as a branch of it.

[n] THEVENOT's Travels, Part 1. c. 32. SANDYS, Book 2. p. 107. [o] See Numb. ubi supra. [p] Vide Histor. Jul. in Edom. JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 11. c. 1.

(K) By modern travellers we are told, that this country at present is nothing less than a fertile spot (29). But it must bear a widely different face now that it is only frequented by the Bedouins, or wandering Arabs, from what it did when occupied by a settled nation, who doubtless must with great pains and industry have prepared the soil for propagation: but we have spoken of this already (30).

(L) Josephus divides Edom into Gobolitis and Amalekitis (31); but this is a division which cannot be accurately spoken of, while the Edomites and Amalekites were independent states. The habitation of the Edomites is also frequently called Gebalene (32); and especially by Eusebius, who uses the appellations Gibalane and Idumea indifferently to denote the same place (33). Some later writers have torn the country asunder by a very violent and needless rent, placing one Edom in the land of Seir on the other side of Jordan to the north, and leaving the other in the place where the land of Seir only certainly stood; but this is a notion very solidly confuted by the best approved of the latest geographers.

(29) Sandys, Book 2. p. 107. (30) See before in the Notes, p. 126, 127. (31) Joseph. Antiq. l. 11. c. 1. (32) Stephan. ad voces Γάβαλα & Γεβαλα. (33) In Onomast. urbium & locorum ad voces, Γεβιά, Σηειρ, Ἰάθερ.

but however it was considered in later days, it certainly was not so when the kingdom of Amalek flourished; and therefore we shall treat thereof separately, in the next section. We are positively told, that Job's country, the land of Uz, lies within the limits of the antient Edom [q]; but some very noted geographers [r] are unwilling to grant it, for reasons which are not altogether so valid as might be wished; but they are too obscure and uncertain to be discussed here.

Now the cities and remarkable places of Edom were Teman, which being mentioned for the wisdom and counsel of its inhabitants [s], was, perhaps, the royal seat: The country around it was called Temani; of this part was Eliphaz, one of Job's friends [t]. Dedan, a city of great dealings with Tyre; some of the commodities are mentioned, ebony, ivory, and fine clothes [u]; it seems to have been situated in an extremity of the country opposite to Teman [w]. Bozrah [x], Bosor, Bazrah and the like, are names of another city of Edom; its name implies a fortress, which has made some imagine, that it was the capital of the kingdom [y]. By the manner of the prophet's introducing it, it may be guessed to have been a considerable place in his days. Selah or Petra being words of the same signification, the one in greek, the other in hebrew, it is thought, the one is a translation of the other, and that they both intend one and the same city [z]. If this be right, it stood on a level spot of ground, encompassed all round by steep rocks and craggy precipices, and within this inclosure were many gardens and rich springs; but beyond it the country was a desert [a]. That it was thus naturally fortified, appears by several authors [b]. By one it is called the chief place of the Nabatæans [c], whom in another place he calls Idumeans [d], that is Edomites; and says that it was three or four days journey distant from Jericho. A second author also calls it a city of the Nabatæans [e]. A third places it near mount Hor [f], and calls it the capital of Arabia [g]. A fourth seats it ten miles west-

[q] Augustr. de Civit. Dei, l. 18. c. 47. See also Lament. iv. 21. [r] Vide Cellarii Notit. Orb. Ant. & Relandi Palæst. Illustr. [s] Jerem. xlix. 7, 20. [t] Job ii. 11. [u] Jerem. ubi supr. ver. 8. Ezek xxvii. 15. 20. [w] Idem xxv. 13. in the Margin. [x] Isa. lxiii. 1. [y] See Fuller's Pisgah sight, lib. 4. c. 2. [z] See Prideaux's Connection of the Old and New Test. Part 1. Book viii. p. 544 Fuller ubi supr. [a] Strabo, lib. 16 p. 779. [b] Joseph. Ant. lib. 14. c. 9. Diod. Sic. lib. 19. p. 722. [c] Strabo, ubi supr. [d] Idem ibid. p. 760. [e] Diod. Sic. ubi supr. [f] Joseph. Antiq. lib. 4. c. 4. [g] Lib. xiv. c. 25.

ward

ward of Elath [h], a sea-port on the Red-sea belonging to the Edomites. Moreover, this kingdom had two very eminent sea-ports, Elath and Esiongeber, on the shores of the Arabian gulf, or Red-sea [i]. Esiongeber proved an unfortunate harbour, being rocky and very difficult, deriving its name from a ridge of rocks it had, which was thought to resemble the back-bone of a man [k], and growing at length infamous for the many wrecks which befel the shipping that frequented it, it was deserted very early; and therefore its situation is not exactly known, any further than that it stood very near to Elath. This [meaning Elath] was a fairer and more commodious haven, and for a long time was a station for the shipping, which was sent from these parts into the Indies. It is also called Eloth, Aela, Ailat, Elat, Elana, from whence you have the Elanitic gulf wherein it stood; and by the Arabians Ailah to this day (M). Upon the decay of Esiongeber, it grew into great credit and resort, and was thought worthy [h] EUSEB. Onomast. urb. & loc. ad vocem Πέτρα. [i] 1 Kings ix. 26. [k] See PRIDEAUX's Connect. of the Old and New Test. part 1. book 1. p. 7. and PATRICK's Comment, upon the above cited passage of kings.

(M) Ailah, or Elath is near the road the Egyptian pilgrims take, when they go to Mecca. In the fourteenth Century there were considerable remains of it standing. At that time an Egyptian governor resided in a tower there: there were no fields about it. There was formerly a castle which stood out in the sea, but that is destroyed. Our author calls it a small city, and adds, that it had belonged to those Jews who were turned into apes and swine (34). Elath and Esiongeber grew at last to be ambigui juris, according to Sir John Marsham (35). But not to anticipate what we may have to say upon this matter, let it for the present suffice that we observe the Edomites to have been so well able to defend the right they claimed of the empire of the Red-sea, that the Egyptians were anciently unable to dispute it with them, and were obliged to submit to such conditions as the Edomites were pleased to allow them, which are said to have been hard enough; for they were allowed but one vessel of burthen wherewith to sail to the Indies, and not so much as one galley (36). Elath was particularly so considerable a place, as to give name to the eastermost of the gulphs which terminate the Red sea, and had the famous metropolis of Petra, ten miles to the westward of it (37), as is said from very good authority, which has been followed by some geographers of first note.

(34) Abulfeda in Descrip. Arab. (35) Canon. Chron. secul. xiv. p. 367. (36) See Vol. I. p. 489. Hist. de Huet, du Comm. & de la Navig. des Anc. c. 5. (37) Euseb. Onom. Urbium & Locorum ad vocem Αιλα.

of being contended for; and antiently changed its masters several times; it was wrested from the Edomites by David [l], it was afterwards forced from the house of David by the Edomites when they rebelled against Jehoram [m]; Azariah got it from them again [n]; but his grandson lost it to the king of Syria [o]; the Syrians held it a long time, and after some revolutions and changes under the Seleucidæ and the Ptolemies, it fell to the share of the Romans. Remarkable places in this country were farther, mount Hor where Aaron died, and the valley of Salt, a spot on which the Edomites were twice defeated with a great slaughter; and had its name, probably, from its salt springs or the salt found there [p].

Now though the name of this kingdom is frequently rendered Idumæa, and Idumea, as in our version of the bible; yet when that name occurs in the prophane and the more modern writers, it must not be understood of the antient Edom, which, losing its old name, was comprehended under the general appellation of Arabia Petræa, and the third Palestine. The southern part of Canaan came to be called Idumæa, and the whole nation of the Jews Idumæans sometimes. Whence this arose will in part be seen in the close of this section, and more amply in the history of the Jews.

Forms of Government.

To return to the antient Edom. How it was in its more early times governed is a matter of doubt, and being so, we can only embrace the most likely opinion. The Horites were at first ruled by patriarchs, or heads of families, and after that by kings which were elected into the regal office. This elective kingdom was some how or other interrupted and dissolved, and the antient form took place again, the governors being stiled dukes, who seem to have succeeded in right of birth. Perceiving the imperfections of this kind of administration, they coalesced under one king, thereby to be the better enabled to withstand an invasion from the Israelites when they came out of Egypt. It was governed afterwards by Edomitish kings quite down to the days of David, who subdued the kingdom; and this second monarchy seems to have been hereditary. These are the various forms of government, which seemed to have been exercised in the land of Seir and Edom, by the Horites and the Edomites, as will be seen in the course of this section.

Their character.

The character we have of the Edomites is, that they were a bold and daring people, fond of broils and tumults, which they as much delighted in, as others in the softening pleasures of

[l] 2 Sam. viii. 14. [m] 2 Kings viii. 20. [n] Ibid. xiv. 22. [o] Ibid. xvi. 6. [p] Vide Salmas. Exercit. Plinian. Cap. 35. p. 613, 614.

luxury

luxury [q]. But this, we muſt tell you, is peculiarly the character of the later Edomites, who migrated into Judæa; nor ſhould we have inſerted it here, but that it ſeems to be of a piece with the genius of the people, as their great anceſtor Iſaac foretold it. However, though courage was to be one of their characteriſtics, and, perhaps, the chief, yet we are under no neceſſity to believe it to have been of ſo brutal a ſort as Joſephus repreſents above: for as they were, doubtleſs, a trading nation, it is incompatible to ſuppoſe they were a neſt of robbers and incendiaries, fewer ſuch being ever found among thoſe that are addicted to commerce, and conſequently enjoy all the world can afford them, than among lazy and ſlothful nations, and ſuch as condemn induſtry out of a vain and ridiculous notion of honour. For theſe laſt are ſure to be mean, and beggarly, rude, ignorant and baſe; the former, quite the reverſe, flouriſh in plenty and eaſe, are learned, ingenious, and brave. What therefore their anceſtor foretold of them, that they ſhould live by the ſword, perhaps, imports no more, than that they ſhould maintain their rights, whether natural or uſurped, with a high hand and a jealous eye; as all thoſe who have claimed the empire of the ſea, as they did, have for ever done. Thus for want of due authority, have we attempted the character of the Edomites, by drawing a parallel between them and others of later, and our own times. And, abating the difference of climates which works a difference of tempers, we cannot be much out of the way in comparing them with other trading ſtates, that flouriſh within our knowledge, who are far from living upon plunder and rapine; and in this we ſhall be more confirmed, when we come to view their behaviour towards Moſes; when, though they refuſed him admittance into their territories, yet they were ready to traffic with him, and ſupply him with neceſſaries, as we ſhall ſee anon. The Edomites, whoſe character Joſephus draws above, were a degenerate race, quite aliens to the liberties and noble ſpirit of their forefathers, as we may not unjuſtly ſuppoſe.

THEIR arts and ſciences were doubtleſs great, conſidering the time; many, and well-perfected; and though perhaps there may be no neceſſity to ſuppoſe, as the excellent Sir Iſaac Newton has done, that they were the parents of thoſe amiable ſiſters; yet may we ſafely pronounce, that they were not much, if any thing at all behind hand with the moſt antient learned nations. The invention and uſe of conſtellati- Arts and ſciences.

[q] JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 13.

ons appear by the Book of Job [r], to have been known among the Edomites, among whom he dwelt [s], a rare instance of the early progress of astronomy, if we suppose Job to have ever existed, or the book it self to be of such antient date as many think. Writing is there mentioned [t] also, and ships [u], and many hints given sufficient to confirm us in a belief, that the secrets and beauties of nature, morality, and much sublime and truly-useful knowledge were cultivated among them. Nor is there wanting very ample evidence from prophane authors to make this out, as we shall take proper opportunities of shewing: and indeed it has been a common opinion of the learned, that great veneration is due to their memory on that account.

Religion. Concerning their religion we are much in the dark. They at first were right in their belief and practice, as they were descended from Isaac, and used circumcision; but they by degrees forgot all, erred into idolatry (for idols it seems they had *), and disused circumcision; but in the end coalesced with the Jews, and were ever after considered as but one nation with them in divine matters, as will be seen at the decay of their state.

History. We now resume the history of Esau the father of this people. The number of his family and domestics when he fixed his dwelling here is uncertain, though probably very numerous. According to the hypothesis [w], which in this very obscure case we think ourselves obliged to adopt, he settled here under one of the Horite kings; and therefore he lived in a private manner, and was never considered any more than as the chief of his own house; and thence is dignified with no particular title by Moses. Concerning this matter, we cannot but think with bishop Cumberland, that the Horites were at first ruled by several independent chiefs or patriarchs, till they were overpowered by Chedorlaomer king of Elam, who swept them before him, with the neighbouring nations. To secure themselves therefore from so great an evil for the time to come, they united under a more stable and perfect kind of government, and formed themselves into an elective kingdom, and their kings were,

Bela, the son of Beor: the name of his city was Dinhabah.

[r] Chap. ix. 9. [s] St. Augustr. de civitat. Dei ubi supr. Lamenta. ubi supr. [t] See before, p. 112, (B). [u] Job. c. ix. 26 * See 2 Chron. xxv. in the Argument. [w] See Bishop Cumberland's Origin. Gent. Antiq.

Jobab,

JOBAB, the ſon of Zerah of Bozrah. From a ſimilitude of names he has been taken for the holy and patient Job, whoſe hiſtory we might enlarge on, were it not too well known, or too uncertain for us to inſert here, which, for ought we are ſure of, is as proper a place as any other. But though we are well furniſhed with help towards this obſcure task, and might, to ſhew that we have read almoſt every thing neceſſary to qualify us for the undertaking, introduce a cloud of commentators and interpreters; yet we ſhall forbear, becauſe it will naturally lead us into a very dry diſcourſe, and be perhaps very diſſatisfactory to ſome, and very diſguſtful to others. Wherefore we will only ſay, that, according to ſome, Job was a real, according to others, an imaginary perſon. Some ſay the book was written by himſelf in Arabic, and tranſlated by Moſes into Hebrew; others, that Moſes compoſed it originally while he was in Midian; others again, that it was originally written by Ezekiel: Some hold it to be a genuine and ſincere hiſtory: others, that it is a dramatic entertainment, or a pious fable for the inſtruction of men in the great duty of reſignation to GOD. Some place his abode in, or upon the skirts of, the antient kingdom of Edom; others upon the banks of the Euphrates (N). Some reckon him among the moſt early of Eſau's deſcendants, others bring him down to the days of Joſiah. Having thus given a tranſitory view of the great miſt which hangs over the ſtory of Job, we proceed.

HUSHAM of the land of Temani.

HADAD, the ſon of Bedad, he ſmote Midian in the field of Moab, and the name of his city was Avith.

SAMLAH of Maſrekah; in his reign, or in that of his ſucceſſor, came Eſau, as we think, into this country.

SAUL of Rehoboth.

BAAL-HANAN, the ſon of Achbor.

(N) Some have not ſcrupled to ſay, that Job's diſtemper was the foul diſeaſe; for indeed he might have been ſmitten with that as well as with any other; ſo that in this caſe there is no reaſon to believe that he drew it on himſelf. He is the patron of all thoſe that labour under that filthy affliction within the pale of the Roman church; but ſhe revered him before the ſaid diſeaſe was known in Europe. As to that miſtake about the ſepulchre without the walls of Conſtantinople, and that other, that the Turks take him to have been the chief judge of Solomon's court; they have been fully detected. (38).

(38) Bayle Art. Job.

Hadar; the name of his city was Pau, and his wife's name was Mehetabel.

Under the three laſt, or four laſt of theſe kings, did Eſau and his family live as ſojourners in a ſtrange land, as Abraham and Iſaac their forefathers had done before them in other parts. This monarchy, which was plainly elective, came ſome how or other to be interrupted, and broken into ſeveral petty and independent principalities or dukedoms; and, ſeeing that the poſterity of Eſau exceed in the number of their dukes, it cannot be very incongruous to ſuppoſe, that they had the largeſt ſhare in bringing about this revolution. It is very accurately obſerved by a late and learned writer, that the firſt dukes of the Edomites are not ſtiled dukes of Edom, but dukes in the land of Edom [x]. From whence we gather, that the grand-children of Eſau, grown ſtrong and potent, could no longer brook ſubjection to a ſtrange line, and would govern themſelves; ſo that now the whole country became divided into ſeveral diſtinct juriſdictions, and under ſeveral petty princes, called dukes, both of the poſterity of Eſau, and of that of Seir, who are all collateral. The dukes in the land of Edom were, 1. Duke Teman; 2. duke Omar; 3. duke Zepho; 4. duke Kenaz; 5. duke Korah; 6. duke Gatam; 7. duke Amalek. Theſe ſeven were the ſons of Eliphaz the firſt-born of Eſau. 8. Duke Nahath; 9. duke Zerah; 10. duke Shammah; 11. duke Mizzah: theſe four were the ſons of Reuel, the ſecond ſon of Eſau; 12. Duke Ieuſh; 13. duke Jaalam; 14. duke Korah: theſe three were the ſons of Eſau himſelf, begot by him after he was an hundred and twenty years old, on Aholibamah his laſt wife. All theſe were the dukes in the land of Edom; that is, in that part poſſeſſed by the Edomites, and thence called after them. At the ſame time were ſeven dukes over the poſſeſſion of the deſcendants of Seir. 1. Duke Lotan; 2. duke Shobal; 3 duke Zibeon; 4. duke Anah; he found mules (O) in the wilderneſs, as he fed

[x] Shuckford's Connect. of the ſacred and prophane Hiſt. Book 8. p 192.

(O) Concerning this remarkable event there is ſome variety of judgment and interpretation. The Hebrew word is הימים bayemim, which the LXX, not knowing how to render, have retained, and accordingly have ιαμειμ, and ſo have Theodotion, Aquila, and Symmachus. From St. Jerom we have ſeveral traditions of the Jews concerning this matter. Some thought, that by the above word fed the aſſes of Zibeon his father; 5. duke Diſhon; 6. duke Ezer; 7. duke Diſhan *. Now ſeeing that the dukes of Eſau's line in the land of Edom, being more in number, may have been greater in might than thoſe of the Horites in the land of Seir, it ſeems not unnatural to ſuppoſe, that theſe laſt were now expelled by the former, who ſeized on the land by the word muſt be underſtood ſeas, or large waters; for the ſame letters are uſed for the word which bears that import; and will have it, that while he fed his father's aſſes in the wilderneſs, he found a collection of waters, or ſeas, according to the Hebrew idiom, an uncommon diſcovery in a deſert, and therefore worthy of notice. Some would have it to mean hot waters in the Phœnician tongue. Some again, that he ſuffered wild aſſes to cover his tame ones, and that the ſwifteſt breed of thoſe creatures, called Yamim, ſprang from thence: and moſt of the Rabbins teach, that he, firſt of all men, ſuffered aſſes to cover the mares in the wilderneſs; whence the unnatural breed of mules were ſhewn to the world. Now theſe interpretations, or ſuppoſitions, are thus combated. 1. To make the Hebrew word mean ſeas, it muſt be altered in the reading contrary to all authority and likelihood: and beſides, as the Hebrews call great ponds or lakes, ſeas, it is no wonder that he found out ſuch congregations of water; but there is nothing of that kind that can be conſidered in thoſe parts, except the lake Aſphaltites, which was made afterwards. 2. Thoſe who render the word hot-baths, as the Vulgate, according to the Phœnician ſignification, ſeem to have read חימים hhemim, and to have believed, that it is ſynonymous with חמים hhammim, which ſignifies hot baths; but this is countenanced by no reading or interpretation. 3. Thoſe who will have him to have firſt found out the breed of mules, are confuted by Bochart, with the following arguments; 1. Becauſe mules were never called by that name; 2. Becauſe the word מצא matza, which Moſes uſes, imports the finding what exiſts already, and not the invention of what never had been before; 3. Becauſe they were aſſes which Anah fed, and not horſes; 4. Becauſe in ſcripture there is no mention made of mules to the time of David. In the concluſion, it is the proper name of a people, the אימים Emim for example; which is perfectly made out from the Samaritan reading; whom he found ſuddenly, that is, fell on them by ſurprize, and diſcomfitted them; and this is the moſt likely meaning of the Hebrew text in this place, it having the very ſame ſignification in ſeveral other places (40). However, the word is alſo thought to have been the name of ſome uſeful plant, or herb (41), which Anah firſt diſcovered.

* Gen. xxxvi. 20, 21.

(40) Vide Cleric. Comm. in Gen. cap. xxxvi. ver. 24. (41) Vide Wagen Annot. in Tit. Talm. Sot.

preordained

preordained diſtribution of God [y]. At the ſame time Amalek or his ſpurious offspring may have been driven out alſo.

Accordingly the next generation of theſe princes are ſtiled dukes of Edom, and had no rivals of any other family in any other part of the country, which now we ſuppoſe to have been all called Edom. The dukes of this ſecond race were; 1. Duke Timnah; 2. duke Alvah; 3. duke Jetheth; 4. duke Aholibamah; 5. duke Elah; 6. duke Pinon; 7. duke Kenaz; 8. duke Teman; 9. duke Mibzar; 10. duke Magdiel; 11. duke Iram.[z] (P). Theſe eleven were dukes of Edom when the children of Iſrael were come out into the wilderneſs; and, being diſmayed at the approach of ſo formidable a body, as yet unprovided with a ſeat, dreaded for their own country, not knowing that the Iſraelites were under a ſtrict injunction by no means to moleſt them. Wherefore, perceiving the imperfection and weakneſs of the regulation they were under, they united under one head or king, and prepared to maintain their ground againſt any invaſion.

To this nameleſs king, or perhaps his ſucceſſor, came meſſengers from Moſes, then drawing near the end of his days, to entreat a paſſage through his country for him and his peo-

[y] Deut. ii. 12. [z] Gen. ubi ſupr.

(P) In ſcripture the names of theſe kings and dukes run in a ſeemingly confuſed order; and ſome are unwilling to think that they ſucceeded in the manner we have, from biſhop Cumberland, placed them in (42). This difference in opinion proceeds from theſe words of the text prefixed to the liſt of the kings; and theſe are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, before there reigned any king over the land of Iſrael (43). This is ſuppoſed to be an interpolation; and if we do not allow all the kings of the liſt to have been elder than Moſes, we muſt ſuppoſe the whole to be interpolated too; and accordingly, ſome take Moſes to have been the firſt king of Iſrael, and to be meant here. It cannot be proved, that any of the ſaid kings were of the line of Eſau: and this firſt monarchy ſet up by the Horites was plainly elective; whereas that monarchy erected by the children of Eſau was, by the very little or nothing we know of it, at leaſt ſeemingly, hereditary; for Hadad was a minor when David conquered Edom. But we are afraid of treſpaſſing too much on our readers patience, by running into the many particulars of this debate, and ſhall only ſay, that we have embraced that opinion, which, upon mature deliberation, ſeems to us to be the beſt founded.

(42) See Shuckford's Connect. of the ſacr. and prof. Hiſt. Book 7. p. 192, & ſeq. (43) See Prideaux's Connect. of the Old and New Teſt. part 1. book 5. p. 492, 493.

ple.

ple. And though it was remonſtrated to him, that the Iſraelites were his brethren; and as he could not but know, how they and their fathers had wandered from place to place, without any fixed habitation; how they had been oppreſſed in Egypt; how GOD had now led them out from under their bondage, and that they had reached his borders, being in, or near, the town of Kadeſh; it was to be hoped he would let them paſs freely through his country, in their way to the land of Canaan; that if he was willing to befriend them in this matter, they would keep the highway, and not offer to turn to the right or the left, to hurt the fields, or the vineyards, or drain the wells of water, until they had quite croſſed his territories. To this the jealous king of Edom anſwered, that he would by no means grant it, and adviſed them not to make the leaſt attempt towards it; that if they did, they might expect to be interrupted by the whole ſtrength of his kingdom. And when theſe ambaſſadors, or perhaps thoſe of a ſecond embaſſy, urged him ſtill farther upon this important buſineſs, and made a renewal of promiſes and aſſurances of the moſt peaceable behaviour, if they might have the paſſage they ſolicited, proteſting, that they would pay for every thing they might have occaſion for on the way, and that they would be as expeditious in their marches as their feet would permit; he grew downright exaſperated at their reiterated inſtances, and, fearing that the Iſraelites might make ſome deſperate attempt to force the paſſage he denied them, he took the field, and marched towards them, to intimidate them, and ſhew them that he was not to be prevailed on*. However, his enmity did not run to the pitch of diſtreſſing them in matters wherein he could relieve them without danger to himſelf, and, perhaps, that they might not grow deſperate, he furniſhed them with what his country afforded for their ſuſtenance or convenience, for their money [a].

AFTER this, there is ſcarce any hiſtory ſo obſcure and interrupted as this of Edom; and particularly, we find no words concerning them, from theſe days to thoſe of king David: however, we will ſupply this chaſm in part, by obſerving, that in the mean time the Edomites extended their dominion, and applied themſelves to trade and navigation, and ſeized on the empire of the ſea; we mean of the Arabian gulf at leaſt, and the trade thereof: they dealt in very rich commodities, as it ſeems; pure gold, gold of Ophir, the topaz of Æthiopia, coral, pearls, and the like [b], and became a very conſiderable kingdom, as the moſt common opinion is.

* Numb. xx. 14, 21. [a] Deut. ii. 28, 29. [b] Job. xxviii.

But in the very meridian, as we think, of their glory, they were humbled by conqueſt, and the chiefs of them driven from their homes by the cruelties of a foreign invaſion; which how they drew upon them we have ſcarce any room to gueſs (Q). But ſo it was, that they became involved in a war with king David, in which they were defeated in the valley of Salt [c], with the loſs of eighteen thouſand men; and though this battle ſeems to have decided the fate of the kingdom, yet the Edomites were not ſuffered to live, but were maſſacred, wherever they could be found, for ſix months together, by Joab, who ſlew all the males that came into his hands; ſo that happy were they who could eſcape into ſtrange countries (R). So Edom was awed by the conqueror's gariſons, waſted, and depopulated, while its antient inhabitants were diſperſed into ſeveral parts. Hadad their king, as yet a minor, and a party with him, took the way of Midian (S), thinking, perhaps, to croſs the Red-ſea, and there underſtanding, that they and their young king would be favourably received by Pharaoh, they carried him thither, and Hadad was accordingly received and ſupported by Pharaoh with all the dignity becoming his royal rank; and, to compleat all the favours and kindneſſes which were unſparingly heaped on him, he had the queen's [Taphenes's] ſiſter given to him in marriage [d]. But at the ſame time that Hadad made his way towards Egypt, others took different routs; ſome, flying to

[c] 2 Sam. viii. 13. 1 Chron. xviii. 12. [d] 1 Kings xi. 15, 20.

(Q) Indeed there is but very little room to gueſs at what might poſitively be the cauſe of this ruin executed upon the Edomites; but probably, David treating with them for ſome of the advantages of Elath and Eſiongeber, they refuſed to hearken to him, and thereby provoked him to wreſt thoſe important places, the only marts of the very rich commodities he wanted, out of their hands.

(R) Sir Iſaac Newton makes this diſperſion to have been of very beneficial conſequence to the ſeveral nations they went to, ſuppoſing they carried their arts, ſciences, and induſtry with them wherever they went (44); and herein he is in part ſupported by very ample authority, as we ſhall immediately obſerve.

(S) From hence we have, after Reland, ſuppoſed, that Midian was partly bounded on the north by Edom (45); as if they were obliged to fly through Midian to go to Egypt: but it is more likely, that they ſtruck into Midian, as the ſhorteſt cut to get away from the enemy, with deſign to embark for Egypt, at Madian, or ſome other ſea port of that country, as the ſafeſt way to go into Egypt.

(44) Chron. of ant. kingd. amended, p. 209. (45) See before, p. 110.

the Philiſtines, fortified Azoth, or Azotus, for them (T), and proved a conſiderable acceſſion of power, and of very ſingular benefit to that people (U): and others, that dealt in ſhipping, took the longeſt way they could to eſcape the rage of the conqueror, and went towards, or into, the Perſian gulf [d]: in a word, they were diſperſed into all parts, there being no ſafety for them in their native place.

[d] See Sir ISAAC NEWTON's Chronol. of ant. Kingd. amended, p. 104, 105.

(T) According to Sir Iſaac Newton's hypotheſis, Hadad and his followers were the more kindly received by the king of Egypt, as he foreſaw the advantage they would be of to him, by bringing with them their ſkill in letters, aſtronomy, navigation, and the like, in which the Egyptians were till then ignorant.

(U) The aforeſaid chronologer holds, among other things, that ſome of them flying to the Philiſtines and the ſea-ports, improved the inhabitants there in the arts of navigation and commerce; and indeed it is more than once ſaid, that the Phœnicians came from the Red ſea. Herodotus (47) tells us ſo; and Stephanus (48) relates, that Azotus was built by the fugitives which fled from the Red-ſea. "The Phœnicians therefore came from the Red-ſea, in the days of "Io and her brother Phoroneus, king of Argos; and by conſequence "at that time, when David conquered the Edomites, and made "them fly every way from the Red-ſea. —— And this flight gave "occaſion to the Philiſtines to call many places Erythra, in memory "of their being Erythreans, or Edomites, and of their coming from "the Erythrean ſea; for Erythra was the name of a city in Ionia; "of another in Libya; of another in Locris; of another in Bœotia; "of another in Cyprus; of another in Ætolia; of another in Aſia, "near Chius; and Erythya Acra was a promontory in Libya; and "Erythræum a promontory in Crete; and Erythros a place near Ti-"bur; and Erithini a city or country in Paphlagonia; and the "name Erythea, or Erythræ, was given to the iſland of Gades, peo-"pled by Phœnicians—Edom, Erythra, and Phœnicia, are names of "the ſame ſignification, the words denoting a red colour; which "makes it probable, that the Erythreans who fled from David ſet-"tled in great numbers in Phœnicia; that is, in all the ſea-coaſts "of Syria, from Egypt to Zidon; and by calling themſelves Phœni-"cians in the language of Syria, inſtead of Erythreans, gave the "name of Phœnicia to all that ſea-coaſt, and to that only" (49).

The ſame chronologer holds, that the Ors of Helladius, the Oannes of Beroſus (50), and the Euabanes of Hyginus (51), are ſeveral names given to an Edomite commander, who now fled to the Perſian gulph, and firſt introduced the uſeful arts into Chaldæa; but this, we apprehend, is allowing a little too much.

(47) l. 1. c. 1. l 7. c. 89. (48) In voce Ἄζωτ. (49) See Chronol of ant. kingd. amended, p. 108, 109. (50) See Vol. I. p. 184. (51) Fab. 274.

HADAD

Hadad, though he lived in great eaſe and ſplendor in the Egyptian court, yet being conſcious of his birth, unwilling to live in dependance, thirſting after his kingdom, and bitterly remembring the ſeverity of the conqueror, meditated revenge, but more eſpecially when it was told him, that David and the terrible Joab were both dead. At length the time came, when Solomon wallowed in all kinds of impurity, and thinking this a proper opportunity to take his revenge, he diſcloſed his mind to his brother-in-law Pharaoh, entreating that he would diſmiſs him. The wiſe king of Egypt, perceiving the great troubles and dangers which he muſt be expoſed to in executing his deſign, would have prevailed on him to lay aſide all thoughts of ſo tumultuous an undertaking; but Hadad, upon urging the matter, obtained a diſmiſſion, and proved a very troubleſome enemy to Solomon, and ſhewed the way to others, as is thought, to be the ſame; but he did not recover his kingdom again. He had a ſon by his Egyptian wife, and his name was Genubath: he had a princely education in the palace of Pharaoh; but Hadad failing in his view upon his own kingdom, he, it is likely, eſtabliſhed himſelf in Syria, where we find the royal family bore the name of Hadad.

In the mean time the kingdom of Edom continued under the houſe of David till the days of Jehoſhaphat, being governed by deputies or viceroys, appointed by the kings of Judah. And though we have, in the hiſtory of Moab, made mention of a king of Edom, who aſſiſted Jehoram king of Iſrael and Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, in the reduction of Meſha king of Moab, we there ſpeak only in the freedom of ſcripture phraſe; for that king, as he is called, attended upon Jehoſhaphat as a vaſſal, and not as an auxiliary[e]. However, though the hiſtory of that war does peculiarly belong to the reigns of Jehoſhaphat and Jehoram, kings of Iſrael and Judah, who were the principals in it, yet we have here occaſion to repeat, that this chief of Edom's ſon is thought to have been ſacrificed by Meſha the king of Moab, upon the walls of the city where he was blocked up, though on the other hand, it is alſo thought to have been the Moabite's own ſon[f].

We have now ſeen the time wherein Eſau was to be a ſervant to his brother; and now we come to that wherein he was to ſhake off his yoke, and be ſubject to him no more. For, finding a fair opportunity to recover their antient liberty, the Edomites embraced it, and ſucceeded. They had already

[e] See 1 Kings xxii. 47. [f] See before, 94.

ſhewn

ſhewn how ill they were diſpoſed, even towards Jehoſhaphat, when a part of them joined the Moabites and Ammonites, in an attempt to ſurprize him, when he was unprepared for the aſſault; but fell into unaccountable confuſion, wherein the Edomites were all cut off by the Ammonites and Moabites, who afterwards butchered each other [g]. But in the days of Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, the whole nation of Edom aroſe, and, aſſaſſinating or expelling their viceroy, made themſelves a king after their own liking; and, upon advice that Jehoram was coming with a formidable power to reduce them, they marched towards him, and managed ſo as to hem him all round in the night-time; but this project was diſconcerted with a great ſlaughter, and they were forced to their retrenchments. This was but an indifferent beginning; but ſo it happened, that the Edomites could not be annexed again to the houſe of David *.

THUS was the long wiſhed for revolution brought about, after one hundred and fifty years of oppreſſion; but who was their chief upon this occaſion, or what he did farther, or who ſucceeded him, we are wholly at a loſs for.

AFTER this they had no attempts made upon them by the kings of Judah for upwards of ſixty years; in which time they muſt have had time to recover themſelves very well, and retrieve their antient ſplendor in a great meaſure. Notwithſtanding which they ſuffered a ſignal overthrow from Amaziah king of Judah in the valley of ſalt, where ten thouſand of them fell in battle, and as many of them were alſo taken priſoners. After which their capital, Selah, which we have ſuppoſed to have been the famous Petra, was taken from them by ſtorm, and ten thouſand captives were by Amaziah's order thrown down from the ragged precipices which ſtood about that city, and were torn and daſhed to pieces. Selah was now by the conqueror called Joktheel [h].

WHETHER after, or before this, we cannot diſcover, the Edomites had a war with their neighbours the Moabites, wherein, being unfortunate, their king fell into the hands of the enemy, who burnt him, whether dead or alive we cannot ſay, till his bones were reduced to aſhes (X). Thus have we [g] See before, p. 94, & ſeq. * 2 Chron. xxi. 8. [h] 2 Kings xiv. 7.

(X) It is doubted, whether this be not the ſame war wherein Meſha king of Moab ſacrificed his own ſon, or the ſon of the king or chief of Edom (50). Our tranſlators of the bible take them to be one and the ſame event.

(50) See before, p. 94.

hitherto tacked together the incoherent parts of this history in the best manner we have been able. In the mean time they became subject to the king of Babylon, in completion of what the prophets had threatened them [i]. And when utter destruction came upon the Jews, and that they were carried away captive, then did their fury blaze out, so far as to cut off such of the Jews as attempted to escape the captivity, not forgetting the slaughter made of their forefathers by Joab in the days of king David; but for this were they threatened, that they should be repayed in kind, that, for the desolation they had forwarded in Judah, their own land should be desolate when the rest of the countries flourished [k]. They were for laying Jerusalem level with the ground, and accordingly, when the Chaldees or Babylonians were withdrawn, they made an end of the temple with fire [l]. Thus did they prosecute their revenge to the utmost, hoping, that the Jews were never more to be a nation, insulting God, and slaughtering the few of his miserable people, who had by his leave escaped the hands of the Babylonians.

Wherefore confusion was brought upon them, and violent intestine commotions and persecutions; insomuch that a great part of them left their own country, and settled in the empty land of Judæa, and particularly in the south-western parts [m]; and it may be, that at this time they made an end of the temple of Jerusalem. Those of them that staid behind in Edom joined the children of Nabaioth, and were called Nabatæans ever afterwards; so that the antient kingdom of Edom now lost its name, which was transferred to that part of the land of Judæa, which the refugees had pitched in, and which had never been any part of their old kingdom, but the lot of the tribes of Simeon and Judah. And this is the Idumæa, and these the Idumæans mentioned by Pliny, Ptolemy, Strabo, and other antient writers. For because of their wicked dealing with their oppressed brethren, their kingdom was to lose all its glory, and become a desert; strangers from the south [n] were to possess it; it was never to rise, and from thenceforward to be called the border of wickedness [p], though it pleased God to spare a remnant of this people, by permitting them to seize on a part of their brethren's portion; by which means they came to be united into one family with them, as they were descended from the loins of one man.

[i] See Isa. xxi, xxxiv. Jerem. ix, xxv, xxvii, xlix. Lam. iv. Ezek. xxv, xxxii, xxxv, xxxvi. Joel iii. Amos i, ix. [k] See Ez. xxv, xxxv. Joel iii. Amos i. Obad. i. [l] See Psalm cxxxvii. [l] Esd iv. [m] Strabo, lib. 16. p. 760. [n] Obad. ubi supr. [p] Malach. i.

We

WE have now pointed out the exit of the antient kingdom of Edom, and ſhall proceed to the broken interrupted affairs of thoſe Edomites who ſettled in Judæa; concerning which we only know, that a decree was iſſued out againſt them from Darius Hyſtaſpes, commanding, that they ſhould deliver up all they had belonging to the Jews [q]; but what effect this took we cannot well ſay. That upon the decline of the Perſian monarchy, and after the days of Alexander, they were under the power of the Seleucidæ, when the antient averſion they had to the Jews being ſtirred up in them, they warred againſt them, under the conduct of Gorgias their governor for Antiochus Epiphanes: but they got nothing thereby but blows and great ruin; being conſtantly worſted by Judas Maccabæus, who at laſt took and ſacked their chief city Hebron [r]: their ſtrong holds, wherewith they awed the Jews, were forced by that valourous commander, who cut off twenty thouſand of them in the aſſault, but a reſidue of nine thouſand of them fled to two ſtrong towers [s], where they were well prepared to ſuſtain a ſiege; whence, by a bribe of 70,000 Drachms, a good part of them were ſuffered to eſcape. But when the treachery was diſcovered by the Jewiſh general, a ſtop was put to this outlet; theſe two ſtrong caſtles were alſo forced, and no leſs than twenty thouſand Idumæans again [t] put to the ſword. Thus was their zeal againſt their brethren rewarded as it deſerved, as ſhall be more exactly particularized in the Jewiſh hiſtory.

AFTER theſe very troubleſome times, we know not how it fared with the Edomites in Idumæa, except that they ſeem to have been continually agitated by broils and wars, till they were conquered by John Hyrcanus; who reduced them to the ſore neceſſity of embracing the Jewiſh religion, or of quitting their country. They choſe the former, and, ſubmitting to be circumciſed, became incorporated with the Jews [u], and, conſidering their deſcent as well as their converſion, they were upon a double account reckoned as natural Jews; and accordingly, in the firſt century after Chriſt, the name of Idumæan was loſt and quite diſuſed [w] (Y). And being ſo, we [q] Eſdr ubi ſupr. ver. 50. [r] 1 Maccab. v. 65, 68. [s] ver. 4, 5. 2 Maccab. x. 18, 23. [t] Ibid. ver. 21, 23. [u] JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 13 c. 17. [w] PRIDEAUX's Connect. of the Old and New Teſt. Book 5. p. 307, 308.

(Y) The name of Edomite is not ſo wholly loſt, but the Jews make uſe of it ſtill. "The Rabbins ſpeak of Edom and Edomites long after "this; but thereby they do not mean Idumæa, or the ſons of E- we here break off, referring what further relates to this people to the Jewiſh hiſtory. We have ſeen then, that the Edomites, or Idumæans, were partly ſwallowed up before by the Nabutæans, or Arabians, and partly now by the Jews.

SECT. V.

The Hiſtory of Amalek.

Their anceſtor.

AMALEK was the father of this people, and from him they were called Amalekites, and their country Amalekitis. He was the ſon of Eſau's firſt-born Eliphaz (A), by his concubine Timna. Notwithſtanding the ſpuriouſneſs of his birth, he is reckoned among the dukes in the land of Edom [a], which is all we know for certain concerning him.

[a] Gen. xxxvi. 12. 1 Chron. i. 36.

" dom, but Rome, and the chriſtians of the Roman empire. For, " fearing the diſpleaſure of the chriſtians, among whom they live, " for avoiding it whenever they ſpeak any reproachful thing of " Chriſtians, or of their religion, they uſually blend it under " feigned names: ſometimes calling us Cuthæans, i e. Samaritans; " and ſometimes Epicureans; and ſometimes Edomites; and this laſt " is the civileſt appellation they give us (51).

(A) The Arabians deduce his genealogy in a different manner, and make him ſome generations older than Abraham, as follows:

فوح	Noah.
حام	Ham.
ارم	Aram.
حوث	Uz.
عاد	Ad.
عملاق	Amalek (1)

They ſay alſo, that the Amalekite in antient times poſſeſſed the country about Mecca, whence they were expelled by the Jorhamite kings (2). Some hold, that Ad was the ſon of Aws, or Uz, the ſon of Aram, the ſon of Shem, the ſon of Noah. Others, that Ad was the ſon of Amalek, the ſon of Ham (3); but the contrary is the (51) Prideaux's Connect. of the Old and New Teſt. Part 2. Book 5. p. 708. (1) Vide Reland. Palæſt. Illuſt. c. 14. (2) Pocock Specim. Hiſt. Arab. p. 173. (3) D'Herbelot, p. 51, 110.

received

him. How this family came to ſeparate from the others of Eſau's line, wants ſome light. Perhaps it were not abſurd to ſuppoſe Amalek or his poſterity to have been expelled by the Edomites, when they cleared the land of the Horites; and that on account of their illegitimate deſcent, as was practiſed towards Iſhmael in the houſe of their great anceſtor Abraham. Or on the other hand, Amalek or his deſcendants may have been ſlighted and diſtinguiſhed with contempt by the other Edomites; which they ſtomaching, may have joined themſelves to the Horites, reſolving to ſhare fortunes with them. Very unlikely it is, that this ſingle family ſhould have been able to erect itſelf into a formidable ſtate, ſo early as to have attempted the Iſraelites almoſt as ſoon as they had ſet foot on this ſide of the Red-ſea: they muſt certainly have been joined by others; and by whom ſo likely as by the remnant of the Horites, and by the inhabitants of the land they ſeized on, for ſome there were [a]? The Kenites deſcended from Jethro, we know, inhabited with them; but that was in after times [b]. That there was an inbred miſunderſtanding between the Edomites and Amalekites, and that they held each other in averſion, is confirmed, in that we cannot diſcover any manner of harmony between the nations, no confederacy, no correſpondence, or the leaſt token of mutual accord.

As we can but gueſs at the cauſe of this rent in the houſe of Eſau; ſo are we left to do little more concerning the ſpot they pitched on, or the tract wherein they afterwards erected their kingdom. Their firſt removal cannot be ſuppoſed to received opinion. Some commentators on the Koran (4) tell us, that the old Adites were of prodigious ſtature, the largeſt being an hundred cubits, and the leaſt ſixty; which they pretend to prove by the authority of the Koran (5). In fine, it is alſo ſaid by the Arabian writers, that Amalek was the ſon of Azd, the ſon of Shem (6). Le Clerc (7) is willing to adopt this notion ſo far as to think, that the Amalekites were a great nation before the days of Abraham or Lot; becauſe he finds that Chedorlaomer made war on them under that name, which he ſuppoſes muſt be proleptically taken at firſt. But conſidering, that our Amalek was of the houſe of Eſau, with whom the Iſraelites were commanded to be at peace, he changes his mind, and imagines they had no relation to our Amalek, but ſprang from ſomewhere elſe.

[a] See Gen. xix. 6. [b] See before, p. 118.

(4) Jalla Lo' Dilin & Zamakſhari (5) Kor. c. 7. (6) Ebn Shohuah. (7) In Geneſ. xiv. 7. & Numb xxiv 20.

have been at any great distance from the land of Edom; and indeed, from the first of their expulsion or removal to their excision, they seem to have bordered upon that country: whence Josephus divides the whole land of Edom into Amalekitis and Gobolitis[c]; but, as we have already observed, it is very inaccurately said, if we refer to these early days, when it is so evident there was no participation of counsels between the two kings, as will appear by their different conduct towards the children of Israel[d], when in the wilderness. In reference to this matter, and elsewhere, does the scripture divide them into quite distinct kingdoms[d]. The situation of the kingdom of Amalek is however pretty clearly, if not self-evidently, settled, by remarking, that it had intercourse and commerce with Egypt[e] (B); that it had a way leading into the country of the Philistines, and into the land of Canaan (C). Whence we conclude it to have been bounded by Canaan

[c] Joseph. Antiq. l. 2. c. 1. [d] See 1 Chron. xviii. 11. [e] See Joseph. Antiq. l. 6. c. 8.

(B) This seems to be clear from Josephus (8), who makes Amalekitis to extend between Peluſium and the Red-sea, and from the Arabian historians, who make the Amalekites to have been even masters of Egypt (9); for it were hard to suppose they have no manner of foundation for their story, and that the whole is entirely false in all its articles. That they had communication with Egypt, may farther appear from the Egyptian they left behind them on their return from sacking of Ziklag, who fell into the hands of David (10). Finally, it is expresly said in scripture, that they had of old inhabited the land — even unto the land of Egypt.

(C) This is naturally supposed by their expedition against Ziklag (11) in the country of the Philistines, which they took and burnt, and from other instances of the same kind, which we shall not here enumerate; but this we the rather insist on; because so miserable and broken a people as they were at that time, cannot well be supposed to have been able to break through any other country to get at Ziklag: and had they not the situation we have given them, they must have crossed some part or other of the kingdom of Edom, at that time in its meridian, which it is not likely would have been allowed them; for there seems to have been no manner of understanding between the nations, as we have elsewhere said: and it is plain, that they lay to the south of the Philistines by the words of David, who being asked by Achish where he had been, he answered, that he had been against the south of Judah, and against the south of the Jerahmeelites, and against the south of the Kenites (12);

(8) Antiq. l. 6. c. 8. (9) See before, p. 72, 73. (10) 1 Sam. xxx. (11) Idem ibid. (12) 1 Sam. xxvii. 10.

but

naan on the north; by Egypt, or its dependant territory, on the ſouth; by Edom on the eaſt; and by the deſerts towards the ſea on the weſt; or perhaps by the margin of the ſea itſelf. And this we deliver ſimply as our own opinion, wherein, however, we are not alone [f], and forbear to perplex the reader with a variety of opinions, which are not ſo happily ſupported as this. Here then, and hereabouts, was their abode, till they ceaſed to be a nation; their limits extending with their encreaſe of power, and ſhrinking in again as they dwindled away.

THE cities of this country we are wholly at a loſs for, except we follow Joſephus, who places the famous city of Petra under the juriſdiction of the Amalekites [g] (D).

THEIR religious and civil cuſtoms we know nothing of poſitively. That they originally uſed circumciſion cannot be diſputed; and, for ought we know, they may have continued the ſame practice to the end; but whether they were doomed to utter deſtruction for any crying ſins that prevailed among them, beſides the horrid outrage they committed on the diſtreſſed Iſraelites [h], we do not read. Their cuſtoms.

THEIR religion was at firſt, doubtleſs, the ſame that was taught in the houſe of Abraham; but by what degrees they erred therefrom, and how far they went aſtray, we have no knowledge of. Joſephus [i] mentions their idols, but the ſcripture terms them the idols of mount Seir [k]; ſo that they ſeem to have more properly belonged to the Edomites than to the Amalekites. Their religion.

THEIR arts, their ſciences, and trade, we can only gueſs at from their ſituation; for it is probable they had the knowledge and commerce of thoſe times, pretty much in common with their neighbours the Edomites and Egyptians, and thoſe of the ſea-coaſts of Judæa. And this is the leſs diſputable, as Their arts, &c.

[f] Vide RELAND. Palæſt. illuſt. [g] Vide JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 3. c. 2. [h] Exod. xvii. [i] Antiq. l. 9. c. 10. [k] See before, p. 136.

but did not think fit to ſay, he had been againſt the Amalekites, who lay in the ſouth. Add to this, that the Simeonites lay next to them (13).

(D) We muſt here note, what Joſephus ſays, that thoſe who inhabited Gobolitis and Petra were called Amalekites (14); but ſeeing the ſame author divides the whole kingdom of Edom into Gobolitis and Amalekitis (15), how comes it, that they dwelt not in this laſt diviſion? it is an enigma we know not how to unriddle.

(13) See 1 Chron. iv. 42. (14) Joſeph. Ant. l. 3. c. 2. (15) See before in the Notes, p. 131.

their king is placed in ſo high a ſphere of majeſty, and themſelves ſtiled the firſt of the nations, as we ſhall ſee anon. Much the ſame may be ſaid of their manners, genius, and policy.

Their government.

Concerning their government thus much appears, that it was monarchical; and that the firſt, or at leaſt one of the firſt, of their kings, was called Agag [l]; as was alſo their laſt [m]; from whence it has been imagined, that all their intermediate kings bore the ſame appellation.

Their hiſtory.

The Amalekites ſtepped early, if not the very firſt, into the government of this country; and very remarkable it is, that they grew up to ſuch a ſudden height of power and ſplendor, that their king is ſpoken of as far above all others; for Balaam, foretelling the future majeſty of the Jewiſh ſtate, expreſſes himſelf, that their king ſhall be higher than Agag, and ſtiles them, the firſt of the nations [n] (E); which ſeems to countenance the extraordinary things the Arabian hiſtorians have concerning the Amalekites; as that they conquered Egypt, and poſſeſſed the throne of that kingdom for ſeveral generations [o] (F).

But

[l] Numb. xxiv. 7. [m] 1 Sam. xv. 8. [n] Numb. ubi ſupr. & ver. 20. [o] See before, p. 72, 73.

(E) It was ſudden, according to the hypotheſis we have adopted (16): for thereby the kingdom of Amalek is not likely to have been much, if any thing at all, older than that of Edom, which we have ſhewn to have commenced at the Exodus; and therefore, when Balaam expreſſed himſelf in ſo high a ſtrain concerning Agag and his monarchy, it could not have been of much above forty years ſtanding. The expreſſion of Amalek's being the firſt of the nations, our verſion turns otherwiſe in the margin, the firſt of the nations that warred againſt Iſrael. Much the ſame turn does Onkelos give it; but if we compare what is ſaid of Agag himſelf but thirteen verſes before, we ſhall not be at any great loſs for the right, or, at leaſt, natural explication of the paſſage before us; which doubtleſs means, that they were the greateſt and moſt noble nation of that time; and this is the moſt generally approved opinion. In le Clerc's verſion they are ſtiled the firſt fruits of the nations; by which in his commentary he underſtands them to have been the moſt antient and potent nation; and to have been before any of thoſe which proceeded from the loins of Abraham and Lot.

(F) What the Arabic hiſtory ſays of theſe Amalekites, bears an affinity with what the Egyptian records report of the Phœnician ſhepherds; for they were at length expelled by the natives (17),

(16) See before, p. 148 (A). (17) Ex libro Mirat. Cainat. dicto.

and

BUT not to deviate from the authority we muſt rely on, it appears, that this kingdom was haughty and inſolent in its very cradle; and no ſooner heard, that the Iſraelites had croſſed the Red-ſea, than they reſolved to cut them off. The ſcripture mentions none but Amalek [q] upon this occaſion; which, whether it is ſpoken of the king alone, or collectively of the whole nation, is not agreed. Joſephus relates, that they had no leſs than five kings, who laid their heads together, and joined forces to carry on this turbulent deſign [r] (G). To paſs this over, ſo it was, that the Amalekites fell on the rear of the Iſraelites, as they were on full march from Rephidim to mount Horeb. Some havock they made; but it returned ſeverely upon themſelves, as ſoon as Joſhua could get the fighting men into order; by whom being in their turn aſſaulted, a long and bloody battle enſued: but in the end the Amalekites were put to a precipitate flight, with the heavy doom on their head, that for this outrage their name ſhould be put out from under heaven [s].

IN the mean time, however, it pleaſed GOD to make uſe of them in conjunction with ſome of the Canaanites, as his inſtruments for the puniſhment of the diffidence and diſobedience of the Iſraelites, when they thought to have waſhed away their ſinful perverſeneſs by a fool-hardy attempt, in contradiction to the expreſs decree of GOD, that not one of them from twenty years and upwards ſhould have ſight of the land of Promiſe [t]. The ſlaughter the Amalekites help to make of the Iſraelites upon this occaſion, will be told in the hiſtory of Canaan.

AFTER this they ſeem to have miſſed no opportunity of vexing the choſen nation, till they were ripe for the exciſion and are ſuppoſed, as is ſaid by us of the Canaanites, to have fled into Africk (18); and that the Amalekites were ſometimes comprehended under the general denomination of Phœnicians, may be obſerved hereafter.

[q] Exod. xvii. [r] JOSEPH. Antiq. lib. 3. c. 2. [s] Exod. ubi ſupr. [t] Numb. xiv. 29, 30.

(G) What Joſephus here ſays need not be ſuppoſed to imply, that the Amalekites were divided into many kingdoms. It is poſſible, and very probable, that ſome of the petty kings of Canaan joined the king of Amalekitis now, as he did ſome of the Canaanites afterwards, to prevent the Iſraelites from entering into their borders. This junction may have been paſſed over by Moſes, who thought it enough, that he mentioned the principal and ring-leader of the aſſault.

(18) Vide Reland. Palæſt. Illuſtr. p. 82.

denounced denounced againſt them. They confederated with Eglon king of Moab, and the Ammonites [u]; and afterwards with the Midianites under Zebah and Zalmunna, to root out the Iſraelites, and poſſeſs themſelves of the land, as they had vainly projected; but what ſucceſs they had in the attempt, and how they in the end fell by their own ſwords and thoſe of their friends and allies, we have already related at large [w].

After this there is a very wide gap in the hiſtory of this people, which reaches even to the days of Saul. At this time their king was a very graceful perſon, and of noble preſence and addreſs, which ſtood him in good ſtead; for on account of theſe his perſonal accompliſhments, was his life ſpared (ſay they) in the general maſſacre of his ſubjects [x]. But with all this ſpecious outſide, he is upbraided as an inſolent and mercileſs tyrant. Under this prince the nation was grown ripe for the exciſion they had been threatened with about four hundred years afore. And, as a forerunner of it, the Kenites, their inmates, were warned to leave their country, and ſeek ſome other ſeat, for fear they ſhould be involved in the impending calamity [y]. As ſoon as the Kenites had obeyed the ſummons, the Amalekites were invaded by Saul, at the head of two hundred and ten thouſand men (H). And by theſe numbers, being ſorely oppreſſed, and quite diſabled from making any head, they were all cut off, except Agag, and ſome who were ſo happy, for the preſent, as to fly their country, or hide themſelves in ſuch retreats where they were not diſcovered: not even the mother, or the infant at her breaſt, was ſpared; and the whole country was made deſolate. Agag and the beſt of the cattle only were ſuffered to live. However, Agag did not long enjoy this favour; for it was no ſooner related to Samuel that he was alive, than he was ſent for by the prophet, with whom all his inſinuating addreſs, and hopes that the bitterneſs of death was paſſed, availed him nothing: he was hewn in pieces by Samuel, or at leaſt by his order, in Gilgal, before the lord [z].

[u] See before, p. 121. Antiq. lib. 6. c. 8. Joseph. l. 6. c. 9.
[w] See before, p. 91.
[x] Joseph.
[y] See before, p. 118.
[z] 1 Sam. xv.

(H) Joſephus makes this army to have conſiſted of no more than 70,000 men, and tells us, that the country was ſo poſſeſſed by them, that the Amalekites could hardly eſcape, if they attempted to fly any where (19); but this is ſaid at random, as we think.

(19) Joſeph. Antiq. l. 6. c. 8.

The

THE poor remnant of the Amalekites, who eſcaped the ſword of Saul, poſſeſſed themſelves of their deſolate country again, and lived, for ought we know, in peace, till ſuch time as David was driven to aſk protection of Achiſh king of the Philiſtines, dreading the murderous jealouſy of Saul, and had Ziklag allotted to him. At this time the Amalekites are mentioned as aſſociated with the Geſhurites and Gezrites (I). The Amalekites, thus picking up again and gathering ſtrength, were ſlaughtered once more by their new and near neighbour David, who thought it perhaps a duty incumbent on him to compleat the work, which Saul had left unfiniſhed. So once more were the Amalekites, man and woman, butchered and diſperſed, their country in good part ruined, and all the cattle that came in the enemy's way driven off [a].

THE Amalekites meditated revenge for this cruel injury, as they doubtleſs called it, and, muſtering their ſtrength, went up to Ziklag the abode of David, who happened then to be abſent with his ſmall party, ſo that the town was left defenceleſs; wherefore they eaſily made themſelves maſters of the place, and burnt it with fire; but touched not the lives of any of the inhabitants, which, conſidering what they had ſuffered ſo lately from David, may ſeem to have been a great piece of humanity in them; but this is not allowed them (K). Among their captives were David's two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreelite, and Abigail who had been wife to Nabal the Carmelite; and having thus ſucceeded to their wiſh, they thought to ſecure what they had got by an expeditious return homewards, and determined not to ſtop by the way, till they ſhould reach ſuch a place, which was perhaps

[a] 1 Sam. xxvii. 9.

(I) Who theſe Geſhurites and Gezrites were is uncertain. They are taken for reliques of the Canaanites (20); but by the words of the text it might be imagined they were originally of this country; for thoſe nations were of old the inhabitants of the land, as thou goeſt to Shur, even unto the land of Egypt (21).

(K) It is ſaid they were a poor covetous people, who intended to ſell them for ſlaves, and make money of them (22); or wanted ſervants for their own uſe, and therefore ſhewed this mercy: but if we may be allowed a conjecture of our own, they kept their priſoners alive to ſupply the loſs of thoſe who had lately periſhed by the hand of David; and this does not ſeem to be a very unnatural ſuppoſition.

(20) Vide Cleric. & Patrick, upon 1 Sam. xxvii. (21) 1 Sam. xxvii. 8. (22) See Patrick on 1 Sam. xxx. 2. & Cleric.

a pleaſant

a pleaſant ſpot, affording water and a refreſhing ſhade, and pretty well out of the reach of the enemy. Hurrying on with this precipitation, they left behind them one of their number, an Egyptian by birth, who, by ſome means or other, was ſo weak that he could not keep pace with them. David in the mean time had notice of the revenge the Amalekites had taken on him, and purſued them very eagerly, and in his way took this Egyptian, who informed him of the place where they intended to halt, to rejoice and reſt themſelves. The Amalekites arrived at the appointed place, and gave a looſe to their triumph, with great mirth and jollity; and it ſeems they recreated themſelves ſeveral days together. As they were in this careleſs poſture they were deſcried by David, from the neighbouring hills towards the cloſe of day; and after they had ſpent the whole night in debauchery, and were repaired to reſt, which was towards the break of day, they were ſet upon by David and his men, and a ſlaughter was begun among them, which continued till the ſetting ſun; ſo that not a ſoul of them eſcaped the edge of the ſword, except four hundred young men, who rode upon dromedaries, and who, leaving all their companions and booty behind them, were burthened with nothing but the doleful news of ſo woeful a miſchance, after ſuch uncommon ſucceſs in their attempt upon Ziklag [b].

Thus by degrees were the Amalekites reduced; and at laſt the fatal blow was given to them, in the days of Hezekiah, by the Simeonites *, who utterly deſtroyed and diſperſed them, and kept their country in poſſeſſion: and this is the imperfect account we have of the exit of the Amalekites, as Balaam had propheſied long before, Amalek was the firſt of the nations; but his latter end ſhall be, that he periſh for ever [c].

But it happened afterwards, that a man of Amalekitiſh blood had taken ample revenge on the Jews, had not God interpoſed, as it were, by a miracle; for Haman is called an Agagite, or Amalekite; and it is well known, how near he was to the fruition of his bloody will againſt the Jews; but this fact, being tranſacted in another country and period, muſt be related elſewhere. That, however, may be called the laſt act of the Amalekites; and here therefore this ſection concludes.

[b] Sam. xxx. 17. * See 1 Chron iv. 40—43. [c] Numb. xxiv. 20.

SECT.

SECT. VI.

The Hiſtory of Canaan.

WE have already [a] given the hiſtory of the anceſtors of this nation, and of their origin, and therefore ſhall not repeat it here.

CANAAN the ſon of Ham, the ſon of Noah, had eleven ſons, Sidon or Zidon, Heth, Jebuſi, Emori or Amori, Gergaſi or Gergaſhi, Hivi or Hevi, Archi or Arki, Sini, Arvadi, Zemari, and Hamathi. Theſe were the fathers of the following tribes or nations; the Sidonians or Zidonians, the Hettites or Hittites, the Jebuſites, the Emorites or Amorites, the Gergaſites or Gergaſhites, the Hivites or Hevites, the Arkites, or Archites, the Sinites, the Arvadites, the Zemarites, and the Hamathites [b]. Five of theſe are known to have dwelt in the land of Canaan, the Hettites or Hittites, the Jebuſites, the Emorites or Amorites, the Gergaſites or Gergaſhites, and the Hivites or Hevites. To theſe are added two others, the Perizzites and Canaanites; and theſe make up the ſeven primary nations of the Canaanites: but how the Perizzites came to be a diſtinct body; or whence the Canaanites are peculiarly ſo called, is a difficulty, can, at beſt, be only gueſſed at. Theſe ſeven nations laboured in particular under the evil influences of the curſe denounced by Noah againſt their ungodly anceſtor Ham, being doomed in the end to expulſion, and exciſion, and ſubjection. Whether the ſix other nations we have mentioned are to be reckoned among the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, by us commonly ſo called, is ſeemingly affirmed by ſome, and denied by others, who think they were exempt from the ruin which was to light on the other ſeven; being countenanced by the ſilence which may be obſerved concerning them in the wars, the other Canaanites had with Joſhua and his ſucceſſors. For therein is no mention made of the Sidonians, the Arkites, the Sinites, the Arvadites, the Zemarites, or the Hamathites; which is much, ſeeing they were primary nations or families. We therefore are of opinion, that they were not included, elſe ſo many petty ſtates or kingdoms could never have been particularized, and theſe paſſed over. Being thus, we muſt ſeek for theſe ſix original tribes elſewhere. It cannot well be otherwiſe, than that the ſeven nations, as they are called, were ſubdivided into many little kingdoms; for little, very little,

[a] See Vol. I. p. 267. [b] Gen. x. 15.

little, they must have been, since we must look for them all within the scanty limits conquered by Joshua. Within that small compass we have no fewer than the following number of Canaanitish kings, said to be subdued by him; the king of Jericho, the king of Ai, the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, the king of Eglon, the king of Gezer, the king of Debir, the king of Geder, the king of Hormah, the king of Arad, the king of Libnah, the king of Adullam, the king of Makkedah, the king of Beth-el, the king of Tappuah, the king of Hepher, the king of Aphek, the king of Lasharon, or Sharon, the king of Madon, the king of Hazor, the king of Shimron-meron, the king of Achshaph, the king of Taanach, the king of Megiddo, the king of Kedesh, the king of Jokneam of Carmel, the king of Dor, the king of the nations of Gilgal, and the king of Tirzah, thirty one in all [c] (A); who were either all, or most of them, comprehended under the primary denominations of the seven nations, the Hittites, the Jebusites, the Amorites, the Gergasites, Hivites, Perizzites, or Canaanites (B), properly or peculiarly so called. Nor were these all the branches of the Canaanites, who were possessed of the land of promise. But how to assign a place to each particular we know not; wherefore we shall only divide the country in general between the seven tribes or nations, as well as we can, which is all the geography we shall give of this country here.

Their country

The limits of the country of these Canaanites in general, as seems, are thus marked out by Moses [a], from Sidon to Gaza, from thence over to Sodom, and thence to Lasha, thereby, as is thought [b], stretching out the four lines which comprehended the whole country. Whether all the descendants

[c] Joshua xii. 9. 24. [a] Gen. x. 19. [b] See Wells's Geog. of the Old. Test. Vol. I. chap. 7.

(A) But we must not for this suppose there were no more than thirty one in the whole country that bore the royal title. These are only all that were conquered by Joshua. The scripture history acknowledges, that the Canaanites were never wholly subdued by him; and we may infer, that many had the title of king, who never had much hurt from Joshua.

(B) These seven are a contraction, we must suppose, of the ten nations that were promised to Abraham, the Kenites, the Kenizzites, the Kadmonites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Rephaim, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Gergashites, and the Jebusites (1). We may touch on this matter anon.

(1) Genes. xv. 19, 21.

of Canaan were included within this compaſs, is not poſitively known, but it is likely to have been the original ſeat of them all; but whether thoſe we muſt hereafter look for in Syria, and elſewhere, were terrified thither by the ſucceſſes of Joſhua, or whether growing too numerous for ſo ſmall a territory, they naturally tranſplanted themſelves into other parts, may be diſputed by ſome; though we embrace the latter opinion, being therein, in ſome meaſure, countenanced by Moſes, who tells us, that the families of the Canaanites were ſpread abroad[c], juſt before he gives us their firſt extent. Thus much we will add on this head. It is clearly evident from ſcripture and the Jewiſh writers, that no part of the country on the other ſide Jordan, not even that inhabited by the tribes of Reuben, and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, was reckoned into the land of Canaan[d]: But to it may be annexed what once made the moſt beautiful part of this land, though ſince a deteſtable lake; we mean the vale of Siddim, ſince called Pentapolis from its five cities, Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Bela. The ſoil of this vale was much of the ſame nature with that about the city of Babylon, being productive of Bitumen, and ſuch combuſtible ſubſtances. It was well watered every where before the Lord deſtroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the Lord, like the land of Egypt, as thou comeſt unto Zoar[e] Such was this vale, which needs no further deſcription to give us a due and perfect idea of it.

Now the ſeven nations above-mentioned, the Hittites, the Jebuſites, the Amorites, the Gergaſites, the Hivites, the Perizzites, and Canaanites[f], divided their country among them after this manner: The Hittites dwelt about Hebron; for of the children of Heth Abraham bought the cave of Machpelah[g]. The Gergaſites had the Jebuſites and Canaanites for their neighbours[h], as is thought[i]; but it does not plainly appear. The Amorites were antiently in the neighbourhood of Hazezon-tamar[k], and in the valley of Eſhcol[l]. The Amorites were alſo on the other ſide of Jordan and the Dead-ſea, by the conqueſt they made of the Moabites and Ammonites[m]; but that conqueſt, as we have already obſerved, was no part of Canaan. The Canaanites, peculiarly ſo called, were divided into two diſtinct bodies, and inhabited two diſ- divided.

[c] Gen. x. 18. [d] Vide RELAND. Palæſt. Illuſtr. Tom. 1. c. 1.
[e] Gen. xiii. 10. [f] Deut. vii. 1. Joſh. iii. 10. Acts xiii. 19.
[g] Gen. xxiii. [h] Joſh. xxiv. 11. [i] Vide RELAND. Palæſt. Illuſtr. lib. 1. c. 27. [k] Gen. xiv. 7. [l] Ver. 13. Num. xiii. 23. [m] See before, p. 85, 102.

tinct

tinct diviſions, the ſea ſide to the weſt, and the river ſide to the eaſt [n]. The Perizzites ſeem to have been near Beth-el; for Abraham pitched his tent in the beginning, between Beth-el and Ai, and the Canaanites and Perizzites are ſaid to have been then in the land [o]: moreover, we find, that they dwelt in the mountains, together with the Hittite and the Jebuſite [p]; though they are elſewhere forgot when theſe are mentioned [q]. It appears alſo, that the Perizzites were not far from Shechem, they being mentioned, together with the Canaanites, to have been near that city [r]. They ſeem alſo to have extended beyond the portion of Ephraim, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh as far as Beth-ſhean and the valley of Jezreel, and to the ſouthward, where they ſeem to have been with the Rephaim [ſ], into the tribe of Judah [t] (C). The Hivites are ſaid to have dwelt under Hermon [u], and in Gibeon [w], and in mount Lebanon [x]. The Jebuſites inhabited the mountains, and held the city of Jebus, afterwards Jeruſalem (D).

The cities of this country, beſides thoſe of the Pentapolis when it flouriſhed, that can be fixed with any tolerable degree of certainty, were Hebron, Jebus, Jericho, Bethel- [n] See Numb. xiii. 29. & Joſh. xi. 3. [o] Gen. xiii. 3, 7. [p] Joſh. xi. 3. [q] See Numb. xiii. 29. [r] Gen. xxxiv. 30. [ſ] Joſh. xvii. 15, 16. [t] Judg. i. 4, 5. [u] Joſh xi. 3. [w] Ver. 19. [x] Compare Joſh. ix. 7. with Judg. iii. 3. See alſo 2 Sam. xxiv. 7.

(C) The Perizzite appears to have been a wanderer; whence poſſibly Joſephus divides the land of Canaan into no more than ſix provinces (2).

(D) Some (3) divide them into but two ſorts by the lump, the Canaanites and Perizzites, merchants and ſhepherds, as the two words nearly import; for Perizzite originally ſignifies a villager. The ſame are unwilling to ſuppoſe that thoſe appellations belong to any two particular tribes; or that either of them deſcended from any ſingle ſon of Canaan; but that they were mixed multitudes: but as they are conſtantly named as diſtinct tribes, and in order with the reſt, we know not how to decide upon this matter. The names indeed of theſe tribes and of this people in general are a little vague and uncertain: ſo the whole body of the ſeven nations is ſuppoſed to be ſignified ſometimes by the Amorites, juſt as all the people of the ſeven united provinces are now properly called Hollanders, who are more potent than any of the reſt (4).

(2) Antiq. l. 5 c. 1. (3) Cumberland's Origin. Gent. Antiq. p. 132. See alſo Bedford's Script. Chronol p. 202. (4) See Patrick upon Gen. xlviii. 22.

Shechem,

Shechem, and Beth-shean, concerning which, as they stood under the Canaanites, we have nothing particular to add.

Now to speak of the customs, manners, arts, sciences, and language of these several nations, we may suppose, that in some points they differed widely from each other, according as their situation led them into different courses of life (E). Their customs, &c.

We

(E) It is hard to say any thing particular of the Kenites, the Kenizzites, the Kadmonites, and the Rephaim, or to point at the exact places where they dwelt. The Kenites we have largely insisted on already; but however, though the name be the same, we know not how to think these the same people. These are mentioned as a tribe of the Canaanites, who were to be delivered up to the executive justice of the Israelites; whereas those we formerly touched on are represented as a people who lived in a great degree of friendship with them. The Chaldee interpreter calls them Schalmites; whereby they are understood to have been pacific, and at no enmity with Israel. This indeed sounds them the same with the Kenites of Jethro's family. Whether or no the appellation of Kenite may have belonged to two distinct families we know not, but it appears pretty plain by scripture, that there was a difference in their manner of life: for on the one hand we are told, that it was unlawful for them to drink wine, to plant, to sow, or to dwell in houses, and that they conformed to this injunction, and led their life accordingly (5). Where we find this we understand also, that for their obedience to their laws they were to escape the hand of Nebuchadnezzar: whereas the Kenites of Jethro's line and kindred are said to have pitched their nest upon a rock, which seems to imply, that they built them a city for a safe habitation; and what is more, they were carried off with the ten tribes of Israel by the Assyrian (6); but we have dwelt sufficiently on these. The Kenizzites there is little or nothing said of, nor do we know where they dwelt. The Kadmonites, from the import of their name, are allowed to have dwelt in the east, and the Jerusalem Targum (7) expressly calls them, the children of the east. The Rephaim are mostly placed in Bashan, where Og the last of their race reigned (8). They were, as their name declares, men of a gigantic stature. A writer (9) of great learning and repute has a remarkable thought concerning the Rephaim; he fancies, they were the Gephyræi who followed Cadmus into Greece. He observes, that in the Chaldee they are called גִּבָּרַיָּא Gebari, or stout men; and hence he has room for his conjecture. The race of the Rephaim indeed was quite extinguished upon the death of Og; but the name may have been assumed by others. From the little here collected, we may observe, why these four are omitted in speaking of the land of Canaan in

(5) Jerem. xxxv. (6) See before, p. 118. (7) Gen. xv. 19.
(8) Deut. iii. 11. (9) Reland Palæst. Illustr. p. 141.

We need not say, that the Canaanites on the sea-side were merchants, in which capacity we shall consider them at large, when we come to speak of them as Phœnicians; for by that name, it is commonly agreed, they were afterwards known to the Greeks: accordingly the Seventy, instead of the kings of the Canaanites, which were by the sea, have rendered it, the kings of the Phœnicians, on the sea-coast. And by the same, the whole land of Canaan is called the country of the Phœnicians[y], though those only were properly so called who inhabited the sea-coast: and these we shall dwell upon more particularly under the head of antient Phœnicians. The other Canaanites, who had an inland situation, were employed in pasturage partly, and partly in tillage, and in the exercise of arms, in which they will be seen to have been well versed. Those of them who dwelt in the walled cities and fixed abodes cultivated the land, as we may suppose; and those who wandered about, as particularly the Perizzites seem to have done, by what we have just before said of them, grazed cattle. So that it is easy to discern among them the several distinct classes of merchants, and consequently seamen, and artificers, soldiers, shepherds, and husbandmen, if not students. As much as they were divided in interest and ways of life, we shall perceive by their history, that they were ready to join in the common cause; that they were very well appointed for war, whether offensive or defensive; that their towns were well fortified, and themselves well furnished with weapons to battle it in the field; that they particularly had warlike chariots, so dreadful among the antients, and which they are thought to have borrowed from the Egyptians (F); that they were daring, and obstinate, and almost invincible; the days of Moses, though they seem all to have possessed the region designed for Abraham and his seed. The Rephaim, we see, were in Bashan, which, as we have observed, was no part of the land of Canaan; the Kadmonites also were on the east of Jordan; the Kenites were, as seems upon the whole, a tribe of the Midianites, and therefore these three could not be reckoned among the tribes of Canaan, they being foreigners to that country; though it happened, that they also did, in part, fall to the Israelites, as was promised. To conclude it is not plain, that any of these four nations were of the sons of Canaan.

[y] Jos. cap. 5. com. 1. 12.

(F) This is Cumberland's thought, who supposes a part of them to have abode two hundred years in Egypt; and that the Canaanites and Perizzites, when named together, must be understood of those mingled vincible; and, in the example of the Gibeonites beneath, we ſhall ſee they wanted not craft and policy. The language they ſpoke was well underſtood by Abraham, as ſhould ſeem; for by what appears, he converſed very readily with them, upon all occaſions; but for their manner of writing, whether they had any originally of their own, which conſidering all things cannot well be doubted, or whether they had it in common with the other nations then ſubſiſting in that part of the world, who all ſpoke the ſame tongue, or very nearly the ſame, or whether they borrowed it at firſt from the Iſraelites, may be conſidered, when we come to ſpeak further of the Hebrew language [z].

Their Religion.

THEY retained the pure religion quite down to the days of Abraham, who acknowledged Melchiſedec to be prieſt of the moſt high GOD; and Melchiſedec was indiſputably a Canaanite, or, at leaſt, dwelt there at that time, in high eſteem and veneration (G). They never offered to moleſt Abraham; on the contrary, they were ready to oblige him in every thing, a noble example of which we have in the behaviour and good intentions of Ephron towards him, in the affair of the cave of Machpelah. To ſay no more upon this ſubject, we muſt hence allow, that there was not a general corruption of religion among the Canaanites at this day, but it muſt be granted, that the very Hittites, ſo ſeemingly commendable in the days of Abraham, degenerated apace, ſince they were become the averſion of Iſaac and Rebekah, who could not endure the thoughts of their ſon Jacob's marrying among the daughters of Heth, as their ſon Eſau had done, to their great grief [a]. So that about this time we muſt date the riſe mingled tribes of all the Canaanites, who had been engaged in fierce wars with the Egyptians; and further, that theſe two bodies are particularly marked down for deſtruction, as they were the moſt warlike and ſkilful in martial affairs, training up their children to the ſame diſcipline, and the moſt likely to give the Iſraelites trouble (10).

[z] See SHUCKFORD's Connect. of the ſacr. and proph. Hiſt. Vol. I. Book 2. p. 110. See Vol. I. p. 337.

[a] See before, p. 125.

(G) Sir Iſaac Newton (11) concludes, that they perſevered in the true religion till the death of Melchiſedec; but that afterwards they fell away therefrom, and began to embrace idolatry, now ſpreading, as he thinks, from Chaldæa. They are ſaid to have been given to the ſuperſtition of the antient Perſians (12).

(10) See Cumberland Origin. Gent. Antiqu. p. 132, 133. (11) Chronol. of ant. Kingdoms amended, p. 188. (12) See Shuckford's Connect. of ſacr. and proph. Hiſt. Vol. I. Book 5. p. 335.

of (H) thoſe abominations, which ſubjected them to the fierce wrath of God, and made them unworthy of the land of their poſſeſſion. In the days of Moſes they were become incorrigible idolaters, for he commands the Iſraelites to deſtroy their altars, and break down their images, ſtatues or pillars, and cut down their groves (I), and burn their graven images with fire. And leſt they ſhould pervert the Iſraelites, it was as ſtrictly enjoined them not to intermarry with them; but to ſmite them, and utterly deſtroy them, nor ſhew mercy unto them [b]. By this we may form an idea of their fearful errors. They are accuſed of the cruel cuſtom of ſacrificing men, and are ſaid to have paſſed their ſeed through fire to Molech [c]. The cuſtom of ſacrificing men they are charged with, as they were the anceſtors of the Phœnicians, and therefore we ſhall not repeat what we have already [d] ſaid on that ſubject, nor anticipate what we may have to add in our Phœnician ſection. Their morals were as corrupt as their doctrine; adultery, beſtiality of all ſorts, prophanation, inceſt, and all manner of uncleanneſs, are the ſins laid to their charge, and which brought on the calamities they were doomed to [e]: and this may ſerve as a ſupplement to the character of this people, after their fall from the right way.

Their government. Concerning their government thus much may be ſaid, That they were comprehended under a great number of ſtates,

[b] Deut. vii. 1---5. [c] Levit. xviii. 21. See before, p. 99.
[d] See Vol. I. p. 305. [e] Levit. xviii.

(H) It is the opinion, however, of biſhop Cumberland (13) that the Canaanites were idolaters before the congreſs of Melchiſedec and Abraham, which we know not how to allow.

(I) The original word is Aſharim, which we render groves; but it is interpreted to mean wooden images of Aſtarte. One of the reaſons given to corroborate this opinion is, that Gideon is ſaid to have thrown down the altar of Baal, and to have cut down the grove that was by it; whereas by the Hebrew text, it was upon it, as it is alſo by the Greek of the LXX: wherefore, ſay they, the Aſherah upon the altar could not have been a grove, but muſt have been an image, and none more likely than that of Aſtarte (14). Sir Iſaac Newton remarks upon the whole paſſage, that the Canaanites had no temples. Moſes commanded Iſrael to deſtroy the altars, images, high-places, and groves of the Canaanites, but made no mention of their temples, as he would have done, had there been any in thoſe days (15).

(13) Origin. Gent. Antiquiſſ. p. 427. (14) Selden de Diis Syris, Syntagm. 2. (15) Chronol. of ant. Kingd. amended, p. 221.

and

and under ſubjection to limited chiefs, or kings as they are called; and tranſacted all their buſineſs in popular aſſemblies: ſo Abraham bowed not down to the king of the children of Heth, but to themſelves; ſo Ephron ſeems to have acted with Abraham with the participation of his whole tribe: ſo Hamor king of Shechem would not conclude upon what anſwer he ſhould make to what the ſons of Jacob propoſed to him, till he had conſulted his citizens upon what he ſhould, or ſhould not do, in the caſe; and throughout all their tranſactions the ſame tenor of conduct in their princes will be obſerved by every attentive reader: nor is it likely, that ſo many petty kingdoms ſhould have been ſtanding when Joſhua invaded them, had exorbitant ambition and luſt of rule been known among them; but as nature, perhaps, taught them, That every man as an individual, and every ſtate as a collective body, is free and independent, ſo they may thereby have been reſtrained from invading each other's rights, or elſe one or a few muſt have ſwallowed up the many; and though this opinion may be combated by the ambitious cruelty of Adonizebek, that one example will have no other effect upon this argument, than a ſingle exception has to a general rule; that the main body of them thought and acted upon different principles appears pretty plain. This is as much as we need, or can well ſay concerning their government, laws, and policy.

Their hiſtory.

We now come to their hiſtory, the beginnings of which are too dark and unſettled for us to dwell on them, and too heavily laden with the hypotheſes of the great men, who have turned their thoughts towards their antiquities. Wherefore, taking ſcripture and the natural lights reflected therefrom for our principal guides, we ſhall touch as lightly as may be upon what the learned have advanced, as it were, from their own ſtock. When we conſider the ſituation and diſtance of this country, we cannot but think it was at firſt peopled by Canaan and his deſcendants upon the firſt diſperſion after the flood (K). What concerns they originally had with Egypt, are rather gueſſed at, than confirmed to us, in reſpect of the time when they were tranſacted; but, finding that there was a ſettled averſion among the Egyptians in the days of Jacob againſt ſuch as fed cattle, it is thought, the Phœnician ſhepherds or Canaanites may have warred upon, and oppreſſed the Egyptians before Abraham removed into Canaan; though this is liable to ſome objections (L): Therefore we muſt here acknowledge, as we did formerly, our great ignorance in this matter, and diſſatisfaction with what the learned have advanced upon it. All therefore we can pretend to in this matter is, to mark out, as we go along, the times, in which the learned have been induced to fix what Manetho tells us of the Phœnician ſtrangers in Egypt. In conformity to this, it is pretended [f], that ſome of them, upon the increaſe of their families, being ſtraitened for want of room, moved ſouthwards, as Moſes intimates, as others did northwards, ſuch as the Hamathite and Arvadite; and that the former penetrated far into Egypt, or at leaſt poſſeſſed themſelves of the Arabian ſide of that country, which they will have to have been Goſhen. Here, ſay they, did they ſettle even under Mizraïm himſelf, erected a ſeparate kingdom, and differing from the pure Egyptians in religious matters, and in way of life, fierce contentions aroſe between them, which ended in a total expulſion of them, in the manner we formerly related in the hiſtory of Egypt; and this, ſay they, was effected in the days of Abraham.

(K) There is an old tradition which ſays otherwiſe; for it tells us, that this country did originally belong to the children of Shem, by virtue of a diviſion made among the ſons of Noah; but that the children of Canaan diſpoſſeſſed them (16): whence it is argued, that God did but ſtrict juſtice in reſtoring the line of Shem to their rightful poſſeſſion.

(16) Epiph. Hæreſ. 46. n. 84.

We have reckoned the vale of Siddim, where Sodom and Gomorrah ſtood, into the antient country of Canaan; and it happens to be the ſcene of the firſt action we find, for certain, of this people. The inhabitants of this vale were invaded by Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, and reduced to a tribute (M), which

[f] See Cumberland on Sanchoniatho, p. 351, 352, ſeq. & Bedford's Scripture Chronol. p. 201, 202, 250, 251, 252, 253, 337.

(L) For we think it is pretty obvious, that the Egyptians muſt have looked on Abraham as a Phœnician or Canaanitiſh paſtor, when he was among them; but we do not perceive, that they had him any how in averſion, quite the contrary is certain (17).

(M) By an old tradition we have already mentioned, this war upon the inhabitants of the vale of Siddim was a very juſt one; for if it be true, that the land of Canaan, of which this was undoubtedly a part, originally belonged to the children of Shem, from whom it

(17) See Gen. xii.

was

which they paid for twelve years ſucceſſively; but in the thirteenth they rebelled, which drew on them a ſecond war, which we ſhall come to anon.

IN the mean time the other parts of the country received Abraham with great hoſpitality and veneration, two or three years after this invaſion; but ſoon after his arrival, the whole land was oppreſſed by famine, and the Canaanite is now expreſly ſaid to have been in the land (N). The dearth drove Abraham into Egypt: whence we learn, that the whole country at this time was in great want[h]. The famine was of no long continuance, and Abraham returned into this country again, and found that the Perizzite was alſo in the land; whence, it is thought, they are ſpoken of as new comers, and that they had lately been expelled from Egypt, or dreading an expulſion, had voluntarily forſaken that kingdom; and the rather, becauſe Abraham and Lot ſeem now to have been ſtraitened for want of room, which cauſed their ſeparation, as if the country was now become more populous than they at firſt found it (O). And now was the whole land promiſed to Abraham[i].

THE five kings of the vale of Siddim, BERA king of Sodom, BIRSHA king of Gomorrah, SHINAB king of Admah, SHEMEBER king of Zeboim; and the king of Bela, or Zoar, rebelled in the thirteenth year after they had been ſubdued by Chedorlaomer, and made tributary to him, as we have already obſerved. Wherefore Chedorlaomer with his allies marched was forcibly taken by the children of Ham (18), no wonder, that the kings of the eaſt, who were of that deſcent, laid claim to this country in general, and to this moſt lovely ſpot in particular; for Elam deſcended from Shem (19).

[h] Gen. xii. JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 1. c. 9. [i] Gen. xiii.

(N) According to what you read in the preceding note, this means no more than that the Canaanites had invaded the country before Abraham came thither. But we muſt remember, that this is building a ſuperſtructure upon a very weak foundation, a tradition: much the ſame may be ſaid upon the paſſage afterwards, that the Perizzites were alſo in the land.

(O) But upon this we may ſtart one queſtion, which in this caſe cannot be readily anſwered; How came ſuch a weak prince as Hamor king of Shechem to have ſo much ground to ſpare, as he afterwards talks of, when he hoped to make an union with Jacob (20)?

(18) See before in the Notes, p. 165. (19) Gen. x. 22.
20) See Gen. xxxiv. 21.

hither again in the fourteenth year, taking ſeveral other nations or tribes in his way; or rather he fetched a circuit to come at them, reducing, among others, the Horites, the Amalekites, and the Amorites of Hazezon-tamar. At laſt he fell on the five kings of Siddim, who were reſolved to diſpute their rights with him; but they fell under the preſſure of the enemy once more; and all the inhabitants were either ſlain in battle, or carried a way captive, or obliged to fly to the mountains and their cities. Sodom and Gomorrah, and the reſt were pillaged with the utmoſt rigour and ſcrutiny. Amongſt the priſoners was Lot, which rouſed up Abraham to undertake his reſcue; which he did moſt effectually [k].

At this time Melchiſedec (P) was king of Salem, and prieſt [k] Gen. xiv.

(P) The Jews will have him to have been Shem, out of a vain reluctance, that their father ſhould have had any ſuperior among the Canaanites; and they are not without their advocates for this opinion among the Chriſtian writers, and ſome of them very eminent: we will give the words of a very learned prelate of our own church upon this point..... "I am glad, that I can cite Grotius "to abet my opinion [That Melchiſedec was the Shem of Moſes, and "the juſt judge of Philo Byblius] thus far, that he ſaith in his notes "on Hebr. vii. 1. Melchiſedec is the man meant by Sydyc in Philo "Byblius. And that Shem had this title of Melchiſedec, or the juſt "king, as Pompey was ordinarily called Magnus, and Octavius called "ed Auguſtus, is the judgment of the eldeſt and learnedeſt Jews, "and of many modern men learned in Jewiſh antiquity; to "whoſe judgment herein I ſubſcribe with great ſatisfaction. And "whereas others think him ſome ſmall king of Canaan, I concur "thus far with them, that I believe he neither had, nor ſought "any large dominions for himſelf (21)..... This then is a favourite opinion we ſee, and no doubt the great man, whoſe words theſe are, had perfectly ſatisfied himſelf, that the thing muſt have been ſo. But as eminent a prelate (22) of our own differs ſo far from the former, whoſe words we have given above, that he wonders how any Chriſtian can entertain ſuch a notion, ſo evidently deſtroyed by the apoſtle to the Hebrews (23), where it is expreſly ſaid, that Melchiſedec was not γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν, his deſcent or pedigree was not counted from them [the Jews] which is not true of Shem. "Nor could Shem be ſaid to be without father or mother, whoſe "genealogy is evident from Adam. Nor was Shem's prieſthood, "if he had any, of a different order from Levi's, who was in his "loins, as well as in the loins of Abraham. And therefore it can-

(21) Cumberland on Sanchoniatho, p. 174. (22) See Patrick upon Gen. xiv. 18. (23) vii. 6.

"not

prieſt alſo of the moſt high GOD (Q): and as Abraham was returning from the war, he preſented him with bread and wine (R); that is, gave him an entertainment of meats and drinks

" not be ſaid, that Levi paid him tithes in the loins of Abraham;
" but it would be as true, that he received tithes in the loins of " Shem. For, according to this interpretation, he was in the loins " both of him that received tithes, and of him that paid them;
" and ſo the whole argumentation of the apoſtle falls to the ground.
" But ſetting aſide theſe, and other Chriſtian reaſons, there is no " cauſe that we can diſcern, why Moſes ſhould call Shem (whom " he ſo often mentions) by any other name than his own: nor is
" it likely, that Shem reigned in the land of Canaan, which now " was in the poſſeſſion of his brother's ſon. Nor could Abraham
" be ſaid to ſojourn there as in a ſtrange country, if his noble anceſtor
" Shem had been king there (24)." Theſe arguments muſt be allowed to be very ſtrong, and it is pretty clear, that the notion which obtains among the Jewiſh writers is of no very antient date. Joſephus expreſly calls Melchiſedec a Potentate of the Canaanites (25). The Arabians deduce him from Peleg (26). To paſs over ſome notions of the church, and of ſome heretics, concerning him, which are pretty wide from our preſent purpoſe; he was both a king and a prieſt; which offices were antiently joined in one perſon, of which ſeveral inſtances are obſerved in antients writers, both Greek and Roman.

(Q) Salem is by Joſephus (27) called Solyma; who alſo ſays, that Melchiſedec was the firſt founder of it; that he erected a temple in it, and officiated as a prieſt, calling it Jeruſalem; whereas its former name was Solyma. But what he ſays in this caſe has no weight with the moſt accurate and learned of the Chriſtian writers, who, for the moſt part, have a different notion. There is a Salem mentioned in the New Teſtament (28); which is ſuppoſed to have been the ſame where Melchiſedec reigned (29). The Arabians will have it, that Jeruſalem was built by twelve neighbouring kings, who, touched with a deep veneration for Melchiſedec, built it in honour of him, or for his convenience; which when they had done, he called it Jeruſalem (30).

(R) As he is generally acknowledged to have been a type of Chriſt, ſo ſome have diſcovered in this bread and wine a near relation to the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper: but this is a pious miſtake; the words of Moſes mean what Joſephus (31) explains; it was no more than a refreſhment of meats and drinks, which he offered to Abraham, according to the hoſpitality of thoſe times; eating of bread, in the ſcripture phraſe, is feaſting.

(24) Idem. ibid. (25) De Bell. Judaic. l. 7. c. 18. (26) Hotting. Smeg. Orient. p. 256, 200, 306. (27) Idem ubi ſupr. (28) John iii. 23. (29) See Patrick ubi ſupr. (30) Eutych. Annal. p. 67. (31) Antiq. l. 1. c. 10.

to

to refreſh him, and received from him tythes of all (S); having bleſſed him in the name of the moſt high GOD, poſſeſſor, or creator, of heaven and earth. The king of Sodom was at this remarkable interview, and ſeems to have acted a very generous and modeſt part, claiming nothing of all that Abraham had re-taken from the enemy, except the perſons of his ſubjects, leaving the reſt to his diſpoſal and diſcretion: but he met with as generous a return from Abraham, who, ſo far as in him lay, made him ample reſtitution of all that belonged to him, whether perſons or goods; but Aner, Eſhcol, and Mamre, his Canaanitiſh confederates, who were all three Amorites, were to do as they pleaſed; and how far they followed Abraham's example, is not ſaid [l].

NOW for fifteen years there is a dead ſilence as to the affairs of this people; but about this time a ſevere judgment was executed on the inhabitants of the vale of Siddim. Living in great eaſe and affluence, they were grown to ſuch a height of impiety, that there was no room for mercy on them; which if it could have been obtained, by the interceſſion of Abraham, they had been ſpared from the wrath of GOD now, as, by his arms before, they were ſnatched out of the hands of their enemies. The ſin they ſuffered for was beſtiality [m], which, from the chief city of that vale, Sodom, has ſince born the name of Sodomy. The particulars of this cataſtrophe we have already given [n] in ſpeaking of Lot; and ſhall now only ſay, that the four cities of this fertile and pleaſant ſpot, Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, were deſtroyed by a rain of brimſtone and fire, or thunder and lightning, from the Lord out of heaven, and the whole vale was conſumed [o]; and thenceforward became the dead or ſalt-ſea, or lake Aſphaltites (T). Thus periſhed a branch of the Canaanites with their whole

[l] Gen. xiv. [m] Gen. xix. p. 76. [n] See. before p. 76. [o] Gen. ubi ſup. Deut. xxix. 23.

(S) It is remarked (32), that the words of the text itſelf are ſo ambiguous, that there would have been no knowing whether it was Abraham that gave, or Melchiſedec, had not the apoſtle (33) explained it: whence Eupolemus thought Melchiſedec had beſtowed gifts upon Abraham Of what kind the tithes were that Melchiſedec received from Abraham, is not known; but we may enlarge on this in the life of Abraham.

(T) How this terrible ſubverſion was effected, is thus accounted for. The vale being full of ſlime-pits (34), or places whence Naph-

(32) See Patrick ubi ſupr. ver. 19. (33) Hebræus ubi ſupr. ver. 2. (34) Gen. xiv. 10.

tha

whole territory; all ſaving the city of Bela, henceforward called Zoar [p].

THE Hittites after this treated with Abraham, who deſired to purchaſe the cave of Machpelah for a burial-place; and their behaviour towards that incomparable patriarch deſerves well a place here. In a public aſſembly they offered him the choiceſt of the ſepulchres to depoſite his dead in, and that in the moſt reſpectful terms. But, when he ſignified his deſire to have a ſeparate place for his family, and had caſt his eye upon the cave of Machpelah, belonging to one of their tribe, called Ephron the ſon of Zohar, with whom he deſired them to intercede in his behalf: Ephron himſelf, who is ſuppoſed to have preſided in this aſſembly, generouſly offered to make him a preſent not only of the cave he wanted to purchaſe, but of the ground or field alſo where it ſtood, and preſſed him much to accept of it; but by the noble ſpirit of Abraham he was diſappointed ſo far as to be obliged to ſell the field and the cave to him for four hundred ſhekels, which he looked upon as a trifle between Abraham and him; ſo great was his deſire of retaining the favour and friendſhip of Abraham [q].

NOTHING occurs after this, that we can take notice of here, for the ſpace of about one hundred and twenty eight years. At this time reigned Hamor in Shechem, a poor kingdom and weak; though Hamor himſelf ſeems to have been worthy of a better dominion, and a better chance than befel him. He ſold a piece of ground to Jacob *. At Shechem it happened, that Dinah the daughter of Jacob coming to ſee, and converſe with the daughters of the land, ſhe was obſerved by Shechem the ſon of Hamor, who was violently ſmitten with a liking to her, and forced, and deflowered her; but having a real paſſion for her, and being ſenſibly affected with the wrong he had done her, he would have pacified, and perſuaded her to conſent to marry him. And ſpeaking alſo to his father Hamor, he entreated him to uſe his en-tha and Bitumen were extracted, is ſuppoſed to have been univerſally impregnated with igneous matter, and the lightning darting upon it, or flaſhing along the ſurface of it, kindled the combuſtible parts (35), which had the fearful effect of turning this once inchanting paradiſe into a loathſome lake. But we ſhall ſpeak of this lake hereafter in the geography of this country, as it was under the Jews.

[p] See before, p. 78. [q] Gen. xxiii. * Gen. xxxiii.

(35) Vide Cleric Diſſertat. de Sodomæ Subverſione, §. 4.

deavours,

deavours, that he might have Dinah for his wife. Accordingly Hamor went to Jacob, to communicate the ardent inclinations his ſon had for Dinah, and to aſk his conſent. But the injury and affront were ſtifly inſiſted on by Jacob's ſons, who were preſent, as was alſo Shechem himſelf. This laſt finding, that the others were highly exaſperated at the violence he had committed on their ſiſter, profered all the ſatisfaction their hearts could wiſh, if they would but forgive him, and let him have her. Shechem thought he had gained his point upon the anſwer he received from them; which was, That if he, and all of his tribe or city, would conſent to be circumciſed, he ſhould have his will. Shechem willingly ſubmitted to this painful propoſal, and ſo did his father Hamor for his ſake; for he had an eſpecial love for him above all his other children. Wherefore returning to the city, they aſſembled the people in the gate, and beſpoke them to this effect; That ſeeing that Jacob and his family dwelt with them in great harmony, and that there was full room enough for them all, it would be very prudent to unite with them by reciprocal marriages; that indeed there was a pretty hard condition inſiſted on, which was, that they ſhould all be circumciſed; but that the pain thereof would be amply compenſated by ſuch an acceſſion of wealth, as muſt flow in upon them by being one people with Jacob. The men of the city, partly out of affection to Hamor and Shechem we may ſuppoſe, and partly upon the laſt conſideration, declared they were ready to be circumciſed, and circumciſed they were; but while they laboured under the ſores and inconveniencies of this compliance (U), upon the third day they were all ſuddenly cut off, by two of Jacob's ſons at the head of their ſervants; every one of them periſhed by the edge of the ſword, and their wives, and children and cattle, and houſhold-goods, and all belonging to them fell a prey to the ſons of Jacob, Simeon and Levi, who had perpetrated ſo horrid a violence upon a parcel of helpleſs, and, to all appearance, innocent people †.

† Gen. xxxiv.

(U) (36) "And began to be a little feveriſh: For the greateſt "pain and anguiſh the Jews obſerved was upon the third day after "circumciſion, which very much indiſpoſed them (37). And "indeed Hippocrates ſays the ſame of all wounds and ulcers, that "they are then moſt inflamed by a conflux of ſharp humours to "them."

(36) Patrick upon Gen. xxxiv. 25. & Vorſti. Annota. p. 95.

(37) Eliez. Pirke, c. 29.

Hitherto

HITHERTO we have been obliged to give the hiſtory of this people by incoherent pieces, and ſo we muſt continue to do: there is no connection, no ſucceſſive train of events to be expected here. When Moſes drew towards the ſkirts of the promiſed land, for the firſt time, the Canaanites in the ſouth-eaſtern parts of the country were joined by the Amalekites [r], who we may ſuppoſe, were eager to take their revenge upon the Iſraelites [s]. Theſe, underſtanding that ſpies had been in the land from Moſes, drew towards the frontiers; and the Iſraelites attempting to enter their territory againſt the expreſs decree of GOD, were by them repulſed with a great ſlaughter quite to Hormah [t].

WHETHER before or after this, is not preciſely known, Sihon king of the Amorites invaded the children of Moab and Ammon, and diſpoſſeſſed them of their country on the other ſide Jordan and the Dead ſea [u]: this conqueſt is celebrated by the moſt antient poem [w] that is extant among profane writers.

ARAD (W) was a king in the ſouth-eaſt of Canaan, when Moſes had a ſecond time reached the ſkirts of the promiſed land; and being informed of their coming by the Way of ſpies (X), he went out and attacked them, and took ſeveral of them priſoners; but fortune changed countenance on him, and he was vanquiſhed by them, and his country doomed to utter deſtruction [x]. Arad.

SIHON the Amorite ſoon after this, reſiding in the antient country of the Moabites and Ammonites, was entreated by meſſengers from Moſes for a free paſſage through his country, Sihon.

[r] Numb. xiv, 43. [s] See before, p. 153. [t] Numb. ubi ſupr.
[u] See before p. 101. [w] Numb. xxi. 27. [x] Ibid. ver, 1, 2, 3.

(W) It is doubted, whether this be the name of the king himſelf or of his city. There was a city of this name, and one of Canaan's ſons was ſo called, according to the LXX and the Vulgar, who ſo tranſlate the Hebrew of Arvad; who therefore may have given his name to this country, and the city may have been called after him (38).

(X) This is ſuppoſed to be a road or a way, ſo called from the ſpies who entered the country formerly eight and thirty years before. Some underſtand it, that the king heard ſpies were coming into his country. The Hebrew word here rendered ſpies הָאֲתָרִים haatharim; which the LXX have retained as the name of the place, and called it Ἀθαρειμ.

(38) Vide Patrick & Cleric. in Num. xxi. 1.

in

in his way to Canaan: but this requeſt he arrogantly rejected; and, inſtead of complying, marched out againſt him; but it was a very unfortunate expedition. He was defeated at Jaazar with a total overthrow, which was enſued by the entire loſs of all he had, to Moſes and his people.

Og. Og king of Baſhan is reckoned a king of the Amorites [y], and was of the race of the giants, or Rephaim, and the very laſt of them. His iron bed-ſtead of nine cubits in length we have already mentioned [z]. He was a dreadful enemy [a]. His whole kingdom took its name from the hill of Baſhan, which is compared to God's hill [b], and has ſince been called Batanæa. In it were no leſs than ſixty walled towns, beſides villages [c]. This country afforded an excellent breed of cattle [d] and ſtately oaks [e]. In ſhort, it was a plentiful and populous territory. Og's reſidence was at Aſhtaroth [f] (Y) and at Edrei, at, or near, which place he was vanquiſhed, as he was eſpouſing the cauſe of Sihon, and attempting to ſtop the progreſs of Moſes and his people. He fell in battle, he, and all that belonged to him; and his whole kingdom, and all therein was transferred to the Iſraelites under Moſes [g].

The news of what Moſes had done on the other ſide Jordan, to Sihon and Og kings of the Amorites, was matter of aſtoniſhment we may ſuppoſe to the Canaanites of every denomination; but when they alſo heard, how the waters of the river had been divided to give the Iſraelites a paſſage over to them, their hearts melted, and their ſpirits failed them. Jericho was the firſt place that felt the fury of the approaching exciſion, being diſmantled by the ſhouts of the Iſraelites, the ſound of the ſeven rams-horns, and the circumvection of the ark of the covenant; and in it no ſoul was ſpared but the harlot Rahab and her family, who had been inſtrumental in ſaving the ſpies that had been ſent by Joſhua into this city, which was now turned to a heap of aſhes and rubbiſh, [y] Deut. iii. 8, 11. [z] See before p. 93. [a] Vide Joseph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 5. [b] Pſal. lxviii. 15. [c] Deut. iii. 4, 5. Joſh. xiii. 30. Joseph. Antiq. ubi ſupr. [d] Deut. xxxii. 14. Pſal. xxii. 12. [e] Zech. xi. 2. Iſa. ii. 13. [f] Joſh. xii. 4. [g] Numb. xxi. 33, 35.

(Y) This city being elſewhere called Aſhtaroth-Karnaim (39), or the two-horned, has given room to ſuppoſe it derived its name from the goddeſs Aſtarte. But, as is obſerved, it might as well be ſuppoſed, that the city was in the ſhape of a half-moon (40).

(39) Gen. xiv. 5. (40) See Patrick on the above paſſages of Geneſis.

being

being burnt with fire; and the man curſed that ſhould ever attempt to rebuild it [h].

THE men of the city of Ai and their king then rouſed up, and were permitted by GOD to repulſe a body of three thouſand of the Iſraelites, killing thirty odd of their number, by way of puniſhment on the whole congregation, for the iniquitious practices of one perſon at the ſacking of Jericho. The king of Ai very rightly apprehended the war was not decided by ſo ſlight a favour of fortune on his ſide; and therefore ſent to the men of Beth-el, who were his ſubjects, and owed him homage, to repair to him, that they might ſtrengthen his arms againſt the enemy. It was not long ere he had advice, that Joſhua was moving towards him. In general, he apprehended Joſhua's intent was to beſiege him; but he knew nothing of a ſtratagem that was formed, and of ambuſcades that were laid to ruin him, and deſtroy his city. He ſaw Joſhua appear before his walls with no very formidable force, and at once reſolved to fight him: which he no ſooner offered to do, than the Iſraelites faced about and fled; which when he ſaw, he ordered every body to come out of the city, and help to purſue the enemy, that feigned only to run from him. By this means his city was left deſtitute of all defence, every body being at the heels of the Iſraelites; which, when it was known to a party, who lay in ambuſh, they roſe up, ſeized upon the city, and ſet the out-ſkirts of it on fire. The king of Ai turning his head backwards, ſaw the ſmoke of his city aſcending up to heaven; and in the midſt of his conſternation he ſaw alſo the enemy ſtop ſhort, ſhout, and face about upon him. His return to the city was intercepted by thoſe who had ſet it on fire, and were now advancing to aſſiſt in cutting him off. The men of Ai perceiving therefore that their city muſt periſh without reſource, and that they were to he attacked as it were on all ſides, their hearts ſunk within them, and they all fell by the edge of the ſword, except their king, who was taken alive, and led to Joſhua. And after this ſlaughter of their army, their city was viſited by the Iſraelites, and there the ſcene of blood was acted over again upon the women, and thoſe who were found in and about it; ſo that in all, there fell this day 12,000 ſouls, who were all that belonged to this deſtined place, which was now turned into a deſolate heap, as it ever afterwards continued. The captive king was hung upon a tree till even-tide, when his body was taken down, toſſed into what had been the gate-way of the city, where he had

The king of Ai.

[h] Joſh. vi. 26.

uſed

used to sit in judgment perhaps, and buried under an heap of stones, which were thrown on him: so ended the kingdom of Ai [i].

Upon this the whole country was rising up in arms to fight Joshua; but Gibeon, a city of the Hivites [k], far stronger and more considerable than Ai, and renowned for the courage of its citizens [l], heard what had been done to the kingdoms of Jericho and Ai, and trembled; and the inhabitants despairing to be able to withstand the torrent, which was now broke into their country, by strength, they resolved to try what art could do. And consulting what could be done in so dangerous a conjuncture, they came to the resolution of sending to Joshua some ambassadors, who should be dressed in old tattered garments, with clouted shoes, with dry mouldy bread, and wine-skins, or bottles old, and rent, and bound up: and all this they contrived, that their ambassadors might seem to come from some very far country. With this sordid equipage did they set out for Joshua's camp in Gilgal; where being arrived, they told him, they were come from afar off to seek his friendship; and being questioned as to their sincerity, they answered equivocally, and being still farther pressed upon the point, they replied with great submission, That they were actually of a very far distant country; and that the fame of the Lord God, and what he had done for Israel in Egypt; and since then, by the destruction of Sihon and Og, those mighty kings, had been the inducements which had brought them so far from home, being sent by the unanimous vote of all their countrymen, that they might make their homage, and desire to be accepted into a league with Israel; and as a proof that in all they had said they had confined themselves to strict truth, they produced their dry and mouldy bread, which they averred they had taken hot out of their houses the day they set out: our bottles of wine, said they, were new, and see how they are rent; our garments and shoes were the same, but they are worn out by reason of our very long journey. In all this they acted their parts with the utmost cunning and prevarication, and being too easily believed, gained their point, by persuading Joshua and the Israelites to make a league with them. Thus did they over-reach their enemies, and thereby save their lives. At the end of three days their whole artifice was discovered; but then they valued it not, having brought the Israelites under a solemn engagement to protect them as friends;

[i] Josh. vii, viii. [k] Josh. ix. compare ver. 3. with ver. 7. [l] Josh. x. 2.

friends: but in the concluſion they fared not ſo well as they, perhaps expected, being condemned to be hewers of wood and drawers of water; that is, to be ſlaves, or very little better [m].

Adoni-zedek.

WHEN Adonizedek king of Jeruſalem heard, how Jericho and Ai had been utterly deſtroyed, and, what was worſe to the common cauſe, that the Gibeonites had ſubmitted to Joſhua, he was divided between diſdain and fear. But reſolving to make an example of the Gibeonites, thereby to deter others from following ſo pernicious and ſo inglorious an example, he called in Horam king of Hebron, Piram king of Jarmuth, Japhia king of Lachiſh, and Debir king of Eglon, to join him to fight againſt Gibeon; and accordingly they all went againſt it, and beſieged it. The inhabitants in this diſtreſs diſpatched notice to Joſhua of what was befallen them, and begged his ſpeedy ſuccour to reſcue them from their enraged countrymen. The effect of this was, that the five kings, as they were beſieging the city, were furiouſly aſſaulted by Joſhua; ſo that they were obliged to riſe from before it, and make off in great confuſion. As they were flying away, and had almoſt reached Beth-horon, there came down a dreadful tempeſt of hail-ſtones, of ſuch enormous ſize that they knocked them on the head, and did more execution among them than the ſword of Joſhua. Thus perſecuted by the heavens above, and preſſed by the Iſraelites in the rear, they fled as chance directed them, not knowing whether they were going. By ſo general a diſperſion it is poſſible that many of them might have come off with life, had not the ſun, at the command of Joſhua, ſtopped his career, that the Iſraelites might ſee to overtake, and deſtroy the ſcattered multitude. And now the five kings, ſeeing nothing but deſtruction and deſolation before their eyes, made the beſt of their way to a cave near the city of Makkedah, the only glimpſe of hope they had left. Happily, as they thought, they reached this aſylum, but were ſome how or other diſcovered to be there; and information thereof being carried to Joſhua, they ſoon ſaw the mouth of their cave ſtopped up with great ſtones: and under this diſmal confinement did they remain, till the action of this miraculous day was concluded; when, being viſited and dragged out, they were thrown before the congregation of Iſrael, the chiefs of whom trod on their necks: which done, they were all five put to death, and their dead bodies were hung, each on a tree; and there they hung till the ſetting ſun, when they were taken down and toſſed into the mouth of the cave, which was again filled up with great ſtones, as a monument of their fall and unhappy end. This was the fate of the five confederate kings, while ſome of their ſubjects were ſo fortunate as to get into certain fenced cities, and ſo eſcape for the preſent *.

[m] Joſh. ix.

Jabin. JABIN king of Hazor, when he heard this, and that moreover Makkedah, Libnah, Lachiſh, Eglon, Hebron, and Debir had been ſubverted, and all their inhabitants put to the ſword, and that not a ſoul had been left alive in one of them: and again, that Horam, king of Gezer, and his whole force, had periſhed in attempting to relieve Lachiſh: Such a crowd of calamities together made him reſolve to raiſe all the tribes of the Canaanites, to withſtand the deſtruction, which ſo imminently threatened them all. He ſent therefore to Jobab king of Madon, to the king of Shimron, to the king of Achſhaph, to the kings on the north of the mountains, to thoſe in the plains ſouth of Cinneroth, and in the valley, and on the borders of Dor on the weſt, and to the Canaanites, peculiarly ſo called, on the eaſt and weſt, and to the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Jebuſite in the mountains, and to the Hivite under Hermon, in the land of Mizpeh. Theſe all confederated together againſt Iſrael; they were as the ſand on the ſea-ſhore for multitude, and were very ſtrong in horſe and chariots, a dreadful enemy for Joſhua and his people to deal with, who were utterly unprovided of both. Being thus united, they encamped near the waters of Merom, ſince called the lake Samachonitis. Here, as they lay conſulting together, they were aſſaulted by ſurprize, driven out of their camp, and broken into as many diſtinct bodies, perhaps, as they were tribes, each tending homewards. But the main body of them ſeem to have fled with their faces towards the great Zidon, weſtward, and Mizrephoth-maim; while another multitude ſcoured towards the valley of Mizpeh eaſtwards. But they were every where ſo furiouſly and effectually purſued, that moſt of them fell by the way. Jabin himſelf had the luck to eſcape for the preſent, but he periſhed with his city ſoon afterwards; for Hazor was ſoon after taken, her inhabitants all cut off, there was not one of them left, and herſelf burnt with fire. This city was reckoned as the chief of all the cities belonging to the kings of this confederacy, and therefore was treated with the greater rigour; but the reſt of the cities of theſe princes, which alſo fell into the hands of Joſhua, were ſuffered to

* Joſh. x.

ſtand

ſtand, though none of the inhabitants were ſpared in any of them [n].

NO loſſes, though ever ſo grievous, could for a conſiderable while break the ſpirits of the Canaanites; they ſtood their ground, and roſe up ſo thick and ſo faſt one after another, that they kept Joſhua employed ſix years [o]: And in the end great numbers are ſuppoſed to have left their country, and, travelling towards Afric, to have ſettled themſelves there at laſt, erecting a monument in memory of the calamities which had driven them from their native place, and inveighing againſt Joſhua by a very injurious appellation, as will be obſerved hereafter in the hiſtory of that continent. In their way thither they are ſuppoſed to have ſeized on the lower Egypt, where they erected a monarchy, which ſubſiſted under ſeveral of their own kings; but being at laſt overpowered, were forced, ſome of them, farther weſtward into Afric: and thus are they made out to have been the Phœnician paſtors, who lorded it ſo long, and ſo rigorouſly over Egypt [p].

AFTER the Canaanites had been ſucceſſively defeated, and at length diſperſed, and reduced, the Anakims [q] (Z), who alſo inhabited ſome of the mountains of the land, a fierce and barbarous race, and of an origin diſtinct from the Canaanites, as is thought, were invaded and cut off; and thus was the whole country, as it were, poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites.

BUT ſtill the Canaanites of ſeveral denominations were ſtrong and potent, and held no mean ſhare of the country; and, for nineteen or twenty years, the remainder of Joſhua's days, they were very little moleſted; being ſuffered to breath, while the important buſineſs of dividing their country by the conqueror could be regulated and adjuſted.

[n] Joſh. xi. [o] USSER. Annal. [p] See before in the Notes, p. 247. [q] Joſh. ubi ſupr.

(Z) Theſe are held to have been what we call giants, and are derived from one Arba, who ſeized on the city of Hebron, from whom it was called Kirjath Arba, the city of Arba. From Arba deſcended Anak (41), who, it ſeems had three ſons, whom we ſhall mention hereafter. From Anak the Anakims derive their name; but whether they were a numerous family, or really more bulky than their neighbours, is far from being aſcertained: their name has various derivations aſſigned it, which are many, and doubtful, and unſatisfactory; nor can we hope for any certainty in matters ſo antient, and at the ſame time ſo imperfectly touched on as this family is in ſcripture.

(41) Joſh. xiv. 15. xv. 13, 14.

This diviſion being marked out, the Canaanites were on all ſides invaded again by the tribes of Iſrael, who wanted each to drive them out of their reſpective lots. The Canaanites and Perizzites in Bezek were accordingly invaded by the tribes of Simeon and Judah, and there fell of them ten thouſand men. Being thus routed in the field, they retreated to the city of Bezek, where Adonibezek, the king of that place as his name imports, reſided. This king is infamous, with all men, for his ſingular cruelty and inſolence; for, by his own confeſſion, having taken ſeventy kings captive, he cut off the thumbs and great toes of each, and made them expect their meat under his table, like ſo many dogs. The city itſelf was now aſſaulted and carried; and all thoſe within the walls were put to the ſword, which may be called the ſecond ſlaughter of this diſpute. Adonibezek himſelf was in the city at this time, though he, it ſeems, eſcaped: but he was overtaken in his flight, and his thumbs and great toes were cut off; a juſt requital, as he himſelf acknowledged, for his former cruelty; but his life was undeſervedly ſpared, he being carried alive to Jeruſalem, where he died; for that city had been taken and burnt before; but whether by Joſhua formerly, or the tribe of Judah now [r], is not very clear (A).

Immediately after this the Canaanites were invaded in ſeveral other parts, and particularly in Hebron and Debir two, [r] Judg. i. 3—8.

(A) Jeruſalem is mentioned as taken by Joſhua; but, as may be obſerved, the Canaanites laid hands again on ſeveral places which Joſhua had torn from them; and the ſame may have happened at Jeruſalem: for though it is by moſt commentators imagined, that the Iſraelites held the town, and the Jebuſites the fortreſs of Zion ever afterwards; Joſephus 42) plainly enough tells us, they had both the fort and the city when David gave them their fatal blow; and, conſidering the temper and inſolence of the Jebuſites, it is not likely, that, while they poſſeſſed the citadel, they would ſuffer the Iſraelites to live quietly in the town. Upon the whole, though the place may have been reduced by Joſhua, and re-poſſeſſed by the Jebuſites again, and reduced a ſecond time by the tribe of Judah now, yet it is likely, there were always diſputes between the Jebuſites, and the Iſraelites, and that theſe were driven out by thoſe a ſecond time; and that in the days of David, the Jebuſites had both the city and fortreſs in their own hands, as Joſephus aſſures us above. Joſephus (43) ſeems to be right here, when he tells us the tribe of Judah did now attack Jeruſalem, but did not ſucceed in their attempt.

(42) Joſeph. l. 6. c. 7. (43) Antiq. l. 5. c. 2.

cities

cities which had formerly been deſtroyed by Joſhua, but were now in the hands of the Canaanites again, an inſtance among many others of the ſame kind, of the reſolution of this people, and their reluctance to quit their poſſeſſions. And in general the Canaanites in the high lands or mountains were reduced; but thoſe in the low country were able to keep their ground, becauſe they had chariots of iron. Hebron was by this war put into the hands of Caleb, who thence expelled the three ſons of Anak [f] (B).

THE Jebuſites were alſo aſſaulted by the Benjamites, but they could not be diſlodged. Thoſe about Beth-el had the houſe of Joſeph to deal with, and fell by fraud, their city being betrayed by one of the inhabitants, unwarily ſeized on by the hands of the enemy. But thoſe of Beth-ſhean, Taanach, Dor, Ibleam, and Megiddo, made head againſt the attempts of the children of Manaſſeh, and preſerved their ſeveral juriſdictions entire. The Canaanites alſo that dwelt in Gezer could not be expelled by the Ephraimites; and thoſe of Kitron and Nahalol ſtood their ground againſt the poſterity of Zebulun, though they ſubmitted to a tribute. The inhabitants of Accho, Zidon, Ahlab, Achzib, Helbah, Aphik, and Rehob, inſtead of being driven out by the tribe of Aſher, ſeem to have impoſed what conditions they thought proper on them, and barely to have ſuffered them to hold any part of their lot. Thoſe who held Beth-ſhemeſh and Beth-anath were an over match for Naphtali; but in the end they were made tributaries. The Amorites preſſed hard upon the children of Dan, and confined them to their mountains, denying them all the benefits of the low country; nor would they ſuffer them to have the mountains to themſelves neither; but would keep mount Heres in Aijalon and in Shaalbim in their own hands: but though they dealt thus with the Danites, according to their own pleaſure, they were reduced at laſt to a tribute by the joint forces of the houſe of Joſeph and of Dan, and their coaſt or border aſcertained, from the going up to Akrabbim from the rock, and upwards[t] (C).

[f] ver. 9—20.

(B) The names of theſe ſons of Anak are Ahiman, Sheſhai, and Talmai (44); concerning whom we ſhall only remark what Bochart has fancied, as to the import of their names. To begin with their father Anak, his name he makes to ſquare with the latin name Torquatus; the eldeſt, or firſt of the brother's name Ahiman or who is my brother; that is, who is my equal. By the name of Sheſhai the ſecond, he ſuppoſes him to have been ſix cubits high, as Goliath is ſaid to have been. Talmai, the name of the third, he derives from Talam a Furrow * ; as if he ſeemed in length equal to the furrow of a field. This is an ingenious thought, ſome may ſay, and ſome may think it a little preſumptuous. Joſephus (45), as his cuſtom is too frequently, gives us a fearful account of theſe inhabitants of Hebron, "Among the ſlain, ſays he, were found ſome gigantic "forms, who not only exceeded the ordinary ſize of men, but diſ- "fered alſo from them in aſpect and voice..... Some of their bones "are expoſed as a prodigy to this day.

(44) Numb. xiii. 22. * Canaan lib. 1. c. 1. (45) Ubi ſupr.

THUS upon the diviſion of their country, and the attempts made by the ſeveral tribes to drive them out, the whole land was in a ferment of war, which ended with no great ſucceſs on either ſide; and the adverſe parties ſeem to have been pretty equally matched. So that although it is certain that multitudes of this people were ſlain in the wars of Joſhua, and that, as is very rationally ſuppoſed, many of them fled the land in queſt of more ſure and quiet abodes twenty years before; yet ſuch was their number remaining, or valour, or ſuperior ſkill in war, that, after all their calamities, take them which way you will, they ſeem to have been but little inferior to the Iſraelites. Nor after this do we miſs one tribe of them, except the Gergaſites (D).

THE Canaanites, the Sidonians, and the Hivites of mount Lebanon, from Baal-hermon to Hamath, were left to prove [t] ver. 21—36.

(C) For want of knowing the exact ſituation of the places here mentioned, we are at a loſs to underſtand, whether the Amorites were left maſters of a ſmall, or a large territory. Obſcurities of the ſame kind there are many; but our reader, we hope, will upon this occaſion, and all of a like nature, paſt or to come, excuſe our want of preſumption; or that we do not pretend to ſhew him the exact ſituations of places, which from the beſt light we have, can hardly be gueſſed at, and muſt for ever, it is likely, remain a diſpute among ſuch as have time to waſte, and little elſe to do, or think of.

(D) We are poſitively told, they fled into Afric (46), where they fixed their ſeat; whence their being omitted is very rationally accounted for; and though it were difficult to think, that none belonging to the other tribes accompanied them, or trod afterwards in their foot-ſteps; yet may we hence conclude, that the Gergaſites were the chief of the fugitives from this country, which we ſhall reſume when we come to Afric.

(46) Gemar. Hieroſolymit. ad tit. Shebitih, c ap. 6.

Iſrael,

Israel, to exercise them with temptation to idolatry and sin (E), and the more immediately devoted nations, the Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites, dwelt, as it were in common, with the children of Israel in their promised land. Being thus blended together, they in time wrought so upon the unstable minds of the Israelites, as to persuade them to intermarry with them, and serve their gods [u], thereby captivating their minds, as they afterwards did their bodies.

FOR in a very few years, nine or ten, or thereabout, Jabin (F), whom we may reckon the second of the name, seeing he resided at the very same place with the former, was permitted by GOD to deal with the Israelites, as the instrument of his wrath. This prince, it is likely, rebuilt Hazor (F), which had been destroyed with such rigour by Joshua, re-established the royal seat there, was master of nine hundred chariots Jabin II.

[u] Judg. ii. 21—23, iii. 1—7.

(E) Here we see a remarkable distinction made between the Canaanites of Joshua's conquest, and those who were not so; as if these, who were only their borderers, were more proper, or more likely, to tempt the Israelites, than those who were actually inmates with them. Whence, whether we are to conclude, that the idolatry of the former was more enchanting than that of the latter, or their luxury more enticing; or whether at all there was any real difference between them, we leave the reader to fancy. Both religious and political reasons have been assigned for this mercy towards the Canaanites; of the former is, That the Israelites might not grow sluggish for want of some to waken and stir up their courage, and to keep up martial discipline among them, and that they might always be in a more immediate state of dependance on God, or look constantly up to him for succour (47). Of the latter, That no part of the country, which was too extensive to be thoroughly inhabited by the Israelites, might lie desolate, so as to be left for a harbour to wild beasts, who might by their encrease prove a more dreadful and pernicious enemy than the Canaanites (48).

(F) We think with those who suppose this Jabin to have descended from the other, who fell by the hands of Joshua; and that he now seized on the spot where Hazor formerly stood, and rebuilt that city; which, seeing he was so powerful a prince, is no unlikely matter, though some make a scruple of it. Whether Jabin was an appellation common to all the kings of Hazor, we have not to say from positive authority, though it seems to have been a common custom in these parts for kings to succeed each other under the chariots of iron (G), which, and the reſt of his hoſt, were under the command of Siſera, who dwelt in Haroſheth of the Gentiles (H). Jabin therefore reduced the Iſraelites to a ſtate of ſlavery, and mightily did he oppreſs them for twenty years. But whether he held them in general under ſubjection, or the northern tribes only, is a matter of uncertainty. But whether his dominion over them was total or partial, it expired at the end of twenty years, as we have ſaid. News was brought to Siſera, that the Iſraelites had been ſtirred up to rebellion, and that they were actually in arms, conſulting together, how they might ſhake off his maſter's yoke. Whereupon he prepared the nine hundred chariots of iron, and iſſued a proclamation, requiring the men of war to aſ-ſame appellation, as Pharaoh in Egypt, Agag in Amalekitis, &c. He is in the text called king of Canaan; which, whether it refers to the Canaanites, peculiarly ſo called, or to the whole body of the Canaanites in general, we take not on us to ſay.

(47) See Patrick upon Judg. iii. 2. 19. and Deut. vi. 22.

(48) See Exod. xxiii.

(G The number of theſe chariots, which are all along taken for the ſcythed ſort, is much wondered at by the learned. Whether he had ſuch a multitude of them before he warred upon Iſrael; or whether, by reducing them, he at once enlarged his empire, and augmented his forces, is not ſaid; though it is probable he had not ſo many before. But what ſhall we ſay to Joſephus, who acquaints us, That Jabin did actually reſide at Azor [Hazor] ſituate near the lake Samachonitis, and that he had an army of 300,000 foot, 10,000 horſe, and 3000 chariots 49). If Bochart wonders, as he does, at the 900 chariots the ſcripture gives him, obſerving, that Mithridates had but 100 in his army, and Darius but 200 (50); what muſt he have thought of Joſephus's 3000? Indeed, not only in the number of the chariots, but in that alſo of the horſe and foot, he is too large to be eaſily credited; nor perhaps is it always ſafe to lend an attentive ear to that hiſtorian. And it is to be noted, that notwithſtanding he on this ſide ſo vaſtly exceeds what the ſcripture ſeems to intend, he agrees therewith in the number of the Iſraelites, who roſe up to recover their rights, reckoning them at only 10,000 (51). What authority he had for this very extraordinary exceſs in the numbers of the Canaanites againſt the Iſraelites, we know not: but his view may have been to do honour in this example, as in others, to his countrymen and forefathers, with the Romans, who gloried chiefly in their military exploits, and in what their fathers had done before them that way.

(H) If Hazor was not rebuilt, then Haroſheth of the Gentiles bids fair to have been the royal ſeat. It is called of the Gentiles, as is ſuppoſed, from a confluence of all ſorts, who came now to put themſelves under the protection of Jabin's growing empire.

(49) Antiq lib. 5. cap 6. (50) Hierozoic. Part 1. lib. 2. c. 9. (51) Joſephus ubi ſupr.

ſemble

ſemble together, to march out againſt the Iſraelites, who were but ten thouſand ſtrong, with Deborah and Barak at their head. They came to a battle, and Siſera was beaten, and irretrievably routed, and a general ſlaughter was made of his army, quite to the gates of Haroſheth of the Gentiles: and being himſelf in great danger of the purſuers, he quitted his chariot, and truſted to his feet (I), directing his ſteps to the tent of Heber the Kenite, who was at amity with Jabin. He found Jael, Heber's wife, in the tent door, who, perceiving the hurry and diſorder he was in, entreated him to ſtep in, and fear nothing; which he did, and ſhe covered him with a rug, or ſome ſuch thing, ſo as not to be ſeen, or to prevent his taking any harm, while he repoſed himſelf after the fatigue of the battle and flight. He had not lain long ere he complained of being very thirſty, and begged a draught of water; inſtead whereof his kind hoſteſs preſented him with a bowl of new milk, of which when he had drank his fill, ſhe covered him up again. Then he called out, and bad her, if any one came to enquire if ſhe had any man within, to anſwer no, and to ſtand at the tent door for that purpoſe. Now, being greatly fatigued, he fell into a deep ſleep, and Jael, taking one of the tent nails and a hammer, trod ſoftly up to him, and drove the nail into his temples, and ſo killed him. By this time Barak had reached the tent in queſt of Siſera; and Jael with a triumphant air went out to him, and invited him to the ſight of the man he ſought, whom he here ſaw dead, with the nail ſmitten into his temples. So fell Siſera; and thus was Jabin's glory eclipſed, and his domini-

(I) The particulars of the battle are not recorded in the ſacred text; but thence it very plainly appears, that there was ſomething miraculous and extraordinary in this defeat of Jabin's hoſt, thunders, lightnings, and frightful ſounds rumbling in their ears, ſo that the heavens had the principal ſhare in this overthrow. And Joſephus, that we may not wonder at the ruin of ſo mighty a power by ſo contemptible a handful of the Iſraelites, tells us very circumſtantially, That the armies were no ſooner engaged, than there aroſe a furious wind, which drove ſuch a tempeſt of hail and rain into the face of the Canaanites, as ſtifled and blinded them, and benumbed their fingers to that degree that they were in all reſpects diſabled from action; ſo that they were eaſily broken and diſperſed, and trampled to death by the horſe, and torn to pieces by their own chariots, which, together with the execution made on them by the Iſraelites, quite diſſipated this mighty multitude, and reduced them to nothing (52).

(52) Joſephus ubi ſupra.

ons

ons forced from him by the children of Israel, by whom he was persecuted to destruction [w] (K).

Now what the Canaanites did, or what was done against them, after this, for a long series of years, we cannot say. Thus much appears, They had been able to maintain their ground in several parts, and particularly in Jerusalem, till the time that David was king of Israel. When the Jebusites, who held that city, or at least the fortress of Zion, saw David actually advanced up to them to besiege them, they posted their lame and their blind (L) to defend them, saying they were

[w] Judg. iv.

(K) Josephus gives us the particulars of his downfal. Jabin met Barak as he was in full march against Hazor, and was encountered by him and slain; and Hazor, the seat of his empire, was laid level with the ground: and thus fell the empire of the Jabins in Hazor a second time (53), according to this historian.

(L) Who, or what, these lame and blind were, is made a doubt; it is disputed, whether we must with Josephus (54) understand them to have been persons actually labouring under the infirmities of lameness and blindness, or whether something else is here to be understood, as others think. Bochart (55) deems this so plain a case, that he wonders how some great men had puzzled their brains with finding out a solution of it; and holds it past dispute, that this was a flourish of thrasonism in the Jebusites, who planted their lame and their blind, that is, their most infirm and unfit people, to defend them: while our own Dr. Gregory (56), who has a whole dissertation about it, understands them to have been the gods of this people, who, as the psalmist expresses it, had eyes, and saw not, and feet, and walked not (57) and this opinion is supported by these very plausible arguments; 1. How could David distinguish the halt, or the lame, or the blind from able men, when posted upon lofty walls, since those infirmities are not discernable but near at hand? 2. How can it be supposed there was such a number of these unfortunate persons in so small a city as might serve such a purpose? 3. And why should David say, as he does, that his soul hated them; when it would have been but natural in him to have commiserated their unhappy condition? From these arguments it is concluded, that it was not the lame and the blind of the city, whom the Jebusites relied on, but their idols, which in the Psalms are described in the sarcastical words we have inserted above, and which they planted upon their walls, by their power or influence to keep off the enemy; which they hoped would have been so efficacious a means of preserving them, that they trusted David would be unable to prevail

(53) Idem ibid. (54) Ibid. lib. 7. c. 2. (55) Phaleg. l. 4. c. 26. (56) In Patrick's commentary upon this passage. (57) Psalm cxv.

were enough to keep off ſo mean an invader, relying wholly on the ſtrength of their walls and ſituation. But they were diſappointed, being carried by ſtorm (M). But the circumſtances of this event, and how it fared with the gariſon and inhabitants, are not told [x].

THIS was doubtleſs a very ſevere blow upon the Canaanites in general, and muſt have perplexed them much: and they muſt again have been deeply humbled when they were invaded in Gezer by Pharaoh; upon what provocation given by them, or whether any, is utterly unknown (N); and their city burnt, and themſelves put to the ſword. This city was prevail againſt their ſuper natural operations. And here a parallel caſe is drawn in reference to the Palladium, the city of Troy being ſuppoſed to be impregnable while that remained with them: and ſome ſuch, or the ſame, notion may have obtained among the Jebuſites now, touching their god or gods (58). To this we ſhall add one chimerical notion of a Jewiſh rabbi upon this event. He pretends, that when Abraham bought the cave of Mach-pelah of the children of Heth, he formally covenanted with them, that when his poſterity ſhould come to be poſſeſſors of the land (which they had a foreſight of) they ſhould not touch the city of Jebus; and that now they engraved this covenant his forefather Abraham had made with them upon their walls, pretending, that David could not attempt them, but by the breach of the covenant his forefather Abraham had made with them (59).

[x] 2 Sam. v. 6—9.

(M) We have already obſerved, that according to Joſephus (60), the Jebuſites were in poſſeſſion both of the city of Jeruſalem and the fortreſs of Zion; to which he adds, that the lower town was eaſily carried by an aſſault, with David at the head of it; but that the caſtle or fortreſs held out, till Joab ſucceeded in the important ſervice of aſſaulting that.

(N) A late commentator is of opinion, that Pharaoh attacked the Canaanites at this place, out of complaiſance to Solomon, who had married his daughter; for, apprehending the Jews to be very little acquainted with the arts of conducting a ſiege, he ſuppoſes they were not able to maſter this city of Gezer (61), which, how it came to be ſo much ſtronger than Jeruſalem, and the fortreſs of Zion, and many other places by them ſubdued, we cannot ſay. This Pharaoh is by a learned chronologer, who takes this to have been the firſt expedition the Egyptians made out of their own country, called Rameſſes Miamûn (62).

(58) Vide Cleric. in 2 Sam. v. 6. (59) Eliezer Pirke, cap. 36. (60) Ubi ſupra. (61) Vide Cleric. in 1 Reg. ix. 16. (62) Marſh. Can. Chron. ad Sæc. 13, 14.

afterwards

afterwards rebuilt or repaired by Solomon, he receiving it in right of his wife, Pharaoh's daughter [y].

THUS oppreſſed by the Iſraelites on the one hand, and by the mighty power of Egypt on the other; and the glory of Solomon ariſing towards its meridian, the remnant of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebuſites were reduced to the grievous ſtate of bondage and ſlavery; whence it is gathered, that they were now brought to ſo low an ebb as to be unable to anſwer the demands of a tribute; wherefore being admitted into a covenant, as is very rationally ſuppoſed, with king Solomon, he would not cut them off, but employed them in the heavy labour of carrying on his vaſt and ſumptuous works. And this ſervility was entailed on their poſterity [z]; for, although it is apparently certain, that they upon their firſt reduction became proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion, yet it is thought, they were diſtinguiſhed from the Jews; and reckoned of a more ignoble blood, and as born to drudgery. This is ſuppoſed to have been their fate, and thus are they thought to have been blended with the Jews; though it is far from being poſitively known (O). And now it remains only for us to obſerve, That among the tribes of the Canaanites, enumerated above to have been laden with the yoke of Solomon, the Canaanites, peculiarly ſo called as we have hitherto ſpoken, are omitted: theſe therefore, we may conclude, bore none of the burthen, but remained whole and independent in their poſſeſſions on the ſea-coaſt, and ſprung afterwards to a great height of fame; continually improving themſelves in navigation, commerce, and the uſeful arts; and becoming comprehended under the famous appellation of Phœnicians.

SECT.

[y] 1 Kings ix. 46. [z] See ver. 20, 21. See alſo Ezra ii. 55, 58. and Nehem. xi. 3.

(O) We will give you the moſt obvious texts of ſcripture which relate to this matter; it is firſt ſaid, And all the people that were left of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebuſites which were not of the children of Iſrael, their children that were left after them in the land, whom the children of Iſrael alſo were not able utterly to deſtroy, upon thoſe did Solomon levy a tribute of bond-ſervice unto this day (63). And at the return from captivity, there is mention made of the children of Solomon's ſervants. . . . . And the Nethinims and the children of Solomon's ſervants were three hundred and ninety two (64): And elſewhere are the Nethinims and the children of Solomon's

(63) 1 Kings ix. 20, 21. (64) Ezr. ii. 55, 58.

ſervants

SECT. VII.

The History of the Philistines.

WE have already observed, that this people descended from the Casluhim partly, and partly from the Caphtorim [a], both from the loins of Mizraïm, the son of Ham, the son of Noah. This is their origin; whence it appears, that Egypt was their first Seat: nor have we ought to add concerning the origin of this people, except we acquaint you more particularly, than we have already [b], with the improbable notions, as we think them, of some of the learned concerning the Casluhim and Caphtorim (A). But Their Origine.

[a] See Vol. I. p. 366, 367. [b] See Vol. I. ubi supr.

servants mentioned together (65); and in these last texts our translators refer us back to the first, as if they were the children of the Canaanites on whom Solomon imposed a tribute of bond-service. But there is a difficulty to account for the smallness of the number, so that commentators are willing to deduce these mentioned upon the return from Babylon, from some other origin. Perhaps we shall find some traces of them in Josephus, who, with some variation from scripture, having acquainted us, That Solomon reduced a stubborn remnant of the Canaanites, inhabiting between mount Libanus and Hamath, made them his tributaries, they paying their tribute in servile works and labour; to which purpose they were to furnish Solomon with a certain number of slaves agreed on, who were to till the ground, and go through other sorts of drudgery; and over these, says he, were six hundred officers appointed to set them their tasks, and keep them to their work (66). Afterwards enumerating those who returned from Babylon, he reckons up six hundred and fifty, who passed for Israelites, but could not make out their extraction: others of uncertain genealogy there were five hundred twenty five; and of servants that attended upon the whole multitude, seven thousand three hundred thirty seven (67). These three numbers, making eight thousand five hundred and twelve, may, it is likely, have been Canaanites; but still the number is too small, except we suppose, that the far greatest part of the better sort were blended with the Jews so intricately, that there was no distinguishing between the pretensions of each, and moreover, that multitudes of them remained behind in the place of their captivity.

(A) As that the Casluhim were the antient Colchi described by Herodotus, and the Caphtorim, the Cappadocians in Asia minor, which though we have rejected already (68), we may have occasion to resume hereafter.

(65) Nehem. xi. 3. (66) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 8. c. 2. (67) Idem ibid. lib. 11. c. 4. (68) See Vol. I. p. 366.

We

we have, as much as poſſible, forborn to perplex our reader with what can afford no ſolid fruit, and only feed us with the ſlender fare of little better than groundleſs gueſſes, advanced with a preſumption, which we admire how it ſhould have poſſeſſed the minds of men, otherwiſe modeſt and ſcrupulous enough. Therefore we ſhall ſay no more of the Caſluhim and Caphtorim, whence the Philiſtines derive their origin, than that they certainly were of Egypt, as we have ſaid; and that conſequently the Philiſtines came from that country. From Egypt they migrated into, and ſeized upon, the land, which was afterwards called by their name; concerning which we ſhall ſay no more here than is barely neceſſary.

Their Country. The land or country of the Philiſtines, known to the antient Greeks and Romans under the name of Palæſtine, grew in time to ſuch a height of note as to communicate its name to the whole region, of which it was only a part; ſo that all the land of Promiſe became comprehended under this name, which is moſt commonly uſed, even in our days, in the ſame extent, it having prevailed always among the Chriſtians of the Greek and Roman churches, from whom we have received it. This celebrated name is very apparently derived from Philiſtine, which the Greeks altered into Palæſtine, though ſome pretend to derive it from the Greek it ſelf (B), but therein they are certainly miſtaken. Diſmiſſing this obſcurity, we ſhall proceed to mark out the boundaries of this country; which, from what we have ſaid above, may be aptly ſtiled the proper Palæſtine. It was a ſlip of land ſtretching along the ſea-ſide; bounded on the eaſt, by the tribes of Judah and Simeon; on the ſouth by Amalekitis, and partly, but very little perhaps, by Edom; on the weſt by the Mediterranean, or Midland-ſea; and towards the north it interfered with the tribe of Dan. It was a country much longer than broad, but neither way conſiderable for its dimenſions, being ſcarce forty Engliſh miles in length; but what it wanted in extent it made up in fertility of ſoil. Towards the ſea it is a plain country, but three or four miles up it begins to ſwell into hills and mountains; whence it is moſt beautifully diverſified with hill and dale, mountain and valley, productive of the moſt luxuriant gifts of nature, and rich in proſpects, which way ſoever the eye be turned. Rivers in this country there are none to ſpeak of; but that defect is ſupplied by exuberant ſprings, and brooks, and rills, down the ſides of mountains. The temper of the climate, nature of the ſeaſons, and natural hiſtory of this delicious ſpot we dwell not on here, referring our reader to the geography of the land of Promiſe, of which it was a part, and a very noble one.

(B) Deriving it from Peluſium, the famous Egyptian city of that name; from whence this people are ſuppoſed to have come; which name they deduce from a Greek word ſignifying dirt: but of this more hereafter.

BUT we cannot ſo paſs over the cities of this country, which we will here enumerate and deſcribe as well as we can, beginning from the ſouthermoſt. Gaza, the moſt renowned of them all, ſtood upon the ſkirts of the deſert which led to Egypt, and was built within two or three miles of the ſea, as from the moſt authentic accounts is gathered. What it was in its firſt days cannot be known; but in time it became conſiderable for ſtrength, beauty, and extent. In the Hebrew it is called Azza, and Aza was it called by the Syrians [c]; which has been altered into Gaza, which, ſay they, ſignifies a treaſury in the antient Perſian; and this name it had becauſe Cambyſes in his war with Egypt made uſe of it as a magizine [d]. But this is rejected as a mere notion: nor indeed is it a concluſion, ſuppoſing it to be true, that Cambyſes did make ſuch a uſe of this city, nothing, as we have ſaid, being to be poſitively determined from a ſimilitude of names and appellatives in different languages.

IN later times it was alſo called Ione, and Minoa [e]; and the ſea which waſhed along the ſhore from Gaza to Egypt was called, ſay they, the Ionian ſea, Gaza being called after Io [f]. This city is placed at one of the four corners of the land of Promiſe by Moſes [g], and was in the lot of the tribe of Judah, according to the diviſion Joſhua made of the whole land [h]. But though it was attempted, and carried, yet the Philiſtines poſſeſſed it again, and kept it [i]. Whether or not it had originally the ſame ſituation which it appears now to have had, cannot be known; but it is probable, that it from the beginning ſtood upon, or near, the ſame ſpot. It ſtood upon an eminence about three miles from the ſea, as we have ſaid, and was of very difficult acceſs for the depth of the ſands which ſurrounded it [k]. But by another author we underſtand it to have been ſcarce a mile diſtant from the ſhore [l], a difference we ſhall not take on us to reconcile. If a well-eſteemed traveller of our own nation be not miſtaken in the place, it is now upon a hill, ſurrounded by delicious vales, and

[c] STEPHAN. ad vocem Γάζα. [d] POMPON. Mel. lib. 1. c. 11. [e] STEPHAN. ubi ſupr. [f] Idem ad vocem Ιονιον. [g] See before, p. 158. [h] Joſh. xv. 47. [i] Judg. i. 18. iii. 3. [k] ARRIAN. l. 2. p. 150. [l] STRABO. l. 16. p. 759.

thoſe

thoſe again encloſed with a chain of hills [m]; but he mentions not a word of deep ſands about it, which if ſo difficult, as is ſaid above, he could not have paſſed over. But though he differs from the antient hiſtorian [n], who gives us the ſituation of this city in reſpect of the ſoil about it; yet he ſeems to agree with the geographer [o] from whom we have its laſt mentioned diſtance from the ſea, computing it at ſeven furlongs, which fall ſhort of a mile [p]: but his expreſſion on this point is obſcure, and we cannot build on it. For the more convenient communication with the ſea, it had a ſea-port, Majuma [q], a place of no great account, as ſeems, till Conſtantine took notice of it, and called it Conſtantia, in honour of his ſon Conſtantius. The antient name of this ſea-port is not aſcertained; but Julian, out of hatred to the memory of Conſtantine, altered its name Conſtantia into the Port of Gaza, or the maritime part of the ſaid city [r]: and from hence we find, perhaps, Gaza in the plural number, Gazæ. Majuma is alſo called the maritime Gaza. There is no ſign that it ever was a commodious place for the entertainment of ſhipping; but a ſhift was made with it, where no place more convenient was to be had; and doubtleſs the ſhipping which belonged to, or frequented it, were of a nature proper for ſo indifferent a ſtation; though perhaps, on the other hand, the port may have been altered from what it was by the incroachment of the ſea, but we read nothing of this; parallel caſes, indeed, happen almoſt every day. Anthedon ſeems alſo to have been another ſea-port belonging to Gaza, ſituate to the ſouthward of Majuma; but of what antiquity, or how far, or whether at all, it depended on Gaza, cannot be ſaid: it was not quite three miles diſtant from it. We ſhall have occaſion to mention it as a place of ſome note hereafter. We will not particularize the hiſtory of Gaza, and ſhall only ſay, that it ſeveral times groaned under the miſeries of war; that it was ſometimes in a flouriſhing ſtate, with mighty walls and coſtly edifices (C); ſometimes in a low

[m] Sandys Trav. Book 3. p. 149. [n] Arrian. ubi ſupr. [o] Strabo ubi ſupr. [p] Sandys ubi ſupr. [q] Sozomen Hiſtor. l. 5. c. 3. Marc Diac. in vit. S. Porphyr. c. 8. [r] Sozomen ubi ſupr. Marc. Diac. ubi ſupr. [s] Hieron. in Dan. xi.

(C) It is now a miſerable place; "Yet there are ſome reliques "left, and ſome impreſſions that teſtify a better condition. For "divers ſimple roofs are ſupported with goodly pillars of Parian "marble, low depreſſed condition. After ſeveral viciſſitudes it lay neglected ſo far, that in the New Teſtament it is called a deſert [t]; ſuch a deſert as it is now we may ſuppoſe, weak in inhabitants, and defenceleſs [u]; for ſo fertile a ſpot can never be called by that miſerable appellation [w], according to the common acceptation of the word with us. In this city they chiefly worſhipped a deity called Marnas [x]. Its name is remembred with Tyre and Sidon [y], when its ſiſter cities are either forgot, or omitted, as not worthy of a place among the conſiderable places of this ſea coaſt.

THE ſecond place we ſhall give to Aſcalon, Aſkelon, Aſhkelon, or Aſkalon, a great and noble ſea-port of this country, by antient accounts ſixteen, by modern, twelve miles to the north of Gaza; and known to us ſtill under the ſame name it bears in ſcripture, and in the writings of the antient Greeks and Romans, by whom it was had in a religious veneration. Nor do we find any conſiderable variation from this name, except that the Greeks ſometimes lengthened it into Aſcalonion. This city, as well as Gaza, is reckoned into the lot or tribe of Judah, and was taken by them, but not held. The ſituations of Gaza and this city cannot be diſputed, ſince they may be ſaid to ſtand at this day, and have been often viſited; therefore we ſhall multiply no words upon ſo needleſs a diſpute. By Joſephus [z] we underſtand this city to have ſtood upon a ſpacious plain, and, in his days, extremely well fortified. Though we have placed this city on the brink of the ſea, and made it a ſea-port of itſelf, yet there is a Ma-

[t] Acts viii. 26. [u] See SANDYS ubi ſupr. [w] Vide eund. & ANTON. GALL. apud RELAND. Palæſt. Illuſt. p. 788. [x] STEPHAN. ubi ſupr. HIERON. Epiſt. 11. ad LÆT. [y] LUCAN lib. 3. [z] De Bell. Judaic. l. 3 c. 1.

" marble, ſome plain, ſome curiouſly carved. A number broken " in pieces do ſerve for threſholds, jambs of doors, and ſides of " windows, almoſt unto every beggarly cottage. On the north- " eaſt corner, and ſummit of the hill, are the ruins of huge " arches ſunk low in the earth, and other foundations of a ſtately " building. From whence the laſt Sanziak conveyed marble pillars " of an incredible bigneſs, enforced to ſaw them aſunder ere they " could be removed; which he employed in adorning a certain " moſque below in the valley." The Jews are ſilly enough to think this the building Samſon pulled down upon the Philiſtines (2), We muſt note by the by, that our traveller ſeems to confound Majuma and Gaza with each other.

(2) Sandy's Travels, l. 3. p. 149. 4. Ed.

juma [a] given to this, as well as to Gaza, which, whence it was necessary, cannot be precisely said; it may, perhaps, have been a distinct part of the city next to the sea-side; or, perhaps, Ascalon was not quite so close thereto, but it might require the convenience of a more immediate port-town to intervene; or the harbour of Ascalon may have been rendered unfit for the reception of shipping, as we have before observed in the speaking of Gaza, whence a necessity arose of seeking some other place near, and of erecting a town there. But, to have done with these conjectures, let us proceed to things we are more sure of. Ascalon was famous among the antients on many accounts. It was the birth-place of Semiramis the Assyrian empress, which puts us in mind of the lake that is said to have stood near this city, wherein the goddess Derceto, her mother, plunging herself for shame of her rash amour, was transformed into a fish [b]. This city is noted for the place which originally produced the kind of Onion, called the shalot [c], which is supposed thence to have borrowed its name (D). It is famed also for its wines [d], and very remarkable for its great flights of pigeons [e], which, whence they encreased to such extraordinary numbers, will be told hereafter: nor must we forget the cypresses [f], which were here admired, or the extraordinary wells attributed to Abraham and Isaac [g]. The changes this city underwent will be shewn in the course of this work. It is now dwindled to almost nothing.

We now strike up into the country to Ashdod, or Azotus, which lay about twelve miles north-easterly of Ascalon. This was a city of extraordinary fame among the antients. It had an inland situation, and is said to have been built by one who fled from the Red-sea, who called it after his wife, whose name was Aza or Capria [h]. But this seems at least, to be a mistake; we hear of none that fled from the Red-sea but the Edomites; and that they, under some chief, may have re-

[a] Joan. Hierosoly. In Act. Concil. Constantinop. Tom. V. [b] Diodor Sic l. 1. par. 1. p. 65. [c] Stephan. ad vocem Ἀσκάλων. [d] Alex. Trall. l. 8. c. 3. & Albert. Aques Histor. Hierosol. l. 9. c. 15 and 51. [e] Philo. apud Euseb. de Præpar. Evang. l. 8. [f] Dioscorid. de re Med. l. 1. c. 121. Plin. lib. 12. [g] Origen. cont. Celsum. l. 3. Euseb. ad vocem Φρέαρ. [h] Stephan. ad vocem Ἄζωτος.

(D) This seems at first sight to be a very oblique derivation; but the Latin of this plant is Ascalonia, whence the French have their Echalote, which we have curtailed into Shalot.

paired

paired and fortified this place is probable enough; but that they impoſed this name [Azotus] on it, we cannot allow, it being very evidently a corruption of the Hebrew name Aſhdod, which was in uſe long before the Edomites were driven out of their country. But to continue what we find concerning this city, it ſtood in a champain country, which produced great plenty of corn [i]. It held out againſt the longeſt ſiege recorded in hiſtory, if it be true, that Pſammitichus laboured twenty nine years in the reduction of it. Here ſtood the temple of Dagon, and here was he peculiarly worſhipped.

ALMOST eaſt from hence lay the city of Gath, of principal fame, as being the royal ſeat in the middle times of this people; but it dwindled away very early, ſo that we have few or no materials towards a deſcription of it. It is famed for the remnant of the giants, or Anakims, who there fixed their abode.

NEARLY north-weſt of this city, about nine miles diſtant, was Ekron, corruptedly Accaron, concerning which we can only ſay, that it was the northermoſt of the five cities; that it was conſequently a frontier town; that the famous idol Baal-zebub was there worſhipped; that it faded away to a great degree of obſcurity, and that, although the name, and even conſiderable veſtiges of what it had once been, ſubſiſted for many ages, it happens, that no mention is made of it in prophane authors.

THESE were by way of eminence called the five cities of the Philiſtines, and the whole country was ſometimes from them called Pentapolis; and here their five lords reſided. Other cities they had, as Gerar, venerable as it was the antient ſeat of their firſt kings; but its exact ſituation being by no means determined, we for that reaſon paſs it over with the bare mention of its name, and for the ſame reaſon we ſhall be quite ſilent as to what concerns their other places of leſs note.

THEIR moſt antient form of government was adminiſtred by kings, who were all honoured with the appellation of Abimelech; ſuch were the kings of this people, father and ſon, who had to do with Abraham and Iſaac: but as we have obſerved concerning the Canaanites, and as will be plainly ſeen in the following hiſtory, theſe firſt kings were under great limitations. The ſceptre departed from this race very ſoon; for, in the days of Moſes, their monarchy was revolved into an ariſtocracy of five lords, who ſeem to have been in part independent of each other, though they were alſo apparently obliged to act in concert for the common cauſe. After this, they had a king over them, which, how they ſubmitted to, or whether it was their choice or not, we cannot ſay. This ſecond race of kings are called, ſo far as we know, by the appellation of Achiſh, though they were alſo called Abimelech. Three of theſe we think we have ſome account of, but their power ſeems to have been circumſcribed within very narrow bounds; they were ſubject to the control of their imperious nobles, and particularly of the lords, the five we think, who ſeem to have ſubſiſted under theſe kings; ſo that theſe princes, it is likely, were ſet up, to act merely as umpires, and to appear at the head of affairs, cyphers of ſtate, without any extent of power. This kind of mixed government can be to none ſo aptly applied as to that of Poland in our days. We find little or no mention of this ſecond race of kings. They held their reſidence at Gath, during their beſt times, from whence the royal ſeat was removed to Aſcalon, and from thence to Gaza. In a word, we may ſay, that the Philiſtines had very violent notions of liberty. They did not circumciſe, and, in their earlieſt times, at leaſt, held adultery in the greateſt abomination.

Their government, cuſtoms, &c.

[i] JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 12.

Their character, language, arts, and inventions, &c.

After what we have ſaid we need not remark, that they were a very warlike people; but to it we muſt add, that they were ingenious and induſtrious. Their character muſt be conſidered at different times; for we may ſay, they were not always the ſame people. In the days of Abraham and Iſaac they were, moſt aſſuredly, a righteous and hoſpitable nation; and ſo in great meaſure they may have been, under all their firſt race of kings: upon whoſe decay, a revolution in government, religion, and morals, may have enſued, all together. From henceforward they became like other idolatrous nations, the ſame enormities crept in, and prevailed among them. They are conſtantly mentioned in ſcripture as ſtrangers, and though poſſeſſed of a moſt valuable part of the Land of Promiſe, yet God would never ſuffer them to be driven out, they being Egyptians by deſcent, and not original natives, whoſe land only was promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed. Their arrogance and ambition were great, and their inveterate enmity (E) againſt the Iſraelites was ſuch, that one would

(E) And from a paſſage in Chronicles (3) it is gueſſed to have been of very antient date; where it is ſaid, that the men of Gath

(3) 1. vii. 21.

the

would be almoſt tempted to think, they were created on purpoſe to be a thorn in the ſide of that choſen people; for though the hand of GOD was ſelf-evidently againſt them ſeveral times, and particularly when they detained the ark, yet they hardened their hearts, and cloſed their eyes againſt conviction, flattering themſelves, that they might one day compaſs their ends againſt the Iſraelites. They ſeem to have entertained a very fond veneration for their deities, in which they perſiſted, though they, with their own eyes, ſaw the ſhame and ignominy which befel them, when in the preſence of the captive ark; and were even ſtupid enough to imagine notwithſtanding, that their gods might prevail againſt him, who had ſo greatly ſhamed them. They were much addicted to trade, which they, conſidering their ſituation, may have exerciſed from the beginning; but by the acceſſion of the fugitive Edomites in David's time [k], they roſe to ſo great a reputation as merchants, that the Grecks, it ſeems, reckoned them the moſt conſiderable people that way, and from them called all the country bordering on them Palæſtine [l]. Their language was not ſo different from that ſpoken by the Hebrews, as to cauſe any apparent difficulty for them to converſe together, as will be perceived by their intercourſe with Abraham and Iſaac; ſo that in all this region the ſeveral nations ſpoke one and the ſame tongue, perhaps indeed with ſome variation of dialect. They had doubtleſs the arts and ſciences in common with their moſt learned and ingenious contempoſlew the children of Ephraim, who would have taken their cattle from them. This incident is no where elſe to be found, and there are various thoughts concerning the ſenſe we muſt take this paſſage in. As to the time it was tranſacted, moſt allow it to have been while the children of Iſrael were ſojourners in Egypt. It plainly appears by the next verſe, that Ephraim himſelf was living at the time. The Targum ſuppoſes his children miſcomputed the time they were to ſerve in Egypt, and began too early an attempt upon their promiſed land. Dr. Lightfoot (4) makes the men of Gath to have been the aggreſſors, and ſuppoſes the Ephraimites only ſtood up to defend themſelves and cattle. But taking the words in the firſt ſenſe, which ſeems mo't obvious, they may ſerve to account for the reaſon why Moſes would not conduct the Iſraelites by the way of the Philiſtines. If this be the caſe, it muſt have been ſome horrid injury, or very uncommonly reſented.

[k] See before, p. 143, 144. Gent. Antiquiſſ. p. 37.

[l] See CUMBELAND Origin.

(4) Annotat. in Gen. ſub fine.

raries; and, perhaps, some of them in greater perfection than any where else. They had giants among them, who, whether they were originally of the breed of the Anakims, who retired hither when they were expelled Hebron [m], or whether they sprang from accidental births is not a very clear matter. We must not forget, that the bow and arrow is attributed to their invention (F), and that they were particularly skilful in the use of the same.

Their religion. Their religion was different at different times: under their first race of kings, they were of one religion with the Hebrews: Abimelech, in the sin he had like to have committed with Sarah through Abraham's timidity, was favoured with a divine admonition from God; and by his speech and behaviour at that time it seems, as if he had been used to converse with God. In after-times they erred into endless superstitions, and a very multifarious idolatry, each of the principal or five cities seeming to have had an idol of its own. Marna, Marnas, or Marnash [n], was worshipped at Gaza, and is said to have migrated into Crete (G), and to have be-

[m] See before, p. 179. [n] Hieronym. in Esai.

(F) It is supposed (5) that before they removed from Pelusium, where they are thought to have first inhabited, as we shall shew hereafter, they had occasion to annoy the enemies, who then infested them, at a distance; whereupon the bow and arrow came into their head, wherewith they armed their stoutest men, whom they called Cherethites (6), a name which includes this whole nation, as will be observed hereafter.

(G) The migration of this god may be naturally enough accounted for, if true it be that the Philistines planted the island of Crete; and it must be also, that the inhabitants there were a colony from Gaza in particular, the peculiar place of his worship. The Philistines are in several places of scripture (7) called Cherethites: particularly, they are so called by the Egyptian (8), whom David laid hands on, when he was in pursuit of the Amalekites, who had burnt Ziklag; whence we may infer this to have been their Egyptian name, or the name they were known by in Egypt. Where they are elsewhere called Cherethites, as in our version, the LXX write them Cretes, or Cretans; and this is the best part of that foundation whereon the learned have built their notion of deriving the Cretans from the Philistines; and from hence they proceed farther, and derive the Curetes also from them, which we may consider hereafter.

(5) See Bedford's Script. Chronol. p. 245. (6) Bochart. Can. l. 1. c. 15. (7) 1 Sam. xxx. 14. 16. Ezek. xxv. 16. Zephan. ii. 5. (8) 1 Sam. ubi sup.

come come the Cretan Jupiter. Dagon was worſhipped at Azotus; he ſeems to have been the moſt grand, the moſt antient, and moſt favourite god they had: to which may be added, that he, perhaps, ſubſiſted the longeſt of any [o], that did not ſtraggle out of the country, as we are not ſure he did. To him they attributed the invention of bread-corn, or of Agriculture, as his name imports [p]. We cannot enter into the common notion of his being repreſented as a monſter, half man, half fiſh; or conſequently into another, almoſt as common, that he is the ſame with the Syrian goddeſs Dercето, who we are told, was repreſented under ſome ſuch mixed form. Our opinion is, that his idol was in ſhape wholly like a man; for we read of his head, and his hands, and his feet [q] (H). He ſtood in a temple at Azotus, and had prieſts of his own, who paid a very conſtant attendance on him, as one would think [r]. Next to Dagon was Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron.

[o] See 1 Macc. 10. [p] See Vol. I. in the Notes, p. 299, (H 3). [q] See FULLER's Piſgah-ſight, Book 2. c. 10, § 32. [r] See 1 Sam. v. 3, 4.

(H) That he had feet, we underſtand from a Greek reading of the LXX in Fuller (9), where mention is made of Dagon's mutilation, which runs thus, ἀμφότερα τὰ ἴχνη τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ ἀφηρημένα. Here we are told that the ſoles of his feet were off; that is, his feet. In the edition before us, which is after the Vatican copy, we read τὰ ἴχνη τῶν χειρῶν, or the ſoles of his hands, which ſeems abſurd. We have never obſerved, that the Greek word Ἴχνος is put for the palm of the hand. And we the rather reject this reading, becauſe a very ſenſeleſs tautology follows it; for it is ſaid, that the wriſts of his hands were gone alſo. Whence it muſt appear that hands, in the firſt place, are corruptly placed for feet, and that Dagon had hands, and head, and face, and feet. Sure no one, allowing this, will give him a fiſh's tail: that would make him Horace's monſter indeed. And here we cannot but note the fondneſs of the generality of the learned, rather to derive his name from דָּג Dag, a fiſh, than from דָּגָן Dagan, bread-corn (10): it ſeems no difficult matter to chooſe which we are to ſtick by. From this laſt etymology it may be rationally enough ſuppoſed, that they borrowed their idolatry from Egypt (11); and that Dagon is a copy of their Iſis, to whom much the ſame invention is attributed. Not that they brought it away with them from Egypt; from thence, their hiſtory plainly aſſures us, they brought a pure ſyſtem of religion; and we do not remember, that Moſes mentions the Egyptians as idolaters once throughout all his writings.

(9) Piſgah-ſight, Book 2. c. 10. §. 32. in the Margin. (10) See Vol. I. p. 135. (11) See Shuckford's Connect. of the ſacr. and proph. Hiſt. Vol. I. p. 344.

In the text of the New Testament he is Beelzebub, and the prince of Devils. His name is rendered, Lord of flies; which on the one hand is held to be a mock appellation bestowed on him by the Jews; but on the other it is more rationally supposed, that he was so stiled by his votaries, as Hercules Apomyos, and others among the heathens, from driving away flies; and he, it is not unlikely, may have been the parent of the other pagan deities, who are famed for the same pretended power. This is certainly the truth of the matter; for Abazia [s] in his sickness had never sent to consult him under that name, if it had carried any opprobry or reproach along with it. How, or under what form, he was represented is uncertain: Some place him on a throne, and attire him like a king; others paint him as a fly [t]: a very wide difference. To have done with this obscurity, it appears, that he became an oracle in highest repute for omniscience and veracity; that he had priests of his own; and that he in the middle times at least, was much sought after by those who were anxious about futurity, or solicitous concerning other hidden matters. Dercето we take certainly to have been the goddess of Ascalon [u]; but, as we are herein only supported by prophane authority, without the least countenance from scripture, we shall not insist on it. Gath is seemingly the only city of all the five unprovided with a deity; wherefore, as the scripture declares, that Ashtaroth [w], or Astarte, was worshipped by this people, we are ready to place her at Gath, and the rather, as this of all their cities may have had most communication with Sidon; but concerning her we must be silent here, seeing we shall have a more proper opportunity to touch on her hereafter. To speak in general concerning their religious rites and ceremonies, which is all we can do; it appears, as if they erected very large and spacious temples, or else very wide halls for the celebration of their solemn seasons and festivals [x], for such they surely had; that their religious offices were attended with much pomp, and a great concourse from all parts; and that they presented their gods with the chief of their spoil, and carried them about to war with them. We do not find in scripture, that they sacrificed their children, and yet the Curetes (I) are derived from them.

It

[s] 2 Kings i. 2. [t] Procopius Gazeus. [u] Vide Diod. Sic. l. 2. p. 65. [w] 1 Sam. xxxi. 10. [x] Judg. xvi. 27.

(I) The Curetes did sacrifice their children to Saturn (12); and from the similitude this name bears to Cherethites or Philistines, it has been advanced, that they are the ſame (13); but as we have no warrant for ſaying the Philiſtines practiſed ſo barbarous and unnatural a cuſtom, we may venture to pronounce, that they learned it not from them, but borrowed it elſewhere.

(12) Ister apud Porphyr. l. 2. § 56.

been

IT is now time for us to think of the hiſtory of this extraordinary nation. They came directly out of Egypt (K); but upon Their hiſtory.

(K) This we take to have been really the caſe, and ſo do many of great authority; but there is alſo another opinion concerning this matter. For it is thought there is a great affinity in name between the Caſluhim and Colchi; whence it has been taught, that they migrated firſt into the country of Colchis, now Mingrelia; and from thence returning towards Egypt, in their way, ſeized on the country of the Avims, and there fixed their abode. Bochart (14) takes this to be plainly proved by what is ſaid of the agreement between the Colchi and the Egyptians in Herodotus and others; therein forgetting, that the Philiſtines did not circumciſe, which Herodotus aſſures us the Colchi did. Again, nothing can be poſitively aſſerted in this matter, by what the ſame author relates, who ſpeaks of them as dwelling in Colchis in his time, where they had abode ſo long that it was doubtful when they ſettled there firſt; ſo that from him there is no ſolid argument to be deduced, that the Colchi he ſpeaks of were the Caſluhim of Moſes. In like manner the Caphtorim, from whence alſo the Philiſtines are derived, are placed in Cappadocia, a country of Aſia minor, adjoining to the country of Colchis. Here, ſay they (15), we find the city called Side, and the country Sidene, mentioned by Strabo: and, becauſe Side in Greek and Caphtor in Hebrew ſignify a pomegranate, therefore, in all likelihood, the ſame country was by the Hebrews called Caphtor, and by the Greeks Sidene. But, to ſhew that nothing can be fixed from ſuch a manner of arguing, it may not be amiſs to add, that the Caphtorim are on the other hand ſuppoſed to have dwelt in Afric, on the bay of the great Syrtis, which is ſuppoſed to have been called כף-תור chaph-thor, the circular ſhore, as it forms a ſemicircle; and that the pomegranate was ſo called by the Hebrews, becauſe it firſt came from that part of Afric, conſonant to what Pliny writes concerning the origin of that fruit (16). We have already declared our ſentiment as to the Caſluhim and Caphtorim, and muſt therefore refer the reader to the place where he may find it (17). It would be in vain for us to touch on the hiſtory of the Philiſtines before they removed out of Egypt, or from the laſt place of their abode, before they came into the land of the Avims; but we will, however, briefly inſert what ſome have been tempted to ſay upon that very obſcure ſubject. According to biſhop Cumberland (18), they

(13) Bochart. Caſtle, &c. (14) Phaleg. l. 4. c. 31. (15) Bochart. ubi ſupr. (16) Vide Cleric. in Gen. x. 14. (17) See Vol I. p. 366. (18) on Sanchon. p. 372.

cohabited

upon what motive is not positively known, no more than the time of their removal: and, finding that the Avims [y] were a people seated in a pleasant and fruitful land, and that they were strong enough to expel them, they made their attempt, and succeeded. We are not much inclined to think them a very numerous multitude when they first settled in this their conquest; for their king, even in the days of Isaac, grew jealous of that patriarch's power, which is no great sign that his own was very exorbitant; though possibly they may have been settled there many years before, and must consequently have been very much increased to what they were at first. But, supposing this kingdom or state to have been but weak in its beginnings, as most others have been, we proceed, continuing with the next notice we have of their affairs.

Abimelech I. Abimelech (L), their king in Abraham's days, was an holy and just person, and one who had intercourse with God. He resided at Gerar, of which place he is called king, and had like to have been drawn into a very fatal snare by the too great caution of Abraham; who, coming into this kingdom to be out of the stench of the vale of Siddim, then reeking under the calamitous judgment of heaven, pretended, that Sarah was not his wife, but his sister. Abimelech saw her, and was smitten with love of her; and, understanding she was a single woman, resolved to take her to his bed, and he took her accordingly to him with that intent: but, ere he accomplished his desires, he was warned by God to return the woman to her concealed husband, and that immediately, cohabited with the Phœnices or Canaanites in Goshen, that is, that side of Egypt next to Arabia; but finding their country invaded by their kindred, the other sons of Mizraïm, they left it to avoid the miseries of the impending war between the pastors and the pure Egyptians; that is, they removed into the land where Abraham found them.

[y] Deut. ii. 23.

(L) One Philistinus, whom Josephus (19) makes a son of Mizraïm, is sometimes reckoned their first king (20), from whom that Jewish writer derives the name of Palestine. Whatever truth there may be in this, it is also likely, that either they borrowed their name from Pelusium, or Pelusium from them; for here, or hereabouts, did they first settle, as is by most allowed (21); and it will not be much out of the way if we suppose they founded that city, and dwelt there till force or inclination made them remove.

(19) Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. (20) Vide Hist. Jul. in Regn. Palæst.
(21) See Vol. I. p. 367.

upon

upon pain of death. Abimelech hereupon excuſed himſelf to the divine viſion upon the innocence of his intentions; and ſeeming to have freſh in mind the terrible overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, Lord, ſays he, wilt thou alſo ſlay a righteous nation? As if he would take vengeance on his people for a crime he was going ignorantly to commit. But he had the comfortable anſwer from the viſion or dream, That GOD knew well, and approved his integrity, and had prevented him in his intentions; and, to conclude, that Abraham ſhould, at his requeſt, pray for him, and all would be well again. Being thus admoniſhed, he firſt acquainted his ſervants with what had happened, and all were inſtantly ſeized with a general dread for the conſequences which might enſue: Then, calling Abraham to him, he asked what he had done to him, that he ſhould miſlead him into ſo dangerous an error; or what offence he had ever committed againſt him, that he ſhould tempt him to ſuch a ſin, as might have proved the ruin, not of himſelf only, but of his whole kingdom alſo. Indeed, ſays he, you have not uſed me well; what have you obſerved in the morals or behaviour of me and my people, that you ſhould imagine, we would offer any violence to you out of deſire for your wife? The anſwer he received from Abraham to all this, was a frank confeſſion of the truth, he acknowledging, without diſguiſe, that he feared they had not been endued with right notions of GOD and his laws, and that he ſhould certainly be deprived of his life, that they might enioy Sarah. Moreover, that in ſaying ſhe was his ſiſter, he had not ſpoken wrong, ſhe being really ſo; and, to ſalve the matter in ſome meaſure to the king's good liking, he acquainted him, That in ſtrange places it had always been his cuſtom to make her paſs for his ſiſter, only for fear of the worſt. Abimelech was ſatisfied with what he heard; and in conſequence thereof, and in obedience to the divine admonition, not only returned Sarah to Abraham, but in ſo doing, made him a very noble preſent in ſheep and oxen, and in ſervants, both men and women; declaring to him withal, that he was welcome to live in what part of his dominions he beſt liked. To Sarah he ſaid, Behold, I have given thy brother a thouſand pieces of ſilver: behold, he is to thee a covering of the eyes, unto all that are with thee, and with all other: thus ſhe was reproved. In this manner did Abimelech acquit himſelf of the divine admonition, and, upon the prayers of Abraham, he and his whole houſe were reſtored to their natural faculties, of which they had been deprived for Sarah's ſake, the LORD having ſtruck

them

them all with barrenneſs and impotency (M). Ever after this, Abimelech lived in perfect harmony with Abraham, and that the ſame might be tranſmitted down to their poſterity, Abimelech, with the participation of Phichol the chief captain of his hoſt, propoſed an oath to Abraham, whereby he ſhould bind his poſterity to live in love with his, and deal by them juſt as he had dealt by him. This was readily embraced by Abraham; but firſt he deſired a diſpute might be ſet right, concerning a well which Abimelech's ſervants had forcibly taken from him. Abimelech declared he never had heard a word of this outrage till that moment, and that nothing of the kind ſhould have been then to be complained of, had Abraham informed him of it. And that this matter might be terminated in ſuch a manner as to admit of no farther diſpute, he accepted of ſeven ew-lambs, in teſtimony, that as Abraham had been at the charge of digging the well, it belonged of right to him, and to him alone. Theſe ſeven ew-lambs, which were ſet apart for this end out of a very great herd of other cattle, ſheep and oxen, he accepted, together with the reſt, from whence they were picked, and the deſired covenant was made; then Abimelech, roſe up, and Phichol the chief captain of his hoſt, and they returned from whence they came [z] (N).

Abimelech

[z] Gen. xx. xxi.

(M) "Or with ſuch ſwellings in the ſecret parts, that the men "could neither enjoy their wives, or the women, who were with "child, be delivered (22)." They muſt have been very ſenſible of ſuch an alteration as this; but it is on the other hand ſuppoſed to have been ſomething imperceptible, both by the men and women, and a matter not to be diſcovered, but by length of time; and thence it is concluded, that Abraham and Sarah were a conſiderable time at Abimelech's court (23). Nothing can be poſitively determined in this caſe from the words of the text. We find this whole ſtory quite altered by Joſephus (24), who ſays, Abimelech was taken with ſo violent a fit of ſickneſs, that his life was deſpaired of; that in the midſt of it he had a dream, which admoniſhed him concerning Sarah; that finding himſelf upon the mending-hand, he called together his friends, and diſcloſed to them his dream, and the violence of his paſſion; and that thereupon he made up the matter with Abraham, and ſo on.

(N) In the text it is, they returned into the land of the Philiſtines (25); as if they had come out of it to make a league with Abraham, who was ſtill a ſojourner in Paleſtine: it can therefore mean

(22) Patrick upon Gen. xx. 18. (23) Vide Cleric. in Gen. xx. 17. (24) Antiq. l. 1. c. 13. (25) Gen. 21. 31.

me

ABIMELECH the son of Abimelech, and therefore called the second (O) of that name or appellation, succeeded his father in the kingdom of the Philistines, and reigned also at Gerar, and had almost the same transactions with Isaac, as his father had with Abraham. He seems to have been actuated by the very same principles with his father, and, by what appears, he well deserves to be stiled a just and pious prince. In his days came Isaac to Gerar, sore pressed by famine, and conducting Rebekah with him, whom in imitation of his father, he gave out as his sister or cousin. Whether Abimelech and his subjects had remembrance of that fallacy before, and what had like thereupon to have ensued to the grievous detriment of the whole nation; or whether the morals of this country were still so pure, and chastity and hospitality in such due and high esteem, that they abhorred the thoughts of an impure or troublesome attempt, we take not on us to say; but so it was, that Rebekah was unmolested by suitors of any sort: and Isaac was perfectly at his ease upon her account. However, it is pretty evident, that Abimelech himself, at least, had a shrewd suspicion that they were man and wife; for looking one day out of his window, as it is expressed, he saw Isaac caressing Rebekah in such a manner, as convinced him they were much nearer related than they pretended to be. Wherefore, he called Isaac to him, and asked him how he could be so deceitful, pretending that she, who was really his wife, was no more than his sister? To which Isaac pleaded his father Abraham's excuse. Abimelech replied, It was by no more than that Abimelech returned to the place of his own abode, as if a distinction was now made of that part of the country occupied by Abraham, which, by the covenant made, was now considered as his own, and no longer under the jurisdiction of the Philistines. Abimelech II.

(O) Some (26), between these two Abimelechs, place Ephron the Hittite, who was so kind to Abraham (27), which, perhaps, is the best, if not the only ground of such a surmise. It is supposed he may have been surnamed the Hittite, either from having conquered that tribe, or from having entered into a league with them (28); but nothing of this kind is to be depended upon or believed. This second Abimelech is the natural successor of the former, as appears by his name or appellation, and by the series of time: his father was contemporary with Abraham, as he was with Isaac; but so plain a case can admit of no dispute with any, but such as are fond of nothing else.

(26) Theophil. Antioch. (27) See before, p. 171. (28) Vide Hist. Jul. in Regn. Palæst. p. 76.

no means kindly done of him, for that ignorantly ſome or other of the people might have lain with her, and thereby have involved the whole nation in a moſt dangerous ſin (P). Which to prevent, he made proclamation of the matter, and forbad any to ſeek Rebekah to lie with her, or attempt to hurt her huſband, upon pain of death. Nothing can well be added to give us a more favourable idea of this upright king than his behaviour in this caſe; doubtleſs he was no ſtranger to what had happened in a like caſe to his father; and having the fearful judgments of God before his eyes, he had faith therein, and dreaded to incur the wrath of God. And very remarkable it is, that though, conſidering the dreadfulneſs of his apprehenſions, it might have been expected, that he would have driven out Iſaac from his dominions, as one who, either maliciouſly or ignorantly, had expoſed his whole nation to irretrievable ruin; yet, inſtead of that, he ſuffers him to abide in the land till he began to look on him more as a dangerous rival, than a harmleſs inmate. Then indeed, when the Philiſtines beheld the prodigious increaſe of Iſaac's ſtore, they envied him, and ſtudied to make him uneaſy: and at laſt Abimelech himſelf ſent to Iſaac, deſiring he would ſeek ſome other abode, pretending, he could not be at reſt while he had ſo powerful and near a neighbour. This requeſt, though ſeemingly conceived in very modeſt and friendly terms, took not effect; Iſaac, as ſeems, only removing from one part of the country to another; for violence in thoſe days was neither uſed or dreaded, except in very extraordinary caſes, or maintained by the falſe and inhuman gloſſes and arguments, which have ſince been too frequently advanced to prove the neceſſity or wiſdom of it. Hot bickerings and contentions after this aroſe between the Philiſtines of Gerar and Iſaac's ſervants, who opening the wells which Abraham had dug, and which the Philiſtines after his death had ſtopped up, and wanting ſtill more water, ſought for new ſprings, and dug new wells, which the Philiſtine herdſmen claimed as their right; whence the wells thus diſputed, which were two, were one of them by Iſaac called eſek, or contention, and the other ſitnah, or hatred. By theſe vexations and obſtinate claims, they put Iſaac upon ſhifting his place a ſecond time. Abimelech at laſt, remembring, we may ſuppoſe, the covenant between his father and Abraham, and plainly perceiving, that Iſaac was favoured with GOD's ſpecial favour and bleſſing, thought it his duty, or his intereſt, to renew the aforeſaid covenant; and taking with him Ahuzzath, an intimate friend, and Phichol (Q) the chief captain of his hoſt, went to Iſaac, who at firſt wondered to ſee them, after what had paſt, and plainly told them as much. To which they anſwered, That they plainly ſaw GOD was with him, and that he was riſing to a high pitch of power and proſperity; and therefore deſired to enter into bonds of friendſhip with him by a new covenant, or by a revival of the old; deſiring no other terms, than that the Philiſtines and their poſterity might be uſed and conſidered by Iſaac and his poſterity, as he and his family had been conſidered and uſed by Abimelech and his people. They were all three then entertained by Iſaac, and the league they deſired was mutually ſworn to next morning, and they departed in peace [a].

(P) Notwithſtanding this Abimelech makes ſo amiable a figure in the writings of Moſes, Joſephus (29) repreſents him as a very ill and corrupt perſon; and, to mend the matter, tells his ſtory in a very broken manner. Paſſing over what relates to Rebekah, and Iſaac's denial of her for his wife, he ſays, that Abimelech did behave with much outward reſpect to Iſaac upon his firſt arrival in his country; but in time, finding him to be more in the favour of God than himſelf, he broke with him, and burned with envy of him, and gave him all the ill-natured trouble he could upon all occaſions. But in the end, perceiving the man's increaſe, and well knowing the corruption of his own heart, he began to be afraid of the conſequences his inhoſpitable breach might bring on him and his, and thought it beſt to propoſe to him the covenant which was made between him and Abraham; for he all along takes this Abimelech for the ſame that converſed with Abraham, thereby to blacken him the more, as a man of no faith or ſimplicity of intention; and beſides, thereby makes him abundantly too old, except he ſuppoſes Abimelech to have been but a child, or a mere lad, when Abraham firſt removed into the land of the Philiſtines.

(29) Antiq. l. 1. c. 18.

the

THE hiſtory of the Philiſtines, hitherto pretty clear and circumſtantial, is all at once involved in an impenetrable miſt, through which we can only perceive, that the men of Gath fell on the children of Ephraim, and ſlew them for at-

[a] Gen. xxvi.

(Q) The chief captain of his father's hoſt, as may be remembred, was alſo called Phichol (30); but, as it is impoſſible, or very highly improbable at leaſt, that this was the ſame man, we conclude Phichol to have been a title of honour or dignity; and that as the king was conſtantly called Abimelech, his chief miniſter or general was conſtantly called Phichol.

(30) See before, p. 204.

tempting

tempting to drive off their cattle [b]. When this happened, or the particulars of it, or the conſequences that enſued, we know not [c].

For a very long ſeries of years we hear nothing of this people, and are only left to gueſs, that they in the mean time diſſolved their antient form of government, and contracted an averſion to the Iſraelites; for when they are next mentioned, they are repreſented under diſtinct juriſdictions, and at ſtrife with the children of Iſrael.

They eſcaped, as ſeems, the fury of Joſhua; but ſoon after his death Gaza, Aſkelon, and Ekron (R) were taken from them by the united tribes of Simeon and Judah [d]; but they poſſeſſed the ſaid cities again in a very ſhort time [e]: but whether they recovered them by force of Arms, or whether they were reſtored to them by the conquerors, is not ſaid.

About one hundred and twenty years after the reduction of the three cities above-mentioned, the Philiſtines held the Iſraelites under their yoke, till they were delivered by Shamgar, who ſlew ſix hundred of this people with an ox-goad (S) [f]. Nor muſt we forget, that the Philiſtines ſuffered in common with the Iſraelites [g], by the furious incurſions and ravages of Zebah and Zalmunna kings of Midian [h].

A ſecond time they oppreſſed the Iſraelites in conjunction with the Ammonites in the days of Jephthah [i].

A third time they reduced the Iſraelites by the permiſſion of God, and kept them very ſtrictly under, forty years. In the mean time was Samſon born to check their pride, and give them

[b] 1 Cron. vii. 21. [c] See before, p. 196, (E) [d] Judg. iii. 18. [e] Judg. xiv. 19. [f] iii. 31. [g] See Judg. vi. 4. [h] See before, p. 120. [i] See before, p. 102.

(R) Here Joſephus (31) tells us of only Askelon and Aſhdod, or Azotus, as ſubdued, and, by an unpardonable inaccuracy, reckons them to the Canaanites. But for Gaza and Ekron, or Accaron, ſays he, they were in the flat country, very ſtrong in chariots, and well able to make good their defence, whereby they ſaved themſelves from the calamities of their neighbours.

(S) It is worth obſerving, that Joſephus (32), who is ſo fond of extraordinary events, and ſo apt to make more of them, than, it is likely, he found them, quite paſſes over this. We will not dwell on the niceties which are offered to explain or illuſtrate this action. A parallel caſe is found in Homer, where Lycurgus puts to flight

(31) Antiq. l. 5. c. 2. (32) Antiq. l. 5. c. 5.

them great trouble (T). He, when grown up, was ſmitten with love of a damſel of this country, who dwelt at Timnath. At the celebration of the nuptials thirty young men of the Philiſtines were appointed to attend on Samſon, as we now ſpeak (U); who, among other diſcourſe, propoſed a riddle to theſe thirty youths concerning a lion he had killed, in whoſe carcaſs, a twelve-month after he had killed him, he found honey. It was propoſed to theſe young men by Samſon, that if they got the better of his riddle, he would give them thirty ſuits of apparel, one to each; but that if they could not anſwer him at the end of the ſeven days of the marriage-feſtival, they ſhould each of them give him the ſame. They accepted the offer, and deſired to hear the riddle, and in vain perplexed themſelves therewith for three days together, and then deſpairing to overcome the difficulty, they went to their countrywoman, Samſon's bride, to deſire her to get the myſtery out of her huſband, or elſe they would burn her and all her kindred, as perſons who had on ſet purpoſe introduced a ſtranger to trick them out of their ſubſtance. This made a deep impreſſion on the young woman, who, by continual entreaties, prevailed at laſt on her huſband to diſcloſe the ambiguity to her, which ſhe communicated to the thirty young men; in conſequence of which they won the prize. This brought a misfortune upon Aſkelon; for Samſon, to make good his engagements, went down thither, and ſlew thirty men, whoſe garments he gave to the thirty expoſitors of his riddle [k].

[k] Judg. xv.

ſlight the Bacchæ with an ox-goad. By the Vulgate it is interpreted a plow-ſhare, induced thereto by the LXX. But thoſe (33) ſeem to think very rationally, who imagine, that Shamgar put himſelf at the head of a tumultuary riſe of country people, who were armed in their ruſtic way with the implements of tillage, and that Shamgar happened to have an ox-goad in his hand when theſe ſix hundred of the Philiſtines fell; not that he killed them all himſelf with that weapon.

(T) Joſephus (34) reckons, that the Philiſtines were ſtripped of their dominion over Iſrael by Samſon, but he is plainly miſtaken.

(U) This we take to have been the cuſtom of the country in caſes of a like nature, and an uſual compliment now paid to Samſon, who was come to marry among them; but nothing leſs appears by Joſephus (35), who writes, that theſe young men were ſet as a guard upon him to prevent his doing any miſchief in his cups.

(33) Vide Cleric. in Judic. iii. 31.
(34) Antiq. l. 5. c. 10.
(35) Ubi ſupr.

This marriage was a very obscure beginning of great misery upon the Philistines; for Samson's father-in-law, apprehending his daughter was not well possessed of her husband's heart, gave her away to another, and denied Samson, who had been absent a twelve-month, all access to his wife; but, to pacify his resentment, would have given him another daughter, who, as he said, was younger and handsomer. This did by no means mollify Samson, who in revenge sent out three hundred foxes with firebrands at their tails into the corn-fields; and all the standing corn was thereby consumed with fire, as were also the other fruits of the earth, and the vines, and the olives. The Philistines were amazed at so terrible a disaster, and understanding the motives which had induced Samson to use them so cruelly, they looked on his father-in-law as the incendiary in a primary sense; and therefore they went, and burnt him together with his daughter, who also may be called the cause of all this mischief (W). But this execution they did not with impunity, they were smitten hip and thigh by Samson. They determined then to take their revenge on him; and understanding he had retreated to the rock Etam, they went thither to take him; but he was delivered bound to them by the men of Judah, who dreaded their displeasure. The Philistines shouted aloud at the sight of Samson bound; but their joy was soon turned into mourning; for Samson, breaking his cords, found the jaw-bone of an ass at hand, and killed a thousand of them therewith [1].

All this the Philistines never forgot, and wished for nothing so much as an opportunity to be revenged on Samson. The Gazites, about twenty years after the last slaughter, [1] Judg. xv.

(W) This seems to have been inflicted on them by way of retaliation; for as through their indiscretion they drew on their country so sad a revenge by fire, the rest might think it but just and natural, that they should perish thereby to expiate their crime. But on the other hand, we find, that punishing or revenging by fire was a notorious practice in those days with this people: for the thirty young men, as may be remembered, when they began to despair that they should ever unfold Samson's riddle, threatened the bride to burn her and her father's house with fire, if she did not befriend them and help them out. It is supposed they were taken by surprize, and burnt in their house; and it is observed, that the bride and her father's house suffered the same calamity she sought to avoid by betraying her husband (36).

(36) See Patrick upon Judg. xv. 6.

thought

thought they had him ſecure in their city. They had information, that he was with an harlot of theirs; and they watched him, and made faſt their gates, being ſure they ſhould kill him the next morning. But their precaution was to no purpoſe, and they were diſappointed; for Samſon riſing at midnight took the city gates, and poſt, and bar and all, and carried them away towards Hebron, leaving an open place behind him.

THE lords of the Philiſtines then heard, that Samſon was enſnared by another harlot of their nation in the valley of Sorek, whoſe name was Delilah. The five lords came to this woman, and promiſed her, each of them, eleven hundred pieces of ſilver, if ſhe would betray Samſon to them, by enticing him to tell her where his ſtrength lay, and how he might be reduced to the ordinary ſtrength of another man. So large a bribe corrupted Delilah's heart, and ſhe uſed her beſt endeavours to earn the very many pieces of ſilver ſhe had in proſpect; and thinking ſhe was miſtreſs of the ſecret, ſhe ſent for the Philiſtines to execute their pleaſure on him; but ſhe was deceived, and they were diſappointed. A ſecond time ſhe was deceived in like manner, and a third time; but the fourth time ſhe was ſincerely informed, that his ſtrength lay in his hair, which ſhe cut off, and delivered Samſon a helpleſs prey to the lords of the Philiſtines, who gave her the promiſed reward of her treachery, and put out Samſon's eyes, and bound him with fetters of braſs, and carried him to Gaza, and there made him grind in the priſon-houſe.

THEY then met in a ſolemn manner to celebrate a feſtival to their god Dagon, and to offer him thanks, and praiſes, and ſacrifices. They met together to the number of many thouſands, and were all in one place; which, whether it was a temple, or a theatre, or a palace, is quite unknown; but it was of ſuch extent that no leſs than three thouſand perſons were on the top of it (X). In the height of their jollity they ſent ſent for the blind Samſon from the priſon-houſe to make ſport with him (Y), forgetting his hair was by this time pretty well grown again (Z), and his ſtrength, conſequently, returned to him. They made what diverſion they pleaſed with him, and dearly they paid for it; for they all periſhed by the fall of the building they were in, which was brought down by the ſtrength of Samſon. This was a terrible diſaſter, and moſt of, if not all, the chiefs of the Philiſtines were loſt in this mighty ruin; ſo that the nation muſt upon that account, have been greatly humbled, and in a low condition, being deſtitute of governors, and commanders, and men of wiſdom [m].

(X) We find the generality of the learned moſt inclined to think this vaſt building a theatre, ſuch as formerly the Romans contrived, and which were almoſt incredibly capacious: this may have been the truth of the matter, and we ſhould moſt readily have embraced the ſame opinion, did we not perceive, that this building was roofed, and that ſo firmly as to bear the weight of three thouſand perſons upon its top. A difficulty ſtarts up here; how could this roof be contrived, ſo that ſuch a multitude might partake of the diverſion Samſon was making below? It is anſwered, that thoſe on the roof were the vulgar ſort, who had conveniencies of looking down into a great hall, where the lords, and chiefs, and better ſort, ſate

For a conſiderable time the Philiſtines lay quiet: they recovered their loſs at Gaza, and grew to a greater pitch of power than ever. They now made war upon the Iſraelites again, who had as good as thrown off their yoke ſince the fatal day at Gaza. They pitched firſt in Aphek, and the Iſraelites lay encamped at Eben-ezer. The two armies ſoon came to action, and the day turned in favour of the Philiſtines, who put the enemy to a precipitate flight, and in all ſlew four thouſand of them, and drove them into their camp. The Philiſtines, in the midſt of their triumph upon this occaſion, heard an uncommon ſhout of joy from the Hebrew camp; and, enquiring into the cauſe of it, were told, that in ſtate; which will ſtill make the building more extenſive. A roof it had, which we ſufficiently underſtand by the two pillars which Samſon pulled down, and which ſupported it. It hence muſt have been a place of a particular conſtruction, like the Egyptian hall in Vitruvius (37), and nothing like the theatres of the antient Greeks or Romans.

[m] Judg. xvi.

(Y) Joſephus (38) underſtands, that they wanted to flout and jeer him; though alſo they may have made him go through a courſe of ridiculous geſtures and ſpeeches.

(Z) In the margin of our verſion it is, As when he was ſhaven; or it was grown to the ſame length it was of when Delilah clipt it. Whence we gather, that Joſephus (39) is right in ſaying this was an annual feaſt in honour of their god Dagon, as appears alſo by the text of ſcripture; where great thanks are returned to Dagon, for delivering Samſon into their hands, which was ſtill uppermoſt in their thoughts, and what they had chiefly deſired ſeveral years paſt. From hence we may learn, that the worſhip of Dagon was not confined to Aſhdod, though it may have been his peculiar place, and that in theſe days he was the moſt highly revered of any god they had.

(37) l. 6. c. 5. (38) Ubi ſupra. (39) Ubi ſupra.

the

the Hebrews had ſent for the ark of the Lord, and that it was come into their camp. Upon hearing this they cried out in the utmoſt conſternation, GOD is come into the enemy's camp, what will become of us! Such a thing was never known before; and greatly did they bewail their unhappy lot, deſpairing to be delivered from thoſe mighty gods, as they ſpoke, who had ſo ſeverely ſmitten the Egyptians. They now were quite daunted and ſpiritleſs, till their chiefs, or ſome of the more reſolute, awakened them from their fears, exhorting them to be of good chear, and behave like men, leſt they fell under the power of the Hebrews, and became their ſervants, inſtead of being their maſters, as they were: behave like men, ſaid they, and fear not. This exhortation had its effect upon the drooping hearts of the Philiſtines in gegeral, and inſpired them with freſh courage. Animated in this ſort, they came to a battle, and fell on ſo furiouſly that they ſlew thirty thouſand of the enemy's footmen; and, to crown all, they took the ark of GOD, which at firſt gave them ſo much trouble, and Hophni and Phinehas, the prieſts who attended it, they ſlew. Doubtleſs they called this a moſt complete victory, and rejoiced in a moſt extraordinary manner, ignorant of the evil conſequences they were to ſuffer in return. In high triumph they carried the captive ark to Aſhdod, and placed it in the temple of their idol Dagon, as an acceptable offering to him, and as properly his captive, we may ſuppoſe. The next morning they went into the temple, and behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the earth, before the ark of the Lord. They took him up therefore, and ſet him in his place again, attributing this firſt humiliation to ſome unheeded accident (A). But on the ſecond day, when they went in again, they not only ſaw their god in the proſtrate poſture they beheld him yeſterday, but diſmembered alſo of his head, and hands, and feet, which lay upon the threſhold; nor was any thing left of him but the ſtump, or, as we rather chooſe to expreſs it, the trunk of his body. Hence came a ſuperſtitious cuſtom among his prieſts, never to tread on the threſhold as they went into his temple (B), either in remembrance of this mutilation as a calamity,

(A) They might impute it to ſome defect in the pedeſtal, or might imagine the ſtatue itſelf not to have been exactly poiſed, or, finally, they might attribute it to ſome unuſual ſhock, as of an earthquake, and the like.

(B) This ſuperſtition obtained for many ages, as may be gather-calamity, or becauſe it had been hallowed by having ſerved for a reſting-place to the head and hands of their perſecuted god. But their own ſufferings far exceeded thoſe of their idol, who, being ſenſeleſs, could feel none of the pains they themſelves were afflicted with, being ſmitten with a ſudden plague, of which many of them died, while thoſe who ſurvived were grievouſly tormented with emerods. Aſhdod and its whole territory labouring under ſo dreadful a calamity, they reſolved to keep the ark no longer among them, being too ſenſibly convinced, that they ſuffered becauſe of the ark. But that they might not take a haſty ſtep, they called an aſſembly of all the lords of the Philiſtines to deliberate upon the means of delivering them from this raging evil, and what was beſt to be done with the pernicious ark. The reſolution they came to was, that the ark ſhould be removed to Gath, apprehending, as is thought, that Aſhdod was a place unacceptable to it (C). They carried it thither, and the ſame plague, and another ſort of emerods (D) followed it to Gath, without ed from Zephaniah (39), where thoſe are threatened that leap on the threſhold. Hence it appears, that they were wont to leap over the threſhold. This has doubtleſs an eye to the ridiculous and ſtupidly grounded ſuperſtition of this people (40). The Jews have an idle ſtory, that the Philiſtines, henceforward, forſaking Dagon himſelf, worſhipped the threſhold of his temple (41).

(C) Juſt as Æneas and his people indited their beds and their houſes of the diſaſters that befel them; and Cadmus forſook his own city.

——tanquam fortuna locorum,
Non ſua ſe premeret.——

As if the ill luck which hunted him had been the place's, not his own; as our Dr Jackſon obſerves out of Ovid, in his Original of Unbelief, chap. 18. paragr. 4. (42).

(D) At Aſhdod, it is ſaid, they were ſmitten with emerods only, without any addition; but now it is ſaid, they were ſmitten with emerods in their ſecret parts: whence it is evident enough, that this plague was ſome how or other altered; and it being the moſt univerſally interpreted in both places that they were afflicted by emerods, there is no other way that occurs to us of accounting for this alteration, but that at Aſhdod they had the ordinary ſort, which appear outwardly, and that now at Gath they had the blind ſort, which are inward. Inſtead of emerods ſome (43) ſpeak of violent diſorders in the inteſtines, of their rotting alive, and of their waſte-

(39) i. 9. (40) Vide Bochart. Hieroxoic. Par. 1. l. 2. c. 36. (41) Vide Buxtorf. Hiſt. Arc. c. 19. p. 172. (42) Patrick upon 1 Sam. v. 8. (43) Joſeph. Ant. l. 6. c. 1.

ing

withour diſtinction of ſmall or great. The men of Gath then ſent the ark to Ekron; where, knowing what Gath and Aſhdod had already ſuffered by the detention of the ſame, they cried out with a frightful voice, that the ark of the GOD of Iſrael was ſent to deſtroy and afflict them alſo. Their fears were not vain, and great was their lamentation for the loſs of thoſe that died, and for the grievous ſoreneſs of the emerods; the affliction gathering ſtrength, and growing worſe as it ſpread (E). But they had no ſooner received the ark than, all in confuſion, they ſent to the lords of the Philiſtines to conſult with them, entreating them to fix upon ſome manner of ſending the ark to its place. The reſult of this council is not expreſſed; but it ſeems as if, obſerving the afflictions to ravage the cities chiefly, they removed the ark into the country (F), which, as ſeems alſo, only added to ing away by dyſenteries and vomitings, thereby diſcharging their loathſome corruption. Other opinions there are concerning this matter; but none ſo generally received as what we have ſaid of the emerods.

(E) We find their lamentation and affliction expreſſed in deeper terms, upon every removal: which gives room for this aſſertion.

(F) Joſephus (44) relates, that the ark went through all the five cities of the Philiſtines, which we have no warrant to aſſert from ſcripture, except that the five cities being equally afflicted, and their gods equally perſecuted, as afterwards appears, may be accepted for a demonſtrative proof thereof: but there is no room to ſuppoſe this, ſince we find, that the Ekronites, convinced of the deſtruction and plague which followed the ark, did not ſo much as think of procuring it to be ſent either to Askelon or Gaza; but only, that it might be ſent back to its place. Their requeſt, it ſeems, was no farther complied with by the reſt, than the removing it from them into the country, or the fields, for that is the ſenſe of the original, where it remained ſeven months; nor is it likely, that either of thoſe two cities would have admitted it within their gates, after a thrice-repeated experience of what the conſequence would be, if they did admit it; nor does it appear, that they had yet been affected in the manner of Aſhdod, Gath, and Ekron, where the ark had been lodged. It ſeems, that the ark, being removed into the fields, gave birth to thoſe prodigious ſwarms of mice, which did eat up the country; and that Gaza and Askelon were now ſmitten by the plagues alſo; that the whole body of this people groaning under the ſame ſeverities and diſtreſs, there might be no diſſention among them about diſmiſſing the ark. And hence, perhaps, we may diſcover, that as much as they were divided into five ſatrapies to the number of their plagues, the country being now deſolated by an extraordinary production of mice. Finding therefore there was no reſpite to be had, and that the perſecution lay harder and harder upon them, and multiplied as often as the ark was removed, they called for their prieſts and diviners, to demand of them what they thought moſt expedient to be done in this mournful time of peſtilence; and in what manner it would be fitteſt to ſend the ark quite away from among them. Their anſwer was, That they ought not to ſend it away empty, but, by all means, with a treſpaſs-offering, as an attonement. They were then aſked what this treſpaſs-offering muſt be: They replied, five golden emerods, and five golden mice, according to the number of the lords of the Philiſtines; "for the ſame plague was common to you "all; make images of your emerods, and images of your "mice, which have been ſo deſtructive to your land; and "humble yourſelves to the God of Iſrael, that he may "withdraw his avenging hand from among you. Do not "offer to harden your hearts, as Pharaoh did: proceed "then, and make a new cart, and take two milk cows "which have never felt the yoke, and take their calves "away from them, and harneſs them to the cart you make "(G), and on it place the ark, and the jewels you offer for "a treſpaſs-offering in a coffer by it, and in that manner "ſuffer it to depart. If it takes the way which leads to "Beth-ſhemeſh, you need not doubt who has ſo ſorely afflict-"ed you; but if not, you may conclude, that what you "have ſuffered has proceeded from a mere natural cauſe." They obeyed the voice of their prieſts, and punctually followed their directions. The cows moved away for Beth-ſhemeſh, lowing as they went along, nor turned once to the right or the left, the lords of the Philiſtines keeping after or lordſhips, they were nevertheleſs ſo linked together, that one of them could not act in any matter of public concern without the concurrence of all the reſt; which is no where ſo evident as in this caſe of the Ekronites, who were ſo thoroughly convinced the ark was to be ſent home, that we cannot conceive what ſhould have prevented them from acting accordingly, had it not been, that they were afraid of making a breach into their common conſtitution; or dreaded to be called to an account by the reſt, for preſuming to act of their own heads in an affair of ſuch moment.

(44) Ubi ſupra.

(G) The new cart was ordered in honour of the God of Iſrael, and the kine unconſcious of the yoke to draw it, were to prove, whether or no he would interfere in the return of his ark; for ſuch unbroken cattle could never go on right together, or at all, as we may ſay, but by a miracle.

them

them till they ſaw them clear of their borders, where they wondering ſtood, to obſerve in what manner the ſacred captive was received by thoſe with whom it would dwell [n].

WE have ſufficient reaſon to conclude, that the Philiſtines, by diſmiſſing the ark in the manner they did, freed themſelves from their bitter afflictions, and that, though they were undeniably ſenſible of the hand which chaſtiſed them, they ſoon forgot the mighty power thereof. For about twenty years afterwards, underſtanding the Iſraelites were gathered in a body at Mizpeh, they reſolved to diſperſe them, jealous perhaps that they were upon meaſures of throwing off their yoke. They marched therefore towards Mizpeh, and a terror went before them, which quite confounded the Iſraelites, who having Samuel in the midſt of them begged, that, without ceaſing, he would entreat GOD for them. The Philiſtines marched on, unmindful of him, who, when his people turned to him, was ready to confound the ſtrength and devices of the wiſeſt and mightieſt, and being on the edge of aſſaulting the Iſraelites, a fearful ſtorm of thunder and lightning came on (H), which beat them down, and diſperſed them; and being broken into this wild diſorder, they were purſued and ſlaughtered by the Iſraelites to Beth-car. This was a blow indeed, and deprived them of the dominion they had exerciſed over the Hebrews, and was the loſs of all the encroachments they had made upon their territory, and reduced them ſo low that they never offered to moleſt Iſrael again all the days that Samuel [o] governed.

DURING all this time that they had held Iſrael in ſubjection, they had quite diſarmed them, and would not ſo much as ſuffer a ſmith to dwell among them [p]. How ſenſibly ſoever the Philiſtines may have been affected by this laſt rout; yet in a few years they ſeem to have been vaſtly, nay, infinitely more formidable than ever. For underſtanding that a fortreſs of theirs, called Geba, had been ſurprized by Jonathan the ſon of Saul, they gathered together thirty thouſand chariots, ſix thouſand horſemen (I), and foot as the ſand

[n] 1 Sam. iv. v, vi. [o] Ibid. vii. [p] Ibid xiii. 19.

(H) To this Joſephus (45) adds, that they were in part ſwallowed by an earthquake, ſo violent that it was as much as they could do to keep their legs.

(I) Sir Iſaac Newton (46), from this vaſt number of chariots and horſemen, is tempted to think the Philiſtines were now very pow-

(45) Antiq. l. 6. c. 2. (46) Chronol. of ant. king. amended, p. 167.

erfully

ſand of the ſea, to fight with, or rather plunder the Iſraelites, who ſtill laboured under the ill effect of their tyrannical policy, by continuing deſtitute of arms. This very numerous multitude went out, and pitched in Michmaſh, and ſent ſuch a terror before them, that happy was the Iſraelite who could hide himſelf to his ſatisfaction from them, or get out of their way. Michmaſh was their ſtation, from whence they ſent out three bands, three ſeveral ways, to ſpoil the country; and great damage they did to the whole land, as we have room to infer. Their ravages they committed without interruption, having to deal with an unarmed enemy, who conſequently were in no condition to make head againſt them.

At Michmaſh they continued to lie encamped, while their ſpoilers quite ruined and ſtripped the country; and here they took up their quarters ſome time. But in the midſt of their depredations they received a check from Jonathan, who, hurried on by a divine impulſe, and accompanied only by his armour-bearer, made a conſiderable ſlaughter of one of their out-guards; the noiſe of which ſpreading to the whole body, they were ſeized with a ſudden panic, and an unſpeakable tumult aroſe among them; ſo that, hyperbolically ſpeaking, erfully ſuccoured, and their numbers mightily encreaſed by the acceſſion of the ſhepherds out of Egypt, who were now expelled that kingdom: We ſhall not contend with him upon ſo dark a point, wherein he may as well be right as not. But we cannot refrain from noting, that he takes theſe thirty thouſand chariots to be of the warlike ſort, and deſigned for battle, wondering at the great exceſs of the number, when compared with thoſe that followed Pharaoh, who periſhed in the Red-ſea. For our parts we cannot take theſe chariots to have been any other than carriages, that were uſed, partly, in carrying the baggage of ſo great an army, as they ſeem to have had on foot at this time, and, partly, deſigned to move off the plunder of the whole coutry, which they ſeemed to have graſped at with the moſt inſolent preſumption: And this upon obſerving the method in which this war was carried on, muſt have been their deſign by ſuch a number of carriages; which if we reduce to three thouſand, as the number ſtands in the Syriac and Arabic copies, will, as is very judiciouſly remarked (47), be far too many to ſuppoſe them to have been warlike chariots, ſince Mithridates had but one hundred, Darius but two hundred, and Antiochus Epiphanes but three hundred; and no one can imagine, that the Philiſtines, and whoſoever elſe may have joined them upon this occaſion, were able to muſter up ſuch a force in chariots as either of thoſe three monarchs.

(47) Patrick upon 1 Sam. xiii. 5.

the

the very earth trembled therewith (K). In the height of this disorder, it came to pass that they fell upon each other with a most fearful slaughter of themselves (L); and presently they began to move off in a wild uproar and fury; which, when it was observed by the Israelites, they moved after them by degrees, and at length pursued them one and all, with Saul at their head, who, if he had not been in too great a hurry, and commanded his men not to stand to take a little refreshment, the Philistines had lost a great deal more blood than they did upon this occasion; but as it was, their loss was very considerable (M), they being pursued from Michmash to Aijalon. [q].

THOUGH they were thus visibly defeated by the hand of heaven; yet in a few years they revived again, and put them-

[q] 1 Sam. xiii, xiv.

(K) Not that there was really an earthquake upon this occasion. Besides the thirty thousand chariots, and six thousand horsemen mentioned in scripture, Josephus (48) numbers the foot at three hundred thousand. But a late commentator (49), from the alarm given them by Jonathan and his armour-bearer, and the fearful effects of the same, takes occasion to think, that the Philistines were neither so numerous, as is, in scripture said, or so well skilled in war as they are usually deemed; and infers, that the text must have been corrupted.

(L) This favours, very much, the conjecture of Sir Isaac Newton, who supposes they had, about this time, an accession of the shepherds from Egypt, as we have already noted from him (50). It looks very much as if this great host, for such it may be justly stiled, though not a quarter so strong as is represented to us, had not a mutual confidence in each other, so far as to be certain, that a defection and treachery might not be brought to pass among them by the artifices of the enemy. The out-guard routed by Jonathan aud his armour-bearer savoured strongly of treachery. The bare fame of an attack made by any two persons on so vast an army, could never of itself, have caused so wild an uproar, but something at the same time must have been added thereto, that made them enraged against each other, and fired them with the utmost fury and indignation. Nor does what we here insinuate, by any means, derogate from the concern the Almighty had, in this miraculous deliverance of his people; since in cases of this kind he has so often acted by second causes.

(M) According to Josephus (51), they now lost sixty thousand men.

(48) Antiq. l. 6. c. 7. (49) Cleric, in 1 Sam. xiv. 15. (50) See before p. 217, (I). (51) Ubi supr.

selves

ſelves under arms, once more to try what they could do with the Iſraelites: but they were now, perhaps chiefly induced thereto upon hearing that Saul was gone diſtracted. But though they made a great noiſe and parade this time, yet they did not proceed with ſuch fury as formerly, and do not ſeem to have been very eager for a battle. They found Saul in the field ready to contend with them, which checked them in their career. They firſt rendezvouſed in Shochoh, in the tribe of Judah; and advancing thence, and ſtill finding the Iſraelites in a poſture to fight them, they went, and pitched upon a mountain oppoſite to another, on which Iſrael was incamped. They had in their army at this time a giant, one Goliath of Gath, who was ſix cubits and a ſpan high, and wore a ponderous and well wrought ſuit of braſs armour: he had a helmet of braſs on his head, a coat of mail (N) of the ſame on his body, and a target or gorget of the ſame between his ſhoulders, and greaves of the ſame upon his legs. The ſtaff of his ſpear was like a weaver's beam, and the head of it weighed ſix hundred ſhekels of iron; and before him went one who bore his ſhield. This gigantic perſon ſeems to have been very ſenſible of his warlike abilities and ſtrength, and to have fancied, that he alone could ſupport his country's cauſe. Accordingly, whether by his own ſuggeſtions, or at the ſollicitation of his countrymen, we know not; this man took on him to fight any one in the hoſt of Iſrael, and by a ſingle combat to determine which of the two nations ſhould rule, and which obey. Accordingly he went down into the valley which parted the two camps, and called up to the Iſraelites, "To what purpoſe do you draw your-

(N) According to the Engliſh ſtandard, the height of Goliath was twelve foot eight inches, and ſomewhat better than three tenths. His coat of mail alone weighed five thouſand ſhekels of braſs, or upwards of one hundred and eighty nine of our pounds Troy; and by the ſame rule, the head of his ſpear, which weighed ſix hundred ſhekels of iron, exceeded two and twenty of the ſame pounds (52). The weight of theſe and the other parts of his armour and arms, whoſe weight is not ſpecified, was not, perhaps, too heavy for ſo gigantic a perſon, whoſe ſtrength, doubtleſs, was in proportion to his ſtature: and yet ſome are willing to think it was too cumberſom; and therefore chooſe to ſay the ſhekels enumerated above, and commonly taken for the weight of his coat of mail, were the price of it (53), which ſeems to be as much too little on this hand, as it may appear too much on the other.

(52) See Arbuthnot's Tables of ant. Coins, Weights, and Meaſures.
(53) See Patrick upon 1 Sam. xxii. 5.

"ſelves

" ſelves out in battle array! here am I, a Philiſtine (O),
" and ye the ſlaves of Saul, find me out a man among you
" that has the heart to come down and fight me: if he kill " me, we will ſubmit to be your ſubjects; but if I kill him, " you ſhall ſerve us, as you hàve done heretofore: mark, that " I defy every one of you; let who dare advance out of " your ranks to fight me!" This arrogant challenge met with no acceptance, and Goliath was left to himſelf to vapour his fill; but the figure of the man, and his menacing deportment ſtood the Philiſtines in good ſtead, by quite diſheartening the Iſraelites, who were greatly diſmayed, both at him and his words. But, as confident as Goliath was in his own ſtrength, and in conſequence thereof, how ready ſoever he was to fight, the reſt of his countrymen had not the leaſt ſtomach to it: They remembered how terribly it had more than once fared with them in their contentions with Iſrael. Wherefore, though the firſt day's experience convinced them, that not one ſoul of the Iſraelites would undertake a ſingle combat with Goliath; yet, having no mind to come to a battle, they every morning and evening ſent out Goliath to repeat his idle challenge, for forty days together. At laſt, as the armies were drawing down to each other in battle array, Goliath advanced out of the ranks as uſual; and in the height of his pretended expectations for one to come out (for pretended they muſt have been, after ſo many fruitleſs repetitions of the ſame defiance) he ſaw a handſome ruddy youth advancing toward him, from the Iſraelites, in the habit and appearance of an ordinary ſhepherd. The ſight fired him with indignation, and obſerving a ſtaff in his hand; " What, ſays he, am I a dog, that you are come againſt
" me with a ſtaff? and curſing him by his gods, Come hi" ther, that I may give your fleſh to the fowls of the air and
" the beaſts of the field." Having heard what the young man, David, had to ſay in anſwer to him, he ſtepped toward him to ſeize on him, and cruſh the preſumptuous lad; but ere he reached him, a ſtone was flung at him by David, which took his forehead, and laid him flat at his length on the ground; and his head was inſtantly ſevered from his body by his own ſword, and carried off as a trophy by the conqueror. The Philiſtines no ſooner ſaw their champion gone,

(O) It is generally thought, that he here vaunts himſelf as a lord among the Philiſtines; or rather that he boaſts of his liberty, as he was born of that country, and reviles the Iſraelites as ſervants or ſlaves; inſinuating, that he did them honour in offering to demean himſelf, ſo far as to contend in ſingle combat with any one of them.

than

than they fled (P), as if their hopes and all centered in him; and to judge by their behaviour, it was really the caſe. They fled, and were purſued by Saul, quite home to the gates of their own cities, Gath and Ekron, with a fearful ſlaughter no doubt (Q); leaving all their tents and baggage behind them [r].

The ſame hand, which had deprived them of Goliath, perſecuted them again ſoon afterwards; for two hundred of them were ſlain by David for the ſake of their fore-ſkins only, that he might perform the condition impoſed on him by Saul, before he would give him his daughter to wife; but the particulars of this ſlaughter are not ſpecified in the text of ſcripture. But thence it may be gathered, that this was the cauſe of a freſh rupture, and that the princes of the Philiſtines undertook to revenge the injury, but what ſucceſs they had, is not ſaid [s].

Achiſh. Soon after this they were overthrown in battle by *David, and ſome great change ſeems, about this time, to have been wrought in their government: for as, ever ſince the Abimelechs they are repreſented under lords or princes; ſo now we read of a king they had, whoſe name was Achiſh, and who reſided at Gath [t]. He is elſewhere called Abimelech [u], the antient appellation, as we have ſeen, of the firſt kings of this people. David, to avoid the terrible intentions of

[r] 1 Sam. xvii. [s] Ibid. xviii. * Sam. xix. 8. [t] Ibid. xxi. 10. [u] Pſal. xxxiv.

(P) From this flight commentators are apt to imagine, that what Goliath did in offering to decide the fate of each nation by ſingle combat, was his own act and deed, and without the aſſent of the Philiſtines; or elſe, that if they did bind themſelves to ſubmit to the fate of ſuch a battle, they were faithleſs enough to ſlight the obligation. To us, it appears, that they did in a very great meaſure depend on Goliath for ſucceſs in this war; that they prided themſelves chiefly in him; and that flattering themſelves he was invincible, and, by his ſtrength and armour, an overmatch for any in the hoſt of Iſrael, they were not againſt what he took on him, as their champion; but that they formally agreed to ſtand to what he promiſed is unlikely: ſuch deciſions by ſingle combat ſeem not to have been the cuſtom of thoſe early times; but the whole ſeems to be the effect of great pride and vanity in the champion, and a mixture of ſtupidity and cowardice in the reſt.

(Q) If we hearken to Joſephus (54), they had thirty thouſand killed, and twice that number wounded in this purſuit, which ſeem to be exceedingly too many.

(54) Antiq. l. 6. c. 11.

Saul,

Saul, fled to Gath, and was brought before this king; who imagining him, by his behaviour, to be beſide himſelf, would take no farther notice of him, than to order he ſhould be brought no more into his preſence w.

THE Philiſtines all this time were upon no ſettled terms with Saul, but invaded him, and thereby diverted him from laying hold on David in the wilderneſs of Maon; but it ſeems they had ill ſucceſs this time again, and fled before Saul, or elſe retreated for fear of him.

ACHISH, the ſon of Maoch (R), after this received David and his wives and all his train of followers into his protection, and treated the diſtreſſed refugees with great hoſpitality. And, at David's requeſt, that he might have ſome place allotted him for his particular dwelling, he very generouſly named Ziklag for that purpoſe; whence it came to be afterwards claimed by the kings of Judah. All this muſt give us a very favourable idea of Achiſh, if we conſider what reaſon the Philiſtines had to be angry with David, who certainly deſerved not very well at their hands; and thoſe muſt have had very commendable notions, who could thus forgive a man, with whom moſt others would have kept no meaſures (S), and have ſlighted the obſervance of all laws. Achiſh w 1 Sam. ubi ſupr. Ibid. xxi. 14—15.

(R) From this mention of his father's name, ſome are willing to think him a different perſon from the former; to which they ſeem to be partly inclined, by the kind manner in which he received David, whom the former had ſpurned at, as an ideot or a madman. But we muſt remember, that David actually played that part to ſave his life; and it is no wonder, if Achiſh did not care to be troubled with ſo unhappy a wretch, as David then made himſelf: but the ſame man may have returned to a better mind concerning him, when he was let into the ſecret of David's fears: and may afterwards have entertained a correſpondence with a perſon of ſuch known worth, and invited him into his dominions, and aſſured him of protection againſt the evil intentions of Saul: hoping thereby to weaken Saul, and keep up a diviſion in his kingdom, at the ſame time that he ſtrengthened himſelf. If no humanity may be allowed to Achiſh in this caſe, a large ſhare of human policy may be admitted: nor do we perceive any ſolid ground for ſuppoſing this Achiſh and the former to be different perſons.

(S) Thoſe who remember that David ſlew two hundred of them, for their foreſkins only, may juſtly admire at the patience and forgiveneſs of this people, who could after ſuch an action receive him any otherwiſe than as a ſworn enemy to them and theirs. How it was poſſible, that they could refrain from exerciſing great rigour towards him, is what we are wholly at a loſs for, except we recur to the immediate interpoſition of the Almighty.

conceived

conceived very high thoughts of David, and underſtanding he had been out upon ſome expedition, examined him about it, and receiving from him ſuch an anſwer, as made him imagine he had been plundering his own nation; he expreſſed great ſatisfaction thereat, hoping David had done ſomething to make himſelf odious in the eyes of his countrymen, and that now he ſhould have him a ſervant for ever. Preparing ſoon after to war with Saul, he told David, that he expected him to head his followers, and march with him; and promiſed to recompenſe him with ſome moſt eminent poſt in his ſervice. The Philiſtines firſt gathered together at Shunem, and there encamped. From thence they removed to Aphek. Here the ſeveral bodies of the Philiſtines appeared together, in a kind of review, under their reſpective chiefs, and David and his men followed about, or after Achiſh; from whence it is gathered, that the poſt he promiſed him was, to be captain of his guard. When the lords and chiefs of the Philiſtines obſerved this, they were offended, and expoſtulated with Achiſh, who in vain endeavoured to perſuade them that David was a faſt, and very truſty friend. Inſtead of being ſatisfied with what the king ſaid, they grew angry with him; and inſiſted on it, that David ſhould not ſtir a ſtep farther with them; that he ſhould return to Ziklag, his appointed place: and not have it in his power to betray them in battle, the only way he could have to reconcile himſelf with his natural lord and maſter, at the cruel expence of the Philiſtines. In ſhort they could not imagine, that David, who was the idol of his own people, would forfeit his valuable popularity among them by fighting againſt them. Achiſh was unable to reſiſt all this clamour, and calling David to him, aſſured him, That for his own part he had the higheſt ſenſe of his ſincerity and innate worth, and had been perfectly ſatisfied with his behaviour ever ſince he had ſheltered him; but that, ſince the lords were far from being diſpoſed to think ſo well of him, it were in vain, and imprudent to contend againſt them in this matter; and therefore deſired him to return quietly to Ziklag. David reſenting the unkindneſs of the notions the lords entertained concerning him, and proteſting his readineſs to fight in his cauſe, Achiſh anſwered him with great earneſtneſs, that he was fully convinced of his affection; that he had a ſingular veneration for him; and that, in his eyes, he was as an angel of God; but, that ſeeing the lords were ſo unreaſonably bent againſt him, the thing could not be, and he muſt ſet out for Ziklag early the next morning.

So

So David went his way, and Achiſh and the Philiſtines marched againſt Saul, who was encamped on mount Gilboa. A battle was fought between them on that ſame mount, and the Philiſtines prevailed mightily againſt the Iſraelites, and drove them before them with a great ſlaughter. In particular, they preſſed hard after Saul and his ſons; and theſe, Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Malchiſhua, they ſlew. They ſent their arrows with great eagerneſs after Saul, and did hit him ſeveral times; but did not lay him along, nor had they the honour of diſpatching him: he was dead ere they reached him by his own weapon. Thus the Philiſtines at length obtained a complete victory; in conſequence of which they poſſeſſed themſelves of much of the enemy's country. On the morrow after the battle, when they came to ſtrip the ſlain, they found Saul king of Iſrael, and his three ſons among the reſt, in mount Gilboa. They did cut off Saul's head, and diſpoiled his body of his armour. His armour they dedicated in the temple of Aſhtaroth, and his body, and thoſe alſo of his ſons, they ignominiouſly hung upon the walls of Beth-ſhan. What they did, particularly with his head, is not related; but it ſeems, as if they at firſt ſent it up and down with his armour, to dedicate both in the temples of their idols, and to feaſt the eyes of their people with ſuch grateful objects, and ſuch demonſtrative marks of victory. But the bodies of Saul and his three ſons hung not long where the Philiſtines expoſed them. They were ſtolen away from them by the men of Jabeſh [y].

NOW there is reaſon to think, that Achiſh ſoon after died, inaſmuch as we find the Philiſtines in a ſhort time at variance with David, with whom Achiſh would certainly have maintained a fair correſpondence, except we ſuppoſe the lords of the Philiſtines to have had ſuch power over him, as to have conſtrained him to make a breach into the kind friendſhip he had made with David. To diſmiſs this obſcurity, the Philiſtines invaded king David very early in his reign, and no ſooner heard that he was anointed king over Iſrael, than they went out to make war upon him. Their deſign ſeems to have been to nip him in the bud; for while the diviſion between him and Iſh-boſheth ſubſiſted, they gave him no trouble; but when they underſtood that Iſrael and Judah were united under him, it is likely, they feared the heavy effects of his reſentment, or innate enmity to their nation. They marched out therefore, and incamped in the valley of Rephaim, from whence they removed to Baal-peraxim, where they were encountered by David, and by him ſo completley overthrown, that, intent upon nothing but ſaving themſelves, they left their baggage behind them, and even their gods, which they carried about with them, in imitation of the Iſraelites, when they brought their ark againſt them. The Philiſtines ſeem to have rallied again upon recollection, to reſcue their captive gods, and drew up again in battalia in the valley of Rephaim (T); but they were defeated again by David in a ſudden onſet, by the immediate interpoſition of God, and purſued with a long and bloody ſlaughter from Geba to Gazer [z], a place, it ſeems, on their own frontiers.

[y] 2 Sam. xxviii, xxix, xxxi.

The war did not end here; for a ſhort time afterwards they were invaded by David, and ſubdued, and Metheg-ammah (U) was taken out of their hands [a].

[z] 2 Sam. v. 17—25. [a] Ibid. viii. 1.

(T) Or the valley of the giants as Joſephus (55) renders it; who ſuppoſes, that they were now unable to raiſe any thing of an army themſelves, and that they were joined by the Syrians and Phœnicians; as a proof of which he alledges they returned home upon their firſt defeat, and came back to the charge again with thrice the numbers they had before, and drew up in the ſame place where the former battle was fought; and that they were again miraculouſly defeated with very great eaſe, and put to flight with the loſs of all their baggage and their gods. Joſephus is very fond of trebling the forces of a vanquiſhed people, as we have obſerved before (56), and may have occaſion to obſerve hereafter. But why he ſhould imagine the Philiſtines were at ſo low an ebb, as to be unable to make war with David of themſelves, we do not clearly perceive, even though we ſhould allow of the great ſlaughter and deſtruction, he makes of them in ſome of their preceding battles (57).

(U) Or as it is in the margin the bridle of Ammah; or, as it is explained in the Chronicles (58), the city of Gath and the territory thereunto belonging. There are many and very various expoſitions of this point; but as the context clears it up naturally, we ſhall paſs them over, and adhere to that, as moſt likely and juſt. Only let it be obſerved, that as Gath was the royal ſeat, it may, on many accounts, have been called a bridle to the reſt of the land. As to its ſtanding upon a hill called Ammah, as ſome commentators teach, they would have done well, had they produced their authority for ſo ſaying: we know of none.

(55) Antiq. l. 7. c. 4. (56) See before in the Notes, p. 106. (57) See before in the Notes, p. 219, 222, (58) 1 Chronicles xviii. 1.

The

THE Philiſtines had ſeveral men of extraordinary ſtature among them, and all it ſeems of the kindred of Goliath (W). And though they had experienced the little uſe of ſuch men in an army, yet they ſeem ſottiſhly to have caſt their eyes upon theſe; now flattering themſelves, that by their help they might retrieve their honour, and take revenge on David. Wherefore, after they had lain quiet ſeveral years, they broke out into a war again with Iſrael, and their giants marched with them. They came to a battle, in which Iſbbi-benob (X), a ſon of Goliath, as is thought, taking David at ſome diſadvantage, had like to have ſlain him. But miſſing his aim, he fell by the hand of David, aſſiſted by Abiſhai, although the head of his ſpear weighed three hundred ſhekels of braſs (Y), and although he was extraordinarily appointed (Z) for war. A ſecond battle was fought near a place called Gob, wherein Saph, another ſon of Goliath, was ſlain by Sibbechai the Huſhathite. A third battle they fought at Gob alſo, and Goliath's brother,

(W) If they were not immediately his ſons, they may poſſibly have been of the ſame family. To ſay nothing of their deſcent from the Anakims, who were expelled from Hebron, and took up their abode at Gath, which is a very obſcure piece of hiſtory; it is common in all nations to ſee families remarkable for their extraordinary ſtature: nor is there any need to ſuppoſe them deſcended from any antient race of giants. We are indeed told that the Anakims either fled from Hebron, to the cities of the Philiſtines, or elſe were planted there of old time (59). But how it came to paſs, that they were ſo dwindled away there in the days of David; and how it comes to paſs, that we read no where of them in the armies of the Philiſtines to the days of Saul, we preſume not to ſay.

(X) Joſephus (60) calls him Amchon.

(Y) To judge of him by the weight of his ſpear, he was not of much above half the ſtrength and ſtature of Goliath, the head of whoſe ſpear, as we have noted (61), weighed ſix hundred ſhekels, or twenty two of our pounds Troy; whereas this man's weighed but three hundred ſhekels, or eleven of the ſame pounds.

(Z) The words of the text are obſcure; it ſays, he was girded with a new ſword: ——— Joſephus (62) ſays only, that he had his ſword by his ſide. Of all the expoſitions we have ſeen, we approve of that moſt, which gueſſes that his ſword was made on purpoſe for him (63), to ſuit his ſtrength, which ſurpaſſed that of an ordinary man.

(59) Joſh. xi. 22. (60) Antiq. c. 10. (61) See before in the Notes, p. 220. (62) Ubi ſupr. (63) Vide Cleric. in 2 Sam. xxi. 16.

the ſtaff of whoſe ſpear was like a weaver's beam, fell by the valorous might of Elhanan the ſon of Jaare-oregim a Bethlehemite. From this laſt place the war was transferred into the territory of Gath; and in this fourth battle, another ſon of Goliath, who had ſix fingers upon each hand, and ſix toes upon each foot, did, in imitation of his father, challenge the whole army of Iſrael to ſend out one of their number to fight him, and was brought down by the hands of Jonathan the brother of David. The Philiſtines, thus exhauſted of their gigantic brood, or perceiving that their mighty ſtature and ſtrength ſtood them in no manner of ſtead, refrained from a further proſecution of the war they had ſo obſtinately maintained, in ſpite of the frowns of fortune in three ſucceſſive conflicts, before this laſt [b].

From henceforward the affairs of this people are more ſlightly touched on; whence it may be argued, that they ſuffered a decay; and accordingly we are told, that their horn was broken aſunder by theſe unfortunate wars with David [c], who now made them tributaries to his throne, as we ſhall ſee anon (A); though on the other hand it may be alſo concluded, that having ſo often, and to ſo little purpoſe, engaged themſelves in bloody and deſtructive wars, they grew wiſer, and rather applied themſelves to commerce and the advancement of their nation that way (B). And hence it may be, that we find

[b] Ibid. xxi. 15—22. [c] See Eccleſiaſt. xlvii. 7.

(A) According to Joſephus (64), this was the laſt battle they had with the Hebrews, never daring to look them in the face again; which muſt be one of his miſtakes.

B) We the rather think after this manner, it being pretty evident, that they had been increaſed ſome years ago by the fugitive Edomites (65), who brought with them their ſuperior skill in commercial and nautical affairs; not that the Philiſtines were wholly ignorant therein till the Edomites came among them; but it is now likely they applied themſelves thereto much more than ever, and that they were greatly improved therein. Sir Iſaac Newton (66) reckons that they took Sidon by the advice and aſſiſtance of the Edomites, thereby, it is likely, meaning to extend their trade, which they had now chiefly at heart, by deſtroying ſo dangerous a rival. He alſo 67) ſuppoſes this to have fallen out in the reign of David; for he obſerves, that in Solomon's reign the Zidonians, though ſettled at Tyre, had not yet loſt their name We read in Juſtin (68), that find their country open to the Israelites in the beginning of Solomon's reign, Achish the son of Maachah then reigning at Gath; who, whether he is the same Achish who was so kind to David, we must not hope to determine, though commentators are divided upon it; probably he was not [d].

(64) Ubi ſupr. (65) See before, p. 197. (66) Chronol of ant. Kingd. amended, p. 104, 105. (67) Ubi ſupr. (68) l. 18. c. 3.

Sidon

MANY years after these wars the Philistines were harrassed by Nadab [e] king of Israel, who laid siege to a city of theirs, called Gibbethon; which city was again besieged by Elah king of Israel [f], some years afterwards; for it belonged to their kingdom, though the Philistines finding it deserted by the Levites [g], seized on it, and kept it, notwithstanding these several efforts to tear it from them; the kingdom of Israel at this time being in great distraction.

BUT, notwithstanding this their obstinacy against the kings of Israel, they afterwards courted the favour of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, by a voluntary payment of the tribute [h], which had been, as we may hence conclude, imposed on them by their conqueror David (C); and which, it seems, they had neglected to pay to some of Jehoshaphat's predecessors, as this story plainly enough insinuates, and as will be further confirmed by what follows.

FOR they rebelled against Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat, and brake into his kingdom, and in the end rifled his palace of all the wealth they there found; and even extended their rage against him, to the cruel butchery of all his house, except Athaliah and her son Ahaziah, who some how or other escaped. At this time we also gather, that they carried off a great number of captives, some of whom they sold to the Edomites [i], next to themselves, the worst enemies the Israelites had; and some to the Grecians [k], thereby sending them so far from home, that they could have but little or no chance of seeing

[d] 1 Kings ii. 39. [e] Ibid. xv. 27. [f] Ibid. xvi. 15.
[g] 2 Chron. xi. 14. [h] Ibid. xvii. 11. [i] Amos i. 6.
[k] Joel iii. 6.

Sidon was expugned by the Philistines; though he seems to mistake, in saying it was done by the king of Ascalon; for we do not read of a king of that place any where else. Remembering the story of the Syrian goddess Derceto, who was metamorphosed here (69), the Grecks and Romans may have considered the city of Ascalon as the metropolis of Palæstine; whence we find the king of Palæstine placed in that city by Trogus, whom Justin epitomizes.

(C) Josephus (70) calls it their accustomed tribute, and it can have been no body but David himself that imposed it on them.

(69) See before, p. 194. (70) Antiq. l. S. c. 9.

their native country again. This their extraordinary success may have been brought to pass either by the conjunctive, or distant co-operation of the Arabians, who made war at the same time upon Jehoram [l].

Whencesoever their success arose, it in the end proved a very unfortunate affair to them. They were invaded by Uzziah king of Judah, who dismantled Gath, and Jabneh, and Ashdod, and reared cities of strength among them to awe them, and keep them in subjection [m]; which must greatly have broken their spirits, and have brought them low.

They groaned under this fearful blow all the days of Uzziah, we may suppose, and perhaps all the days of Jotham; but in the reign of Ahaz, they perceived the crazy state of the kingdom of Judah; and, observing the opportunity to be favourable, they took up arms again. They warred against Ahaz with a success which made ample amends for their sufferings by Uzziah his grandfather; reducing the cities of Beth-shemesh, Ahjalon, Gederoth, Shocho, Timnai, and Gimzo, and the several territories thereunto belonging, and there settled themselves, thereby adding a large portion of the kingdom of Judah to their own country *.

Thus did the Philistines rather more than reinstate themselves; but this fine acquisition was a very short time in their hands. They were immediately after this conquest admonished not to rejoice, because the rod of him that smote them was broken; for that out of the serpent's root should come forth a cockatrice . . . . . which should dissolve their whole country [n]. And this was severely fulfilled on them by Hezekiah the son of Ahaz, whom they had conquered; for Hezekiah, as we understand it, over-ran their whole country [o], and forced ample retribution of all sorts from them. This, though it had been, alone, a very grievous oppression on them, they saw almost at the same time the Assyrians among them, in the reign of Sennacherib, who sent his general Tartan to reduce them. Their city Ashdod was besieged accordingly, and taken by Tartan †; and thus successively were they broken, almost without any intermission.

And now the burthen of their final extinction comes heavily upon them. By their subjection to the Assyrians, their liberties departed entirely from them; and, what was worse, their country became the seat of a long and obstinate war. For Psammitichus king of Egypt beholding the vast progress

[l] 2 Chron. xxi. 16, 17. [m] Ibid. xxvi. 6. * Ibid. xxviii. 18. [n] Isa. xiv. 29—31. [o] 2 Kings xviii. 8. † Isai. xx. 1.

of

A MAP of the Divisions & Situations of the Tribes of the Canaanites, Moabites, Ammonites, Midia-nites, Edomites, Amalekites, &c. before & at y^e time of y^e Exodus of y^e CHILDREN of ISRAEL, according to this History

THE GREAT

MEDITERRANEAN

SEA

PART

OF

EGYPT

ARABIA PETRÆA

ARABIA DESART - PART of the CANAANITES

HIVITES

PERIZZITES

JEBUSITES

HITTITES

AMORITES

PHILISTINES

AMALEK

EDOM

MOAB

AMMONITES

BASAN

Samachonite Lake

Sea of Tiberias

Dead Sea

M^t Carmel

Sichem

Ekron

Gath

Bethel

Jericho

Jebus

Ashdod

Ascalon

Gaza

Hebron

Teman

Bozrah

Dedan

Selah or Petra

Elah

Ezion-geber

Mount Sinai

Madyan

Rabbah

Aroer

Heshbon

Ramoth

Zoar

Ruhbah or Philadelphia

R. Jabbok

Minnith

Abel of the Plain of the Meadows

Plain of Moreh

R. Zered

HERODOPOLITAN GULF of the RED SEA

ELANITIC GULF of the RED SEA

33 32 31 30 29

D. Fomarede Sc.

of the Aſſyrian power, grew jealous and apprehenſive, that Egypt might ſhare the fate of its neighbours; and therefore, to be as timely in his oppoſition as he could, he undertook to drive the Aſſyrians out of Paleſtine. To this purpoſe he particularly laid ſiege to Aſhdod, or Azotus; but he was twenty nine years before that place ere he could reduce it [p]: during all which time it cannot be doubted, but that the country ſighed under all the calamites uſual in ſuch caſes.

From henceforward they were tributary to the great monarchies, as they ſucceeded each other. In the beginning of this ſervitude they were miſerably harraſſed by the Egyptians; who willing to make their barrier as ſtrong as poſſible againſt the dreaded invader, laid hands on all they could of this country, and, particularly, took Gaza from them [q].

AFTER this we read of a king of Gaza [r]; concerning which we have nothing to add, nor have we ought elſe to relate concerning this people. What in the end became of them will be beſt learned from the threats of the prophets, and particularly, Zephaniah, who paints their deſtruction in very lively and natural colours (D): Gaza ſhall be forſaken, and Aſkelon a deſolation: they ſhall drive out Aſhdod at the noon day, and Ekron ſhall be rooted up. Woe unto the inhabitants of the ſea-coaſts, the nation of the Cherethites: the word of the Lord is againſt you: O Canaan, the land of the Philiſtines, I will even deſtroy thee, that there ſhall be no inhabitant; and the ſea-coaſt ſhall be dwellings and cottages for ſhepherds, and folds for flocks. [s]

[p] HERODOT. l. 2. c. 157. [q] Jerem. xlvii. [r] Zach. ix. 5. [s] Zephan. ii 4—6. See alſo Joel iii. Amos i. Jerem. xlvii. Ezek. xxv. Zach. ubi ſupr.

(D) Here it is worth obſerving, that Gath is omitted, as if already deſtroyed, as it doubtleſs was, being moſt obnoxious to the enemy, as it was the royal ſeat of this turbulent people; and as it was a key to, and a curb upon the whole country (71). Hence therefore it muſt have been, that the throne of this kingdom was removed to Gaza; but to purſue this point any farther were time loſt.

(71) See before in the Notes, p. 226.

CHAP. V.

The Hiſtory of the antient Syrians.

SECT. I.

A Deſcription of Syria.

Its names. SYRIA is in Hebrew Aram, ſo named from Aram, the youngeſt ſon of Shem. This Hebrew name is of very wide extent; perhaps, of little leſs than the Greek name Syria; at leaſt it included what we now call Syria and Meſopotamia, which is the Aram Naharaim, or Syria of the two rivers [a].

ARAM then is its firſt and genuine name; how it came to be called Syria is variouſly ſaid. Some [b] derive it from one Syrus, who ſprung from the earth (A). Others [c] from Syrus, the ſon of Agenor. Other thoughts there are upon this ſubject; but the moſt certain opinion is, that Syria is a contraction of Aſſyria [d], and that the antients uſually confounded them together (B).

AUTHORS are not agreed upon the exact bounds of this country, becauſe they conſider it at different times, when its name was more or leſs famous, and its empire more or leſs ample. But, confining ourſelves to the proper Syria, we may

[a] See Vol. I. p. 362. [b] AFRICAN. apud SYNCELL. p. 150. [c] Chronic. Alexandr. p. 101. [d] Vide HERODOT. l. 7. c. 63. JUST. l. 1. c. 2.

(A) Perhaps this fabulous account may have taken birth from an antient tradition, which ſtill obtains in the country, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter, that Adam was created in Syria.

(B) Mr. Selden, in his Prolegomena to his Syrian gods, has dwelt on this point, to whom we refer our reader, who would be thoroughly informed and convinced thereof. We ſhall only add, that Lucian (8), who was himſelf a Syrian of Samoſata calls himſelf an Aſſyrian.

(8) De Dea Syr. p. 1.

venture

venture to ſet bounds to it, and determine its dimenſions. It lay between the Mediterranean on the weſt, and the river Euphrates on the eaſt; and between mount Taurus on the north, and Arabia the deſert, Paleſtine, and Phœnice on the ſouth. And this tract extends from the thirty ſecond to the thirty ſeventh degree of north latitude, and from the thirty ſixth to the forty firſt degree of longitude, E. from Lond. Its length from north to ſouth three hundred ſeventy five miles; its breadth from eaſt to weſt three hundred miles.

Its diviſions.

SYRIA, in antient times, has been very variouſly divided. At firſt, we may be ſure, it was parcelled out into endleſs little kingdoms and juriſdictions. In after-times it ſeems to have been divided into four principal ones, Zobah, Damaſcus, Hamath, and Geſhur. Theſe were the principal diviſions; the reſt we find in ſcripture, ſuch as Beth-rehob, Iſhtob, Maachah, were ſubdiviſions, as we think. Afterwards the whole country was divided into two parts only, though the Phœnicians, Idumeans, Jews, Gazites, and Azotites, or the whole country of the Philiſtines, were included, which two parts were Cœle-Syria, and Phœnice[c]. After the death of Alexander, Syria in the great extent of its name was thus divided, Commagene, Seleucis of Syria, Cœle-Syria, Phœnice on the ſea-coaſt, and Judæa in the Midland. This is Strabo's diviſion; but Ptolemy ſubdivides theſe, and in the proper Syria only, reckons Commagene, Pieria, Cyrriſtica or Cyrrheſtica, Seleucis, Caſſiotis or Caſiotis, Chalybonitis, Chalcidice or Chalcidene, Apamene, Laodicene, Phœnicia, Mediterranea, Cœle-Syria, and Palmyrene.

Commagene.

To follow the diviſion of Ptolemy; Commagene or Comagene, had on the weſt mount Amanus; on the north part of mount Taurus; on the eaſt it was waſhed by the Euphrates; but on the ſouth, whether it was conterminous with Seleucis, or Cyrrheſtica, or with both, is uncertain. It was the north corner of Syria. The chief cities of this province were Samoſata upon the Euphrates, Antiochia ad Taurum, or at the foot of Taurus, and Germanicia; theſe, and other cities and eminent places ſtood within this compaſs, once flouriſhing and magnificent, but now obliterated and in ruins.

Seleucis, Pieria and Caſſiotis.

THE maritime Seleucis contained Pieria and Caſiotis, which were ſubdiviſions thereof; the firſt lying to the north, and the laſt to the ſouth. Within theſe limits ſtood Alexandria upon the Sinus Iſſicus, Seleucia, Pieria upon the Mediterranean, and Laodicea upon the ſame.

[c] STRABO, l. 16.

IN

Seleucis Mediterranea.

In the inland or Mediterranean Seleucis, ſtood the famous Antioch upon the Orontes. Theſe two Seleucides are by Mela and Pliny called Antiochene.

Apamene.

Apamene lay to the eaſtward of Caſiotis, and had Apamea, at leaſt half ſurrounded by the Orontes, for its chief town.

Cyrrheſtica.

Cyrrheſtica was a province upon the Euphrates, Cyrrhus, or Cyrus, was the capital of this part of Syria. Here alſo ſtood a famous city called Hierapolis, Bambyce, and, by the Syrians Magog [f], where the Syrian goddeſs was worſhipped.

Chalcidine.

Chalcidine was wholly an inland province, nor bordered either upon the Mediterranean ſea, or the Euphrates, and had Chalcis for its capital. It was ſurrounded by Antiochene or Seleucis on the weſt; by Cyrrheſtica on the north; by Chalybonitis on the eaſt; and by Apamene and Cœle-Syria on the ſouth.

Chalybonitis.

On the eaſt of Chalcidine lay Chalybonitis on the Euphrates; its chief city Chalybon.

Palmyrene.

Palmyrene was a ſpacious and fertile province in the midſt of a frightful deſert to the ſouth of Chalybonitis; waſhed on the eaſt by the river Euphrates; once ſtored with great cities; all of which are quite periſhed but their metropolis Palmyra; which though now as much a deſert as that which ſurrounds, and divides it from the reſt of the nations, is yet deſervedly reckoned one of the wonders of our preſent world.

Cœle-Syria.

There is no reconciling the antient geographers, ſo as to be able to determine the bounds of what they mean by Cœle-Syria; but before all of them we prefer Strabo, who tells us, that Cœle-Syria was the vale between Libanus and Anti-Libanus; which, however the name may have been extended, was undoubtedly the proper Cœle-Syria and Syria Cava, which we take to have been the ſame. The principal cities of this part are Heliopolis, now Balbek, which we ſhall have occaſion to reſume hereafter, and Damaſcus, now Shâm, as is commonly and inaccurately ſaid, which lying eaſtward of Anti-Libanus, cannot be immediately reckoned into the proper Cœle-Syria.

Laodicene.

We know not how to fix the place of Laodicene. It may have been a part of the proper Cœle-Syria. Its chief city was Laodicea Cabioſa, or ad Libanum.

Of the Phœnicia Mediterranea we ſhall ſpeak in the next chapter.

[f] Plin. Hiſt. Nat. l. 5. c. 19, or 23.

Under

UNDER the Roman empire, the proper Syria was divided into Comagena or Euphratenſis, Syria, Palmyrene or Syria Salutaris, Phœnicia Libani or Libaneſia, Libaniſia, and Libanuſia, as we think. The Arabs reckon Paleſtine into Syria, on the one hand, and even Cilicia on the other, and call it Shâm, and Abûlfeda divides the whole into five Junds, or provinces, the Kinneſryne, the Hemſene, the Damaſcene, the Jordanitic, and the Paleſtine. Other diviſions.

THE climate of Syria is happy, if any be ſo, and its fertility ſo great, that it may be juſtly ſtiled a pleaſant garden almoſt throughout. We ſhall not here enter into a detail of its productions, which are many, noble, uſeful, and delicious. It abounds with ſufficient of all things, both for the profit and delight of man. It is moſtly a plain country, and for the moſt part covered over with a deep and rich ſoil. In ſhort it yields to no ſpot on earth, that lies under the ſame happy parallel. Climate and fertility.

THE rivers of this country, that we ſhall take notice of, are the Orontes (B), the largeſt of them all, a turbid, rapid ſtream, with waters not fit to drink, and fiſh unfit to eat *; and the Barrady, formerly the Chryſorrhoas, which ruſhing from Anti-Libanus down to Damaſcus is there divided into endleſs ſtreams for the ſupply and decoration of that city; whence recollecting at ſome diſtance, it ſoon loſes itſelf in a bog [g]. The rivers Abana and Pharpar muſt have been only branches (C) of this. Rivers.

THINGS

* See MAUNDRELL's Journey from Alepp. to Jeruſ. p. 4.
[g] MAUNDRELL's Voyage from Aleppo to Jeruſalem, p. 123.

(B) This river, according to Strabo (2), diſappeared at a place called Charybdis, between Apamea and Antioch; and after having run five miles under ground, appeared again. In the ſame author (3) alſo there is a fabulous tradition concerning the origin of this river, as that Typhon, in his flight, furrowed up the earth, and formed the canal; that he was thunder-ſtruck at the fountain-head of this river, and that his going down was the cauſe of the ſpring which riſes there. They feigned him to be a huge dragon. This may be added to the fabulous accounts we have already given of Typhon's exit (4).

(C) Radziville (2), the Palatine of Wilna, tells us roundly of the rivers Abana and Pharpar, which watered the city of Damaſcus, when he was there, which is about one hundred and fifty years ago,

(2) l. 6. p. 275. (3) l. 16. p. 750, (4) See Vol. I. p. 521. (2) Peregrin Jeroſolym. Epiſt. 2. p. 31.

and Natural Rarities.

THINGS more particularly remarkable in this country are the two valleys of ſalt, the one within four hours of Aleppo [h], the other in the neighbourhood of Palmyra [i], which ſhoot forth that mineral in ſurprizing abundance; the ſoil to a conſiderable depth being ſtrongly impregnated therewith, as is ſaid of the valley near Aleppo; and as might, doubtleſs, have been ſaid of the other, had trial thereof been made. The medicinal waters alſo in and about Palmyra, and in ſeveral other parts of Palmyrene [k], might claim our attention, were this a proper place. Among the remarkables of this country we may alſo reckon the few cedars which are now ſtanding upon Lebanon, or Libanus. They are near a Chriſtian monaſtery, called Canobine, about ten hours journey from Tripoli. They ſtand in the midſt of ſnow (D), near the higheſt part of Libanus, and that they were unnavigable, but full of fiſh, and ſtreamed down to it from the mountain Chrizoroa, which ſhould have been written Chryſorrhoas, the Greek name of the river which watered Damaſcus, and not of any mountain there. Thevenot, who was ſo curious and minute an obſerver of every thing in and about Damaſcus, never once mentions the rivers Abana and Pharpar; but tells us (3) of three rivers that water Damaſcus, and meet at the end of the town; one of which, in the chapter following, he calls Banias. There is no footſtep of the names Abana and *Pharpar among the beſt Arabian geographers. Abülfeda tells us, that the ſtream which ſupplies Damaſcus, comes out of a cavern on the weſt ſide of the city, and immediately divides; which is ſo exactly Dr. Maundrell's (4) deſcription of this water, that they very abundantly confirm each other. This laſt traveller could not ſo much as find any memory of the names of Abana and Pharpar, and ſuppoſes they muſt have been branches of this river Barrady, which comes out of the rock. And, as he ſo nicely agrees with Abülfeda in the approach of this river to Damaſcus, he does the ſame with Thevenot in its departure therefrom; they both agreeing, that its divided ſtreams meet again on the other ſide of the town. Dr. Maundrell then in this caſe may be ſafely relied on, in what he ſays of this remarkable ſtream.

[h] Idem ibid. ſub fine. [i] Philoſophical Tranſact. Numb. 217. p. 83. [k] Ibid. p. 103, 104.

(D) Rauwolf, who viſited theſe cedars about midſummer, complains of the rigour of the cold, and the ſnows here. Radziville, who was here in June, about five years after him, talks of the ſnow that never melts away from theſe mountains. Other travellers talk to the ſame purpoſe; among whom our Maundrell repreſents the cedars ſtanding in the midſt of ſnow; but he was there in the month

(3) Travels to the Levant, Part 2, Book 1. c. 4. * Vide Alber. Schult. Comment. Geograph in vit. Salad. ad vocem, Damaſcus
(4) Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſ. p. 122. of banus, or Lebanon. Of the old ones, which are very large, there are only ſixteen, but young ones of a leſſer growth there are in great numbers. One of the largeſt of the former being meaſured, was found to be twelve yards ſix inches in girt, yet perfectly ſound, and the ſpread of its branches was thirty ſeven yards in circumference: and about five or ſix yards from the ground it divided itſelf into five limbs, each equal to a great tree [1]. Another traveller *, who was alſo on the ſpot tells us, that the largeſt he meaſured was, towards the middle of the trunk, ſeven foot wanting two inches round, at the ſame time that he reckons the ſpread of its boughs one hundred and twenty foot about. In which laſt dimenſion, agreeing ſo nearly with what is ſaid before of the ſame, there muſt be a monſtrous ſlip of the pen, or overſight of the preſs, either in this or the former account; for the difference between ſeven foot and twelve yards is quite ſurprizing. But the difference between theſe travellers goes on: the latter ſays, the largeſt of the cedars had not a trunk above ſix or ſeven foot high out of the ground, which falls moſt unaccountably ſhort of what has been juſt now ſaid upon that point: and yet this author [De la Roque] talks of the enormity of the trunks of theſe trees, and of the prodigious branches which part therefrom; which is throwing away great words very improperly, if he is not moſt egregiouſly out in the dimenſions he gives us, which are ſo trifling, that they cannot deſerve admiration in any degree. This, though a digreſſion of ſuch a kind as is unfit to find a place in a work of this nature, we hope we ſhall be excuſed in, meaning thereby only to obviate what might be objected, by ſome, to the diſcredit of a very ſincere traveller of our own nation (E).

It

[1] MAUNDRELL ubi ſupr. p. 142. * DE LA ROQUE, Voyage de Syrie, Tome I. p. 88.

of May. From all this we might have formed a judgment, that the cedars ſtand always in the midſt of ſnow: but we are aſſured of the contrary by another traveller (5), according to whom the ſnows here begin to melt in April, and are no more to be ſeen after July; nor is, ſays he, any at all left, but in ſuch clefts of the mountains which the ſun cannot come at: that the ſnow begins not to fall again till December, and that he himſelf, when he was here, ſaw no ſnow at all; and, it is probable that he ſpeaks nothing but the truth.

(E) We cannot forbear obſerving, that there ſeems to be almoſt as great a difference, concerning theſe cedars, between Ran-

(5) De la Roque Voyage de Syrie, Tome I. p. 89.

It will not be expected of us to give an accurate deſcription of this noble tree; therefore we ſhall only ſay, that it bears a narrow leaf, of a ſad green, together with a cone like that of the pine-tree, but darker, and of a ſmoother coat. As theſe cedars ſpread out extremely with a broad flat head, which is compared to the top of an umbrella, the weight of the ſnow that might lodge upon them at certain ſeaſons, would break down their branches: but, to prevent this, they are reported to have the extraordinary faculty of preparing themſelves againſt ſo deſtructive a danger, by ſtretching their branches upwards till they form a cone; thereby exhibiting the ſmalleſt ſurface poſſible to the heavens, and by that means, preſerving themſelves from ruin [m]. Theſe cedars of Lebanon making ſo noble a figure in the books of the Old Teſtament, and having been antiently the pride of this country, we could not well ſay leſs than we have concerning the few of them left, which are held in ſuch veneration by the inhabitants in theſe parts, that nothing can be added thereto (F).

As

[m] De la Roque ubi ſupr. p. 90, 91.

wolf (6), and Radziville (7); who viſited them about a century and a half ago. The former reckons the largeſt cedars at ſeveral fathoms in circumference. The latter ſays, they were handſome proper trees, with wide ſpreading branches, like the trees the Poles call Modrzew; he does not raiſe the admiration at all. But the truth of it is, Mr. de la Roque muſt be excuſed, if he does deceive us by leſſening the cedars ſo much. It is not his own voyage, though he ſets his name to it, which is ſomewhat odd. He is no more than editor of this, as well as of other voyages under his name, which were really and properly Monſ. le Chevalier d' Arvieux's. To prove that it muſt be his miſtake, we ſhall only recur to the Memoirs of the miſſionaries (8) in the Levant, where a Jeſuit, who meaſured the largeſt of theſe cedars, tells us it was in girt ſix fathom, which ſquare very well with Maundrell's twelve yards.

(F) We are told (9), that at the foot of the largeſt of theſe cedars are four ſtone altars: that upon the day of the transfiguration, the patriarch of the Maronites repairs to them, attended by a number of biſhops, prieſts and monks; and followed by five or ſix thouſand of their religion from all parts; and that under theſe trees they celebrate that feſtival, which they miſcal the feaſt of cedars. By another it is added, that the patriarch officiates pontifically upon this ſolemn occaſion; that they are particularly mindful of the bleſſed Virgin upon this day; becauſe the ſcripture compares her to

(6) Ray's Collect. of Voyages ubi ſupra. (7) Peregrin Jeroſolym. ubi ſupr. (8) Tom. 4. p. 358. (9) Ibid.

the

2

Artificial Rarities.

As we have been ſo particular in deſcribing the Egyptian monuments of antiquity; we cannot paſs over the chief, at leaſt, of thoſe which are to be found in this country, which, in the judgment of many, may be thought no way inferior to any thing of the kind in Egypt. Who founded the noble edifices, whoſe remains we ſhall have here occaſion to deſcribe, is quite uncertain; but nothing is more probable, than that they were not erected under any of the princes in the enſuing hiſtory, they being in the moſt correct ſtile of the antient Greeks and Romans. Upon this account we might be taxed with irregularity in introducing them into a period, when they had no being, had we not this for our excuſe; that being quite in the dark, as to the time when they were built, we may as well ſpeak of them here as any where elſe.

THOUGH there are many noble veſtiges of the magnificence of Syria, ſcattered up and down the country, both Pagan and Chriſtian, we ſhall dwell on two only; Balbek, formerly Heliopolis, as is commonly ſuppoſed, and Palmyra, or Tadmor in the wilderneſs.

The fine Ruins at Heliopolis now Balbek.

BALBEK, or Balbeck, is mentioned by the Arabians as the wonder of Syria (G); and ſuch of our European travellers as have viſited it, are ſo charmed with what they there behold, that they are at a loſs how to expreſs their admiration. On the ſouth-weſt of the town, which ſtands in a delightful plain on the weſt foot of Anti-Libanus, is a heathen temple, together with the remains of ſome other edifices; among the reſt a palace of a true magnificence. Theſe antient ſtructures have been patched and pieced in later times, and converted into a caſtle, as it is called. As you draw near to theſe venerable ruins, you meet with a rotunda, or round pile of building, incircled with pillars of the Corinthian order, which ſupport a corniſh that runs all round the ſtructure; the whole the cedars of Lebanon; and that the ſame holy father threatens, with his church thunderbolts, thoſe who preſume to (10) hurt or diminiſh them,

The Rotunda.

(G) The Arabian geographical lexicographer, cited by Schultens, in his geographical commentary (11), at the end of his edition of Soltân Salah'addin's life, ſays; Balbek is a city of three days journey from Damaſcus, where are wonderful foundations and magnificent veſtiges of antiquity, and palaces with marble columns, ſuch as in the whole world are no where elſe to be ſeen. And Abûlfeda; at Balbek are palaces of hewn ſtone with moſt lofty columns; nor is there in all Syria any ſtone ſtructure more admirable or magnificent.

(10) De la Roque ubi ſupra p. 87, 89. (11) Ad vocem Balbecum.

of

of great elegance and ſtatelineſs, but now in a very tottering condition [n]. It is moſtly of marble, and, though round on the outſide, is an octagon within; being withinſide adorned with eight arches, ſupported by eight Corinthian columns, each of one ſingle piece. It is now open at top, but appears to have been covered with a ſhell, and to have been much embelliſhed with the figures of eagles. The Greeks, who have converted this lovely round into a church, have barbarouſly ſpoiled the beauty of the inſide, by daubing it over with plaiſter [o]. Leaving this, you come to a large, firm, and very lofty pile of building, which has the air of an adjectitious work; and through this pile you paſs into a noble arched walk, or portico, one hundred and fifty paces long, which leads you to the temple.

The great Temple.

This temple has, to a miracle, reſiſted the injuries of time, and the madneſs of ſuperſtition, being as good as entire. It is an oblong ſquare, in its general form and proportion exactly like St. Paul's or Covent-Garden; but for magnificence of ſtructure and dimenſion, there is ſcarce any compariſon, this temple being almoſt as big again every way. Its length on the outſide is one hundred ninety two foot, and its breadth ninety ſix [p]. Its length within ſide is one hundred and twenty foot, and its breadth ſixty. The pronaos, or anti-temple, took up fifty four foot of the hundred and ninety, but is now tumbled down, and the pillars which ſupported it are broken. The whole body of this temple, as it now ſtands, is ſurrounded with a noble portico, ſupported by pillars of the Corinthian order, ſix foot three inches in diameter, about fifty four in height (H), and each of three ſtones apiece. Their diſtance from each other, and from the wall of the [n] Maundrell ubi ſupr. p. 135. [o] De La Roque ubi ſupr. p. 152. [p] Maundrell ubi ſupr.

(H) Theſe fifty four are French feet, which according to Maundrell, ought to be but forty five Engliſh, which is a very great difference. The French author viewed this place for a fortnight together, whereas our Engliſh traveller was ſcarce here a day; ſo that the former may be chiefly relied on in moſt particulars, and accordingly we have adhered chiefly to him; though they both agree very well, conſidering, that the one was a tranſitory, the other a conſtant obſerver, as we may call them. Beſides, in this caſe the thing ſpeaks itſelf; for, according to our mean ſkill in architecture, a Corinthian pillar, whoſe diameter is ſix foot, in which they both agree, will require at leaſt fifty foot of height to appear with any manner of elegance and delicacy.

temple,

temple, is nine foot. There are fourteen of them on each ſide of the temple, and eight at each end, counting the corner pillars in each number. The architrave and corniſh, which are ſupported all round by theſe pillars, are exquiſitely carved. And as you walk round this temple, between its wall and the pillars which go round it, you have, over-head, a ſolid arcade all the way, of great ſtones hollowed out arch-wiſe; in the centre of each of which is a god, a goddeſs, or a hero (I), ſtruck out with that life that is not to be conceived [q]; and all round the foot of the wall of the temple itſelf is a double border of marble, the loweſt parts of which is a continued baſs relieve in miniature, expreſſing heathen myſteries and ceremonies, where, without any confuſion, you ſee a ſurprizing mixture of men and beaſts, in the moſt happy compoſition, and moſt agreeable variety [r].

HAVING thus deſcribed the outſide of this temple, we will proceed to the inſide; but let us firſt take a view of the entrance, than which nothing can be more auguſt. The aſcent to it is by thirty ſteps, on each ſide bounded by a wall, which terminates in a pedeſtal, on which formerly ſtood a ſtatue, as may be ſafely ſuppoſed. The front is compoſed of eight Corinthian pillars, as we have already ſaid, fluted, as are all the reſt that go round the temple, and an ample and nobly proportioned triangular pediment. Within theſe eight pillars, at the diſtance of about ſix foot, are four others like the two former, and two pillars of three faces each, that terminate the walls of the temple, which come out a good way from the body of the temple itſelf. All theſe form a porch or portico before the door of the temple, in depth about twenty four foot, and in breadth ſixty odd. Through theſe pillars appears the door of the temple, under the vault of the portico; but it there appears with great majeſty, and without the leaſt confuſion; ſo nice are the proportions of the pillars, their diſtance from each other, and the receſs of the door itſelf. The door-caſe or portal is ſquare, and of marble, in proportion and conſtruction juſt like the great marble portal at the weſt end of St. Paul's, but far richer in ſculpture, and larger, if we miſtake not. The whole height of it is about forty foot, and its whole width about twenty eight, with an opening of about twenty foot wide [r]. You are no ſooner got under this portal, but looking up, you ſee the bottom of the lintel, enriched with a piece of ſculpture, which has ſcarce its equal in the world. It is a vaſt eagle in baſs relieve, expanding his wings, and carrying a caduceus in his pounce; and on each hand of him is a fame [t], or cupid [u]. Theſe, each of them, ſupport the one end of a feſtoon by a ſtring or ribbon, the other being held in the eagle's beak on each hand, inimitably fine [w].

[q] Idem ibid. [r] DE LA ROQUE ubi ſupr. p. 138, 147.

(I) An emperor or an empreſs, ſays de la Roque (12); but in this we chooſe to rely on Maundrell's judgment.

(12) Ubi ſupr. p. 148.

When you are got withinſide of the temple, you find it divided into three iſles, two narrow on the ſides, and one broad in the middle, after the manner of our churches, being formed by two rows of fluted Corinthian pillars, of between three and four foot diameter, and in height, including the pedeſtal, about thirty ſix. Theſe pillars are twelve in number, ſix on a ſide, at the diſtance of about eighteen foot from each other, and about twelve from the walls of the temple. The walls are adorned with two rows or orders of pilaſters one over another, and between each two of the lowermoſt is a round nich about fifteen foot high. The bottom of the niches is upon a level with the baſes of the pillars, and the wall to that height is wrought in the proportions of a Corinthian pedeſtal, and the niches themſelves are Corinthian in all their parts, with the ſtricteſt preciſion and niceſt delicacy. Over theſe round niches is a row of ſquare ones, between the pilaſters of the upper order: the ornaments belonging to them are all marble, and they are each crowned with a triangular pediment (K). Towards the weſt end of the middle iſle you aſcend to a choïr, as it is called, by thirteen ſteps, which are the whole breadth of this part in length. This choir is diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of the temple by two large ſquare columns adorned with pilaſters, which form a noble entrance, exactly correſponding with that of the temple itſelf. Here is a great profuſion of aſtoniſhing ſculpture; but the architecture is the ſame here as in the body of the temple, except that the pillars have no pedeſtals, and the niches ſtand upon the pavement [x].

[r] Idem ubi ſupr. p. 136. [t] Maundrell ubi ſupr. [u] De la Roque ubi ſupr. p. 137. [w] Idem ibid. [x] Idem ubi ſupr. p. 140—142.

(K) In the draught Maundrell (13) has given us of the inſide of this temple, the upper and the lower niches are exactly alike, both round: this is a remarkable difference; but which way to reconcile them we know not.

(13) Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſ.

The

The two large ſquare pillars, which ſo remarkably diſtinguiſh this part of the temple, are thought to have ſupported a canopy; but nothing of that kind is to be ſeen now. In the bottom of this choir, is a vaſt marble nich, where ſtood the principal deity here worſhipped. In this choir are ſeen the moſt finely imagined ſculptures, feſtoons, birds, flowers, fruits; and fine baſs relieves, neptunes, tritons, fiſhes, ſea-gods, Arion and his dolphin, and other marine figures [y]. The cieling, or vault, of this temple is bold, and divided into compartments filled with excellent carvings. It is open towards the middle; but whether a cupola or lanthorn ſtood there for the admiſſion of light, or whether it was always open, cannot be judged at this diſtance of time [z]. In a word, the charming ſymmetry, the correct taſte, and the height wherewith all the carvings are finiſhed, even at ſuch elevations, where ſuch niceneſs is thought unneceſſary, are ſuch, that it may be truly ſaid, the whole pile is faultleſs, and without the leaſt blemiſh. The whole ſtands upon vaults of ſuch excellent architecture, and ſo bold a turn, that it is thought they ſerved for ſomething more than merely the ſupport of the ſuperincumbent weight, and may have been a ſubterraneous temple, applied to ſome particular ſervice in the Pagan worſhip. And, though this temple now ſtands by itſelf, there are evident marks, that it was accompanied by other buildings, no way unworthy of it; among which are reckoned four different aſcents to it, one upon each angle, with marble ſteps ſo long, that eight or ten perſons may go up abreaſt [a].

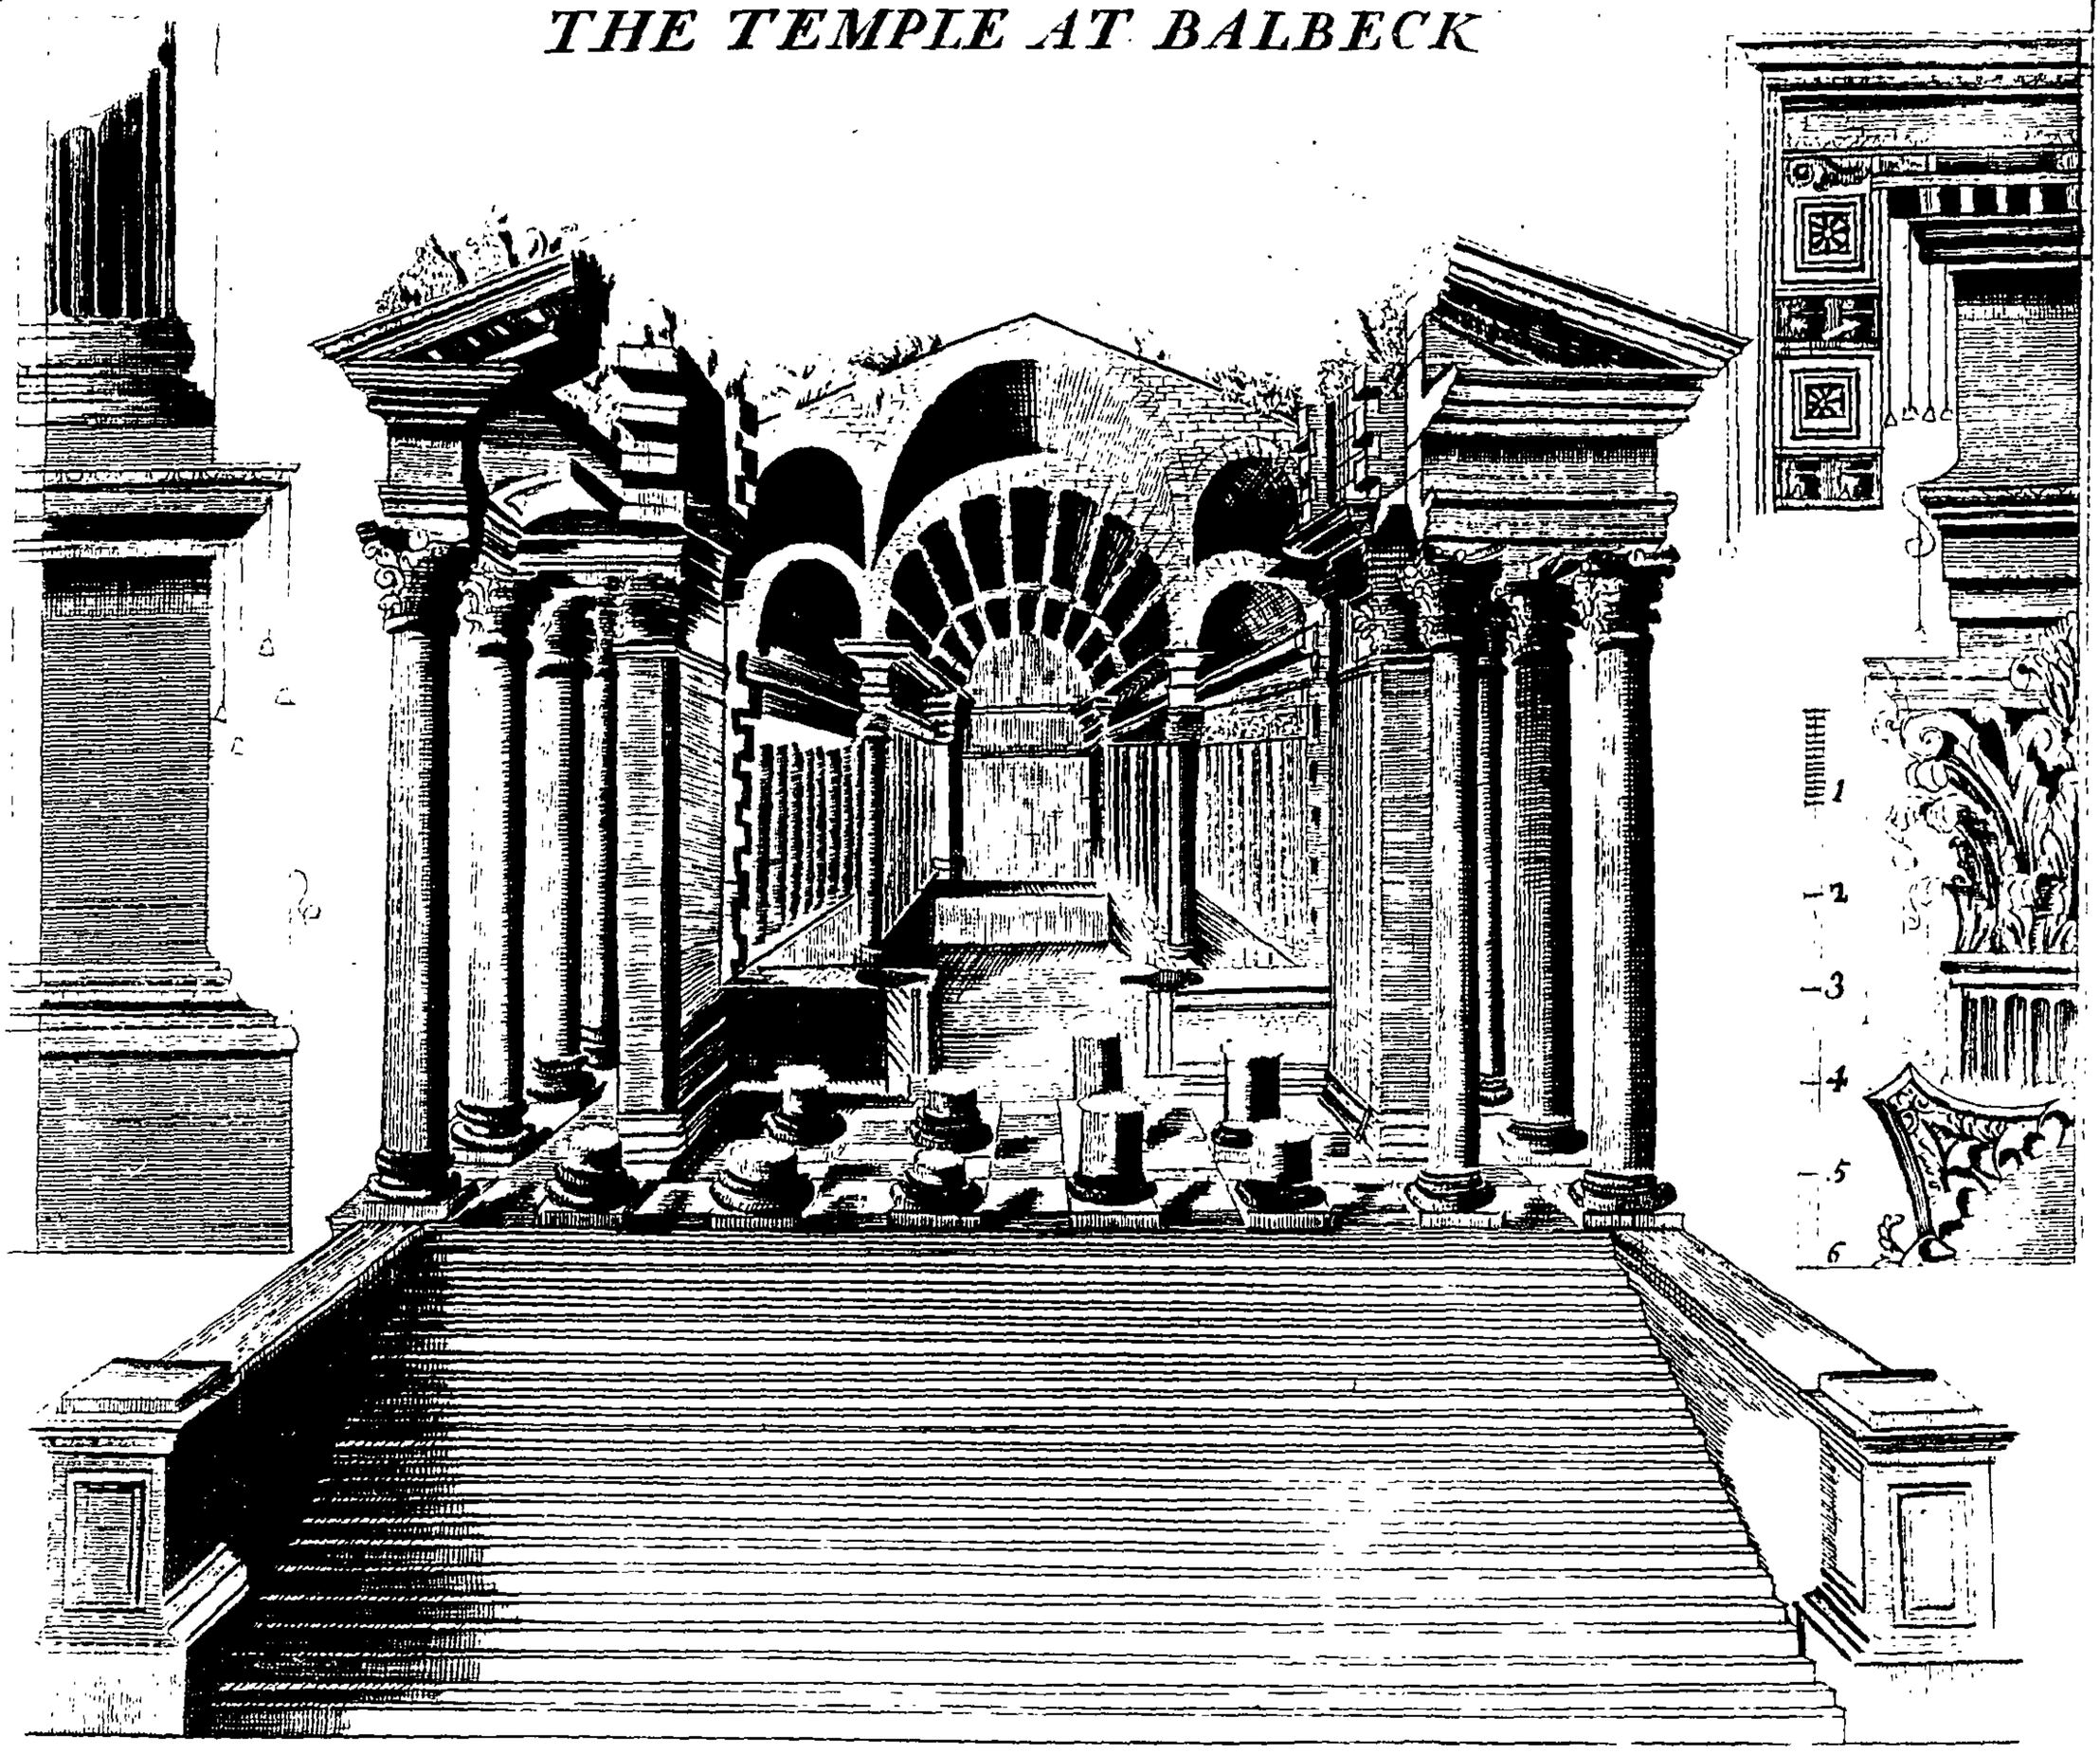
WITHIN the walls of this caſtle, as it is now called, are alſo great remains of what muſt have been a palace, ſcarce inferior to any royal ſeat, that has ever been in the world; but being by no means in ſo perfect a ſtate as the temple, we ſhall ſpeak of it in general terms, and inſiſt only on ſuch parts as deſerve our greateſt attention. But firſt of all it muſt be obſerved, that the old wall, which encloſed both this and the temple above deſcribed, is built of ſuch monſtrous blocks of ſtone, as exceed all belief, and have given birth to a tradition among the natives, that the whole is the work of the devil. There are particularly three, which lie end for end with each other, and which together extend one hundred eighty three foot in length, whereof one is ſixty three foot long, and the other two ſixty apiece. Their depth is twelve foot, and their breadth the ſame; and, what adds to the wonder, theſe

Stones of an incredible ſize.

[y] MAUNDRELL ubi ſupr. DE LA ROQUE ubi ſupr. p. 143.
[z] Idem ubi ſupr. p. 144, 145.
[a] Idem ubi ſupr. p. 149, 150.

ſtones are lifted twenty foot from the ground. The reſt of the ſtones of this wall are of ſurprizing dimenſions, but none quite ſo large as theſe [b].

The palace. GOING through the long arched walk, which we have already mentioned as leading to the temple, and which looks like a ſubterraneous paſſage, adorned with many buſts, which for want of light cannot well be diſcerned, the firſt object which ſtrikes the ſight is a ſpacious hexagonal building, or wall; which forms a kind of a ſpacious theatre, which is open at the other end, and preſents you with a terraſs, to which you aſcend by marble ſteps. This aperture admits you into a ſquare court, larger than the firſt, round which are buildings more magnificent than what you ſee till then. Here, on each hand, you have a double row of pillars, which form porticoes, or galleries, of ſixty ſix fathom in length, and eight in breadth. The bottom of this court was taken up by a third building, more ſumptuous than the reſt and deeper, and ſeems to have been the body of the palace, fronting eaſt, as all the fronts in this caſtle do. The columns belonging to this part are of ſuch ſize, that they are compared with thoſe of the hippodrome at Conſtantinople. Nine of theſe columns are ſtanding (L), and a good piece of the entablature, which evince it to have been one of the wonders of Aſia; and, to crown all, each of theſe nine pillars is but one block. Many conſiderable and diſtinct veſtiges of the ſeveral parts of this palace are ſtill extant. The Corinthian order prevails chiefly throughout the whole; and ſcarce is there any where to be found ſuch precious remains of architecture and ſculpture. The ornaments are various, but without any of the wild extravagancies of modern architects. The fine taſte of Greece, and the magnificence of Rome here meet; ſtatues without number, buſts of all ſorts, proud trophies, curiouſly-wrought niches, walls and cielings inriched with baſs relieves,



[b] MAUNDRELL ubi ſupr. p. 138. DE LA ROQUE ubi ſupr. p. 121.

(L) Maundrell remembers theſe pillars in the following words: About fifty yards diſtant from the temple, is a row of Corinthian pillars, very great and lofty; with a moſt ſtately architrave and corniſh at top. This ſpeaks itſelf to have been part of ſome very auguſt pile; but what one now ſees of it is but juſt enough to give a regret that there ſhould be no more of it remaining (14). He did not viſit the palace; not being prepared, we ſuppoſe, with the thoughts, that there had been any building of the kind there.

(14) Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſ. p. 137.

incruſtations,

THE TEMPLE AT BALBECK

D. Pomarede Sculpt

THE PROSPECT OF BALBECK

incruſtations, and other works of the fineſt marble; therms and caryatides judiciouſly placed. Underneath the whole are vaſt vaults; where from time to time you diſcover, through the ruins, long flights of marble ſtairs, near two hundred in a flight. The turn and elevation of theſe vaults are bold and ſurprizing: and in theſe ſubterraneous parts you find many rooms, halls, rich apartments entire, and many marble tombs. The walls here alſo are adorned with niches, baſs relieves, and inſcriptions in Roman characters; but theſe inſcriptions are quite effaced by the length of time and the damps. Some of theſe vaults are quite dark, and muſt be viſited with lights, either becauſe of their great depth, or becauſe the paſſages, which may have given them light, are ſtopped up by rubbiſh; but others receive light by great windows, which ſtand on the level of the ground above: and laſtly, all theſe edifices are built with ſtones of the enormous ſize already mentioned, without any viſible mortar, cement, or binding whatſoever[c]. The temple and theſe ruins ſtand in the ſame incloſure, as we have ſaid, and may challenge any monument of antiquity now extant, either at Athens, or Rome, or even in Egypt. All over and about the town you, at every ſtep, meet with ſome melancholy fragment of antiquity. The quarry from whence they had the ſtone for theſe works is a little way out of the town. It is cut out in ſteps ſomething like an amphitheatre, where there lies one ſtone ready hewn, which ſeems to ſurpaſs what have been already deſcribed. It is a notion, it was too heavy to be moved; but, upon a nice examination, it is faſt to the rock[d]. Such was Balbek, which might tempt one to think it to have been once the moſt conſiderable place in Syria, and the delight of ſome mighty prince, who there choſe to reſide (M).

BUT

[c] Idem ubi ſupr. p. 124—132. [d] Idem ubi ſupr. p. 151, 155.

(M) We flatter ourſelves, that no antiquary will, according to this deſcription of Balbek, allow Solomon to have had any hand in what we ſee there; and yet prince Radziville (15), who is, in the main, a very judicious traveller, thinks it paſt diſpute that it is the work of Solomon. He imagines it to be the houſe he built for Pharaoh's daughter, and that it moſt exactly anſwers the deſcription of that palace in the book of Kings (16), and indeed we cannot ſay there is no ſimilitude in the caſe. This he avers upon an accurate and diligent obſervation, as he tells us; and adds as a further (15) Peregrin. Jeroſolym. Epiſt. 2. p. 27. (16) 1 Kings vii. 8—13.

The ruins of Palmyra.

But the magnificent ruins of Palmyra ſeem equally to claim our admiration. We ſhall not here examine who was the original founder of this city, whether Solomon, or any other before him, nor will we endeavour to inveſtigate to whom we are indebted for what now ſtands of this deſolate and abandoned town. Such diſcuſſions will come more naturally in their proper places, as they may occur in the body of this work. Thus much, however, we may ſafely premiſe, that at Palmyra we ſee no remains, or next to none, of Solomon's Tadmor, this city having been more than once ſacked and demoliſhed ſince his time, as will appear, when we come to mention the viciſſitudes thereof.

Its names and ſituation.

Palmyra, by the Greeks and Romans, in the ſcripture, Tadmor in the wilderneſs, by Joſephus, Palmira, and Thadamor, by the ſeptuagint copies, Theodmor and Thedmor, and by the Arabs and Syrians at this day, Tadmor, Tadmur, and Tatmor, was once a noble city in the ſouth-eaſtern parts of Syria. The origin of theſe names is dark and uncertain (N). It ſtood on a fertile iſland, if we may ſo call it, ſurrounded proof of it, that the buildings have not ſuffered any violence, but are crumbled away and decayed by mere length of time. He muſt have minded theſe ruins in general; he cannot have deſcended to particulars; or he had never been ſo egregiouſly overſeen as he ſeems to have been.

(N) The author of the deſcription of Palmyra (17) calls it Palmira, which he derives from the palms about it, and ſuppoſes it to be the tranſlation of a Hebrew word, importing a palm. Halley (18) derives it from Πάλμυς Palmys, which Heſychius interprets a king or father, or from Παλμύτης, Palmytes, an Egyptian god, according to the ſame Heſychius. Seller (19) is of another mind, he cannot think of deriving it from Palmys, a king or father, or from Palmytes an Egyptian god: for what, ſays he, had the gods of Egypt to do ſo near the banks of Euphrates? He derives it therefore from Πάλμη, Palme, a Perſian ſhield, or Parma, as the Latins render it. This he ſupports with ſome authority, and a good deal of probability, rejecting the fantaſtic etymology of Malela (20), who will have it called Palmira, διὰ τὸ παλαι μοῖραν γενέσθαι τὴν κώμην τῶ Γολιάθ, becauſe David ſlew Goliath there, which few or none will be willing to allow. The etymology of Tadmor is ſtill darker, if poſſible; but, as dark as it is, we cannot forbear acquainting the learned and inquiſitive reader with the thoughts of Schultens, in his rounded on all ſides by a thirſty and barren deſert. The firſt object, that now occurs as you approach this forlorn place, is a caſtle of mean architecture and uncertain foundation, though impregnably ſituated, as we ſay, about half an hour from the city. This caſtle ſtands on the north ſide of the city, and from thence you deſcry Tadmor, incloſed on three ſides by long ridges of mountains; but to the ſouth is a vaſt plain, which ſtretches away out of ſight. The air is exceeding good; but the ſoil is barren (O), affording nothing green but a few palm trees in the gardens, and a few more ſcattered up and down. The city muſt have been of large extent by the ſpace now taken up by the ruins; but there are no veſtiges of the walls, whereby to judge of its antient form. It is now a deplorable ſpectacle to behold, being only inhabited by thirty or forty miſerable families, who have built them poor huts of dirt within a ſpacious court, which once encloſed a magnificent heathen temple.

(17) Philoſoph. Tranſact. Numb. 217. p. 85. (18) Ibid. Numb. 218. p. 161. (19) Hiſtory of Palmyra in the Appendix, p. 177. (20) Par. 1. p. 1 r. 11. p. 153.

geographica

To begin the deſcription here; this court, which ſtands about the ſouth end of the city, is two hundred and twenty The great court and temple.

geographical commentary (21), upon both the names Tadmor and Palmyra. He obſerves, that in the text it is written תמר Tamor, and in the magin תדמר Tadmor. Tamor he reckons to have become the uſual name of this place, for ſoftneſs ſake, and to refer to תמר Tamar the palm; with which in the next note this place will be ſeen to have abounded. He ſuppoſes alſo, that originally in Arabic they did not ſpell it تدمر Tadmor, but تطمر [תתמר] Tatmor, and thus he accordingly finds it in his Arabic geographical Lexicon; as if you ſhould ſay palmiferous, or palm-bearing, the T for ſound ſake being changed into D. The alteration of this name he aſcribes wholly to the Romans, who upon finding the place called Tadmor, or Tadmur, may at firſt have corrupted it into Talmura; but that ſoon after, underſtanding the city had its name from its palm-trees, they converted Talmura into Palmura, whence Palmyra.

(O) Not that it had always the ſame ſterile appearance. Abûlfeda, who, though he calls Tadmor a ſmall city in the deſert of Syria, yet places it in Arabia, writes, that Palmyrene, for the moſt part, abounded in ſalt; and that the palm and olive flouriſhed there; adding, that there are many great and noble ruins there to be ſeen. In him moreover we read, that it had perpetual ſprings, and yielded fruits and corn. Upon this occaſion it may not be amiſs to refer you back to what we have conjectured concerning the preſent ſterility of the land of Edom. (22).

(21) In vit. Salad. ad vocem Tadmora. (22) See before in the Notes, p. 126.

yards on each ſide, with a high and ſtately wall of large ſquare ſtone, adorned with pilaſters within and without, to the number, as near as could be judged, of ſixty two on a ſide. The beautiful corniſhes have been purpoſely beaten down by the Turks, who have thereby deprived the world of one of the fineſt works of the kind, that, perhaps, was ever ſeen, as here and there a fragment, which has eſcaped their fury, abundantly evinces. The weſt ſide of this court, by which you enter it, is moſt of it broken down; and towards the middle of it there are remains of an old caſtle, built by the Mamlúks, as is ſuppoſed, out of part of the ruins which are here in ſuch abundance. This caſtle ſhrouds the remains of an antient fabric of exquiſite beauty, as appears by what is ſtill ſtanding of its entrance, being two ſtones of thirty five foot in length, carved with vines and cluſters of grapes, exceeding bold and to the life. They are both in their right places, and by them it appears, that the door or gate was fifteen foot wide. in this great court were the remains of two rows of very noble marble pillars thirty ſeven foot high, with capitals of the fineſt carved work; and the corniſhes muſt have been of equal beauty, though quite deſtroyed by the relentleſs ſuperſtition of the Mohammedans. Of theſe pillars fifty eight are entire. They muſt have been many more in number; for, by what appears, they went quite round the court, and ſupported a moſt ſpacious double piazza, or cloiſter. The walks on the weſt ſide of this piazza, which face the front of the temple, ſeem to have been the moſt ſpacious and ſtately of all; and at each end of it are two niches for ſtatues at their full length, with their pedeſtals, borders, ſupporters, and canopies, carved with the greateſt artifice and curioſity. The ſpace within this once beautiful incloſure is conceived to have been an open court, as we have already called it, in the midſt of which ſtands the temple, incompaſſed with another row of pillars of a different order, and far exceeding the former in dimenſions, being fifty foot high. Of theſe, ſixteen are now ſtanding; but there muſt have been about double that number, which, whether they formed an inner court, or ſupported the roof of a cloiſter, is utterly uncertain. One great ſtone lies down, which ſeems to have reached from theſe pillars to the walls of the temple; ſo that the latter conjecture may naturally enough take place. The whole ſpace contained within theſe pillars is one hundred and ſeventy ſeven foot in length, and in breadth eighty four. In the midſt of this ſpace is the temple, extending ninety nine foot in length, and in breadth, about forty. It has a ſumptuous entrance on the weſt, exactly in the middle of the

the building, and, by what remains, ſeems to have been one of the moſt glorious edifices in the world. You here ſee vines and cluſters of grapes executed to the life; and over the door you can juſt trace out a ſpread eagle, as at Balbek, which takes up the whole width; with ſome angels, or cupids, accompanying it on the ſame ſtone, and ſeveral eagles are ſeen upon ſtones that are fallen down. Nothing of this temple is ſtanding but the walls, in which it is obſervable, that the windows, though not large, are narrower at top than at bottom, but mightily enriched with ſculpture. It has been aukwardly patched up to ſerve for a moſque, all but the north end, where are very precious reliques; which, whether they were in the nature of canopies over altars, or to what uſe elſe they ſerved, is not eaſy to conjecture. They are beautified with the moſt curious fret-work and ſculpture; in the midſt of which is a dome, or cupola, ſix foot diameter, all of one piece; but whether they are hewn out of the ſolid rock, or moulded of fine cement, or compoſition, is made a doubt.

Promiſcuous ruins.

LEAVING this court and temple your eyes are accoſted with an amazing ſight of marble pillars, ſcattered up and down for the ſpace of near a mile of ground; but in ſuch lamentable confuſion, that there is no room to gueſs for what ends they were framed. But, to paſs by the ruins of a moſque, as not worth our obſervation, and not bewilder your eye with the ſad confuſion which here preſents itſelf, we will proceed to particulars as they occur after, or correſpond with each other.

Obeliſk and two pillars.

ADVANCING towards the north, as you leave the temple, you have a tall and ſtately obeliſk, or pillar, before you, conſiſting of ſeven large ſtones, beſides its capital. It has a wreathed work about it; the ſculpture here, as every where elſe, extremely fine. It exceeds fifty foot in height, is twelve foot and a half in compaſs juſt above the pedeſtal, and a ſtatue is conceived to have once ſtood upon it. On the eaſt and weſt of this, at the diſtance of a quarter of a mile, is a large pillar, which ſeem to have correſponded with each other. And there is a piece of another near to the eaſtern pillar, which looks as if there had been once a continued row of them. The height of this eaſtern pillar, as taken by a quadrant, is above forty foot. Its circumference is proportionable, and on the body of it is a Greek inſcription in commemoration of two patriots, by a grateful order of the ſenate and people, which, with the others of the ſame and other kinds, we may hereafter meet with, we ſhall paſs over for the preſent, that we may not break in upon the thread of this deſcription, deſcription. The weſtern pillar has another inſcription of the like ſort; but not quite ſo perfect as the former.

The great piazza. PROCEEDING on from the obeliſk, or pillar, laſt mentioned, at the diſtance of one hundred paces, is a magnificent entrance, vaſtly large and lofty, and for workmanſhip nothing inferior to any piece hitherto deſcribed; but unhappily it has ſuffered the ſame fate with the reſt. This entrance leads into a noble piazza, above half a mile long and forty foot broad, formed by two rows of ſtately marble pillars twenty ſix foot high, and eight or nine about. Of theſe pillars one hundred and twenty nine are ſtanding; but by a moderate calculation, they cannot have been fewer at firſt, than five hundred and ſixty. Covering over them there is none remaining, nor pavement beneath, that can be ſeen. Upon moſt of theſe pillars are inſcriptions in Greek and Palmyrene characters; ſo that it ſeems to have been a much frequented, and the moſt conſpicuous part of the city, and moſt proper for the daily and honourable commemoration of ſuch as had deſerved well of their fellow-citizens, or friends and relations. And, as if inſcriptions were not ſufficient, it ſeems, as if here they fixed the ſtatues alſo of the perſons celebrated; there being pedeſtals jetting out from theſe pillars, ſometimes one way, and ſometimes more, whereon muſt have ſtood ſtatues, which have long ago fallen victims to the furious and barbarous zeal of the Mohammedans; and upon theſe pedeſtals are inſcriptions, even when none are on the pillar they belong to, and ſometimes even when there are. The upper end of this ſpacious piazza was ſhut in by a row of pillars, ſtanding cloſer together than thoſe on each ſide, and perhaps Banqueting-houſe. a banquetting-houſe ſtood upon them, though no ſign of it be ſpared. But on the left hand, a little farther, appear the ruins of a very ſtately pile, which may have been of ſuch a kind; of finer marble than is obſerved in the piazza, and with an air of delicacy throughout the whole, far ſurpaſſing what is obſerved in the piazza itſelf. The pillars, which ſupported this laſt pile, are all of one ſtone, twenty two foot long, and eight foot nine inches round. Among theſe ruins is found the only Latin inſcription that was ſeen in this place.

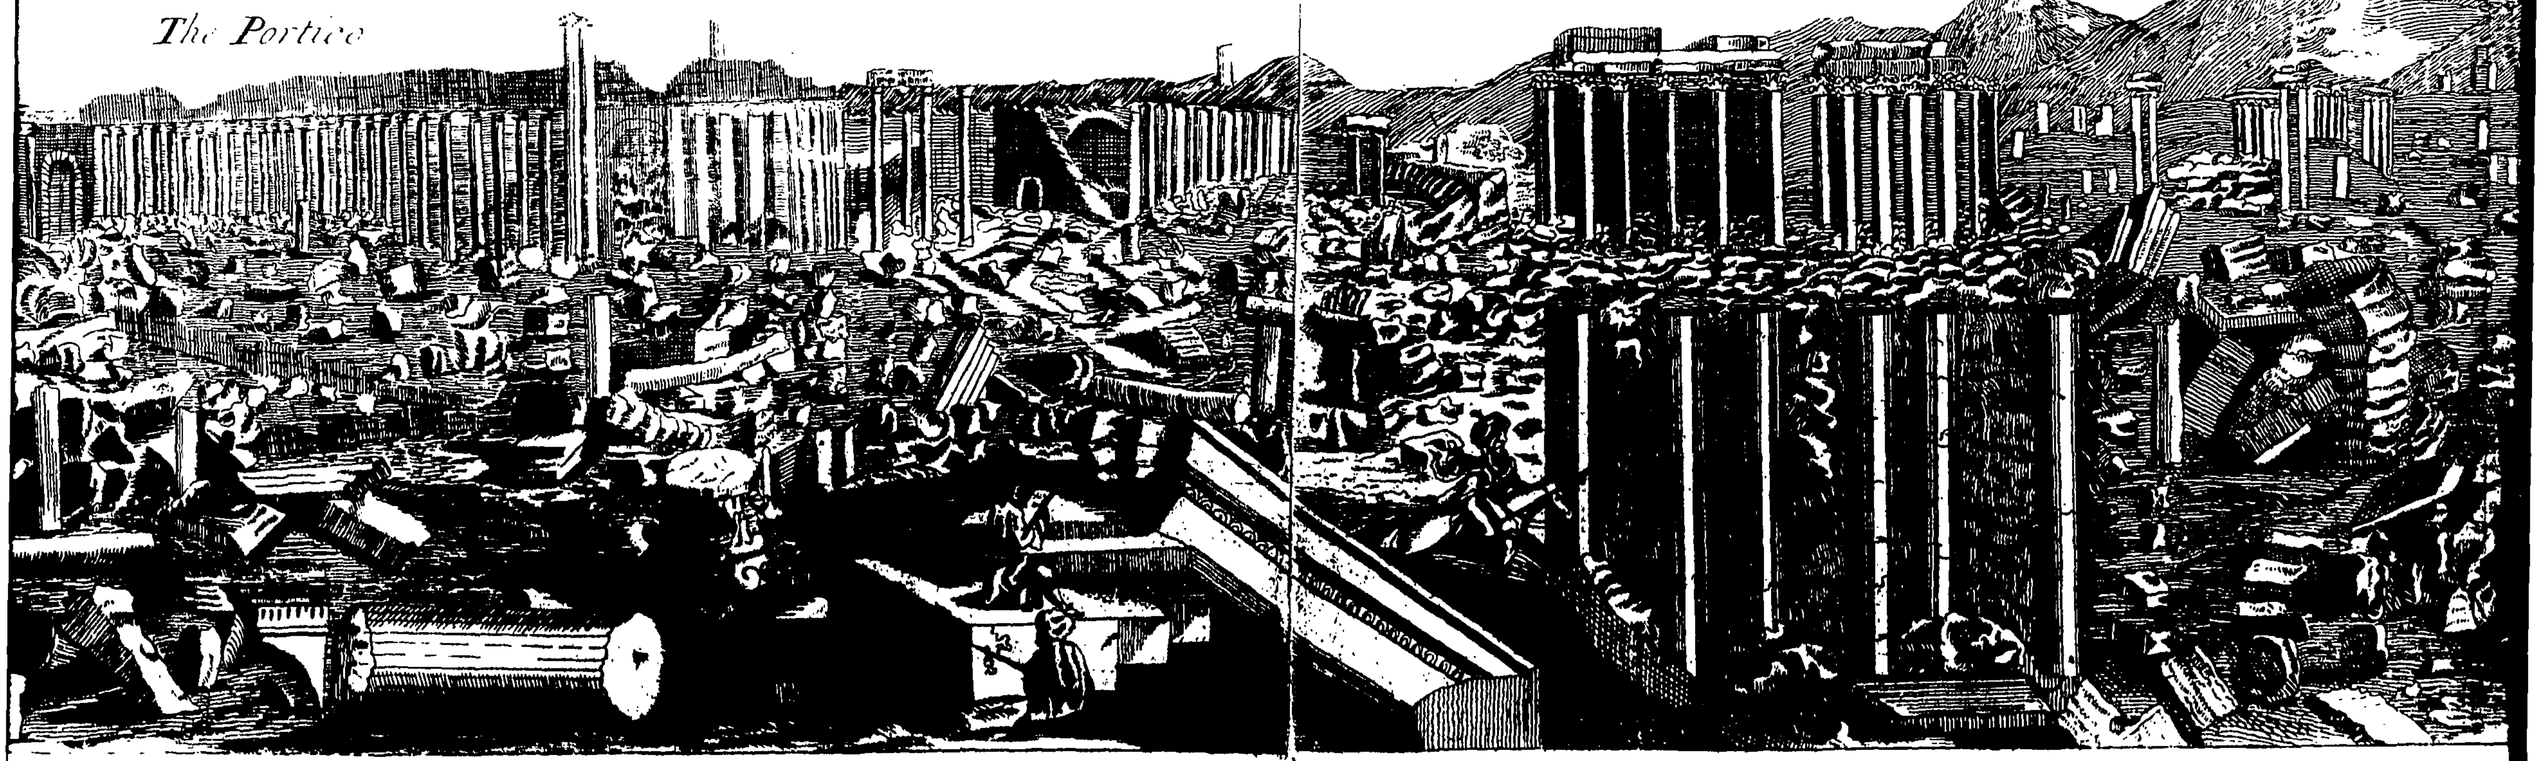
Porphyry pillars and palace. IN the weſt ſide of the above piazza are ſeveral openings, ſuppoſed to have been for gates, which led into the court of the palace. Two of theſe gates look as if they had been the moſt magnificent and glorious in the world, both for the elegance of the work in general, and for the ſtately porphyry pillars, wherewith they were adorned. Each gate had four, not ſtanding in a line with thoſe of the wall, but placed

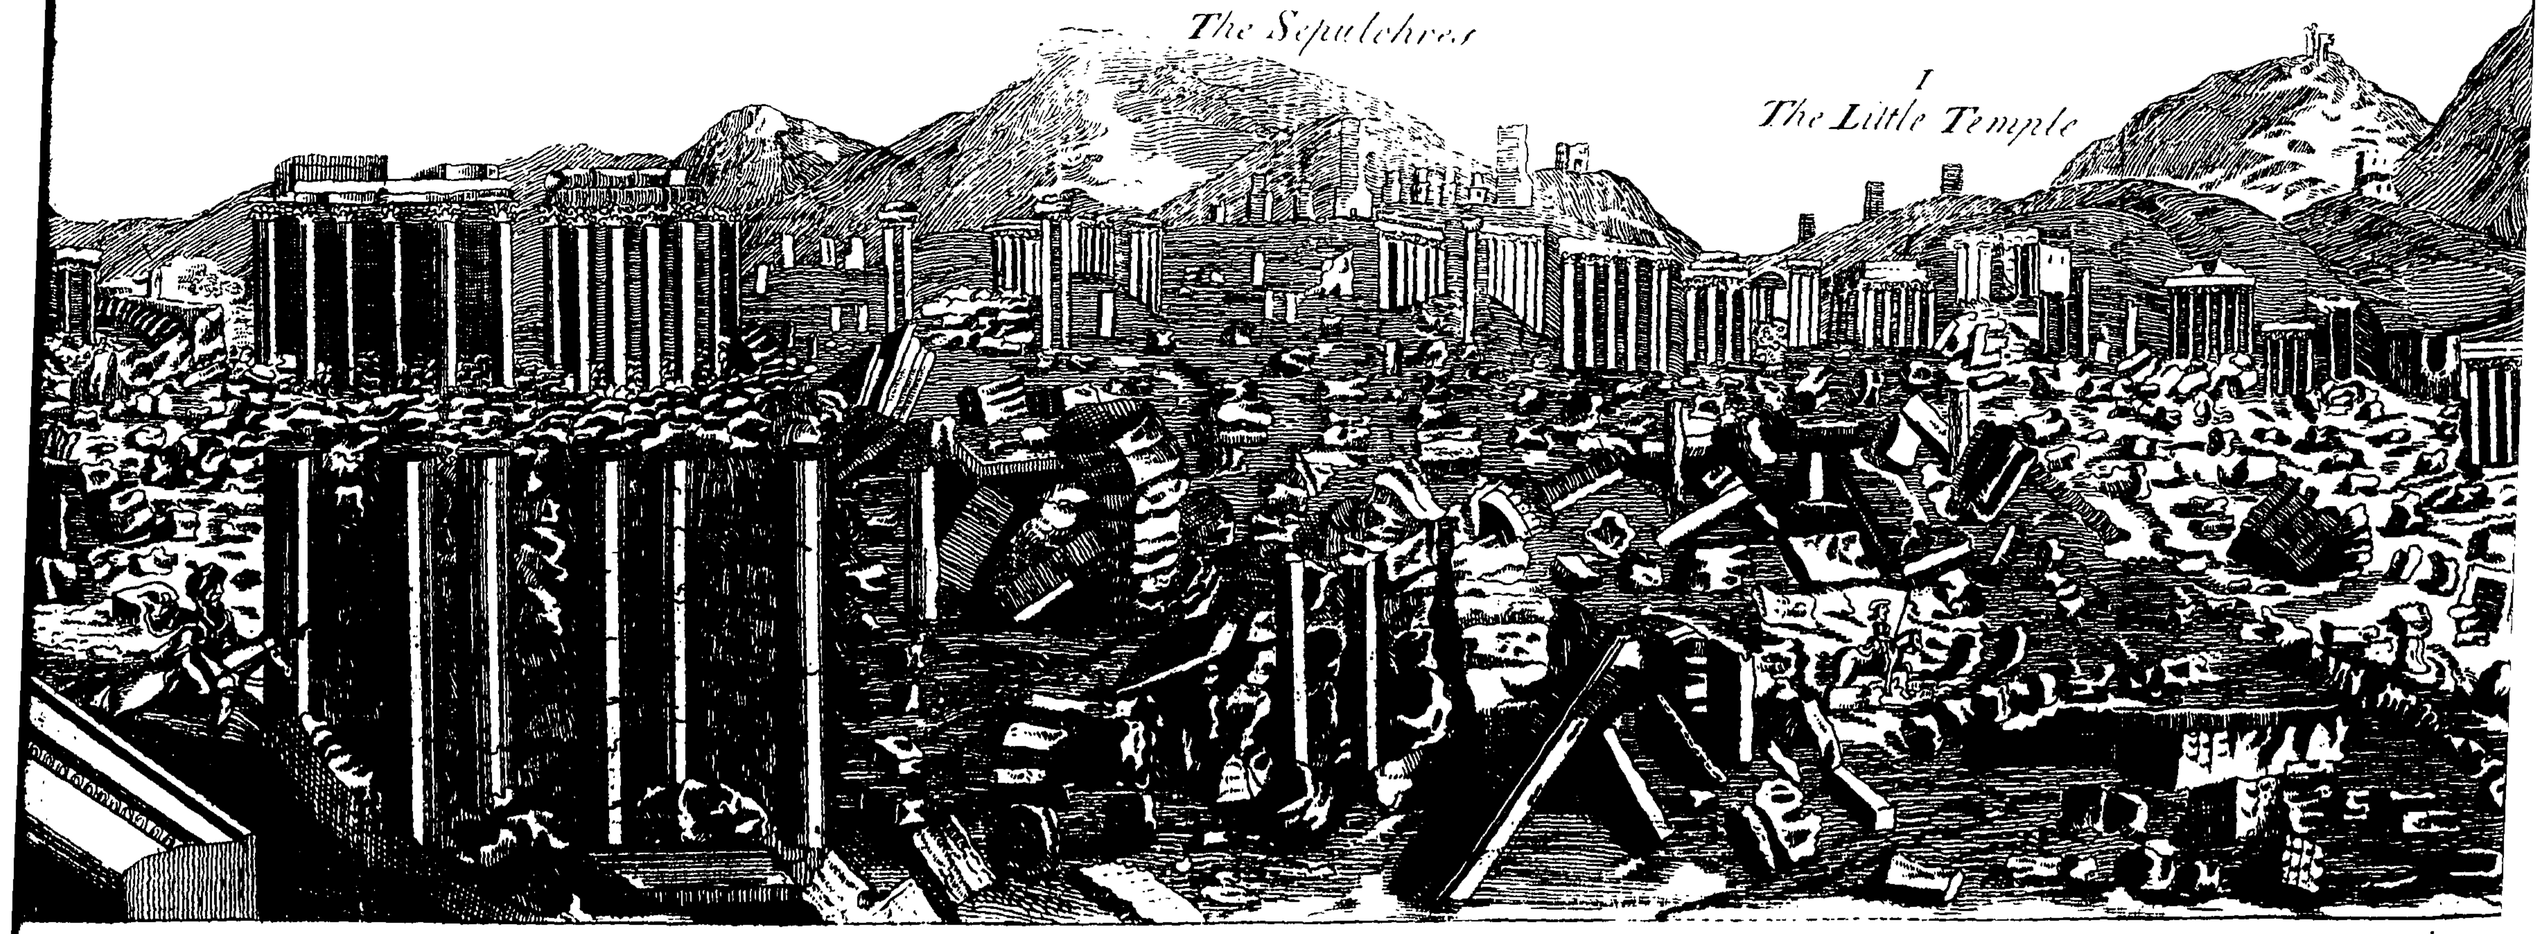
A View of the Ruins of Palm

The Temple now ordered

Porphyry Pillars

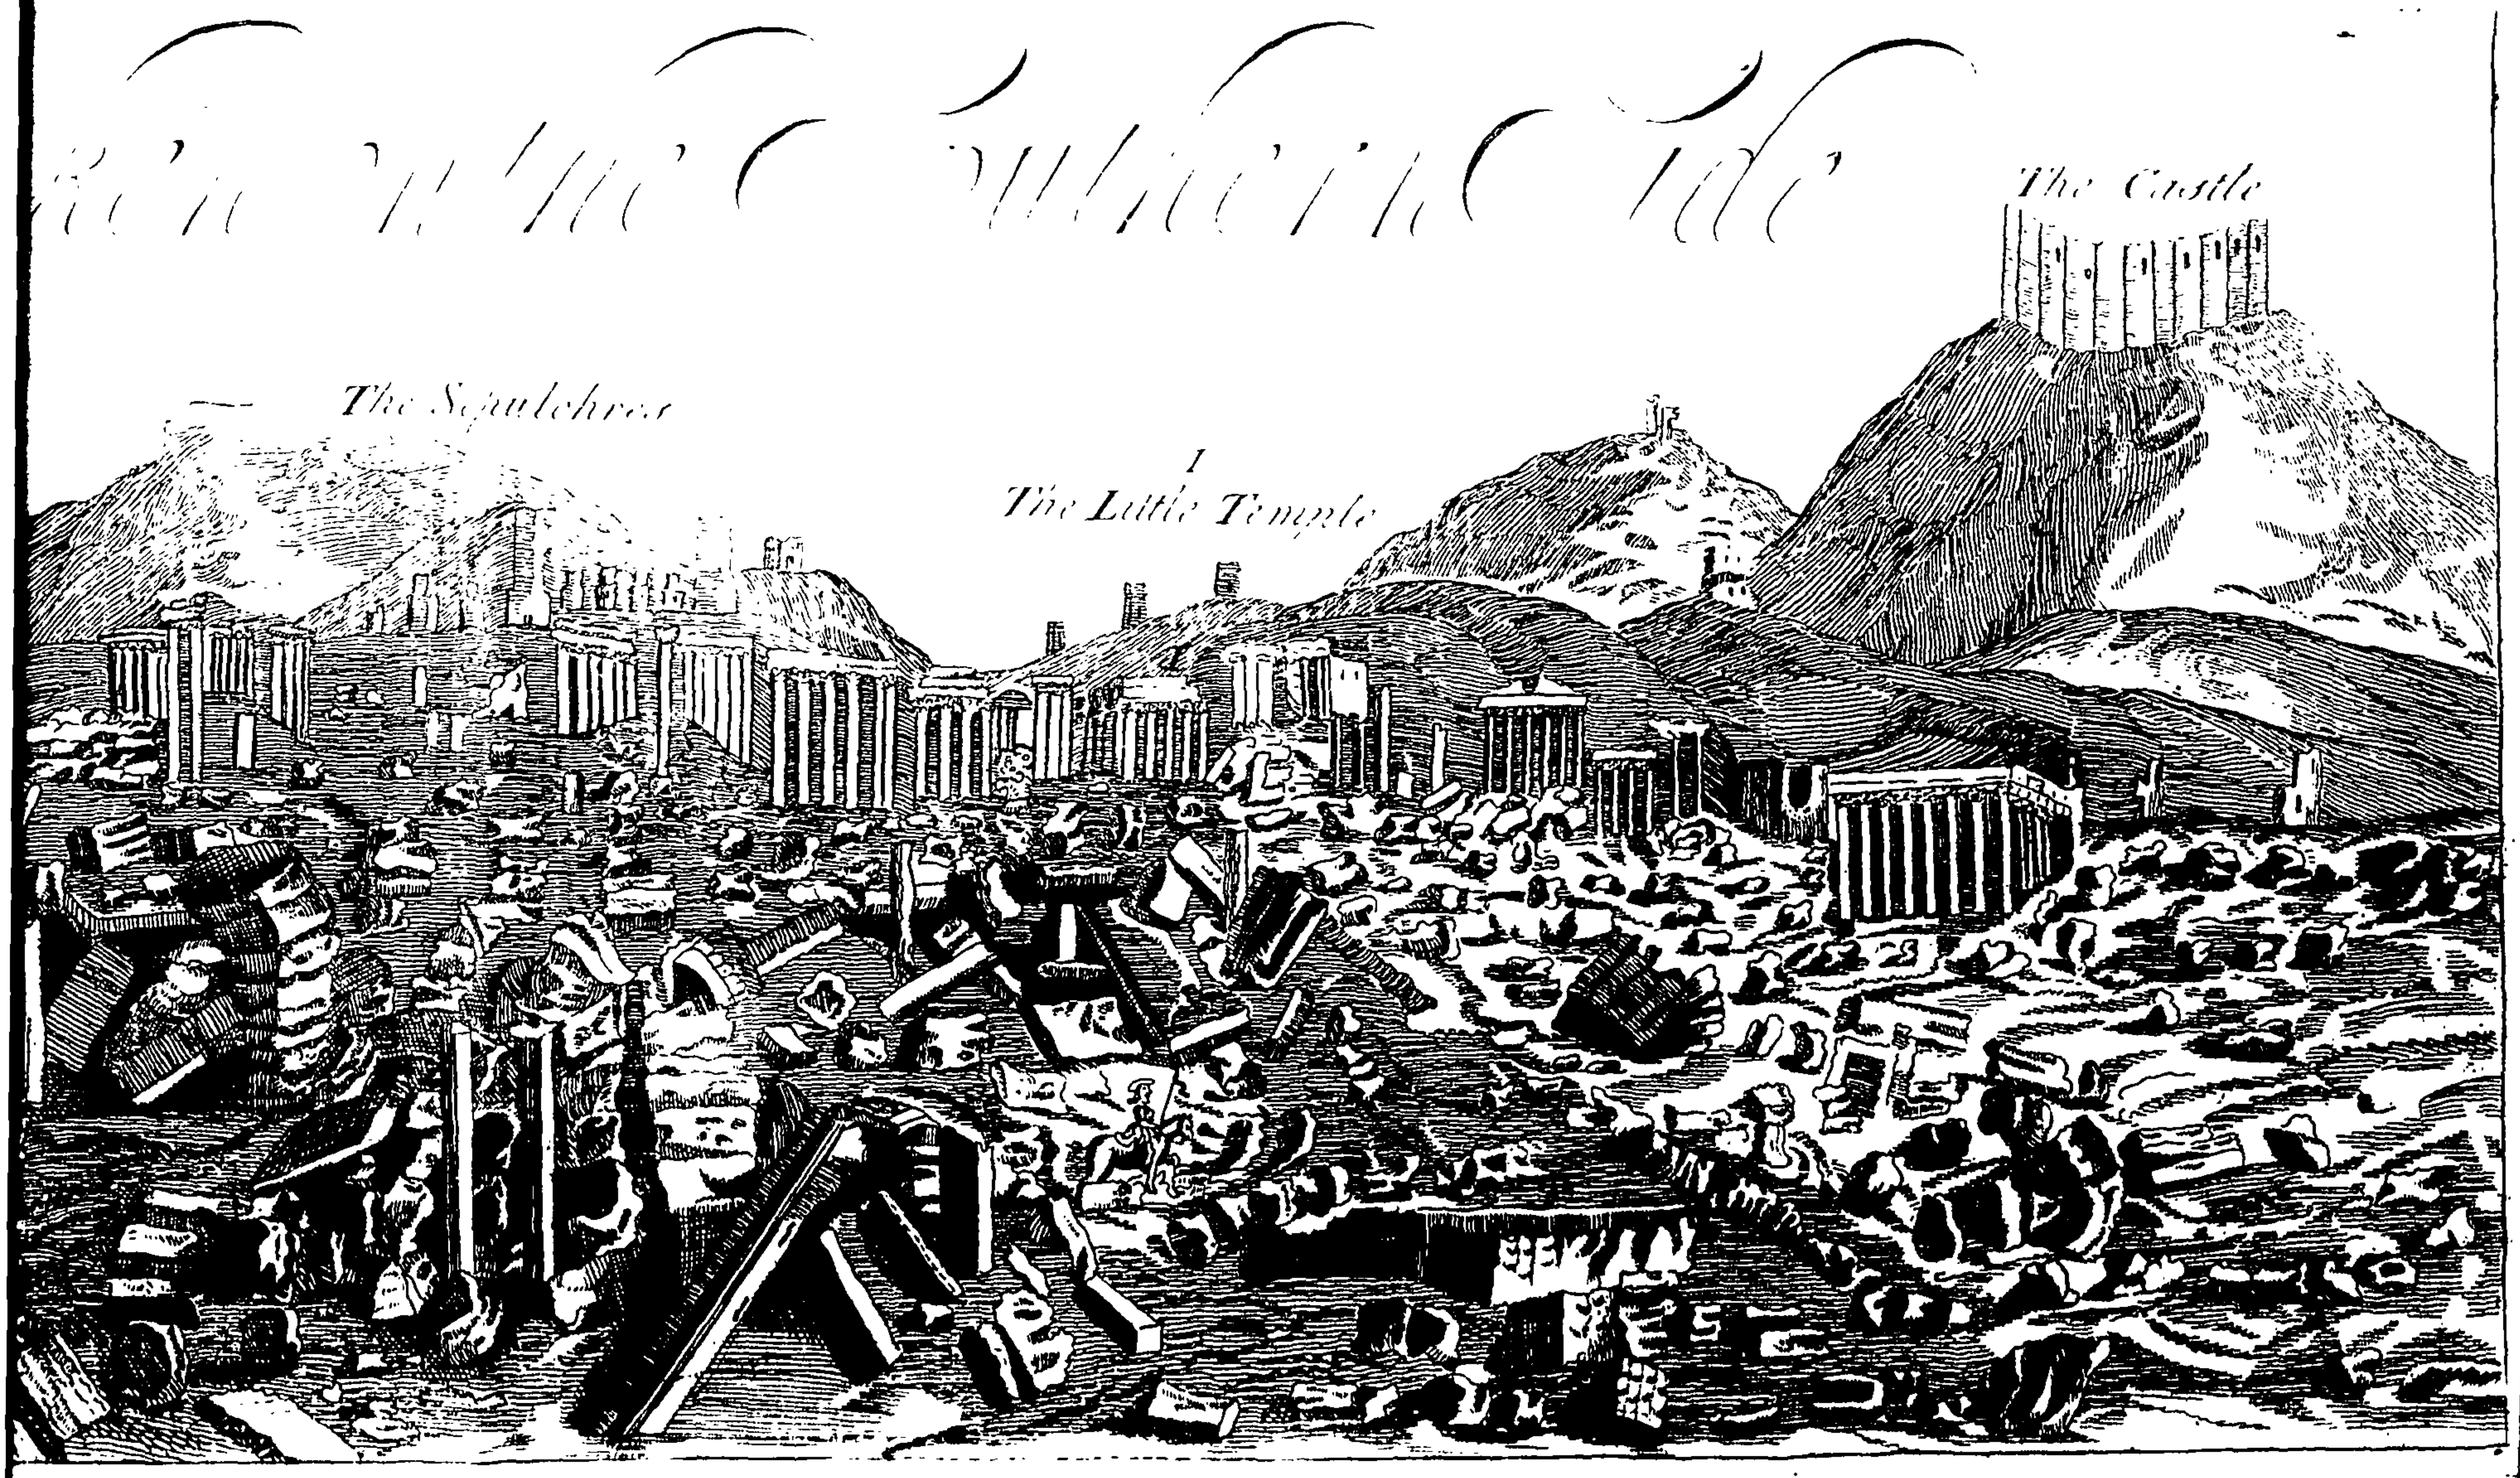


The Portico



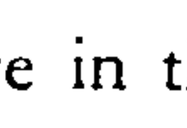
of Palmyra alias Tadmor taken in

The Portico



The Se

Tadmor in the Wilderness



The Temple of Vesta & the Castle

placed by couples in the front of the gate, facing the palace, two on the one hand, and two on the other. Of theſe porphyry pillars, there are but two entire, and but one of them ſtanding in its proper place. They are about thirty foot in length, and nine in circumference, and of ſo very hard a conſiſtence (P) that it is a very difficult matter to injure them. Theſe, of all the pieces of porphyry here found, are the moſt beautiful. The palace itſelf is ſo completely demoliſhed, that there is no forming a judgment of what it has been, either for majeſty or ornament. It plainly appears to have been thrown down by violence, which, together with the length of time, has quite defaced and obliterated this once noble pile, there being only a broken piece of its walls left ſtanding here and there. But, it is very likely, that it fronted the famous piazza before-mentioned, and that it was ſurrounded with rows of pillars of different orders, many of which are ſtill ſtanding, ſome plain, and ſome wrought and channelled, as thoſe immediately encompaſſing the temple. To theſe pillars alſo there are pedeſtals with inſcriptions on them.

Great numbers of marble pillars.

ON the eaſt ſide of this ſame piazza is, if the expreſſion may be uſed, a wood of marble pillars, ſome perfect, ſome deprived of their beautiful capitals, but ſo ſcattered and confuſed, that there is no reducing them to order, or conjecturing to what uſe they formerly ſerved. In one place are eleven together, forming a ſquare in this diſpoſition, paved at the bottom with broad flat ſtone, but without any manner of roof.

The little temple.

AT a little diſtance from hence, is a ſmall ruined temple, which, by what remains of it, muſt have been a very curious piece. The entrance into this temple looks to the ſouth, and before it is a piazza of ſix pillars, two on one hand of the door, and two on the other, and one at each end. The pedeſtals of thoſe in the front have been filled up with inſcriptions, both in Greek and the other characters, but ſcarce intelligible.

The ſepulchres.

BUT of all the venerable remains of this deſolate place, none more attract the admiration of the curious, than their coſtly ſepulchres, which are ſquare towers, four or five ſtories high, ſtanding on each ſide of a hollow way, towards the north end of the city. They extend a mile, and may antiently have extended farther. At a diſtance they look like the ſteeples of decayed churches, or the baſtions of a ruined fortification. Many of them, though built of marble, have proved faithleſs to their charge; having ſunk under the weight of years, or ſubmitted to the inexorable malice of violent hands. They are all of one form, but of different ſize, in proportion to the fortune of the founder. In the ruins of one of them, that was entirely marble, were found the pieces of two ſtatues, the one of a man, the other of a woman, in a ſitting, or rather leaning, poſture. By theſe it is diſcovered, that their habit was very noble, rather agreeing with the European than the preſent eaſtern faſhions; whence they are conjectured to have been Romans. Of all theſe ſepulchres, there are two, which ſeem to be more entire than the reſt. They are ſquare towers, five ſtories high, their outſides of common ſtone, but their partitions and floors within, of good marble. They are beautified with very lively carvings and paintings, and figures both of men and women, as far as the breaſt and ſhoulders, but miſerably defaced. Under them, or on one ſide, are Palmyrenean characters, which are thought to be the names of the perſons there depoſited. To judge of the conſtruction of the reſt of theſe ſepulchres, by what is obſerved in one of them; they had a walk quite a-croſs them from north to ſouth, exactly in the middle, by which they entered. The vault below, was divided in the ſame manner, and the diviſion on each hand ſubdivided by thick walls into ſix, or more or leſs, partitions, each big enough to receive the largeſt corpſe, and deep enough to contain at leaſt ſix or ſeven piled one upon another. In the loweſt, ſecond, and third ſtories, theſe partitions were the ſame, excepting that the ſecond had a partition anſwering to the main entrance, for the convenience of a ſtair-caſe. Higher up this method was diſcontinued; becauſe the building growing narrower towards the top, could no longer admit of it. In the two uppermoſt rooms, it is likely that no bodies were depoſited, except that of the founder himſelf, whoſe ſtatue, wrapt up in funeral apparel, and in a lying poſture, is placed in a nich, or rather window, in the front of the monument, ſo as to be viſible both within and without. Here is a Greek epitaph [t].

(P) This our author ſays, ſuppoſing porphyry to be factitious, which is diſputed.

the

Such were once the magnificent abodes, and ſuch the noble ſepulchres of the Palmyrenians; enough to evince, that the world never ſaw a more glorious city; the pride, it is likely of antient times, and the reproach of our own: a city, not more remarkable for the ſtate of her buildings and unwontedneſs of her ſituation, than for the extraordinary perſonages ſonages who once flouriſhed here, among whom the renowned Zenobia and the incomparable Longinus, muſt for ever be remembered, with admiration and regret.

[t] Philoſophical Tranſactions, Numb. 217.

SECT. II.

Of the Antiquity, Government, Laws, Religion, Cuſtoms, Arts, Learning, and Trade of the antient Syrians.

Antiquity.

THE antient Syrians, or Aramites (A), ſcarce ſubmitted to any other nation under the ſun, in point of antiquity, being the firſt that inhabited the fertile and well ſituated region of their abode after the general deluge as we have already obſerved [a]. This is indiſputably the caſe, and therefore there may be no need of expatiating thereon. But the poſterity of Shem by Aram, did not poſſeſs this country wholly to themſelves; their relations of Canaan's line, being ſtraitened for want of room in the places where they ſettled at firſt, encroached upon them by degrees, and ſeized on a portion of their lot, and kept the ſame, till one common deſtruction and captivation involved them both. To uſe many words in proof of this twofold deſcent of the Syrians, from the righteous line of Shem, and the unrighteous line of Ham, is needleſs, ſince we find a very noted portion of the country of Aram, or Syria, denominated from Hamathi, one of the eleven ſons of Canaan, who may have even ſettled here in perſon. The ſame we might here ſay of the Arkite, the Sinite, Zemarite, and the Arvadite, though indeed we have not ſuch poſitive aſſurances thereof, as of what we ſay of the Hamathite. We can only deliver it as our opinion, that theſe Canaanite families did moſt, if not all of them, fix their abode in Syria (B). But whether the country was more or

[a] See Vol. I. p. 362.

(A) This name was not wholly unknown to the Greeks. Strabo calls them Aramæi; for thoſe, ſays he (1), whom we call Syrians, call themſelves Aramæans. Hence, the Arami, Arimi, and Erembi, and the like names.

(B) The Arabs have a tradition there were Canaanites very antiently in Syria, for they talk of Dimaſhc (2) the ſon of Canaan, who built the famous city of Damaſcus (3).

(1) Geograph. l. i. p. 42. (2) Vide Schultens, Comment. Geograph. in vit. Salad. ad vocem Damaſcus. (3) See Vol. I. p. 362.

leſs

bode in Syria (B). But whether the country was more or leſs divided between the Aramites and Canaanites, we forbear to enquire into, ſince we have little or no authority to build upon. The antient Syrians then were partly deſcended from Ham, and partly from Shem, and both of nearly equal ſtanding in this country, and very little behind any nation in antiquity; but, if we believe a tradition current among the preſent inhabitants, it muſt be called the oldeſt country in the world (C).

Government.

That they were antiently governed by heads of families, called kings, and that there were great numbers of them in the country, is certain; and that they continued under the ſame government, in part, even to the days of Saul, is plain by the kings of Zobah [b]; and by the petty kings in Meſopotamia, who were ſummoned to attend Ben-hadad in his wars, no fewer than thirty two. Seeing therefore, that this moſt ſimple and natural form of government, obtained in Canaan on the one hand of them, and in Meſopotamia on the other, and that even we find veſtiges of the ſame in Syria itſelf, down to the days of Saul, we cannot doubt, but that they were at firſt divided into many ſmall kingdoms. Not that this was the only form that ſeems to have taken place; for as Gibeon in Canaan, in the days of Joſhua, ſeems to have been a commonwealth among the many kingdoms there; ſo Damaſcus in Syria ſeems to have been the ſame in David's time. What we have to offer in ſupport of this opinion, is not indiſputably clear; but Damaſcus is ſpoken of as without a chief, and as if the power was wholly in the people, in David's time. It is ſaid, that the Syrians of Damaſcus [c], not their king, ſent an army of upwards of twenty thouſand to

[b] See 1 Sam. xiv 47. [c] 2 Sam. viii. 5. 6.

(C) for here they particularly pretend that Adam was formed (4), and that Cain ſlew Abel * ; both which places they ſhew to travellers that viſit Damaſcus, for they are in the neighbourhood of that city (5). To which Radziville adds, that hollow groans are ſometimes heard under ground, in teſtimony of the innocent Abel, as they told him; that the place is held in deep veneration, and indued with a miraculous power of healing ſuch as labour under any violent diſeaſe, if they but lie down naked thereon, reſtoring them immediately to their priſtine health.

(4) See Thevenot, Maundrell, &c.
(5) Peregrin. Jeroſolym. epiſt. ii. p. 30.

* See Vol. I. p. 148, (N)

the

the relief of Hadadezer king of Zobah, which ſéems to imply, as if they were ſomething like what we call a republic. The foundation and nature of the kingdom of Zobah, we pretend not to ſpeak of; but that of Damaſcus, which roſe upon its ruins, as Zobah did upon the ſubverſion of the ſmaller principalities, ſeems to have been of the tyrannical and arbitrary kind. The kingdom of Damaſcus was eſtabliſhed in violence by a ſtrong hand, and the conſtitutions thereof muſt, one would think, have been of a piece with its foundation; haughty, uncontrou lable, and ambitious to ſubdue its neighbours; and in truth, it roſe to the univerſal monarchy of all the parts on both ſides of the Euphrates under Hazael, as will be ſhewn in its due place. This may be ſaid of the kingdom of Damaſcus, which ſupported itſelf with various fortune, till Syria changed both inhabitants and maſters, which it did upon the firſt riſe, as it were, of the Aſſyrian power.

Their laws.

WE have no ſyſtem of their laws, and ſcarce wherewithal to form any particular idea of them, but we are not ſo much at a loſs for what concerns their religion.

Their religion.

THE antient ſtate of their religion, indeed, we are wholly at a loſs for, nor will we dwell on the obſcurities thereto relating. It is certain they had many idols among them of very antient repute; among the reſt Rimmon (D) may be reckoned, whoſe temple ſtood at Damaſcus: He ſeems to have been, at leaſt, the principal god of Damaſcene, which is all we ſhall venture to ſay concerning him.

THIS antient god in time gave way to another; for the Syrians deifying their king Ben-hadad II, under the ſtile of Adad, or Ader [d], he was conſidered as their moſt glorious and auſpicious god (E). This fancied god, and others

[d] JOSEPH Antiq. l. ix. c. 2.

(D) This name, in the language of the Old Teſtament, ſignifies a pomegranate: whence this deity, whether god or goddeſs, is thought to have born ſome relation to Venus. Selden (6) is moſt inclined to derive it from רום rum, high, or lofty. We forbear to ſpeak of Gad, and refer you to this laſt author. The Syrians had a deity alſo, called Babia, a goddeſs from whom the children and young people were called Babias (7). They may have eſteemed them under her tutelage, and our Engliſh word, babes, ſays one (8), may thence have been borrowed.

(E) Adad is called alſo Adod the king of the gods (9), and Adad is interpreted One (10); and where we have this interpretation we

(6) Vide Selden de Di. Syr. Syntag. ii. c. 10. (7) Damaſc. vit. Iſidor. apud Pho. c. cxlii. (8) Purchas's Pilgrim, Book I ch. xx. at the end. (9) Sanchon apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel lib. i. p. 39. (10) Macrob. Saturnal. l. 1. c. 18

are

thers of the ſame ſtamp that may have ſucceeded him, flouriſhed as long, we may ſafely ſuppoſe, as the antient Syrians poſſeſſed this their ſeat, or were maſters thereof. But both they themſelves and their gods, in great meaſure, ſubmitted to fate, when Syria was conquered and tranſplanted by Tiglath-pileſer.

Hereupon the religion of the country may, without ſtraining the point, be ſaid to have changed face; a new idolatry was introduced, or many additions to the old were brought in, by the new inhabitants, who were ſent hither by the Aſſyrian; and now the religion of Aſſyria prevailed chiefly all over the country. That this is true, will be pretty evident from ſome arguments you will find in our chronology of Aſſyria. What changes and alterations this ſyſtem ſuffered under the Babylonians firſt, and the Perſians afterwards, and laſtly under the Seleucidæ and Romans, we cannot preſume to are told, he was their greateſt god. Selden (11) and Iſaac Voſſius (12), are very nice in deducing the true import of this name, which we ſhall for this once paſs over becauſe it appears to us, that according to the ſcripture orthography, it ought to be ſpelt Hadad, as is plain from Joſephus (13), who, in ſpeaking of the ſcripture kings of Syria, calls them Adad or Ader; and particularly writing of the great Ben-hadad, the ſecond of that name in ſcripture, he tells us he was deified or honoured with divine worſhip, as was alſo his ſucceſſor Hazael. Here we have the firſt account of their deifying of Adad, or, as the ſcripture ſtiles him, Ben-hadad, who, if we except his ſucceſſor Hazael, was the greateſt prince the antient Syrians can boaſt of; and we are clearly of opinion, that this great god Hadad or Adad, is no other than the deified Ben-hadad; and from thence it appears, that there were Syriam princes of the name of Adad, before they had any god ſo called. By Adad they meant the ſun, and pictured him with rays darting downwards, to expreſs his beneficence, and to ſhew that the chief influence of the heavens is in the beams of the ſun (14). This high compliment might have ſuited better with Hazael, whoſe reign was a continued ſeries of proſperity, than with Ben-hadad, who was ſeveral times unfortunate; but as Joſephus tells us, they were both deified, and as Adad, or Hadad, was a name common to all the kings of Syria, as appears both by ſcripture and Nicolas of Damaſcus (15), it may have been the Hazael of ſcripture, who was ſo highly revered.

(11) Ubi ſupr. Syntag. 1. c. 6. (12) De Idololatria, l. 1. c. 22. (13) Antiq. l. ix. c. 2. (14) Macrob. Saturnal. ubi ſupr. (15) Apud Joſeph. Antiq. l. vii. c. 6.

ſay; but ſuch as it was, in the ſecond century of the chriſtian æra, we ſhall borrow from Lucian, who was an eye-witneſs of what he ſays for the moſt part, and the reſt he received from the prieſts.

AT Hierapolis, or the holy city, or Magog, as the Syrians themſelves are ſaid [e] to have called it, in the province of Cyrrheſtica, ſtood the temple of the great Syrian goddeſs (F). It was upon an eminence in the midſt of the city, ſurrounded by a double incloſure or two walls, the one old, the other new. At the north ſide it had a court, or porch, before it, of about five or ſix hundred foot in circumference, where ſtood the priaps, of three hundred fathom, or three hundred cubits high; for we find both theſe meaſures, but both exceedingly too large, to our apprehenſion. Theſe obſcene images, or rather columns, were but ſlender, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter; but by whom, or to whom, they were erected, was the ſubject of much fable. The front of the temple itſelf ſtood eaſt, and before it was a tower raiſed upon a terraſs, about twelve foot high; which was no ſooner mounted than the temple appeared. It was built after the manner of the Ionian Temples; the porch of it was adorned with golden doors; nay, the whole temple glittered with gold, and particularly the roof. The air about it was inchanting, nothing inferior to the ſweeteſt of Arabia, and ſo ſtrongly perfumed the garments of all that viſited it, that they were ſcented for a conſiderable time.

THIS temple was not without its ſanctuary, into which no admiſſion was allowed, even to ſuch of the prieſts, as were not in an eſpecial manner allied to the gods there kept, or wholly addicted to their ſervice and worſhip. Within the ſanctuary, which was always open, were the ſtatues of Jupiter and Juno, as the Greeks were ſo complaiſant as to call them, though the inhabitants, as our author aſſures us, had other

Idols, ſtatues, &c. in and about the temple.

[e] PLIN. Hiſt. Natur. ubi ſupr.

(F) It is impoſſible to ſay who they meant by this Syrian goddeſs; but we find a ſtory in Juſtin (16), which we ſuppoſe to be borrowed from Nicolas of Damaſcus; that, a king from whom Damaſcus derived its name, had a queen called Arathis; whoſe ſepulchre was religiouſly frequented by the Syrians, who eſteemed her as their principal deity: and this queen, according to our author's account, was older than Abraham, whom he reckons among the kings of Damaſcus, as we ſhall have occaſion to obſerve again hereafter.

(16) L. xxxvi. c. 2.

thers of the ſame ſtamp that may have ſucceeded him, flouriſhed as long, we may ſafely ſuppoſe, as the antient Syrians poſſeſſed this their ſeat, or were maſters thereof. But both they themſelves and their gods, in great meaſure, ſubmitted to fate, when Syria was conquered and tranſplanted by Tiglath-pileſer.

Hereupon the religion of the country may, without ſtraining the point, be ſaid to have changed face; a new idolatry was introduced, or many additions to the old were brought in, by the new inhabitants, who were ſent hither by the Aſſyrian; and now the religion of Aſſyria prevailed chiefly all over the country. That this is true, will be pretty evident from ſome arguments you will find in our chronology of Aſſyria. What changes and alterations this ſyſtem ſuffered under the Babylonians firſt, and the Perſians afterwards, and laſtly under the Seleucidæ and Romans, we cannot preſume to

are told, he was their greateſt god. Selden (11) and Iſaac Voſſius (12), are very nice in deducing the true import of this name, which we ſhall for this once paſs over becauſe it appears to us, that according to the ſcripture orthography, it ought to be ſpelt Hadad, as is plain from Joſephus (13), who, in ſpeaking of the ſcripture kings of Syria, calls them Adad or Ader; and particularly writing of the great Ben-hadad, the ſecond of that name in ſcripture, he tells us he was deified or honoured with divine worſhip, as was alſo his ſucceſſor Hazael. Here we have the firſt account of their deifying of Adad, or, as the ſcripture ſtiles him, Ben-hadad, who, if we except his ſucceſſor Hazael, was the greateſt prince the antient Syrians can boaſt of; and we are clearly of opinion, that this great god Hadad or Adad, is no other than the deified Ben-hadad; and from thence it appears, that there were Syrian princes of the name of Adad, before they had any god ſo called. By Adad they meant the ſun, and pictured him with rays darting downwards, to expreſs his beneficence, and to ſhew that the chief influence of the heavens is in the beams of the ſun (14). This high compliment might have ſuited better with Hazael, whoſe reign was a continued ſeries of proſperity, than with Ben-hadad, who was ſeveral times unfortunate; but as Joſephus tells us, they were both deified, and as Adad, or Hadad, was a name common to all the kings of Syria, as appears both by ſcripture and Nicolas of Damaſcus (15), it may have been the Hazael of ſcripture, who was ſo highly revered ſay; but ſuch as it was, in the ſecond century of the chriſtian æra, we ſhall borrow from Lucian, who was an eye-witneſs of what he ſays for the moſt part, and the reſt he received from the prieſts.

(11) Ubi ſupr. Spanh. 1. c. 6. (12) De Idololatria, l. i. c. 22. (13) Antiq. l ix. c 2. (14) Macrob. Saturnal. ubi ſupr. (15) Apud Joſeph. Antiq. l. vii. c. 6.

I ſay;

AT Hierapolis, or the holy city, or Magog, as the Syrians themſelves are ſaid [e] to have called it, in the province of Cyrrheſtica, ſtood the temple of the great Syrian goddeſs (F). It was upon an eminence in the midſt of the city, ſurrounded by a double incloſure or two walls, the one old, the other new. At the north ſide it had a court, or porch, before it, of about five or ſix hundred foot in circumference, where ſtood the priaps, of three hundred fathom, or three hundred cubits high; for we find both theſe meaſures, but both exceedingly too large, to our apprehenſion. Theſe obſcene images, or rather columns, were but ſlender, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter; but by whom, or to whom, they were erected, was the ſubject of much fable. The front of the temple itſelf ſtood eaſt, and before it was a tower raiſed upon a terraſs, about twelve foot high; which was no ſooner mounted than the temple appeared. It was built after the manner of the Ionian Temples; the porch of it was adorned with golden doors; nay, the whole temple glittered with gold, and particularly the roof. The air about it was inchanting, notihng inferior to the ſweeteſt of Arabia, and ſo ſtrongly perfumed the garments of all that viſited it, that they were ſcented for a conſiderable time.

Idols, ſtatues, &c. in and about the temple.

THIS temple was not without its ſanctuary, into which no admiſſion was allowed, even to ſuch of the prieſts, as were not in an eſpecial manner allied to the gods there kept, or wholly addicted to their ſervice and worſhip. Within the ſanctuary, which was always open, were the ſtatues of Jupiter and Juno, as the Greeks were ſo complaiſant as to call them, though the inhabitants, as our author aſſures us, had other names for them. But ſince we have not their true names, we muſt be contented with the Greek. Theſe ſtatues of Jupiter and Juno were of gold. Juno ſat upon lions, and Jupiter was ſupported by bulls, being in looks and poſture like the Jupiter of the Greeks; but the ſtatue of Juno was contrived ſo as to participate of Minerva, Venus, Luna, Rhea, Diana, Nemeſis, and the Deſtinies, according to the view you had of her. In one hand ſhe had a ſceptre, in the other a diſtaff. On her head ſhe had rays and a tower, and ſhe was girt with the ceſtus, or girdle, of the celeſtial Venus. She was adorned with a great variety of gems, which had from time to time been preſented to her, by Egyptians, Indians, Ethiopians, Medes, Armenians, and Babylonians. But of all theſe, the moſt remarkable was the Lychnis ſhe wore at her ſide. This ſtone is ſaid to ſhine moſt by candle-light. With this Lychnis therefore ſhe illuminated, ſays our author, the temple by night. In the day-time it had no remarkable luſtre, and only looked of a fiery aſpect. It was wonderful of this ſtatue, that though a perſon ſtood either on one ſide or before it, ſtill it looked at him. Between Jupiter and Juno was another golden ſtatue, but with no characteriſtics, or peculiar enſigns, and only called the Sign. It was uncertain who they pointed at by this ſtatue; but, becauſe it had a golden dove on its head, ſome were willing to think it was Semiramis. Twice every year it went in proceſſion to the ſea-ſide. On the left hand, going into the temple, was the throne of the Sun, but it had no ſtatue in it; for they held it abſurd to make ſtatues either of the ſun or moon, who were ſo reſplendently viſible to mortal eyes; but no more than right, to form the ſtatues of ſuch as were inviſible. Next after this throne was the ſtatue of Apollo, not a ſtripling, but with a large beard; for they could not endure the thoughts of addreſſing themſelves to any god that was under age; and moreover, they did put cloaths on this idol, which was done to no other. Next to Apollo ſtood Atlas, then Mercury, then Lucina, all which made the ſide furniture of the temple. On the right hand as they entered the temple, ſtood Semiramis pointing to Juno; for that empreſs had had the arrogance to claim ſupremacy to herſelf, in the adoration of mankind, not excepting even Juno; whereupon being ſeverely puniſhed by the gods, who perſecuted her with diſeaſes and various calamities to humble her pride, ſhe at laſt ſubmitted to the goddeſs; and for this reaſon was figured as pointing to Juno, in perpetual acknowledgement of her arrogant error; and to direct people that the ſaid goddeſs was to be worſhipped, not herſelf. Next to Semiramis ſtood Helen, then Hecuba, Andromache, dromache, Paris, Hector, Achilles, Nereus the ſon of Aglaia, Philomèl, and Progne, Tereus turned into a bird, another ſtatue of Semiramis, Combabus, Stratonice, a beautiful piece, Alexander done after the life, and Sardanapalus, in a peculiar habit and attitude. Under this temple they ſhewed the cleft where the waters drained off at Deucalion's flood: on this place, ſaid they, did Deucalion erect an altar to Juno, and this tradition brought on an extraordinary ceremony, which we ſhall mention hereafter. This hole or cleft was but ſmall when our author ſaw it. We had almoſt forgotten, that on the right hand of the temple, there was a little brazen man, with privities far beyond their due proportion.

[e] PLIN. Hiſt. Natur. ubi ſupr.

(F) It is impoſſible to ſay who they meant by this Syrian goddeſs; but we find a ſtory in Juſtin (16), which we ſuppoſe to be borrowed from Nicolas of Damaſcus; that, a king from whom Damaſcus derived its name, had a queen called Arathis; whoſe ſepulchre was religiouſly frequented by the Syrians, who eſteemed her as their principal deity: and this queen, according to our author's account, was older than Abraham, whom he reckons among the kings of Damaſcus, as we ſhall have occaſion to obſerve again hereafter.

(16) L. xxxvi c. 2.

FINALLY, within the incloſures of the temple, they kept oxen, horſes, lions, bears, eagles, all which were no way noxious to men, but all ſacred and tame.

ADJACENT to the temple was a lake, where ſacred fiſhes were preſerved and attended. Some of the largeſt had names given to them, and came when called. One of theſe our author particularly obſerved had golden fins. The lake itſelf was deep, two hundred fathom, the prieſts reported; and in the midſt of it ſtood a ſtone altar, which ſeemed to ſwim, as moſt thought it did; for the pillar, or what elſe ſupported it, was not eaſily to be diſcerned. This altar was for ever crowned, and reeking with incenſe, and daily frequented, as we ſhall ſee anon. Without the temple ſtood a large brazen altar, and ſtatues of kings and prieſts almoſt innumerable. The ſacred lake.

THE oracle in the temple was quite extraordinary, and may ſerve to evince, how deeply the prieſts were verſed in the myſtery of their profeſſion. Here were images that would move, ſweat, and deliver oracles, as if alive; and noiſes were often heard in the temple, when it was ſhut up. Apollo, as we underſtand our author, was the chief Oracle. Other idols delivered their anſwers by their prieſts: This Syrian Apollo did all himſelf. He, as we have already obſerved, was the only god that had cloaths put on him: the reaſon of which, to our apprehenſion, was, that a living perſon might the more ſpeciouſly be ſubſtituted to act the part of the ſtupid block. However this were, this Apollo, when he was inclined to make anſwer upon any conſultation, began firſt to move himſelf; upon which the prieſts immediately ſtepped up to him to lift him, or elſe he fell into great agonies, ſweating, and beſtirring himſelf after a furious rate. But with the prieſts, who came to his aſſiſtance, he behaved in a very unruly manner, toſſing and tumbling them about from place to place as he pleaſed; till the high prieſt, coming up to him, propoſed his queſtion. If the queſtion was unacceptable to him, The oracle.

he retired; if otherwiſe, he drove his ſupporters onwards. He had the direction of all matters ſacred and civil, being upon all occaſions conſulted, and always declared the time when it was proper for the image, we have called the Sign, to make its proceſſion to the ſea. In fine, our author aſſures us, that he ſaw this god walk in the air.

Riches of the temple.

The revenues and treaſure of this temple were in proportion to its ſplendor, to the great majeſty of the goddeſs, and to the mighty power and excellence of her kindred deities that attended her. Arabia, Phœnice, Babylonia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, and Syria, paid their liberal contributions. Here were coſtly preſents ſhewn, in garments and other things of ineſtimable price, which were very carefully kept; ſo that, in this reſpect, it was a very Loretto.

Now for the prieſts. There were ſeveral ſorts of them, each aſſigned to particular tasks. Some killed the ſacrifices, ſome bore the drink-offerings, ſome carried fire, and ſome waited at the altar; and of theſe above three hundred, in white habits, and with caps, or bonnets, on their heads, attended the ſacrifices. And beſides them, there were other conſecrated orders; as of minſtrels, ſkilful in the touch of ſeveral inſtruments, Galli, or eunuch prieſts, and, to conclude, mad and frantic women. The office of high prieſt was annual, he wore purple, and a golden mitre. Other ſorts of holy perſons there were of the ſeveral nations, who held the Syrian Goddeſs in veneration, whoſe buſineſs it was to inſtruct their countrymen, who from time to time reſorted hither in pilgrimage, in the rules and cuſtoms of this holy city. They were called maſters, or inſtructors.

It is remarkable of their eunuch prieſts, that they were emaſculated by the voluntary operation of their own hands. How this unnatural cuſtom came to prevail, is accounted for by the following ſtory. Stratonice, who built this temple, having been admoniſhed by the goddeſs, to undertake the work, to no purpoſe, till ſhe forcibly brought her to obedience by a violent procedure againſt her, the king her huſband conſented to let her go and take in hand the building; but committed the care of her to a beautiful youth named Combabus. This Combabus, no way fond of his commiſſion, but dreading the conſequences of being ſo much alone with the beauteous queen, deſtroyed his ſex, and left the ruins of it, carefully embalmed and ſealed up, with the king. He departed with the queen Stratonice, was after ſome time ſolicited by her, and convinced her of his inability. But nevertheleſs, it came to paſs, either through malice or envy, that Combabus was clearly convicted of adultery, infidelity, and impiety impiety to the goddeſs. As he was leading to execution, he called out for the treaſure he had left with the king, which being produced, his intended puniſhment was converted into the moſt tender embraces in the arms of his prince. The king now raiſed him to the higheſt degree of riches and honour, and he was famed for the wiſeſt and happieſt man living. Combabus deſired leave to finiſh the temple; which being granted, he paſſed the remainder of his life there. And there ſtood his ſtatue in braſs, as we have already ſaid, the work of Hermolaus the Rhodian. And becauſe it was induſtriouſly reported, that ſome of his deareſt companions reſolved to undergo his calamity for his ſake, or that Juno inſpired ſeveral with a rage of unmanning themſelves, that he might not be ſingle in his misfortune; many mad zealots, either in honour of Combabus, or to pleaſe Juno, performed the hated operation on themſelves every year in the temple, as we ſhall hereafter relate. Furthermore, theſe Galli, or devoted eunuchs, took on them the habit and offices of women, becauſe Combabus had been fallen in love with by a ſtrange woman, who knew not the violence he had done to his ſex; which to prevent for the future, he put on the outward appearance of a woman. Such were the Galli, their inſtitution, and their patron.

The ſtory of Combabus.

Sacrifices.

WE come now to ſpeak of the ſacrifices, ceremonies, and peculiar cuſtoms pertaining to this holy city. They ſacrificed twice a day, to Jupiter in ſilence, to Juno with great noiſe of miniſtrels and ſingers. Every ſpring they celebrated an extraordinary ſacrifice; for, felling ſome great trees, in the court of the temple, they garniſhed them with goats, ſheep, birds, rich veſtments, and fine pieces of wrought gold and ſilver: they then carried the ſacred images round theſe decorated trees, and ſet fire to them, and all was conſumed. At this ſacrifice there was always a great concourſe of people from all parts, every one bringing his ſacred images with him, made in imitation of thoſe in the temple. There was alſo a private ſacrifice made by every one that undertook the pilgrimage to this city of Hierapolis. The pilgrim killed a ſheep, cut it up in joints, and feaſted on it, ſpreading the fleece on the ground, and kneeling upon it. In this poſture he put the feet and head of the victim upon his own head, and beſought the goddeſs to accept his ſacrifice, and vowed her a better. To theſe may be annexed the offerings made upon the following occaſion. Twice a year a man climbed up to the top of one of the priaps we have mentioned, and there continued ſeven days. He let down a chain, by which to draw up what ſhould be given to him; for many upon theſe occaſions brought it brought their offerings, and declared their names, which one below took care to bawl out to the man ſitting above, who thereupon began a prayer, ſtriking a kind of a bell all the time. Finally, they had, ſometimes, a way of ſacrificing which was truly ſhocking and barbarous. They firſt crowned the victims with garlands, and then drove them out of the porch or court of the temple, one ſide of which was an abrupt ſteep, where falling, they periſhed. Nay, ſome were ſo mad as to tie up their children in ſacks, and then ſhove them down the ſame ſteep, reproaching them as not children, but beaſts.

Feſtivals. Some of their feſtivals, if ſo they may be called, were obſerved in memory of Deucalion's flood. Twice a year they went to the ſea-ſide, and thence brought water into the temple; in which labour not only the prieſts were employed, but alſo all Syria and Arabia, ſays our author. This water they poured out in the temple, and it ran off by the hole or cleft we have already mentioned. This they did by a pretended command of Deucalion's, as our author, like a mere Greek, calls him. What ceremonies they practiſed at the ſea-ſide, we are not told; but it ſeems they were very extraordinary. Returning with their veſſels full of water and ſealed up, they carried them firſt to a ſacred perſon called Alectryo, who receiving the ſaid veſſels of water, examined the ſeals, and taking his due from each votary for his pains, untyed the ſtring, took off the ſeal, and returned his burthen to each, who carried it into the temple for the purpoſe before-mentioned. This Alectryo, whoever, or whatever, he was, received a conſiderable revenue for holy uſes upon theſe ſolemn days. They had another kind of feſtivals, which, in our language, may be called their deſcenſion days. For upon theſe days did their gods and their other fine things make a viſit to the bottom of the lake we formerly mentioned. Juno, or the Syrian Goddeſs, herſelf went down firſt, for the preſervation of her favourite fiſh, who, if they had ſeen Jupiter, would have died. Upon theſe occaſions a notable farce was acted between the ſaid goddeſs and god. He was wont to advance to go down firſt; whereupon ſhe interpoſed, and, after much ado, prevailed on him to return back again. But of all their holy-days the great burning, as we may call it, was the moſt conſiderable. Upon this occaſion there came people from all parts to aſſiſt at the great ſacrifice we have already deſcribed, and the other religious duties of the ſeaſon. This feſtival was of ſome days continuance, as we apprehend our author; and at particular times while it laſted, the whole multitude was drawn into the temple, while the prieſts ſtood without, without, ſome of them mangling their bodies; ſome thumping violently againſt each other, while others beat upon tabrets or drums, and ſounded with muſical inſtruments, and ſang out aloud, and prophecied. And now it was, that, amidſt all this uproar, the frenzy of caſtrating themſelves ſeized on many in the temple, who, crying out with a loud voice, and drawing their ſwords, performed the operation, and devoted themſelves to the goddeſs.

THE religious cuſtoms, and laws, and traditions of this place, were as extraordinary as any thing elſe we have hitherto ſeen. Twice a year a man went up to the top of one of the priaps, as we have ſaid, and there remained ſeven days. His manner of getting up was thus. He ſurrounded the priap and himſelf with a chain, and aſcended by the help of that and certain pegs or pins, which ſtuck out of the ſides of the priap for that purpoſe, lifting the chain up after him at every ſtep he mounted. Here we cannot but obſerve, that our author ſays, That thoſe who had ſeen them climb up the palm trees in Egypt and Arabia, might readily underſtand him; whence we gather theſe phalli, or priaps, ſo monſtrouſly high as he ſays, were ſo ſlender that a man might graſp them. Whether we reckon the height he gives them, at three hundred fathom, which is monſtrous, or even at three hundred cubits, which is ſomewhat more credible, they were about as high as our * monument. How ſo ſlender a body could be reared to ſuch a height, we leave to thoſe who are better ſkilled in ſuch matters than ourſelves, and proceed. When the perſon had got up, he let down a chain, wherewith he drew up all manner of neceſſaries for himſelf, and therewith made him a commodious ſeat, a kind of a neſt. It was given out, that, during the ſeven days, he had a more intimate intercourſe with the great goddeſs; and alſo that this was done in memory of Deucalion's flood, when the men clomb up the trees to ſave themſelves from periſhing. During theſe ſeven days, the perſon never ſlept, and if at any time he happened to doſe, a ſacred ſcorpion, ſaid they, went up and awakened him. Our author rather thinks, that the fear of falling kept him from ſleeping. Miſcellaneous matters.

EVERY day many people ſwam to the altar in the midſt of the lake, there to perform their devotions.

THEY ſacrificed oxen, ſheep, and the like, but ſwine they held to be unclean.

* The monument on Fiſh-Hill near London Bridge, 202 foot high, erected in memory of the great fire in the year 1666.

But the ſacrifice was not performed at the temple. The victim was only preſented at the altar. The reſt was done at home.

Fish and doves, or pigeons, were accounted holy, the former to Derceto, the latter to Semiramis; in memory of their different transformations.

They fed many doves in and about their houſes [t], and if a man had touched one of them, he was unclean all the reſt of that day, as holy as they eſteemed them.

As ſoon as any man had commenced Gallus, or eunuch prieſt, by diſmembring himſelf, he ran about the city with the part in his hand, till at length, throwing it into ſome houſe, he thence received a woman's attire, and from that time forward wholly addicted himſelf to a feminine way of life.

The eunuch prieſts, notwithſtanding, entertained a flame for the women, and the women for them, which, far from being thought ſcandalous or portentous, was eſteemed pure and holy.

It was unlawful for any Gallus, or eunuch prieſt, to enter into the temple.

Whosoever took on him the pilgrimage to Hierapolis, this holy city, firſt ſhaved his head and eye-brows, then offered up a ſheep in the manner already mentioned. After which he might bathe in nothing but cold water, or drink of any thing elſe, or lie upon ought but the cold ground, till he had reached the city.

The pilgrims being arrived were entertained at the public charge, and lodged with people of their reſpective countries, here called inſtructors or maſters, who were paid by the public for informing them in the rites and ceremonies of the place.

The pilgrims were all branded with marks upon the neck and wriſts.

The young men and boys conſecrated the firſt fruits of their beards and heads of hair, which, being ſhaved or clipped in the temple, were depoſited in a gold or ſilver box, or other veſſel, with the name of the perſon it belonged to inſcribed, and kept in the temple.

When any of the Galli died, their funeral was not after the ordinary manner. Their companions carried their dead bodies into the ſuburbs, where ſetting them down, they hurled ſtones at them, and left them lying upon the bier; where they lay the ſpace of ſeven days, and then were conveyed into the temple; but to have done it before had been prophane.

[t] See before, p. 194.

veyed

HE that had ſeen a dead perſon, might not enter into the temple that day; but on the morrow he was abſolved from his uncleanneſs, if he purified himſelf.

ALL the family of any one deceaſed were to keep from the temple thirty days, and ſhave their heads.

THUS much we have thought neceſſary to ſay, concerning the great Syrian Goddeſs and her worſhip, all which is very unhappily diſguiſed in a Greek dreſs. We cannot doubt, but that here we have great remains both of the doctrines and practices of the antient Syrians, though blended and confounded with many additional ſuperſtitions.

FOR the preſent we ſhall add no more concerning the religions of Syria. The ſuperſtitions at Antioch, under the Seleucidæ, we ſhall enlarge on in the hiſtory of thoſe princes. We are not ſure, that Plutarch means this Syrian goodeſs; for hereafter you will ſee, that ſhe was not the only idol that ſeems to have born the title; when he ſays that ſhe puniſhed thoſe, who eat of two certain ſorts of fiſh, with ulcers and boils all over their bodies, with ſore ſhins, and with a diſſolution of the liver [g]. They are ſaid to have expiated this crime, by putting themſelves in a ſack, and rolling themſelves in the dirt [h]. But, as we have obſerved, we are not certain, that what is here ſaid refers to this goddeſs; though it is likely it may.

WE learn from Plutarch, that the Syrians, of his time at leaſt, were an effeminate people, prone to tears, and very remarkable for their way of mourning for their deceaſed, hiding themſelves from the light of the ſun, in caves or other obſcure places, many days together. This mournful, tender, effeminate temper of mind, may have always been one of the characteriſtics of the Syrians, as it ſtill is. Their Temper.

WE can ſay nothing particular touching the cuſtoms of the antient Syrians, their civil concerns, or of their arts and learning. They were by ſome * antiently joined with the Phœnicians, as the firſt inventers of letters; but however true or falſe this may have been, certain it is, that they ſubmitted to no nation that flouriſhed with them, in degree of human knowledge and ſkill in the fine arts. They were ſo happily ſituated, that they may, almoſt, be ſaid to have been in the centre of the old world; and as in the ſunſhine of Their Learning and Arts.

[g] Περὶ δεισιδαιμονίας p. 170. [h] MENAND. apud PORPHYR. Περὶ ἀποχῆς ἐμψύχων Πρὸς Ἀπολλ. p. 113. * CLEM. ALEXANDR. Strom. l. 1. p. 307.

their

their empire they were enriched by the ſpoils, and tribute, and commerce of the nations far and near, they certainly aroſe to a great pitch of ſplendor and magnificence, thoſe great encouragers of ingenuity and induſtry. The altar at Damaſcus, which ſo raviſhed Ahaz king of Judah [i], may ſerve as a noble ſpecimen of the ſkill of their artificers.

Their Language.

THEIR language is one of thoſe kindred dialects we commonly call the Oriental tongues, and is pretended to have been the mother of them all; concerning which, and for our thoughts thereon, we muſt refer the readers to what we have already ſaid [k]. It became a diſtinct tongue ſo early as the days of Jacob, for what his father-in-law and uncle, Laban of Padan-aram, or Meſopotamia, calls Jegar-ſahadutha, is by Jacob himſelf called Galeed [l]. The Syriac was not only the language of Syria, but alſo of Meſopotamia, Chaldæa, (for there is no more difference between the Chaldee and Syriac, than between the Engliſh and Scotch;) Aſſyria, and, after the Babyloniſh captivity, of Paleſtine.

THERE are three dialects of the Syrian tongue. 1. The Aramæan, or Syriac properly ſo called, which is the moſt elegant of all, and uſed in Meſopotamia, and by the inhabitants of Roha, or Edeſſa, and Haran, and the outer Syria. 2. The dialect of Paleſtine, ſpoken by the inhabitants of Damaſcus, mount Libanus, and the inner Syria. 3. The Chaldee or Nabathæan dialect, the moſt rude and unpoliſhed of the three, and current in the mountainous parts of Aſſyria, and in the villages of Irâk, or Babylonia [m].

THE Syriac character is very antient, and ſuppoſed by ſome to have been in uſe above three hundred years before the birth of Chriſt [n]. There are two ſorts of this character, the Eſtrangelo (G), which is the more antient and rude, and chiefly found in the titles of books, as capitals with us; and that called the Eſhito, the ſimple or common character,

[i] 2 Kings xvi. 10. [k] See Vol. I. p. 336. [l] See Geneſ. xxxi. 47. [m] ABU'LFARAG. Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 11. [n] BERNARD. Tab Alph.

(G) This name is generally derived from the Greek word στρόγγυλος, round, as if it was a round character, whereas it is rather ſquare; wherefore, if it muſt be derived from that word, we ſhould rather chooſe to take it in Theophraſtus's ſenſe, who uſes στρόγγυλα ξύλα (17), for rough unhewn timber, by reaſon of its rude and unpoliſhed form.

(17) De Plantis.

which

The SYRIAC ALPHABET.

Power.	The Common Character. Figure. Joined both to the following & preceding. Letter only.	Joined to the following. Letter only.	Joined to the preceding. Letter only.	Single. Letter only.	The Estrangelo. Names.	Figure.
The Support of a Vowel.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Olaf.	ܐ
B.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Beth.	ܒ
G.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Gomal.	ܓ
D.		⠀	⠀	⠀	Dolath.	ܕ
H.		⠀	⠀	⠀	He.	ܗ
W.		⠀	⠀	⠀	Waw.	ܘ
Z.		⠀		⠀	Zain.	ܙ
Hb.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Hbeth.	ܚ
T.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Teth.	ܛ
Y.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Yud.	ܝ
C or Kb.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Cof.	ܟ
L.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Lomad.	ܠ
M.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Mim.	ܡ
N.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Nun.	ܢ
S.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Semcath	ܣ
The Support of a Vowel, but a Guttural.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	E.	ܥ
F. or P.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Pe.	ܦ
S {grosly pron.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Sode.	ܨ
K.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Kof.	ܩ
R.		⠀		⠀	Riſh.	ܪ
Sh.	⠀	⠀	⠀	⠀	Shin.	ܫ
T. or Th.		⠀		⠀	Tau.	ܬ

which is much more expeditious and beautiful. There was a project ſet on foot, by Paul of Antioch, for adding the letters that are wanting in the Syriac alphabet, as the Greeks had done; which he recommended to the thoughts of James of Edeſſa, who declined it, becauſe he feared, that the books, wrote in the imperfect character or alphabet, might, by ſuch an innovation, come to be loſt [o]. (See the Plate.)

THE Syriac writing, like that of the other eaſtern tongues, was deſtitute of vowels, till towards the latter end of the eighth century; when they were introduced, as is generally ſuppoſed, by Theophilus of Edeſſa, chief aſtrologer to the Khalif al Mohdi, who borrowed them from the Greek alphabet, and firſt made uſe of them to diſtinguiſh the Greek pronunciation of the names and Patronymics, in his Syriac tranſlation of the works of Homer [p]. The marks to expreſs theſe vowels are ſtill nearly in the form of five of the Greek vowels; for they reject the Epſilon and the Omicron, there being no ſhort vowels in their tongue. But James of Edeſſa, who flouriſhed about a century before Theophilus, invented ſeven new characters for all the Greek vowels; which he did, at the deſire of Paul of Antioch, to whom he ſent them. They are ſtill extant [q].

THE Syriac is ſaid to have much degenerated, till James of Edeſſa reſtored it to its antient purity. He was the firſt that wrote a grammar in Syriac [r]. It is an eaſy and elegant, but not a very copious tongue, and has a great number of Greek words, which were incorporated with it, in the times of the Seleucidæ. There is a number of books in the Syriac, very little known to the Europeans, of which a late writer [s] has given an ample account; but what this tongue is moſt to be valued for, are the excellent tranſlations therein of the old and new teſtament; which equal, if they do not ſurpaſs, thoſe in any other language.

PERHAPS no nation, of equal antiquity, had a more conſiderable trade than the antient Syrians. We cannot doubt, but they had ſhips on the Mediterranean, as ſoon as any of their neighbours; and, by the vicinity of the river Euphrates, it is paſt diſpute, that they traded with the eaſtern regions upon that river very early. They had many valuable commodities of their own to carry into other parts. The eaſy and ſafe navigation of the Euphrates, when compared Their trade.

[o] ASSEMAN. Biblioth. Orient. Tom. I. p. 479. [p] ABU'L-FARAG. ubi ſupr. p. 147. ECHELLENSIS in not. ad Catal. Ebedjeſw. p. 180. ASSEMAN. ubi ſupr. p 522. [q] Apud BAR HEBR. (vel ABU'LFARAG.) in Libr. ſplendor. Vide ASSEMAN. ubi ſupr. p. 479. [r] Idem ibid. [s] Idem ibid.

with

with that of the ſea, would tempt one to conſider them as older merchants than the Phœnicians, or even the Edomites; who muſt have made very early attempts upon the Arabian gulph, in compariſon of which the Mediterranean was a main ocean. We the rather inſiſt on the trade of this antient people, becauſe we do not know, that it has yet been fully handled, or profeſſedly, by any body. Herodotus [t] indeed reports, that the Phœnicians were much older navigators than either the antient Syrians or Egyptians; ſaying, that they carried on the commerce of Aſſyria and Egypt by their ſhipping. Here, by the way, is a further proof than we have hitherto given, that Syria and Aſſyria were confounded together by the antients. For how ſhould the Phœnicians have ſailed to the coaſts of the proper Aſſyria, an inland country; a country they could not poſſibly have reached, but by doubling the cape of Good-hope, and entering the Perſian gulph? A voyage which could have anſwered no end, ſeeing they might have ſupplied that country, and have been ſupplied from thence, at an infinitely cheaper rate, by means of their next neighbours the Syrians, who navigated the Euphrates; and who, it cannot well be diſputed, were the firſt that brought the Perſian and Indian commodities into the weſt of Aſia. Syria was therefore the moſt antient magazine for ſuch commodities, and chiefly ſupplied all the weſtern parts; nor can we think otherwiſe, than that the Midianitiſh merchants [u], who bought Joſeph, had loaded their camels in Syria, with the aromatics and other precious things they were carrying into Egypt. Among which it is no unlikely matter that they had commodities of other countries beſides thoſe of Syria. Till interpreters can agree upon the genuine explication of the text, we have liberty to think as largely this way as we pleaſe.

Now becauſe the Syrians engroſſed this lucrative commerce, they may have been in great meaſure negligent of the Mediterranean navigation, chiefly intent upon their eaſtern trade, which drew merchants from all the weſtern parts to traffic in their country, as well for their own growth as for foreign productions; and particularly the Phœnicians, their next and moſt induſtrious neighbours. So that Herodotus [w] may be much in the right, when he talks of the trade they antiently carried on for Aſſyria [Syria] and Egypt. We might draw ſome natural parallels of this caſe, ſo as to leave it almoſt indubitable. The Spaniards and Portugueze, who have

[t] l. 1. c. 1. [u] See before, p. 114. [w] Ubi ſupr.

engroſſed

engroſſed all the wealth, as it were, of the Weſt-Indies, make little or no uſe of ſhipping, if compared with the two trading nations, England and Holland, who may be ſaid to drive on the commerce of the whole world in their bottoms. The Syrians then, it is likely, neglected ſea affairs, and therein fell much ſhort of the Phœnicians.

THIS was the ſtate of the antient Syrian trade and navigation, which we may ſafely ſuppoſe encreaſed from time to time, till their king Hazael, as you will ſee in his reign, graſped at the whole trade of both eaſt and ſouth, by ſeizing on the famous emporium, Elath, on the Red-ſea. The Syrians now had a commodious outlet to the ſouthermoſt parts of Arabia, Æthiopia and the more ſouthern ſhores of Afric, not to mention Egypt, who could not be very fond of her new neighbours, and may have been ſhy of them, and that, upon very juſt grounds. But this Syrian monopoly was of ſhort duration. They had ſcarce ſettled themſelves on the ſhores of the Arabian gulph, but their king Hazael died, and they loſt Elath: which, however, they recovered again under their laſt king Rezin; but their empire was ſoon after extinguiſhed, together with his life; and therefore, though the Syrian colony remained afterwards at Elath, we ſhall purſue their commerce no farther, it being foreign to our preſent purpoſe; but we ſhall endeavour to confirm what we have here advanced, when we are to treat of the Phœnician affairs. In the mean time let any one conſider the ſtate of trade in the Levant and Mediterranean, before the diſcovery, or re-diſcovery as ſome * would have it, of the cape of Good-hope, and, poſſibly, he will be pretty much of our opinion. Diodorus Siculus numbers the Syrians among the mariners employed by Semiramis in her Indian expedition; but, as we are not diſpoſed to give much credit to his author Cteſias, we ſhall make no uſe of his hint, thinking it of no ſervice to us.

SECT. III.

Of the Chronology of the antient Syrians.

BEFORE we proceed to the little we can ſay upon this obſcure ſubject, we will exhibit a ſeries of the races of the antient kings of Syria, according to different writers.

* V. HUET Hiſtoir. du Com. et de la Navigat. des Anc. Chap. 8.

The

The Kings of Zobah, or Sophene.

According to Scripture.	According to Josephus.	Contemporary with Rehob - - - - -	Arach - -	Saul.
Hadadezer, or Hadarezer (A)	Adrazar - -	David.

The Kings of Damascus.

According to Scripture.	According to Nic. Damasc.	According to Josephus.	Contemporary with
* * *	Adad I. - -	Adad - -	David
Rezon - -	Adad II. -	Uncertain -	Solomon
Hezion - -	Adad III.	* * * * *	Rehoboam
Tabrimon -	Adad IV.	* * * *	Abijam.
Ben-hadad I.	Adad V.	* * * * *	Asa.
Ben-hadad II.	Adad VI. -	Adad - -	Jehoshaphat and Jehoram.
Hazael - -	Adad VII.	* * * * *	Ahaziah and Jehoash.
Ben-hadad III.	Adad VIII.	* * * *	Amaziah.
* * *	Adad IX.	* * * * *	Uzziah.
Rezin - -	Adad X. -	Rases, or Arases.	Jotham and Ahaz.

The Kings of Hamath.

According to Scripture.	According to Josephus.	Contemporary with
Toi * * * * * *	Thœnus * *	David.
Joram, or Hadoram - -	Joram * * * * *
* * * * * *

The Kings of Geshur.

According to Scripture.

Ammihud - -	Contemporary with - - -	Saul.
Talmai - - - - - - -		David.
* * * *

(A) The difference between the Hebrew ד D and the Hebrew ר R, is so little, that it is no wonder we find this king's name spelt these two ways.

We have not minded the seniority of these Kingdoms, by placing them either in an exact collateral, or successive order; but have given the second place to Damascus, because it rose upon the ruins of Zobah, though Hamath and Geshur were kingdoms before it (B).

WE have no positive assurance, that Zobah coalesced under one king in the days of Saul, or, consequently, that Rehob was their first king; we only build upon what we apprehend to have been the case. Their kings had been beaten by Saul [x], and they thereupon may have come to the resolution of setting up one supreme, perceiving the Israelites to prosper so under their new monarchy. The Philistines seem to have done the like [y], at the same time, and for the same reason. If this be granted, none is so likely to have been their first king as Rehob, the father of the great Hadadezer, who in the days of David was so firmly seated in the newly-erected throne of Zobah, that he aspired at the universal monarchy of Syria, and, in effect, was become a very great and mighty prince, as you will see in the history of his reign; as also that if he was not the second, he was certainly the last king of Zobah; for we hear no more of the kingdom.

THE kingdom of Damascus rose upon the ruins of the kingdom of Zobah. It was founded by Rezon in the latter part of Solomon's reign [z]. That Rezon seized on Damascus, while David was alive, or during the best days of Solomon, cannot be reconciled with scripture, as you will see in the history of those two kings; and that he deferred it till the reign of Rehoboam is very improbable; it may be doubted whether he lived so long: for, supposing him to have been but thirty years of age, which is the least we well can, when he served under Hadadezer of Zobah against David, he must have been about one hundred years of age when Reho-

[x] 1 Sam. xiv. 47. [y] See before, p. 222. [z] See 1 Kings xi. 24.

(B) Not that we imagine it had never been a kingdom before. Nicolas of Damascus (1) writes, that Abraham was king there, which we may consider in the life of that patriarch. And from the same author, we suppose, Trogus borrowed the kings of Damascus he mentions to have reigned there, both before, and after, Abraham; as Damascus, Azelus, and Adores before him, and Israel after him, as well as all the rest of his mistaken history of the Jews, who, according to him, are originally of Damascus.

(1) In excerpt. VALES.

Beam

boam began to reign. It is moſt likely then, that Rezon erected the kingdom of Damaſcus, while Solomon was taken up with his vanities, and had forgot both himſelf and his people.

Josephus, as may be obſerved in the table, makes one Adad king of Damaſcus contemporary with David, in which he is a ſtrict follower of Nicolas of Damaſcus, whom in the next reign he drops. Joſephus [a], inſtead of allowing Rezon to have made himſelf king at Damaſcus, ſeems to inſinuate, that he made Hadad, the Edomite, king there or ſome where elſe in Syria. We know there are thoſe who in this matter think along with him. Perhaps the beſt argument that can be brought in proof that the fugitive king of Edom was eſtabliſhed on the throne of Syria [b], may be, that his ſucceſſors poſſeſſed themſelves of part of the Edomitiſh dominions, and particularly Elath upon the Arabian gulph: but this argument will have but little weight with thoſe, who conſider that ambition and avarice may have had as large a ſhare in that acquiſition, as any conviction of an inherent right. But we forget, that our intention was only to prove, that the kingdom of Damaſcus commenced in the latter part of Solomon's reign.

Nicolas of Damaſcus ſeems to agree well enough with the ſcripture accounts of the Damaſcene kings, and particularly, if we ſuppoſe his firſt Adad to have been Hadadezer of Zobah; and that he was ſo, is pretty plain: nor is it any wonder, that he ſhould have made the city of his birth the ſeat of a kingdom, only one reign longer than he ought to have made it. Beſides he may not be altogether miſtaken, in calling his firſt Adad king of Damaſcus; for, as may be obſerved hereafter, he certainly was king or chief over that province, though he did not there reſide. By calling his firſt Adad the Hadadezer of Zobah, we bring him to quadrate very well with the ſcripture.

It is impoſſible to determine the exact number of years each king reigned, wherefore we have only placed them over-againſt the princes of David's line, or the kings of Judah.

We have on purpoſe avoided a dry diſcuſſion of this point; for there is no certainty to be expected in what concerns the ſucceſſion of theſe kings, and the length of their reigns.

The kingdom of Hamath roſe together with that of Zobah, as appears pretty plain by the wars between them. But we muſt obſerve, that it is at a venture we have placed Joram as ſucceſſor to his father Toi in the kingdom.

[a] Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. [b] See before, p. 144.

THE kingdom of Geſhur ſeems to have riſen together with Zobah and Hamath. We are not ſure, that Ammihud preceded his ſon Talmai in the kingdom; but it is very likely he did.

SECT. IV.

The Reigns of the Kings of the antient Syrians.

The KINGS of ZOBAH.

Rehob. REHOB we ſuppoſe to have been the firſt ſole king of Zobah, and to have laid the foundations of his ſon's grandeur.

Hadadezer HADADEZER, or Hadarezer, the ſon of Rehob, was a great and ambitious prince, and remarkable for his unfortunate wars with king David. He had warred with advantage againſt the king of Hamath; aiming at the univerſal monarchy of Syria, we imagine; but when he oppoſed David's progreſs towards the reduction of the land, which had been promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, quite to the Euphrates [a], his good fortune left him. In the firſt battle he fought with David he loſt one thouſand chariots, ſeven thouſand horſe, and twenty thouſand foot. The Syrians of Damaſcus then ſent their army to reinforce him. In the ſecond battle Hadadezer loſt two and twenty thouſand men. Thus beaten out of the field, the conqueror poſſeſſed himſelf of a good part of Syria, and particularly Damaſcene. Hadadezer now loſt his golden ſhields, for ſuch he had in his treaſury, we ſuppoſe; his two cities Betah and Berothai, exceedingly rich in braſs, were plundered [b], and his dominion was conſiderably diminiſhed and impoveriſhed. But it is likely nothing perplexed him more than the defection of Rezon, afterwards king of Damaſcus, who, leading the forces ſent him from that province, or Hadadezer's own, uncertain which, deſerted him in the midſt of his adverſe fortune, and, gathering a band of men about him, lived an out-law, and upon the ſpoil [c].

Year of the Flood, 1955. Year before Chriſt 1044.

IT is not expreſſed, that Hadadezer became tributary to king David, nor indeed is it likely that he did, by what follows. For he furniſhed Hanun king of Ammon with twenboam began to reign. It is moſt likely then, that Rezon erected the kingdom of Damaſcus, while Solomon was taken up with his vanities, and had forgot both himſelf and his people.

[a] See Geneſ. xv. 18. [b] 2 Sam. viii. 8. [c] 1 Kings xi. 23, 24.

JOSEPHUS, as may be obſerved in the table, makes one Adad king of Damaſcus contemporary with David, in which he is a ſtrict follower of Nicolas of Damaſcus, whom in the next reign he drops. Joſephus [a], inſtead of allowing Rezon to have made himſelf king at Damaſcus, ſeems to inſinuate, that he made Hadad, the Edomite, king there or ſome where elſe in Syria. We know there are thoſe who in this matter think along with him. Perhaps the beſt argument that can be brought in proof that the fugitive king of Edom was eſtabliſhed on the throne of Syria [b], may be, that his ſucceſſors poſſeſſed themſelves of part of the Edomitiſh dominions, and particularly Elath upon the Arabian gulph: but this argument will have but little weight with thoſe, who conſider that ambition and avarice may have had as large a ſhare in that acquiſition, as any conviction of an inherent right. But we forget, that our intention was only to prove, that the kingdom of Damaſcus commenced in the latter part of Solomon's reign.

NICOLAS of Damaſcus ſeems to agree well enough with the ſcripture accounts of the Damaſcene kings, and particularly, if we ſuppoſe his firſt Adad to have been Hadadezer of Zobah; and that he was ſo, is pretty plain: nor is it any wonder, that he ſhould have made the city of his birth the ſeat of a kingdom, only one reign longer than he ought to have made it. Beſides he may not be altogether miſtaken, in calling his firſt Adad king of Damaſcus; for, as may be obſerved hereafter, he certainly was king or chief over that province, though he did not there reſide. By calling his firſt Adad the Hadadezer of Zobah, we bring him to quadrate very well with the ſcripture.

IT is impoſſible to determine the exact number of years each king reigned, wherefore we have only placed them over-againſt the princes of David's line, or the kings of Judah.

WE have on purpoſe avoided a dry diſcuſſion of this point; for there is no certainty to be expected in what concerns the ſucceſſion of theſe kings, and the length of their reigns.

THE kingdom of Hamath roſe together with that of Zobah, as appears pretty plain by the wars between them. But we muſt obſerve, that it is at a venture we have placed Joram as ſucceſſor to his father Toi in the kingdom.

[a] Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. [b] See before, p. 144.

THE kingdom of Geſhur ſeems to have riſen together with Zobah and Hamath. We are not ſure, that Ammihud preceded his ſon Talmai in the kingdom; but it is very likely he did.

SECT. IV.

The Reigns of the Kings of the antient Syrians.

The KINGS of ZOBAH.

REHOB we ſuppoſe to have been the firſt ſole king of Zobah, and to have laid the foundations of his ſon's grandeur. Rehob.

HADADEZER, or Haderezer, the ſon of Rehob, was a great and ambitious prince, and remarkable for his unfortunate wars with king David. He had warred with advantage againſt the king of Hamath; aiming at the univerſal monarchy of Syria, we imagine; but when he oppoſed David's progreſs towards the reduction of the land, which had been promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, quite to the Euphrates [a], his good fortune left him. In the firſt battle he fought with David he loſt one thouſand chariots, ſeven thouſand horſe, and twenty thouſand foot. The Syrians of Damaſcus then ſent their army to reinforce him. In the ſecond battle Hadadezer loſt two and twenty thouſand men. Thus beaten out of the field, the conqueror poſſeſſed himſelf of a good part of Syria, and particularly Damaſcene. Hadadezer now loſt his golden ſhields, for ſuch he had in his treaſury, we ſuppoſe; his two cities Betah and Berothai, exceedingly rich in braſs, were plundered [b], and his dominion was conſiderably diminiſhed and impoveriſhed. But it is likely nothing perplexed him more than the defection of Rezon, afterwards king of Damaſcus, who, leading the forces ſent him from that province, or Hadadezer's own, uncertain which, deſerted him in the midſt of his adverſe fortune, and, gathering a band of men about him, lived an out-law, and upon the ſpoil [c]. Hadadezer Year of the Flood, 1955. Year before Chriſt 1044.

IT is not expreſſed, that Hadadezer became tributary to king David, nor indeed is it likely that he did, by what follows. For he furniſhed Hanun king of Ammon with twenty thouſand men againſt David; but they, with the other auxiliaries of that war, were put to a ſhameful flight by Joab [d]. Though he was paid for theſe twenty thouſand men, and was by no means a principal in this war, yet the next year he ſeems to have made himſelf ſo [e]. He called in all the petty kings, that owed him homage, on the other ſide of the Euphrates; and every where elſe, as far as his power extended, he levied forces. By which means he got together a very conſiderable army, which he committed to the conduct of Shobach his General, to aſſiſt Hanun again David a ſecond time; or rather to make a deſperate effort to retrieve his own honour and dominion, or to humble David, if poſſible. But this great hoſt alſo miſcarried, being routed with the loſs of many thouſands, and Shobach himſelf was ſlain on the ſpot. The battle was fought at a place called Helam; about forty thouſand of the Syrians were ſlain, and among the reſt Shobach, as we have ſaid. The petty princes, that ſerved Hadadezer in this fatal warfare, made their peace with David, and became his tributaries [f], as Hadadezer himſelf did, as is very likely; concerning whom, or the kingdom of Zobah, we find no further account.

[a] See Geneſ. xv. 18. [b] 2 Sam. viii. 8. [c] 1 Kings xi. 23, 24.

The KINGS of DAMASCUS.

Rezon. THE kingdom of Zobah being undone, that of Damaſcus roſe upon the ruins of it. REZON was the firſt king, the ſame who deſerted from Hadadezer king of Zobah. He ſeized on Damaſcus, and was the founder of this noble kingdom, and he abhorred Iſrael, to whom he was a very troubleſome, inveterate enemy, taking advantage of Solomon's neglect [g].

Hezion. HEZION ſucceeded Rezon; but whether he was his ſon, or any otherwiſe related to him, we know not (A). He lived at peace and amity with the kings of Judah and Iſrael [h].

[d] See before, p. 107. [e] See before, p. 106, (F). [f] 2 Sam. v. 15—19. [g] 1 Kings xi. 23---25. [h] Ibid. xv. 18.

(A) It is the joint opinion, of Sir John Marſham (1), Sir Iſaac Newton (2), and archbiſhop Uſher (3), that Rezon and Hezion are different names for the ſame king. It is impoſſible for us to declare ourſelves, either for or againſt it.

(1) Canon. Chronic. Secul. 13. (2) Chronol. of ant. Kingd. amended, p. 221. (3) Annal.

TABRIMON

TABRIMON (B) the son of Hezion. He, as well as his father, had no misunderstandings with the kings of Judah and Israel [i].

BEN-HADAD the son of Tabrimon. Ambassadors came to him with large gifts from Asa king of Judah, by whom he was tempted to make war upon Baasha king of Israel; from whom his army took Ijon, Dan, Abel-beth-maachah, all Cinneroth, and all the land of Naphtali [k], and, in the end, extended his power to the city of Samaria itself, as we shall see anon.

Ben-hadad I. Year of the Flood, 2059. Year before Christ, 940.

BEN-HADAD the son of Ben-hadad. He vigorously prosecuted the enmity his father had so successfully begun against Israel, but therein was twice very remarkably baffled by the interposition of heaven. When he first marched against Israel, we understand it to have been with mighty parade, he having no less than thirty two kings over his chariots [l], and a vast army of both horse and foot. He proceeded, and sat down before Samaria, and strait summoned Ahab the king to surrender himself as his vassal; to acknowledge himself to be his creature; and that all belonging to him was at his service and disposal. To this he received as submissive an answer as he could wish for. But his arrogance swelled to that pitch, that a bare verbal submission would not serve his turn. He sent into Samaria, therefore, to admonish Ahab, that he intended the next day to send some officers to search his palace and the city, for all he riches, women, and fine children (C), that they might seize on them, and bring them away. The king of Israel boldly refused to submit to so unparalleled an indignity, which Ben-hadad little expecting, was highly exasperated. He sent a third time to Ahab, to try whether he could not threaten him into so base a compliance, wishing himself in a worse condition than Ahab, if he did not bring such an army before Samaria, that every soldier taking but a handful

Ben-hadad II. Year of the Flood, 2098. Year before Christ 901.

[i] 1 Kings xv. 18. [k] Ibid. v. 20. [l] Compare ibid. xx. 1. with ibid. xxii. 31.

(B) Sir Isaac Newton (4) reckons him to have been subject to the Egyptians, who under Sesac, or Shishak, conquered Syria (5), in this king's reign according to his hypothesis; and that his son Ben-hadad shook off the yoke.

(C) This last particular is aggravated by some (6) into a great piece of insolence and brutality; as if he sent to Ahab for his most beautiful male children, to sin against nature with them.

(4) Ubi supr. (5) See before in the Notes, p. 9. (6) Vide Cleric. in 1 Reg. xx. 3.

of it (D), there ſhould be no ſigns of it left. He received a ſtubborn reply to this vain menace, Ahab adviſing him to wait the event of things before he reckoned upon them.

The Syrian army, which had hitherto been in looſe array, was now ordered to inveſt the city of Samaria in form, and get all ready for the aſſault. While this was doing, Ben-hadad, who ſeems to have been a very voluptuous prince, and much given to drink, betook himſelf to his pleaſure, fearleſs of all danger, for he could apprehend none. As he was in the midſt of his ſecurity and carouſals, he was told, that a party was drawing near from the city, which at firſt cauſed a ſmall alarm in the camp, and diſturbed Ben-hadad himſelf. But when he underſtood what the matter was, he commanded, that they ſhould be brought before him alive, whether their deſigns were for peace or for war, and then returned to his cups. The party which was coming out of the city was, in fact, Ahab and a choice company with him; who, though it was noon-day, were encouraged to fall upon the great hoſt of the Syrians. The Syrians on the other hand, dreaming of nothing leſs than an aſſault, thought they ſhould have nothing to do, but to conduct them to their king. But when Ahab and his followers were come up, and all at once laid about them furiouſly, the Syrians fled, and a panic fear ſpread itſelf all over the camp, ſo that there was no one that thought of any thing elſe but ſaving himſelf; and particularly Ben-hadad mounted a horſe, and rode away with the reſt as faſt as he could, inſtead of rallying and confirming his people. They all fled, and the Iſraelites purſued them with a very great ſlaughter.

(D) This proud meſſage is very variouſly interpreted. The words of the text itſelf are: The gods do ſo unto me, and more alſo, if the duſt of Samaria ſhall ſuffice for handfuls, for all the people that follow me (7): or as it is in the margin, are at my feet. This according to Joſephus (8), means no more, than that he had ſo numberleſs a multitude with him, that each taking but a handful of ſoil, could encompaſs Samaria with works that ſhould over-top the wall of the city. Others (9) take it much as we do; that if each man in his army took but a handful of the ruins of Samaria, they might carry the whole place away with them. Others (10) again ſuppoſe his meaning to have been, that he would return with ſuch an army, that if each ſoldier took but a handful of his country, nothing of it ſhould be left remaining. Take it which way you will, it was a high vaunt, and paſſionately ſpoken to ſet off the greatneſs of his kingdom.

(7) 1 Kings xx. 10. (8) Antiq. l. 8. c. 8. (9) Cleric. in 1 Reg. ubi ſupr. (10) Patrick upon 1 Kings xx. 10.

The

The SYRIAC ALPHABET.

The Common Character.				The Estrangelo.
Power.	Figure.			Names.	Figure.
	Joined both to the following and preceding. Letter only.	Joined to the preceding Letter only.	Joined to the following Single.
The Support of a Vowel.	ﻻ	ﻷ	ﻹ	Olaf.	ܐ
B.	ﺑ	ﺒ	ﺐ	Beth.	ܒ
G.	ﮔ	ﮕ	ﮓ	Gomal.	ܓ
D.		ﺪ	ﺩ	Dolath.	ܕ
H.		ﻫ	ﻩ	He.	ܗ
W.		ﻭ	ﻮ	Waw.	ܘ
Z.		ﺯ	ﺰ	Zain.	ܙ
Hb.	ﺣ	ﺤ	ﺢ	Hbeth.	ܚ
T.	ﻃ	ﻄ	ﻂ	Teth.	ܛ
Y.	ﻳ	ﻴ	ﻲ	Yûd.	ܝ
C or Kb.	ﻛ	ﻜ	ﻚ	Cof.	ܟ
L.	ﻟ	ﻠ	ﻞ	Lomad.	ܠ
M.	ﻣ	ﻤ	ﻢ	Mim.	ܡ
N.	ﻧ	ﻨ	ﻦ	Nun.	ܢ
S.	ﺳ	ﺴ	ﺲ	Semcath ﺱ	ܣ
The Support of a Vowel, but a Guttural.	ﻋ	ﻌ	ﻊ	E.	ܥ
F. or P.	ﻓ	ﻔ	ﻒ	Pe.	ܦ
S {grosly pron.		ﺼ	ﺺ	Sode.	ܨ
K.	ﻗ	ﻘ	ﻖ	Kof.	ܩ
R.		ﺭ	ﺮ	Rish.	ܪ
Sb.	ﺷ	ﺸ	ﺶ	Shin.	ܫ
T. or Tb.		ﺖ	ﺕ	Tau.	ܬ

The Syrians were covered with ſhame at ſo inglorious a flight, and would gladly have found out ſome excuſe to palliate it. They pretended, that the gods of the Iſraelites being the gods of the hills, it was no wonder, that ſuch a misfortune had befallen them; and, to comfort their king, aſſured him, that if he could but draw out the Iſraelites upon a plain, his gods would prevail in their turn, as they preſided over the plains (E). They moreover laid ſome blame upon the two and thirty kings, as not hearty in his cauſe, or ſubmiſſive enough to diſcipline, and deſired, that truſty ſkilful officers might be ſubſtituted inſtead of them. They then adviſed their king to levy juſt ſuch an army as the former, chariot for chariot, horſe for horſe, and never doubt of ſucceſs.

BEN-HADAD hearkened to all this, and bore his diſhonour as uneaſily, we may ſuppoſe, as any of his ſubjects could for him. And when the ſeaſon of the year came about, he marched towards the king of Iſrael with ſuch an army, as if he meant to make good what he had boaſted towards the city of Samaria. He pitched in Aphek, in a plain we may be ſure, to be within the reach of his own gods, and filled the country, as it is expreſſed. Seven days he lay here incamped, over-againſt the deſpicable numbers of the Iſraelites (F). Upon the ſeventh day it came to a battle between them, and that day the Syrians loſt of foot only one hundred thouſand. This ſlaughter ſo confounded them, that they gave ground, and retreated with precipitation to the city of Aphek itſelf, which was near, where twenty ſeven thouſand of them were cruſhed to death by the city wall, which fell on them (G). Year of the Flood, 2099. Year before Chriſt 900.

BEN-HADAD

(E) So early was the notion of topical deities, and of the gods fighting together with the men who worſhipped them. However, they muſt have known, that the Jewiſh law was delivered on a hill; that the temple of Jeruſalem ſtood on a hill. They could not but know, that the enemy's country was very hilly, and that the Iſraelites were particularly fond of ſacrificing and worſhipping in high places. Knowing all this, it is no wonder, that the Syrians, conſidering the theology of the times, ſhould talk after ſo wild a rate.

(F) It may be very well asked, why the Syrians, ſeeing the advantage of numbers ſo greatly on their ſide, lay idle ſo long? But it may be anſwered, that the Iſraelites were incamped on a hill, and therefore they would not venture to attack them, chooſing to ſtay till they ſhould ſhift their quarters.

(G) This is ſo extraordinary a caſualty, that it may be well asked how it came to paſs? It is ſuppoſed they ranged themſelves round the walls of the city to make a defence; and that the walls were

The SYRIAC ALPHABET.

The Common Character.					The Estrangelo.
Power.	Figure.				Names.	Figure.
	Joined both to the following and preceding. Letter only.	Joined to the following Letter only.	Joined to the preceding Letter only.	Single.
The Support of a Vowel.	⅃	⅁			Olaf.	⅂
B.	⅄	ⅅ	ⅆ	ⅇ	Beth.	⅁
G.	ⅈ	ⅉ	⅊	⅋	Gomal.	⅌
D.		⅍		?	Dolath.	ⅎ
H.		⅏		⅐	He.	⅑
W.		⅒		⅑	Waw.	⅒
Z.		⅓		⅓	Zain.	⅓
Hb.	⅔	⅔	⅔	⅔	Hbeth.	⅔
T.	⅕	⅕	⅕	⅕	Teth.	⅕
Y.	⅖	⅖	⅖	⅖	Yûd.	⅖
C or Kb.	⅗	⅗	⅗	⅗	Cof.	⅗
L.	⅘	⅘	⅘	⅘	Lomad.	⅘
M.	⅙	⅙	⅙	⅙	Mim.	⅙
N.	⅚	⅚	⅚	⅚	Nun.	⅚
S.	⅛	⅛	⅛	⅛	Semcath ΔΔ	⅛
The Support of a Vowel, but a Guttural.	⅜	⅜	⅜	⅜	E.	⅜
F. or P.	⅝	⅝	⅝	⅝	Pe.	⅝
S {grosly pron.		⅞		⅞	Sode.	⅞
K.	⅋	⅌	⅍	ⅎ	Kof.	⅏
R.		⅐		?	Rish.	⅑
Sh.	⅒	⅓	⅔	⅕	Shin.	⅖
T. or Th.		⅗		⅘	Tau.	⅙

The Syrians were covered with ſhame at ſo inglorious a flight, and would gladly have found out ſome excuſe to palliate it. They pretended, that the gods of the Iſraelites being the gods of the hills, it was no wonder, that ſuch a misfortune had befallen them; and, to comfort their king, aſſured him, that if he could but draw out the Iſraelites upon a plain, his gods would prevail in their turn, as they preſided over the plains (E). They moreover laid ſome blame upon the two and thirty kings, as not hearty in his cauſe, or ſubmiſſive enough to diſcipline, and deſired, that truſty ſkilful officers might be ſubſtituted inſtead of them. They then adviſed their king to levy juſt ſuch an army as the former, chariot for chariot, horſe for horſe, and never doubt of ſucceſs.

BEN-HADAD hearkened to all this, and bore his diſhonour as uneaſily, we may ſuppoſe, as any of his ſubjects could for him. And when the ſeaſon of the year came about, he marched towards the king of Iſrael with ſuch an army, as if he meant to make good what he had boaſted towards the city of Samaria. He pitched in Aphek, in a plain we may be ſure, to be within the reach of his own gods, and filled the country, as it is expreſſed. Seven days he lay here incamped, over-againſt the deſpicable numbers of the Iſraelites (F). Upon the ſeventh day it came to a battle between them, and that day the Syrians loſt of foot only one hundred thouſand. This ſlaughter ſo confounded them, that they gave ground, and retreated with precipitation to the city of Aphek itſelf, which was near, where twenty ſeven thouſand of them were cruſhed to death by the city wall, which fell on them (G). Year of the Flood, 2099. Year before Chriſt 900.

BEN-HADAD

(E) So early was the notion of topical deities, and of the gods fighting together with the men who worſhipped them. However, they muſt have known, that the Jewiſh law was delivered on a hill; that the temple of Jeruſalem ſtood on a hill. They could not but know, that the enemy's country was very hilly, and that the Iſraelites were particularly fond of ſacrificing and worſhipping in high places. Knowing all this, it is no wonder, that the Syrians, conſidering the theology of the times, ſhould talk after ſo wild a rate.

(F) It may be very well asked, why the Syrians, ſeeing the advantage of numbers ſo greatly on their ſide, lay idle ſo long? But it may be anſwered, that the Iſraelites were incamped on a hill, and therefore they would not venture to attack them, chooſing to ſtay till they ſhould ſhift their quarters.

(G) This is ſo extraordinary a caſualty, that it may be well asked how it came to paſs? It is ſuppoſed they ranged themſelves round the walls of the city to make a defence; and that the walls were

BEN-HADAD now gave all over for loſt, and was not a little ſurprized, perhaps, that his gods had failed him. In deſpair therefore he concealed himſelf in the city of Aphek; but his officers reminding him, that the kings of Iſrael had been generous enemies, adviſed him to throw himſelf upon Ahab's mercy, and offered themſelves to prepare the conqueror to receive him kindly, with ſackcloth on their loins, and ropes about their necks. In this humble diſguiſe they accordingly went and accoſted Ahab, intreating him in behalf of their king. Ahab, overjoyed at his victory, was in admirable temper to receive them, and in a kind of tranſport called Ben-hadad his brother, and declared he was glad to hear he was living. The artful Syrians caught at the word brother, and made the beſt uſe of it they could for the ſervice of their diſconſolate king. Ben-hadad then was brought to Ahab, who deſired him to ſtep up into his chariot. While he was thus in the chariot with Ahab, he made many proteſtations and promiſes to him. He promiſed to deliver up all his father had wreſted from Iſrael, and not only that, but to allow Ahab great authority in his capital Damaſcus, even the ſame his own father had enjoyed in Samaria (H). By theſe fair ſpeeches beaten down upon them by the Iſraelites, or ſhook down by an earthquake (11) In a word, that God was immediately concerned in this deſtruction (12). It need not be ſuppoſed they were all deſtroyed, but partly killed, and partly wounded or diſperſed.

(H) What privilege or authority Ben-hadad promiſes to Ahab is very doubtful. What privilege or authority Ben hadad's father enjoyed in Samaria, is a queſtion we ſhould be glad to clear up, were it poſſible. Joſephus (13) has it, that Ahab ſhould have as free liberty in Damaſcus as his father had had in the city of Samaria, which was built but a few years before by Omri king of Iſrael. It is moſt likely, according to the LXX and the Vulgate, that he promiſes Ahab, the Iſraelites ſhould live free in Damaſcus, with all the liberties they enjoyed at home; that they ſhould have free ingreſs and egreſs [ἔξοδον], according to the former, or build them ſtreets to live together, by their own country laws, according to the latter; and the ſame, it ſeems, had been enjoyed by the Syrians in Samaria: this is the apparent ſenſe of our own verſion of this paſſage, and the moſt ſtrictly agreeable with the original. "Some think by "ſtreets, he means market places where commodities were ſold, "the toll of which ſhould belong to Ahab. Others think he means "courts of judgment, where he ſhould maintain a juriſdiction over (11) Patrick upon 1 Kings xx 30. (12) Cleric. in 1 Reg, xx. 30. (13) Antiq. ubi ſupr.

"Ben hadad's

ſpeeches he ſo wrought upon the mind of Ahab, that he was immediately reſtored to his liberty, and a peace was concluded [m].

How ſtrictly ſoever Ben-hadad adhered to his word with Ahab in other reſpects, he kept poſſeſſion of Ramoth-gilead, which was the ſubject of a freſh war, wherein he was invaded by Ahab, who alſo prevailed on Jehoſhaphat, king of Judah, to be his confederate. The two kings led their forces againſt Ramoth-gilead; where they found the Syrians prepared to receive them; but Ahab, having ſufficient reaſon to fear that the enemy would mark him out for deſtruction, diſguiſed himſelf before the battle, while the king of Judah put on his royal robes. The apprehenſions of Ahab were not without foundation; for the king of Syria commanded his two and thirty captains, who had rule over his chariots, to direct their arms only againſt the king of Iſrael. This had like to have proved fatal to Jehoſhaphat, who had inevitably been ſlain, had not the officers ceaſed their purſuit of him, when they diſcovered that he was not the perſon they had in commiſſion to deſtroy. But Ahab's precautions could not ſave him from the fate he endeavoured to evade; for one of the Syrians (I) drew a bow at a venture, and ſmote him between the joints of his harneſs: upon which he ordered his charioteer to carry him out of the field of battle, and died in the evening. But whether the Syrian chiefs had any knowledge of this accident,

[m] 1 Kings xx.

" Ben-hadad's ſubjects: others, that we now call a piazza, of which " Ahab ſhould receive the rents. But commonly interpreters think " he means fortifications, whereby he might bridle the chief city " of the kingdom of Syria; that they might not make irruptions " into the land of Iſrael. Citadels, as we now ſpeak, to keep " them in awe, and to be a check to them, if they attempted any " thing againſt the Iſraelites: yet, after all, Gotf. Vallandus hath " ſaid a great deal to prove, that the Hebrew word ſignifies Pa- " laces; which he being allowed to build, was a great token of ſub- " jection (13)". We muſt here obſerve, that we read of no cities Ben-hadad's father took from Ahab. What he took was from Baaſha. However, he may have made other incroachments upon the kingdom of Iſrael, which are omitted.

(I) The Syrian who drew this bow is, by Joſephus, called Aman. According to the ſame hiſtorian, Ben-hadad was in this battle himſelf; to us it ſeems, that he did not command in perſon, but committed the conduct of this war to Naaman.

(13) Patrick upon 1 Kings xx. 34.

and, giving over their ſearch, joined in the aſſault, we cannot pretend to ſay; but it appears, that the battle was fierce and obſtinate, and that it laſted till night; under the covert of which each ſide drew off, with equal loſs and doubtful victory [n].

The ſtory of Naaman's leproſy.

Now the general, who commanded the Syrians in the laſt battle, was called Naaman; and, for his behaviour and conduct upon that day, his maſter beheld him as the deliverer of his country, and received him into higheſt favour as ſuch: and indeed he ſeems to have been a very excellent perſon; but unfortunately he was a leper, which drew him to Samaria, hoping there to be cleanſed, as he was. For the Syrians, it ſeems, continuing at enmity with Iſrael, made frequent inroads into their country, and, at times, carried off great booty, and numbers of captives. It happened that a captive among the reſt, a little maid, as ſhe is called, ſerved in the houſe of Naaman; and obſerving her maſter to be a leper, would wiſh him at Samaria, where was a prophet who could relieve him. Thus was ſhe wont to expreſs herſelf to her miſtreſs; and at laſt it was reported to Naaman himſelf, that ſhe had ſaid ſo and ſo. Naaman then told it to Ben-hadad, who was for embracing any opportunity to procure him relief, and with that intent wrote a letter to the king of Iſrael, to recommend Naaman to him, and to entreat, that he would cure him of his leproſy. With this letter Naaman departed, taking with him ten talents of ſilver, ſix thouſand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment, that he might reward the perſon who ſhould cleanſe him, in proportion to his own elevated rank, and in proportion to the value of ſo great a bleſſing. He mounted his chariot, and went attended by a number of horſemen, and delivered his letter to the king of Iſrael. Jehoram miſtook Ben-hadad's meaning, and thought he wanted him in perſon to cure Naaman, an impoſſibility for him to do, and fancied, that he only ſought thereby an opportunity to wage open war with him. Naaman in this comfortleſs dilemma, received a meſſage from Eliſha, who promiſed to help him. He therefore went to the prophet's houſe, and ſtopped at the door with all his train. Here he waited ſome time, and at laſt a ſervant came out to him from the prophet, with orders, that he ſhould waſh himſelf ſeven times in the river Jordan (K). This direction, after ſo patient an attendance, [n] 1 Kings xxii. 3, —35.

(K) It is obſerved, that by the laws of Moſes lepers were ſprinkled dance, provoked him to diſdain. He thought he was derided. He expected the prophet to have appeared in perſon, in a formal manner, to call upon the name of GOD, and apply his hands to the afflicted parts. If waſhing could be of any avail, he thought the ſtreams of Abana and Pharpar at Damaſcus, far beyond any waters of Iſrael: in ſhort, thus diſappointed, as he thought, he gave vent to the keeneſt reſentment. But his attendants, much grieved to obſerve him in ſuch diſorder, begged him, in the moſt diſcreet and affectionate terms, to conſider how eaſy a matter it was to follow the prophet's directions, whether any good came of it or not; and he, being a man of ſenſe, hearkened to them, and drove to the river, and dipping himſelf ſeven times therein, was perfectly changed *.

HE returned to the prophet with inexpreſſible joy, renounced all idolatry, and would gladly have forced a preſent upon him; but his endeavours this way were to no purpoſe. He entreated the prophet to grant him two mule-loads of earth, it being his deſign to worſhip or ſacrifice to none other but GOD. He then conſulted Eliſha, whether or no it might be lawful for him to attend on his king in the temple of Rimmon, his office requiring him to ſupport his prince at his devotions, ſo that he could not avoid bowing down when he did. As for the earth, it is not ſaid that the prophet granted him any (L); and ſprinkled ſeven times (14). It is ſuppoſed, that there was ſomething peculiarly efficacious in a ſevenfold repetition, as the Almighty went through the great and beneficent work of creation within ſeven days (15); that accordingly it was enjoined in honour of GOD, and being performed had its proper effects.

* This, ſays biſhop Patrick (16), was the only cure of a leproſy we read of, till CHRIST, the great prophet came into the world. It was, and ſtill is, in thoſe parts, as loathſome a diſeaſe, as it is inveterate. It differs much from the leproſy which is ſeen among us. It defiles the whole ſurface of the body with a foul ſcurf, deforms the joints, particularly at the wriſts and ankles, which ſwell out with a gouty ſcrophulous ſubſtance, very loathſome to look on; the legs of thoſe afflicted with it look like thoſe of old battered horſes: in ſhort, it may paſs for the utmoſt corruption of the human body on this ſide the grave (17).

(L) It is not ſaid, in the text, that Eliſha granted this his requeſt; but our tranſlators, in their argument to the chapter, where this whole ſtory is found, imagine that he did. From the words which

(14) Levit. xiv. 7. (15) Cleric. in 2 Reg. v. (16) Upon 2 Kings v. 14. (17) Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſ. in the Append. Letter II.

follow,

and as for his ſcruple of conſcience we have not the prophet's deciſion thereon; he left it, perhaps, undecided, as a matter of indifference in Naaman's caſe, and diſmiſſed him in peace.

Naaman, thus purified both in body and mind, departed; but, being on the road, was circumvented by Gehazi the prophet's ſervant, who accoſted him with a forgery in the prophet's name, whereby he got from him one talent of ſilver, and two changes of raiment; wherefore his leproſy became entailed upon Gehazi and his poſterity [o]; which is ſaid to have given this generous Syrian an opportunity of diſplaying a noble inſtance of his generoſity, the good effects of which are ſaid to ſubſiſt at this very day (M).

Soon after Naaman's return to Damaſcus, Ben-hadad began to execute ſome private deſigns againſt Jehoram king of Iſrael; whence it is naturally enough gathered, that Naaman either died, or reſigned, or was diſcarded, very ſoon after his return home (N). It was not an open war that Ben-hadad meditated againſt the king of Iſrael, but all was ſecret, and myſterious, and ſtratagem (O). But Ben-hadad was continually follow, it appears that he wanted this earth to raiſe an altar with it, a pious motive, though miſtaken.

[o] 2 Kings v.

(M) This is ſaid by a mere tradition, no doubt, but we do not know how to paſs it over. At Damaſcus, juſt by the city walls, is an hoſpital richly endowed for the reception of lepers; ſaid to be the ſame built by Naaman for Gehazi, ſervant to Eliſha (18).

(N) A late writer (19) tells us, without heſitation, that Naaman loſt his great office of general for refuſing to worſhip Rimmon; but the argument he builds on, which is the next thing we ſhall conſider, ſeems to be but weak.

(O) The words of the text (20) itſelf are; Then the king of Syria warred againſt Iſrael, and took counſel with his ſervants, ſaying in ſuch and ſuch a place ſhall be my camp; and by what follows, he enjoined them ſtrict ſecreſy. From hence the late writer (21), we juſt now touched on, affirms that Naaman was diſplaced; for which reaſon the king of Syria now commanded his army in perſon, and being not uſed to ſuch exerciſes, he on all occaſions conſulted his general officers. Did not Ben-hadad command his army twice in perſon before; once at Samaria, and once in the fatal day of Aphek? why then ſhould he not command it a third time? and why muſt he

(18) Thevenot's Travels into the Levant, Par. II. Book I. cap iv
(19) Basnage's Script. Chron. p. 627. (20) 2 Kings vi 8 (21) Basnage ubi ſupr.

he

nually fruſtrated in all his aims, and began to ſuſpect the fidelity of ſome about him. To remove ſo dangerous a ſuſpicion from his breaſt, he was told, that it muſt certainly be Eliſha who diſconcerted all his meaſures, he being indued with ſuch a degree of omniſcience that nothing could be concealed from him, though tranſacted in the greateſt privacy imaginable. Ben-hadad had heard enough concerning that prophet, from Naaman, to incline him to believe as much; and therefore, by a ſtrange abſence of thought, reſolved to lay hands on him in the firſt place; and to that purpoſe, detached a ſtrong party to Dothan, where he underſtood him then to be. They came to that city in the night, and the next morning were, by the prophet, ſmitten with ſuch a deception of ſight, that they ſuffered him to guide them into the very heart of the city of Samaria, where their right ſenſe returned to them, that they might behold their ſituation. Here, inſtead of being made priſoners of war, they were hoſpitably entertained, and generouſly diſmiſſed; and making their report to Ben-hadad of all that had happened, the prophet's power, and the king's humanity, a ſtop was put to the war (P).

THIS peaceable diſpoſition ſubſiſted not long, and in the concluſion Ben-hadad marched againſt Samaria [P] once more. This city he beſieged with his whole force, reduced it to the greateſt ſtraits, and was on the point of taking it by famine; ſo that either the ſiege was long and obſtinate, or elſe the place was poorly ſtored. He, as we have ſaid, was on the point of taking the city, when he was alarmed in the night, by a noiſe like that of a great army ruſhing in upon him; and preſently it came into his head, that Joram had hired the kings of the Hittites (Q) and Egypt to come to his be ſo ignorant in military affairs? if he committed his army for once to the conduct of another, muſt it be thought he did it always? Finally, what wiſe king was there ever who did not on all occaſions conſult his general officers? It is certainly wrong in an hiſtorian to be poſitive in matters of palpable darkneſs, to be fond of an hypotheſis, that is, to write by the ſpirit.

[P] 2 Kings vi. 8—29.

(P) According to Joſephus (22), upon the report they made to their king, he gave over his private deſigns, and ſtrait reſolved, inſtead thereof, to wage open war with Joram

(Q) Who theſe kings of the Hittites were is very uncertain. Joſephus (23) calls them the kings of the iſlands. That any remnant

(22) Antiq. l. 9. c. 2. (23) Ubi ſupr,

his relief; the apprehenſion of which ſo terrified him, that he raiſed the ſiege with unſpeakable precipitation. His army would not ſo much as take time to mount, but left every thing ſtanding in the camp juſt as it was, when they took the alarm, and dropped every thing that was in the leaſt cumberſome to them as they went along. They might have tracked them by the cloaths and veſſels they threw away from them in their haſte [q].

Ben-hadad muſt at this time have been well advanced in years, and whether he had contracted ſome illneſs by the fatigue of his flight, and violence of his ſurprize, or whether his ſpirits were broken by ſo repeated a ſhame, he took to his bed. As he lay ſick it was told him, the prophet Eliſha was coming to Damaſcus (R); whereupon he ſent Hazael, with forty camels load of the choiceſt productions (S) of Damaſcus, to conſult the prophet concerning his indiſpoſition. Hazael then went to the prophet, whom he accoſted in the moſt reſpectful manner on the behalf of Ben-hadad. The anſwer he received was, that Ben-hadad might recover, but would not. The prophet having expreſſed himſelf in this dark manner, fixed his eyes upon Hazael, till he put the man out of countenance (T), and ſuddenly burſt into tears. Hazael, amazed at this, and humbly deſiring to know what might be the cauſe of it, was told, That he was to ſucceed Ben-hadad, and to be a cruel and mercileſs perſecutor of the children of Iſrael; that he would ſet their ſtrong holds on fire, remnant of the Canaanitiſh Hittites ſhould at this time be formidable in any of theſe parts, is paſt our underſtanding, though ſome think that way (24). We are told, the remnant of them was reduced to the moſt abject degree of ſervitude by Solomon (25).

[q] Ibid. vii. 6, 7.

(R) By Joſephus (26) the prophet was not yet arrived at Damaſcus, and Hazael was ſent out to meet him. Some (27) ſuppoſe he was juſt coming into the city.

(S) By the largeneſs of this preſent, it is thought Eliſha was accompanied by many of the ſons of the prophets, or that even four camels load had been ſufficient (28).

(T) This ſeems to be the moſt natural explication of the text. Hazael beheld the prophet with an eye of veneration, and as one infinitely his ſuperior, and therefore was abaſhed when Eliſha fixed his eyes ſo ſtedfaſtly upon him.

(24) Patrick upon 1 Kings x. 29. Cleric. in 2 Reg. vii. 6. (25) See before 188. (26) Ubi ſupr. (27) Patrick upon 2 Kings viii. 7. (28) Cleric. in 2 Reg. viii. 9.

fire, ſlay their young men with the ſword, daſh their children, and rip up their women with child. Hazael profeſſed to underſtand not what the prophet meant, nor could conceive how ſo mean a perſon as himſelf could ever have it in his power to commit ſuch outrages (U): whereupon he received a further confirmation, a confirmation from GOD himſelf, that he was to be king of Syria. With this he returns to his maſter, who, by this ſolicitous meſſage to the prophet, unknowingly ſhortened the term of his days. Hazael flattered him with hopes of recovery, but the next day ſtifled him with a thick cloth dipped in water [r]. So ended the reign of the great Ben-hadad, who having adorned Damaſcus with fine ſtructures, as is ſaid, and added to the glory of Syria, was advanced to be a god (X) [f]. Hazael.

HAZAEL, having thus murdered his ſick lord, aſcended his throne. He had, by the wiſe providence of GOD, been nominated to the diadem of Syria ſome years before, and the prophet Elijah had orders to anoint him [t]. He was a ſcourge [r] Ibid. viii. 7. 15. [f] JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 9. c. 2. [t] 1 Kings xix. 15.

(U) The text runs; But what is thy ſervant a dog, that he ſhould do this great thing? Whereby moſt have underſtood, that he diſclaimed ſuch barbarity as the prophet foretold of him; but the real meaning of this paſſage is, but what is thy ſervant, a dog? alluding to his mean condition, which would never allow him to commit what only a great prince had power to do (29). This is confirmed by the prophet's anſwer, that he was to be king of Syria; which comes in very naturally.

(X) We are almoſt tempted to think, that Hazael may have been the chief promoter of this deification, to cover his own guilt. He ſeems to have been afraid it ſhould be known he was the murderer of his maſter, by his manner of diſpatching him. Joſephus calls this Ben-hadad, by the names of Adad, Adar, and Ader; which difference ariſes from the near ſimilitude of the Hebrew R and D, as we have already (30) noted. According to Sir Iſaac Newton (31), the Damaſcus and Arathes we formerly mentioned (32), were this Ben-hadad and his queen, who were worſhipped in their ſepulchres, or temples. But by this ſuppoſition it ſhould ſeem, that idolatry was yet in its nonage among the Syrians, whereas Joſephus (33) talks of ſtately temples erected by Ben-hadad in his life-time (34).

(29) See Patrick upon 2 Kings viii. 13. Vid. etiam Cleric. in 2 Reg. viii. 13. & Joſeph. Antiq. ubi ſupr. (30) See before in the notes, p. 270, (A). (31) Short Chronol. p. 32. (32) See before in the notes, p 255, (F). (33) Ubi ſupr. (34) See Sir Iſaac Newton's Chron. of ant. kingd. apud p. 222 in the hand of God, to chaſtiſe the kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael, and under him the Syrian monarchy aroſe to its meridian. However, he ſeems to have ſat very quietly on his throne, till he was provoked by Joram king of Iſrael, and Abaziah king of Judah, who leagued againſt him to wreſt Ramoth-gilead out of his hands, in imitation of what their fathers had attempted in the reign of Ben-hadad; and ſo it happened, that Hazael either could not, or would not prevent them from poſſeſſing themſelves of that city, as we apprehend, though Joram was dangerouſly wounded in the attempt. But Hazael made himſelf ample amends, by invading both the kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael, and purſuing them almoſt to deſtruction. He began with Jehu king of Iſrael, and ſubdued to his dominion, all in general that belonged to the kingdom of Iſrael, on the other ſide Jordan, the countries of Gilead and Baſhan, the two tribes Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh [u]. In the proſecution of this conqueſt he, no doubt, punctually fulfilled, by his cruel rage, all the things the mournful prophet had foretold of him, in the remarkable converſation they had together (Y).

in

Year of the Flood, 2115. Year before Chriſt 884.

With the ſame fury and ſucceſs he waged war upon Jehoahaz, the ſon of Jehu, till he had left him but fifty horſe, ten chariots, and ten thouſand foot; for the reſt had periſhed in battle againſt Hazael, who, as it is ſtrongly expreſſed, made them like the duſt by threſhing; and, to conclude, he oppreſſed Iſrael all his days [x].

Year of the Flood, 2159. Year before Chriſt 840

Hazael, having thus chaſtiſed Iſrael, turned his arms againſt the kingdom of Judah, for they had both confederated againſt him; ſo that he had a fair pretence for infeſting them both. He croſſed the Jordan therefore; and, after ſeveral ſucceſsful attempts upon other places, as we may ſuppoſe, made himſelf maſter of the ſtrong and royal city of Gath [y], which had been the ſeat of the Philiſtine kings, but was now poſſeſſed by the houſe of David [z]. His next thought was to attempt Jeruſalem itſelf; but, as he was meditating this great enterprize, he was diverted therefrom by the rich gifts of the weak and apoſtate Jehoaſh, who then reigned at Jeruſalem; and who, dreading the Syrian power, ſent Hazael all [u] 2 Kings x. 31---33. [x] Ibid. xiii. 3, 7, 22. [y] Ibid. xii. 17. [z] See before in the Notes, p. 226, 231.

(Y) Joſephus (35) aſſures us he did; that he neither ſpared man, woman, or child, where ever he came, but put all to fire and ſword.

(35) Ubi ſupr. c. 8.

the

the treaſure and rich moveables that had been ſet apart, and dedicated by his father for ſacred, and other uſes. Hazael was pacified with ſo noble a preſent, and deſiſted from his deſigns againſt Jeruſalem [a] for a while.

BUT he was ſoon ſtirred up again to war upon Jeruſalem; he had not yet been the inſtrument of ſufficient judgment upon that diſtracted city. Wherefore towards the end of the ſame year, as we apprehend, he detached a party from his army to ſerve againſt that city, and to make good his firſt intentions on it. This party is expreſly remarked to have been very ſmall; but yet it prevailed againſt the great hoſt of Jehoaſh king of Judah, ſacked Jeruſalem, ſlew all the princes of the people there, and ſent their ſpoil to Hazael at Damaſcus (Z). And by this expedition did Hazael alſo make himſelf maſter of Elath on the Red-ſea, as appears, and as we ſhall endeavour to confirm hereafter, in the hiſtory of Rezin, the laſt king of Syria. Hazael having thus ſubdued, and tyrannized over the kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah, died, and was deified (A).

[a] 2 Kings xii. 17. 18.

(Z) Joſephus (36) makes but one expediton of theſe two. According to him, Hazael, having taken Gath, ſtrait beſieged Jeruſalem; whence he was prevailed on to depart, by the great bribes mentioned in ſcripture. But it is impoſſible, that what is ſaid of Hazael's war with Judah, as it is repreſented in the ſecond book of Kings (37), and in the ſecond book of Chronicles (38), ſhould have been otherwiſe than we have repreſented. Nothing is plainer, than that thoſe two books ſpeak of two very widely different events.

(A) It is no wonder, conſidering the blindneſs of the times, that they deified ſo fortunate and ſo great a prince as Hazael. He, as well as his predeceſſor Ben-hadad, adorned Damaſcus with temples, and their ſtatues were carried about in proceſſion in the days of Joſephus (39), the Syrians boaſting their antiquity. From hence there is room to imagine theſe two to have been their primary deities, and that the temples they are famed for building, were no more than noble ſepulchres for themſelves (40); but we forbear, to expatiate hereon, and, having given the hint, ſubmit it to better judgments.

(36) Ibid. (37) xii. 17, 18. (38) xxiv. 23, 24.
(39) Ubi ſupr. c. 2. (40) See Sir Iſaac Newton's Chron. of ant. kingd. amend. p. 222. See before p. 255.

HE

Ben-hadad III. Year of the Flood, 2163. Year before Christ 836.

He left behind him a son and successor, called Ben-hadad, who suffered a total reverse of his father's fortune, ere he had reigned long (B). Thrice was he defeated by Jehoash, the son of Jehoahaz king of Israel, whereby he lost all that his father had wrested from Israel. Nothing more is said of this obscure and unfortunate reign. However, nothing is more likely, than that this Ben-hadad was subdued to a tribute by Jeroboam, the son of Jehoash, king of Israel, who kept Syria in the strictest subjection, during all his long reign.

Rezin. Year of the Flood, 2257. Year before Christ, 742.

The Syrians recovered themselves again, amidst the disorders which raged in the kingdom of Israel upon Jeroboam's death; but not so perfectly as to be quite a free people; for we are apt to think they were under considerable acknowledgments to the newly-erected empire of Assyria (C). But not

(B) It is said (41), The anger of the lord was kindled against Israel, and he delivered them into the hand of Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of Ben hadad the son of Hazael, all their days. Whence it might be imagined, that Ben hadad kept Israel under as long as he lived. But the word their is not in the original, and by what follows (42), it is evident, that the text means no such thing, referring only to the days of Hazael himself. To solve this matter, however, it is likely, that Ben-hadad was taken into the government by his father as his colleague; and that as long as they reigned together, they kept Israel under. St. Jerom (43) writes, that all the subsequent kings of Syria were called Ben-hadad from this prince, the third of the name according to scripture. This we take notice of, as it is apparently a great mistake. This prince borrowed the name of Ben-hadad from the first race of the Damascene kings, to which his father was an alien. The names Hadad and Ben-hadad were affected, as it seems, by all the kings of Syria, from Hadadezer of Zobah downwards. Ben hadad signifies only the son of Hadad. The father of the first prince of this name is called Tabrimon; but by his son's name it may to some appear, that he was also stiled Hadad (44). Josephus calls him Adad, and we must desire the reader to excuse an omission in the list of Damascene kings, according to that historian, and to write Adad under Hazael.

(C) This is a conjecture which we apprehend to have some tolerable foundation. The kingdom of Damascus had been broken and enervated by servitude under Israel; and when Pul king of Assyria, was stirred against Menahem, the third that bore the title of king in Israel after Jeroboam, we cannot conceive, but he must have not to dwell on this uncertainty, Rezin was their laſt king. Towards the latter end of his reign, he entered into a league with Pekah king of Iſrael, againſt Ahaz king of Judah. They were ſtirred up by heaven to puniſh Ahaz, and their deſign was to dethrone him, and make room for a ſtranger to David's line called, Tabeal [b]. With this intent they beſieged Ahaz in Jeruſalem, but without effect. Rezin, however, that he might not be wholly a ſufferer by this diſappointment, marched his army into Edom, and, whatever elſe he did there, made himſelf maſter of Elath on the Red-ſea, which he annexed once more to the dominion of Syria (D), and there he planted a colony of his own (E), Year of the Flood, 2258. Year before Chriſt 741.

(41) 2 Kings xiii. 3. (42) Ver. 22. (43) Amos i. (44) See before, p. 265.

marched

[b] Iſai. vii. 1—6.

marched through Syria, and have made himſelf maſter there in the firſt place. It is plain he was bent upon extending his dominion, and how he could think of reducing Iſrael before he had ſecured Syria, which lay between him and his projected conqueſt farther weſtward, is what we cannot conceive. It is likely, that Syria, invited him, ſubmitted to him, and joined him, and that it now firſt became a province of Aſſyria.

(D) Our verſion ſays, he recovered Elath to Syria; ſo, ſays the vulgate; in tempore illo reſtituit Raſin rex Syriæ, Ailam Syriæ. Whence we gather, it muſt have been conquered to Syria by Hazael, when he ſent a part of his army againſt Jeruſalem (45). Benhadad II. his predeceſſor, had no war that we read of with the king of Judah, and after Hazael's death, Syria was unable to make her own cauſe good, and therefore but ill qualified to extend her dominion. Azariah king of Judah reſtored it to Judah (46), and drove out the Syrians (47), when they were ſubdued by Jeroboam king of Iſrael. Le Clerc, in his verſion, will have it, that he reſtored this noble emporium to the Edomites, taking on him, by a little too much preſumption, to alter the reading of the text from לארם Laaram, to לאדום Leedom. It had been but common juſtice in Rezin to have reſtored it to its natural lord; but we cannot enter into le Clerc's notion that he did it, becauſe the place was too far out of his reach to keep. He was ſtronger than the king of Judah, and might upon that account have kept it long enough, had he lived.

(E) Both the LXX and the vulgate agree, that Rezin having ſubdued this place, the Edomites took poſſeſſion of it. But it is not to be imagined, that Rezin could ſo eaſily part with ſo fine an acquiſition. If any heed may be given to Joſephus (48), he agrees with our reading and tranſlation, ſaying, that Rezin planted a colony of Syrians in Elath.

(45) See before, p. 287. (46) 2 Kings xiv. 22. (47) See Patrick upon 2 Kings xvi. 6. (48) Ubi ſupr. c. 12.

Ben-hadad III. Year of the Flood, 2163. Year before Christ 836.

He left behind him a son and successor, called Ben-hadad, who suffered a total reverse of his father's fortune, ere he had reigned long (B). Thrice was he defeated by Jehoash, the son of Jehoahaz king of Israel, whereby he lost all that his father had wrested from Israel. Nothing more is said of this obscure and unfortunate reign. However, nothing is more likely, than that this Ben-hadad was subdued to a tribute by Jeroboam, the son of Jehoash, king of Israel, who kept Syria in the strictest subjection, during all his long reign.

Rezin. Year of the Flood, 2257. Year before Christ, 742.

The Syrians recovered themselves again, amidst the disorders which raged in the kingdom of Israel upon Jeroboam's death; but not so perfectly as to be quite a free people; for we are apt to think they were under considerable acknowledgments to the newly-erected empire of Assyria (C). But not

(B) It is said (41), The anger of the lord was kindled against Israel, and he delivered them into the hand of Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of Ben hadad the son of Hazael, all their days. Whence it might be imagined, that Ben hadad kept Israel under as long as he lived. But the word their is not in the original, and by what follows (42), it is evident, that the text means no such thing, referring only to the days of Hazael himself. To solve this matter, however, it is likely, that Ben-hadad was taken into the government by his father as his colleague; and that as long as they reigned together, they kept Israel under. St. Jerom (43) writes, that all the subsequent kings of Syria were called Ben-hadad from this prince, the third of the name according to scripture. This we take notice of, as it is apparently a great mistake. This prince borrowed the name of Ben-hadad from the first race of the Damascene kings, to which his father was an alien. The names Hadad and Ben-hadad were affected, as it seems, by all the kings of Syria, from Hadadezer of Zobah downwards. Ben-hadad signifies only the son of Hadad. The father of the first prince of this name is called Tabrimon; but by his son's name it may to some appear, that he was also stiled Hadad (44). Josephus calls him Adad, and we must desire the reader to excuse an omission in the list of Damascene kings, according to that historian, and to write Adad under Hazael.

(C) This is a conjecture which we apprehend to have some tolerable foundation. The kingdom of Damascus had been broken and enervated by servitude under Israel; and when Pul king of Assyria, was stirred against Menahem, the third that bore the title of king in Israel after Jeroboam, we cannot conceive, but he must have marched

(41) 2 Kings xiii. 3. (42) Ver. 22. (43) Amos i.
(44) See before, p. 265.

not to dwell on this uncertainty, Rezin was their laſt king. Towards the latter end of his reign, he entered into a league with Pekah king of Iſrael, againſt Ahaz king of Judah. They were ſtirred up by heaven to puniſh Ahaz, and their deſign was to dethrone him, and make room for a ſtranger to David's line called, Tabeal [b]. With this intent they beſieged Ahaz in Jeruſalem, but without effect. Rezin, however, that he might not be wholly a ſufferer by this diſappointment, marched his army into Edom, and, whatever elſe he did there, made himſelf maſter of Elath on the Red-ſea, which he annexed once more to the dominion of Syria (D); and there he planted a colony of his own (E); marched through Syria, and have made himſelf maſter there in the firſt place. It is plain he was bent upon extending his dominion, and how he could think of reducing Iſrael before he had ſecured Syria, which lay between him and his projected conqueſt farther weſtward, is what we cannot conceive. It is likely, that Syria, invited him, ſubmitted to him, and joined him, and that it now firſt became a province of Aſſyria.

Year of the Flood, 2258. Year before Chriſt 741.

[b] Iſai. vii. 1—6.

(D) Our verſion ſays, he recovered Elath to Syria; ſo, ſays the vulgate; in tempore illo reſtituit Raſin rex Syriæ, Ailam Syriæ. Whence we gather, it muſt have been conquered to Syria by Hazael, when he ſent a part of his army againſt Jeruſalem (45). Benhadad II. his predeceſſor, had no war that we read of with the king of Judah, and after Hazael's death, Syria was unable to make her own cauſe good, and therefore but ill qualified to extend her dominion. Azariah king of Judah reſtored it to Judah (46), and drove out the Syrians (47), when they were ſubdued by Jeroboam king of Iſrael. Le Clerc, in his verſion, will have it, that he reſtored this noble emporium to the Edomites, taking on him, by a little too much preſumption, to alter the reading of the text from לארם Laaram, to לאדום Leedom. It had been but common juſtice in Rezin to have reſtored it to its natural lord; but we cannot enter into le Clerc's notion that he did it, becauſe the place was too far out of his reach to keep. He was ſtronger than the king of Judah, and might upon that account have kept it long enough, had he lived.

(E) Both the LXX and the vulgate agree, that Rezin having ſubdued this place, the Edomites took poſſeſſion of it. But it is not to be imagined, that Rezin could ſo eaſily part with ſo fine an acquiſition. If any heed may be given to Joſephus (48), he agrees with our reading and tranſlation, ſaying, that Rezin planted a colony of Syrians in Elath.

(45) See before, p. 287. (46) 2 Kings xiv. 22. (47) See Patrick upon 2 Kings xvi. 6. (48) Ubi ſupr. c. 12.

which ſubſiſted many years after the ſubverſion of the kingdom itſelf of Syria [c].

The next year Rezin and Pekah proſecuted the war againſt Ahaz, and, to diſtract him the more, divided their power into three bodies, that they might invade him in three different places at once. Rezin, for his part, ſucceeded well by this diviſion; for he loaded his army with ſpoils, and led away multitudes of captives, wherewith his avarice being pretty well glutted, he returned to Damaſcus [d].

But this acquiſition proved fatal to Rezin and his kingdom: for Ahaz, grown deſperate, and bent upon revenge, ſent all he had to Tiglath-pileſer, king of Aſſyria, therewith to bribe him againſt Rezin. Hence it was (F), that Rezin was invaded by Tiglath-pileſer, who ſlew him, and carried Damaſcus (G) away captive to Kir, whither they were tranſplanted [e]. Thus was the empire of the antient Syrians abolished according to the prophets; Behold Damaſcus is taken away from being a city ----- and the kingdom ſhall ceaſe from Damaſcus, and the remnant of Syria [f] --- I will ſend a fire into the houſe of Hazael, which ſhall devour the palaces of Benhadad. I will ---- cut off ---- him that holdeth the ſceptre from the houſe of Eden: and the people of Syria ſhall go into captivity unto Kir, ſaith the Lord [g].

Year of the Flood, 2259. Year before Chriſt 740.

The KINGS of HAMATH.

We have but a very ſhort, and imperfect account of theſe kings, whether as to their firſt ſetting up, or their continuance; and there is ſome doubt as to the ſituation of their

[c] 2 Kings xvi 6. [d] Id. ib. xv. 37. [e] 2 Kings ubi ſupr. ver. 9. [f] Iſai. xvii. 1, 3. [g] Amos i. 4, 5.

(F) Not for this reaſon only; there may have been another. We apprehend, that Rezin, being a turbulent enterprizing prince, gave umbrage to Tiglath-pileſer, to whom he was certainly tributary, or under ſome other obligation. For Tiglath-pileſer had warred in theſe parts before, with great ſucceſs againſt the Iſraelitiſh dominions (49). He may have been prompted to deſtroy Rezin, as he looked on him with a jealous eye, as well as to earn Ahaz's bribe, who promiſed to become his tributary into the bargain.

(G) Joſephus (50) makes but one action of this and the foregoing.

(49) See 2 Kings xv. 29. (50) Ubi ſupr.

city

city (H). They ſeem to have been raiſed by the Syrians of the Canaaniti∫h blood (I); at the ſame time the Syrians of Zobah, who we think were Aramites, erected their kingdom. And this they did perhaps to defend themſelves againſt the ambitious views of that new monarchy, and to keep themſelves in one diſtinct and entire body. But however this was, for we are perfectly in the dark concerning it, thus far is certain, that Toi (K), their firſt king we read of, was engaged in an unequal war with Hadadezer, the great king of Zobah; the ground of which we can apprehend to have been nothing elſe, but his refuſal to ſubmit to the power of that ambitious prince. In all probability, he was on the verge of ſubjection, when Hadadezer bowed under the ſuperior might of David, who having humbled the pride of Zobah. Toi beheld him in a double light, as his preſent deliverer, and his future protector. Toi therefore, to ſecure his people in their rights, and himſelf on the throne, ſent his ſon Joram with a coſtly preſent in veſſels of gold, and ſilver, and braſs, there- Year of the Flood, 1955. Year before Chriſt 1044.

(H) This city was called Hamath, and ſometimes Hamath the great (51): whence ſome have conceived there were two Hamaths, or cities ſo diſtinguiſhed; but for the ſame reaſon they ought to think there were two Sidons, which was ſometimes called plain Sidon, and ſometimes Sidon the Great (52). Joſephus (53) places Hamath to the north of the land of Canaan, and Abu'lfeda (54), who reigned in Hamath, and, who being ſo learned a prince as he was, ſhould know at leaſt, as well as any body, places Hamath upon the Orontes, between Hems and Apamea, that river ſurrounding it on the eaſt and north. There was a country of Hamath, ſurnamed Zobah, which lay to the eaſtward of the land of Canaan, about Palmyra or Tadmor (55); ſo that here may have been another city of the name, whence, after all, may have been derived the diſtinction of Hamath the Great.

(I) We have already offered ſomething from the Orientals, in proof, that ſome of Canaan's deſcendants did ſettle themſelves in Syria (56); to which we will now add from Abu'lfeda (57), that this whole country was called Shâm, becauſe many of the ſons of Canaan تَيَمَّنُوا Taſhâmu, or travelled towards the left hand in migrating thither; for Syria lies to the left of the Caaba at Mecca. This is one way of accounting for the name of Shâm, there are others which may be remarked hereafter.

(K) Joſephus writes him Thæus.

(51) Amos vi 2. (52) Joſh xi. 8. (53) Antiq. l. 9 c. 11. (54) Vid. Schult. Comment. Georg. in vit. Salad. ad voces Fluvius Orontes & Hamata. (55) See 2 Chron. viii. 3, 4. 1 Kings ix. 18. (56) See before in the Notes, p. 253. (57) Vid. Schult. ubi ſupr. ad vocem Syria.

with to conciliate the fortunate conqueror, and to congratulate him on his ſucceſſes, and return him thanks for the deliverance he owed him [h]. All this, to our apprehenſion, implies, that Toi became thereafter the creature of David, and tributary to his throne.

Whoever ſucceeded Toi, whether his ſon Joram, or Hadoram, or any other, it is likely he cultivated a good intelligence with the kings at Jeruſalem, till Rezon, the founder of the Damaſcene kingdom, aroſe. At this time it is likely the king of Hamath ſubmitted to a new maſter, or protector. To conclude; this kingdom was moſt certainly ſubject to the kings of Damaſcus, as was the reſt of Syria, till Jeroboam king of Iſrael prevailed againſt it [i], when he reduced Damaſcus. Upon the diſſolution and captivity of Damaſcus it may have lifted up its head a little [k]; but the Hamathites were in their turn conquered, and tranſplanted, by Sennacherib and Eſarhaddon [l], kings of Aſſyria. So ended the antient kingdom of Hamath.

The KINGS of GESHUR.

The kings of Geſhur, if compared with thoſe of Zobah, Damaſcus, and Hamath, were, it is likely, but petty princes (L). Perhaps they were far more conſiderable for the alliance David made with their family, than for the extent of their dominion. We take them to have been one of the royal families, which in antient times divided the whole country of Syria between them. The firſt of them we meet with is called Ammihud, who being the father of Talmai [m], who is expreſly ſaid to have been king of this part, we venture to give him the ſame title.

Year of the Flood, 1969. Year before Chriſt 1030.

Talmai. He had a daughter named Maacah, who was wife to David [n], and the mother of Abſalom, whom he ſheltered three years [o], when he fled to him for the murder of his brother Amnon. To conclude; we cannot doubt, but that Geſhur bore the Damaſcene yoke, till they finally changed it for the Aſſyrian, and were tranſplanted, as were all the other Syrians.

[h] 2 Sam. viii. 9, 10. [i] 2 Kings xiv. 28. [k] 2 Kings xviii. 34. xix. 11, 13. [l] Compare Ezra iv. 2. with 2 Kings xvii. 24. [m] 2 Sam. xiii. 37. [n] Ibid. iii. 3. [o] Ibid. xiii. 37, 38. xvi. 1.

(L) Joſephus (59) does not allow them to have been kings, but only a family of note and figure in the country where they dwelt.

CHAP.

(59) Antiq. l. 7. c. 8.

CHAP. VI.

The History of the PHOENICIANS.

SECT. I.

The Description of PHOENICE.

THE tract we commonly call Phœnicia is, more accurately, Phœnice; which being ſufficiently known to the learned, we ſhall not multiply words about it, but haſten to what is more material.

Name.

WHENCE it borrowed this name of Phœnice is not determined. Some [a] derive it from one Phœnix: others [b], from the Greek word Phœnix, ſignifying a palm, or date; as if that tree remarkably abounded here: ſome [c] again ſuppoſe that Phœnice is originally a tranſlation of the Hebrew word Edom, from the Edomites who fled hither [d] in the days of David. By the contraction of Canaan, (for it was a part of that land) it was alſo called Cna [e]. Antiently it was called Rhabbothin and Colpitis [f] (A). The Jews were wont to

[a] SYNCELL. p. 152. [b] Chron. Alex. p. 158. [c] Sir ISA. NEWT. Chron. of ant. Kingd. amend. [d] See before, p. 142. [e] See before, p. 267, & 268, (C). [f] STEPH. BYZAN. ad vocem. Φοινικὴ.

(A) This laſt name is a tranſlation of the firſt: רבהוצין, Rabhotſen, is in Hebrew a great gulph or bay. From Rabhotſen, by changing the Hebrew T S into the Greek T, comes Rabhoten, and with a little variation Rhabbothin. Κόλπος, Colpos, is Greek alſo for a bay or gulph; whence it appears, that Colpitis, or Colpites, is a tranſlation of Rhabbothin. Bochart (1) therefore is of opinion, that theſe names did not properly belong to the eaſtern Phœnice, or the country properly ſo called, but to the Phœnician colonies in Africa, whoſe principal cities ſtood upon great and deep gulphs or to call it Canaan [g], though ſome part of it at leaſt they knew by the name of Syrophœnice [h] (B). Theſe were the names peculiar to the ſmall country before us, though of them Phœnice was ſometimes extended to all the maritime countries of Syria and Judæa; and Canaan to the Philiſtines [i], and even the Amalekites (C). On the contrary, theſe two names, and the reſt, were moſt generally ſwallowed up by thoſe of Paleſtine [k] and Syria (D).

(1) Geogr. ſacr. l. 2. c. 13. col. 746.

The proper Phœnice, as preciſely as we can gather, lies between the thirty ſecond and thirty fifth degrees of north bays. However, he is not wholly unwilling to allow, that theſe names may have diſtinguiſhed a part of the proper Phœnice near Libanus, as he expreſſes himſelf, becauſe it had a deep gulph or bay, according to Mela. Tripoli ſtands in the deepeſt bay, at preſent, on this coaſt.

[g] Vid. Matt. xv. 22. [h] Vid. Mark vii. 26. [i] Zephan. ii. 5. [k] See before, p 190, 232.

(B) Bochart (2) clears up this matter thus. He ſuppoſes, that the borderers, both upon the Phœnician and Syrian ſide, were called by the common name of Syrophœnicians, as partaking equally of both nations. Some (3) would have it, that the Phœnicians of Aſia in general were called Syrophœnicians diacritically to diſtinguiſh them from the African Phœnicians. Others (4) take the Syrophœnicians and Cœleſyrians for the ſame people.

(C) Accordingly Philo (5) includes the Amalekites under the denomination of Phœnicians.

(D) Or rather Phœnice, Paleſtine, and Syria, were promiſcuouſly uſed for each other, and particularly the two former. Phœnice and Paleſtine, ſays Stephanus Byzantinus (6), were the ſame. As for Syria, we have already obſerved, that in its largeſt extent (7), it ſometimes comprehended Phœnice and Cœleſyria. Herodotus plainly confounds theſe three names, we mean, uſes one for the other indifferently. Firſt, he ſays, the Phœnicians, coming into Syria from the Red-ſea, ſettled in the maritime parts of Syria, and that the Phœnicians dwelt in Syria (8). In the next place, he ſays, that Phœnice was a part of Paleſtine, which, according to him, ſtretched along the ſea ſhore quite to Peluſium in Egypt (9). Thirdly, he places Aſhdod, or Azotus, in Syria (10), and Aſcalon in the Paleſtine Syria; but yet its inhabitants he calls Phœnicians (11). In a word, we could wiſh, that the geography ſince Herodotus's time had been leſs indiſtinct than his in many caſes.

(2) Geogr ſacr. p. 349. (3) Apud Bochart ubi ſupr. p. 350. (4) Vid. eund. ibid. (5) l. 1. p. 636. (6) Ad vocem Τύρος. (7) See before, p. 232. (8) Polyhymnia, c. 89. (9) Ibid & Euterpe, c. 104. (10) Ibid. c. 157. (11) Clio. c. 105.

latitude.

latitude. It took up no great ſpace of longitude; but whether more or leſs we ſhall paſs it over, being quite in the dark as to that. This, as near as we can gather, was the extent of this kingdom, and its ſituation. In general we may ſay, it was bounded by Syria on the north and the eaſt; by Judea on the ſouth; and by the mediterranean on the weſt.

THIS country was divided into two parts, the maritime and the mediterranean, or the coaſt and the country [l].

AND theſe two general diviſions were ſubdivided into diſtricts depending upon the more remarkable towns and cities, and ſo on. We ſhall ſee hereafter, that this country was partitioned into ſeveral kingdoms.

ON the coaſt are the famous cities of Sidon, Tyre, Aradus, Tripoli, Byblus, and Berytus. Sidon we may properly enough call the metropolis of Phœnice, ſince it ſeems to have been the eldeſt city of this part, borrowing its name from Sidon the eldeſt ſon of Canaan, by whom they [m] pretend it to have been built, and it is not unlikely. But all are not agreed in the derivation of that name from Sidon (E).

THIS city was ſeated on the ſea-ſide, and is ſaid to have had a ſummer and a winter harbour [n] (F), or one much more land-

[l] See before, p 233. [m] JOSEPH. Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. [n] ACHILL. TAT. apud RELAND. Palæſt. Illuſtr.

(E) Trogus (12) derives the name from a Phœnician word, as he calls it, Sidon, ſignifying a fiſh. And this Bochart (13) gives into; for Seid, the name of this city at preſent, is, as we may render it, a fiſhing-place. The ſame Bochart (14) ſeems to doubt, whether or no Canaan's eldeſt ſon was called Sidon, as we read in the writings of Moſes (15), which he interprets to be meant of the city itſelf, which is uſed inſtead of the name of the father of the Sidonians, or the founder of that city, whatſoever his name was: but why the name of the eldeſt ſon ſhould be paſſed over, and the reſt ſpecified, is what we are not able to conceive. Others (16) again derive the name of this city from Sida, the daughter, as they pretend, of Belus.

(F) This we imagine, becauſe we find no mention made of a double harbour by any of the moſt accurate travellers and geographers; whereas, as we ſhall obſerve hereafter, there are ſtill viſible marks of this at Tyre. This city had a mole, till Faccardine, the Emir of the Druſes, demoliſhed it, to free himſelf from the viſits of the Turkiſh gallies; ſo that now the ſhipping have no other ſheiter, land-locked or encloſed than the other, which we take to be a miſtake (G) in the relator, which how it came to paſs may be tolerably accounted for (H). It is now called Seyde.

(12) Juſt. l. 18. c. 3. (13) Geogr. ſacr. p. 302. (14) Ibid.
(15) See before, p. 157. (16) Vid Sand. Trav. p. 210. 4. Ed.

Tyre. Tyre, antiently Sor (I), is commonly called the daughter of Sidon, and ſtood alſo upon the ſea, two hundred ſtades or furlongs to the ſouthward of Sidon. Tyre muſt be diſtinguiſhed into three different cities in order of time [q] : as Tyre on the continent, or Palæ-Tyrus [old Tyre], Tyre on the iſland, and Tyre on the peninſula, after the iſland was joined to the main land (K). It had two havens (L), the one looking than a ſmall ledge of rocks, about a mile diſtant from the ſhore on the north ſide of the city (17).

[q] Vid. Reland. Palæſt. Illuſtr. vol. 2. ad vocem Tyrus.

(G) It is obſerved, that Sidonian and Tyrian were ſynonimouſly uſed (18). Whether or no the ſeeming miſtake here noted may not have ariſen from ſome ſuch uſage, we leave the reader to judge.

(H) It is, at this day, pretty well ſtocked with inhabitants, but much ſhrunk from its antient extent, and more from its ſplendor, as appears from the veſtiges of the antient city that are left (19).

(I) From hence this city came to be called Sarra by the Latins, and not from Sar a fiſh, as Servius upon Virgil intimates (20). From hence, alſo ſay they, is derived (21) Tyre, it being the Syrian way to convert the T S, or S, into T. So that the Syrians pronounced it Tor, Tur, Tyr ; and hence the Greeks, adding their termination, formed Τύρος, in Latin Tyrus. Some pretend, that this city gave name to the whole country of Syria, and that Syria, Tyria, and Aſſyria, were indifferently uſurped for each other (22) ; to which we cannot aſſent. This name ſignifies a rock (23) ; for it ſtood upon little better.

(K) There were four different places in Phœnice, which bore the celebrated name of Tyre (24).

(L) Theſe were formed by the Iſthmus, which joined the iſland to the main. Theſe harbours were called, the one Open, and the other Cloſe. The former looked towards Egypt ; it was the ſouthermoſt of the two ; and was accordingly called the Egyptian port (25). The Sharif Edryſy ſays, that one of theſe ports had an arch over the entrance of it, through which the ſhipping paſſed, and that it was looking towards Sidon, and the other towards Egypt [r]. This city, including Palæ-Tyrus, was 19000 paces in circumference (M) ; but the city itſelf was only twenty two furlongs about, or not quite three of our miles [f], which is allowing it conſiderably too much, if our modern accounts may be relied on (N). However, it appears, that this famous emporium was fortified with a chain which ran a-croſs it (26). Theſe bays, or ports, are ſtill pretty large, and in part defended from the ocean, each by a long ridge, reſembling a mole, ſtretching directly out on both ſides, from the head of the Iſland ; but whether theſe ridges are walls, or rocks, is uncertain (27) ; it is moſt likely, however that they are walls.

(17) Maundr. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. p. 45. (18) Vid. Rel. Pal. Il. p. 956. (19) Maund. ubi ſupr. (20) Vid. Bochart. ubi ſupr. p. 735. (21) Vid. Cell. Geogr. Antiq. Tom. 2. l. 3. c. 12. p. 277. (22) See Sir Iſaac Newton's Chronol. of ant. kingd amend. (23) Vid. Bochart ubi ſupr. (24) Vid. Scyl. Peripl. in minor. Hudſon, vol. 2. (25) Hiſt. Nat. l. 5. c. 17.

[r] STRAB. l. 16. p. 757. [f] PLIN. Hiſt. Natur. l. 5. c. 17.

(M) From hence it ſeems plain, that Tyre on the iſland, and old Tyre on the main, were conſidered as but one city, after the Iſthmus was thrown up between them ; and poſſibly they may have had buildings contiguous to each other. If Pliny's numbers are right, the old city muſt have been by much the moſt extenſive part of the whole, and eſpecially as the place appears at this Day. According to Pliny (28) the iſland was but ſeven hundred paces from the continent ; according to Strabo (29), it was thirty ſtades, or ſomewhat better than three of our miles from Palæ-Tyrus ; and according to the ſame geographer (30), Tyre, was wholly an iſland, after the ſame manner as Aradus, excepting the artificial Iſthmus, which formed it into a Peninſula. Not to loſe time upon ſo obſcure a ſubject. as whether Tyre and the old town were joined by buildings a-croſs the Iſthmus ; we ſhall only repeat what we advanced at firſt, and which we ſhall endeavour, to make out in the next

Note, that old Tyre was much larger, that is, ſtood upon more ground than the new, if Pliny's circumference be allowed of.

(N) By them, it appears, that Tyre itſelf was but a ſmall city in extent, though it covered the whole iſland to the very waſh of the ſea ; and the ſcantineſs of their ground was doubtleſs, what induced them to raiſe their buildings ſo high as they did ; a method they would otherwiſe have avoided for fear of earthquakes, which had threatened them with deſtructon (31). At preſent the iſland appears to have been, in its natural ſtate, of a circular form, hardly containing forty acres of ground, and the foundations of the wall which ſurrounded it, are ſtill to be ſeen at the utmoſt margin of the land (32). If then it be true, that the whole circuit of the old and new Tyre was nineteen thouſand paces, or nineteen

(26) L. 16. p. 758. (27) Ibid p. 756. (28) Strab. ubi ſupr. p 757. (29) Vid. Albert. Schult. Ind. Geogr. in vit. Saladin ad vocem Tyrus. (30) Maund. ubi ſupr. (31) Strabo ubi ſupr. (32) Maund. ubi ſupr. p. 50.

um was never of very great bigneſs. It could ſpread out its walls no farther than the margin of the iſland. For this reaſon it muſt have been, that they built their houſes very lofty, and with more ſtories, as we are told, than the houſes had at Rome [t]. The buildings of this city in general were ſpacious and magnificent, and above the reſt appeared the temples built by Hiram to Jupiter, Hercules, and Aſtarte [u]. Its walls were one hundred and fifty foot high, and proportionably broad, and firmly built of large blocks of ſtone bound together with white plaiſter [x]. It is now called Sûr (O).

Arvadites. Aradus (P) was not ſtrictly ſpeaking a city of Phœnice. It was an iſland city like Tyre, and ſtood oppoſite to the ſouthern limits of the ſea coaſt of Syria [y]. That the Phœnicians, however, reckoned this city as a part of themſelves, is plain teen Roman miles (33); and that they were diſtant from each other but thirty ſtades, or three of the ſame miles and three quarters (34); it muſt be evident, that the old city ſtood upon much more ground than the new. A good part of the iſland was made ground (35), as we call it.

[t] Strabo ubi ſupr. [u] Menand. & Dius apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. & apud eund. contra Ap. l. 2. [x] Arrian de Exped. Alex. Magn. l. 2. [y] Bochart. Phaleg. l. 4. c. 36. col. 305.

(O) It is now a mere Babel of broken walls, pillars, vaults, &c. there being no ſuch thing as one entire houſe left. Its preſent inhabitants are only a few poor wretches, who harbour themſelves in vaults, and ſubſiſt chiefly by fiſhing (36).

(P) Bochart (37) takes this, and that part of the continent oppoſite to it, to be the ſeat of the Canaanitiſh tribe, called Arvadites (38); and we are very much inclined to ſubſcribe to his judgment upon this head. The iſland of Aradus is about twenty ſtades, or two Roman miles and a half, from the ſhore, and about ſeven eighths of a Roman mile in circumference. The buildings were, like thoſe of Tyre, of many ſtories high (39). By the ſame pen we are told, as a very remarkable thing, that the Aradians, when beſieged, could by the help of long tubes, draw up freſh water from the bottom of the ſea (40).

(33) Plin. Hiſt. Nat. l. 5. c. 19. (34) Strabo ubi ſupr. p. 758. (35) Menand & Dius, apud Joſeph. l. 8. c. 2. (36) Maund. ubi ſupr. p. 48, 49. De Bruyn. Voy. au. Lev. Tome 2. in 4. to p. 341. (37) Phaleg. l 4 c. 36. col. 305. (38) See before, p. 157. and in the Notes. p. 152, (F). (39) Strabo l. 16. p. 753, 754, &c. (40) Idem ibid. Vid. etiam Plin. Hiſt. Nat. l. 2. c. 103. l. 5. c. 31.

by

by ſeveral good authors [x]. There are ſome remains of it extant (Q).

TRIPOLI, on the ſea-coaſt of the continent, derived its origin from the joint contribution of the three cities above-mentioned, Sidon, Tyre, and Aradus. Accordingly it was at firſt three diſtinct cities at a furlong diſtance from each other, inhabited by three different draughts, or colonies, but all within one common encloſure or wall [y]. It is ſtill a conſiderable place (R), and bears its old name. Tripoli.

BYBLUS is reported to have been the firſt city built in this country [z]; but whether we are here to underſtand the Byblus which ſtood on the ſea, or the old Byblus, [Palæ-Byblus] which was farther up within land, may be a needleſs enquiry (S). Byblus.

BERYTUS muſt not have been much inferior to Byblus in antiquity, ſince it is ſaid to have been ſtanding in the days of Cronus [a]. It is now called Barût, or Beroot (T). Theſe were the chief cities of the maritime Phœnice [b]. Bery'us.

WE will not take on us to mark out the bounds of the midland Phœnice. Ptolemy reckons in it the following towns: Arca, Palæbyblus [old Byblus], Gabala, and Cæſarea Paneæ. This province was conſiderably extended in the times of Chriſ- Phœnice Mediterranea.

[x] PLIN. Hiſt. Nat. l. 5. c. 17. POMP. MEL. l. 2. c. 7. STRAB. l. 16. p. 753. STEPH. BYZANT. ad vocem Ἀραδος. [y] DIOD. SIC. l. 16. c. 41. PLIN. ubi ſupra, &c. [z] See Vol. I. 300. [a] See Vol. I. p. 306. [b] See before, p. 295.

(Q) It ſeems to the eye to be not above two or three furlongs in length; and is wholly filledup with tall buildings, like caſtles. The Turks call it Ru-ad (41).

(R) And there are ſome remains of the antient city or cities, (which you will) ſtill to be ſeen, in the fields near the ſhore; many heaps of ruins and Pillars of granate (42).

(S) Byblus was the city and ſeat of the famous ſuperſtition, in memory of Adonis. It is pleaſantly ſituated; but at preſent it is but ſmall; though, ſmall as it is, its handful of inhabitants have room to ſpare (43).

(T) "At preſent it retains nothing of its antient felicity, except "the ſituation; and in that particular it is indeed very happy. It "is ſeated on the ſea-ſide, in a ſoil fertile and delightful, raiſed "only ſo high above the ſalt-water, as to be ſecure from its overflowings, and all other noxious and unwholſome effects of that "element. It has the benefit of good freſh ſprings, flowing down "to it from the adjacent hills (44).

(41) Maundr. ubi ſupr p. 19. (42) Idem ibid. p 31. (43) Idem ibid p. 38. (44) Idem ibid.

tinity,

tianity, when, being considered as a province of Syria, it included not only Damascus but Palmyra also [c].

Soil and Climate.

The soil of this country is good, and productive of many excellent necessaries for food and cloathing. The air is wholesome. The climate is of the best. It is plentifully watered by small rivers, which running down from mount Libanus, are subject to swell to an immoderate degree, either encreased by the melting of the snows on that mountain, or by heavy rains. Upon these occasions they overflow the country, to the great danger and hindrance of the traveller, and damage of the country. Among these rivers is that of Adonis, which we shall have occasion to mention, upon another occasion, presently.

Natural Curiosities.

The sea on this coast formerly abounded with such fish, as in an extraordinary manner redounded to the honour and profit of Tyre in particular. Therewith they died the choicest purple. And on the shore there was a sand, wherewith the first and best glass was made (U), a staple manufacture of this antient country. To these we shall add a remarkable property of the river Adonis. At certain seasons, and upon certain occasions, it appears bloody. Hence was continued, at least, that extraordinary superstition in memory of Thammuz, or Adonis, yearly wounded. The cause of this red face of the river was antiently known, and declared by those who were not so superstitious as the rest of their contemporaries and countrymen, and who attributed it only to a kind of minium, or red earth, which this river brought away when it swelled to unusual heights [d]. It is still subject to the same appearance in the time of floods (W).

Artificial Curiosities.

There are still some few remains of the antient splendor of this now desolate land. Thevenot [e] tells us, there are fine antiquities to be beheld at Tyre, but does not specify them. Sandys [f] could discover nothing there but a heap of ruins. The [c] Vide Reland Palæst. Illust. p. 217. [d] Vide Luc. de Dea Syr. [e] Travels into the Lev. Part I. Book ii. c. 60. [f] l. 3. p. 168.

(U) There antiently went a story, that this sand could be melted no where but at Sidon (45).

(W)... "We saw ..... the water [of the river Adonis] ... stained "to a surprizing redness; and ... observed ... it had discoloured the "sea a great way into a reddish hue (46).

(45) Strabo ubi supr. p. 758. (46) Maund. ubi supra, p. 34.

mong

more modern travellers [g] are more particular. They take notice of the ruins of the metropolitan church there, near which is an extraordinary kind of a column, of unuſual dimenſions, which one [h] repreſents as a triple; another, [i] as a double column only, or two joined together. This laſt [k] informs us, that it is of granate, of one block only, and fourſcore foot long. Beſides this, there are many columns entire, and many broken [l]. But nothing in, and about, this ruined city demands our attention more deſervedly than a place the Turks call Roſelayne; where are ſeen, what are vulgarly called Solomon's ciſterns, or wells. The current tradition is, that they are filled from a ſubterraneous river, which that wiſe king, by his great ſagacity, knew to run under ground here; and which made him undertake ſo admirable a work. The country people ſay, that nobody ever could reach the bottom of theſe wells, though the thing has been attempted with great lengths of line; and one of our travellers pretends to give a reaſon for the fruitleſneſs of theſe attempts, by ſuppoſing the current or ſpring to be ſo very ſtrong, at a certain depth, as to prevent the lead from taking the ground [m]. All this is rejected, and confuted by another traveller [n]; who ſuppoſes theſe wells cannot have been built before the days of Alexander; becauſe the aqueduct which conveys the water from them to Tyre is carried over the Iſthmus, formed by that conqueror, when he made himſelf maſter of Tyre: and, as theſe ciſterns cannot be ſuppoſed to be antienter than the aqueduct, ſo we may be ſure, ſays he, that the aqueduct is not older than the ground it ſtands upon. Of theſe ciſterns there are three entire at this day, one about a furlong and a half diſtant from the ſea, the other two a little farther up. The firſt is an Octagon in form, twenty yards in diameter. On the ſouth ſide it is elevated nine yards above the ground, and on the north but ſix: and, as unfathomable as it is reported to be, ten yards of line confuted the opinion. Its wall is only of gravel and pebbles, but ſo firmly conſolidated with a ſtrong cement, that it ſeems to be an entire veſſel of rock. Upon the brink there is a walk round it, eight foot in breadth: from whence, deſcending by one ſtep on the ſouth ſide, and by two on the north, you land on another walk, twenty one foot broad. All this ſtructure, though ſo very broad at top, is hollow, so that the water comes in underneath the walks; nor could the extremity of the cavity be reached with a long rod. The whole vessel contains a vast body of excellent water, and is so plentifully supplied, that, though there issues from it a brook which drives four mills, it is always brim-full. On the east side of this cistern was the antient outlet of the water, by an aqueduct raised about six yards from the ground, and containing a channel one yard wide. This aqueduct (now dry) is carried eastward about one hundred and twenty paces, and then approaches the two other cisterns, which are of a quadrilateral figure, the one twelve, the other twenty yards square. These have each of them a channel, which communicates with the aqueduct; and the water of these three noble springs being thus joined ran together to Tyre. The aqueduct is now gone to decay, but may easily be traced out. It goes about an hour northward, and then turning to the west, proceeds over the Isthmus into the city.

[g] DE BRUYN Voy. au Lev. Tom. II. 4^to. p. 338,339, &c. De la ROQUE Voy. de Syr. et M. Lib. Tom. I. p. 17,18; &c. MAUNDRELL's Journ. from Aleppo to Jeruſ. p. 48, 49, &c. [h] DE BRUYN ubi ſupr. [i] De la ROQUE ubi ſupr. [k] Ibid. [l] DE BRUYN ubi ſupr. [m] Idem ibid. [n] MAUNDRELL ubi ſupr.

Some footsteps of what Sidon once was, are to be seen among the gardens without the walls of the present city [o]; such as beautiful columns, and other fragments of that kind. Here they pretend to shew a monument of high antiquity, no less than the tomb of Zebulun. It stands within a small chappel in a garden [p], and is deeply revered by the Jews [q]. This tomb is made of two stones only; the one supposed to be at the head, and the other at the feet of the deceased. Their distance is better than ten of our feet, which they give out to have been the stature of this patriarch [r].

At Byblus also are many heaps of ruins and fine pillars scattered up and down in the gardens near the present towns [s]. Finally, on the continent, a little southward of the isle of Aradus, whereon the city of that name antiently stood, are several antiquities of a very extraordinary kind. The first is a dyke, thirty yards over at top, cut into the firm rock. Its sides go sloping down, with stairs cut out of the living rock, and descending gradually from top to bottom. This dyke stretches in a direct line, east and west, more than a furlong, bearing continually the same figure of stairs running in right lines all along its sides. It breaks off at last at a flat marshy ground, extending about two furlongs between it and the sea.

[o] Idem ibid. p. 44. Sandys Trav. l. 3. p. 164. [p] Idem ibid. Theven. Voy. au Lev. Part II. l. 1. c. 3. [q] Sandys ubi supr. [r] Theven. ubi supr. [s] Maund. ubi supr. p. 33.

Our

Our obſerver thinks it hard to imagine, that the water ever flowed up thus high; and harder, without ſuppoſing that, to deviſe why all this pains was taken in cutting the rock after ſuch a faſhion. Secondly, A little to the ſouthward of this dyke, there is a court of fifty five yards ſquare, cut alſo in the natural rock; the ſides of the rock ſtanding round it are about three yards high, and ſupply the place of walls. On three ſides it is thus encompaſſed; but to the northward it lies open. In the centre of this area, a ſquare part of the rock is left ſtanding, being three yards high and five yards and a half ſquare. This ſerves for a pedeſtal to a throne erected upon it. The throne is compoſed of four large ſtones, two at the ſides, one at the back, and one at the top, in the manner of a tribunal or canopy. This whole ſtructure is about twenty foot high, and faces towards the open ſide of the court. The ſtone that forms the canopy is five yards and three quarters ſquare, and adorned with a handſome corniſh. At the two innermoſt angles of the court, and likewiſe at the open ſide, are left pillars of the natural rock, three at each of the former, and two at the latter.

ABOUT half a mile to the ſouthward of this court, and this throne, there are in each two towers. They are ſepulchral monuments, and ſtand over an antient burying-place. They are about ten yards diſtant from each other. The one is in form, a cylinder, crowned by a multilateral pyramid, and is in all thirty three foot high, including the pedeſtal, which is ten foot high, and fifteen ſquare. The other is a long cone diſcontinued at about the third part of its height; and, inſtead of ending in a point, is wrought into a hemiſpherical form. This is its general conſtruction. It ſtands upon a pedeſtal ſix foot high, and ſixteen foot ſix inches ſquare, adorned at each angle with the figure of a lion in a ſitting poſture, pretty much defaced; though at beſt the ſculpture of them appears to have been but bad. This is all that is viſible of theſe ſepulchres, as well as of a third and others near, above ground. But under ground there are ſquare chambers of convenient height for a man, and long cells branching out therefrom, variouſly diſpoſed, and of different lengths, wherein the dead bodies were depoſited. Theſe ſubterraneous chambers and cells are all cut out of the hard rock [a]: but becauſe a bare deſcription of them would communicate but an imperfect idea of them to the mind, by reaſon of the variety and irregularity of their diſpoſition, we shall insist no farther on them; but refer you to the draught of them.

[a] MAUNDR. Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem.

ſhall

SECT. II.

Of the Antiquity, Government, Laws, Religion, Customs, Arts, Learning, and Trade of the antient Phœnicians.

Antiquity. IT is universally allowed, that the Phœnicians were Canaanites (A) by descent; nothing is plainer, or less contested; and therefore it were time lost to go about to prove it. We shall only add, that their blood must have been mixed with that of foreigners in process of time, as happens in all trading places; and that many strange families must have settled among them, who could consequently lay no claim to this remote origin in this part, how much soever they may have been called Phœnicians, and reckoned of the same descent with the antient proprietors.

The Phœnicians were governed by kings, and their territory, as small a slip as it was, included several kingdoms, as those of Sidon, Tyre, Aradus, Berytus, and Byblus. In this they imitated, and adhered to the primitive government of their fore-fathers, who like the other Canaanites, were under many petty princes, to whom they allowed the sovereign dignity, reserving to themselves the natural rights and liberties of mankind [a]. It may appear plain by their history, that even the kings of Sidon and Tyre, when in their zenith, were far from uncontrolable by the subject.

[a] See before, p. 165.

(A) Bochart (1) insinuates, that the Canaanites were ashamed of their name, on account of the curse denounced on their progenitor, and terrified by the wars so vigorously, and successfully waged on them by the Israelites, purely because they were Canaanites; and that therefore to avoid the ignominy of the one, and the danger of the other, they abjured their old name, and changed it for Phœnicians, Syrians, Syrophœnicians, and Assyrians. Heidegger (2) conjectures also, that they were ashamed of their ancestor Canaan. We can think no such thing. It seems unnatural. It may be combated by many solid Objections; but, because they would draw us into too great a length, we forbear to make them.

(1) Phaleg. l. 4. c. 34. col. 301. (2) Hist. Patriarch Exerc. 23. § 2. p. 491.

We

2

WE have no particular ſyſtem of their civil laws, and ſhall therefore paſs to their religion.

Religion.

THE Phœnicians, being originally Canaanites, muſt once, as well as the reſt of their kindred, have had a knowledge of the true GOD, whom they, as is moſt likely, called Baal, or lord [b]. But by degrees degenerating to the deification, tranſlation, and worſhip of ſuch, as, by their own confeſſion, were once mortals like themſelves, they became perverſe and blind idolaters. The chief of their deities, in order as we find them in their own records, are theſe. Beeljamen, which, in Phœnician, is Lord of heaven, thereby meaning the ſun [c]: Cronus, or Baal [d], who is likely to have been the Baal-berith, or the Cronus antiently worſhipped at Berytus [e]: Aſtarte [f], Cronus, or Baal the ſecond, Zeus Belus, or Baal (B), Apollo, Melicarthus, Melcartus, or Hercules [g]. Theſe are the gods of this people we ſhall chiefly take notice of here, the reſt we have treated of amply enough, in the antiquities and mythology of this people [h]. We will only add one obſervation; which is, That it is almoſt certain the Phœnician idolatry and ſuperſtition is not all their own; and that their ſubjection to the Aſſyrians, Babylonians, Perſians, and Greeks, made great alterations in the whole ſyſtem of what was taught and practiſed among them in a religious way. We need only look back to what happened in Syria *, upon its being ſubdued, to be fully convinced of this.

How far they retained, or how far they loſt, a due ſenſe and notion of the true GOD in this their multifarious idolatry; and whether or no they might not, through theſe low diſguiſes and their frantic adoration, point intentionally at GOD himſelf, is hard to ſay. It is reported of the Egyptians, that, amidſt all their endleſs polytheiſm, they ſtill acknowledged one ſupreme GOD [i]: and hence, as we ſhall ſee, the religion of the old Phœnicians was in ſubſtance hardly differ-

[b] Vide SELD. de Di Syr. Syntag. 2. c. 7. [c] See Vol. I. p. 176. [d] See Vol. I. in the Notes, p. 298. [e] Ibid. [f] See Vol. I. p. 301. [g] See Vol. I p. 304. [h] See Vol. I. p. 174,—181 294—308. * See before, p. 255. [i] See Vol. I. p. 445.

(B) Here we have no leſs than three Baals, who are ſaid to have been once mortal men; which might fairly induce one to think, that the learned are miſtaken in ſuppoſing the Phœnician God Baal, of every ſort and denomination, was erected in honour of, and to repreſent, the ſun (3).

(3) Vide Seld. de Di. Syr. Syntag. 2. c. & Bochart. Geogr. Sacr.

shall insist no further on them; but refer you to the draught of them.

SECT. II.

Of the Antiquity, Government, Laws, Religion, Customs, Arts, Learning, and Trade of the ancient Phœnicians.

Antiquity. IT is universally allowed, that the Phœnicians were Canaanites (A) by descent; nothing is plainer, or less contested; and therefore it were time lost to go about to prove it. We shall only add, that their blood must have been mixed with that of foreigners in process of time, as happens in all trading places; and that many strange families must have settled among them, who could consequently lay no claim to this remote origin in this part, how much soever they may have been called Phœnicians, and reckoned of the same descent with the antient proprietors.

The Phœnicians were governed by kings, and their territory, as small a slip as it was, included several kingdoms, as those of Sidon, Tyre, Aradus, Berytus, and Byblus. In this they imitated, and adhered to the primitive government of their fore-fathers, who like the other Canaanites, were under many petty princes, to whom they allowed the sovereign dignity, reserving to themselves the natural rights and liberties of mankind. It may appear plain by their history, that even the kings of Sidon and Tyre, when in their zenith, were far from uncontrollable by the subject.

a See before, p. 165.

(A) Bochart (1) insinuates, that the Canaanites were ashamed of their name, on account of the curse denounced on their progenitor, and terrified by the wars so vigorously, and successfully waged on them by the Israelites, purely because they were Canaanites; and that therefore to avoid the ignominy of the one, and the danger of the other, they abjured their old name, and changed it for Phœnicians, Syrians, Syrophœnicians, and Assyrians. Heidegger (2) conjectures also, that they were ashamed of their ancestor Canaan. We can think no such thing. It seems unnatural. It may be combated by many solid Objections; but, because they would draw us into too great a length, we forbear to make them.

(1) Phaleg. l. 4. c. 34. col. 301. (2) Hist. Patriarch Exerc. 23. § 2. p. 491.

We

WE have no particular ſyſtem of their civil laws, and ſhall therefore paſs to their religion.

Religion.

THE Phœnicians, being originally Canaanites, muſt once, as well as the reſt of their kindred, have had a knowledge of the true GOD, whom they, as is moſt likely, called Baal, or lord [b]. But by degrees degenerating to the deification, tranſlation, and worſhip of ſuch, as, by their own confeſſion, were once mortals like themſelves, they became perverſe and blind idolaters. The chief of their deities, in order as we find them in their own records, are theſe. Beelſamen, which, in Phœnician, is Lord of heaven, thereby meaning the ſun [c]: Cronus, or Baal [d], who is likely to have been the Baal-berith, or the Cronus antiently worſhipped at Berytus [e]: Aſtarte [f], Cronus, or Baal the ſecond, Zeus Belus, or Baal (B), Apollo, Melicarthus, Melcartus, or Hercules [g]. Theſe are the gods of this people we ſhall chiefly take notice of here, the reſt we have treated of amply enough, in the antiquities and mythology of this people [h]. We will only add one obſervation; which is, That it is almoſt certain the Phœnician idolatry and ſuperſtition is not all their own; and that their ſubjection to the Aſſyrians, Babylonians, Perſians, and Greeks, made great alterations in the whole ſyſtem of what was taught and practiſed among them in a religious way. We need only look back to what happened in Syria *, upon its being ſubdued, to be fully convinced of this.

How far they retained, or how far they loſt, a due ſenſe and notion of the true GOD in this their multifarious idolatry; and whether or no they might not, through theſe low diſguiſes and their frantic adoration, point intentionally at GOD himſelf, is hard to ſay. It is reported of the Egyptians, that, amidſt all their endleſs polytheiſm, they ſtill acknowledged one ſupreme GOD [i]: and ſince, as we ſhall ſee, the religion of the old Phœnicians was in ſubſtance hardly different from that of the Egyptians (C), as has been formerly observed [k]; it is very probable that their theory and doctrine agreed together, as well as their practice and traditions.

[b] Vide SELD. de Di. Syr. Syntag. 2. c. 7. [c] See Vol. I. p. 176. [d] See Vol. I. in the Notes, p. 298. [e] Ibid. [f] See Vol. I. p. 301. [g] See Vol. I. p. 304. [h] See Vol. I. p. 174,—181 294—308. * See before, p. 255. [i] See Vol. I. p. 445.

(B) Here we have no leſs than three Baals, who are ſaid to have been once mortal men; which might fairly induce one to think, that the learned are miſtaken in ſuppoſing the Phœnician God Baal, of every ſort and denomination, was erected in honour of, and to repreſent, the ſun (3).

(3) Vide Seld. de Di. Syr. Syntag. 2. c. & Bochart. Geogr. Sacr.

How they pictured Beelſamen we no where find; but we apprehend, that they did not repreſent him at all: for, meaning by him, in a more eſpecial manner the ſun, whom they had ſo daily before their eyes in all his glory, it is likely, they made their addreſſes immediately to him, according to the antient rite [l]. There were many Baals [m]. The Baal of Sidon was called Thalaſſius, or the Sea Baal [n]. There was Baal-berith (D), and others, each repreſented under proper attributes

[k] See Vol. I. in the Notes, p. 180. [l] See Vol. I. p. 176.
[m] 1 Cor. viii. 5. [n] Hesych.

(C) Biſhop Cumberland (4) draws the following parallel between them, to ſhew how nearly they were related. "1. Plutarch (5) "makes Oſiris the ſon of Rhea, a wife of Cronus: ſo our author "[Sanchoniatho] owns Rhea married to Cronus. 2. Plutarch makes "Iſis to find, at Byblus, a king called Melcander, and that name "is plainly derived from the Hebrew Melec, or Moloch; which "title, the Biſhop thinks, was appropriated eminently to Cronus, "or Ham, in old times. 3. The Queen whom Iſis found at By- "blus, Plutarch tells us, is by ſome called Aſtarte, [or Aſparte, "as it is in the Greek] which is the name of one of Cronus's wives "in Sanchoniatho. 4. Plutarch makes Typhon a contemporary with "Cronus and his children; ſo doth Sanchoniatho." When the the whole is weighed on each ſide, it muſt be allowed, that the antient mythology of both was derived from the ſame ſource; but that the gods of the Phœnicians were ſo antient as they made them, and as we commonly take them to be, is what we ſhall occaſionally diſpute hereafter.

(D) This is a further proof with us, that all the Baals of the Phœnicians were not intended for the ſun: we here ſee one denominated from the ſea. A Lord of the ſea, as well as a Lord of heaven; which ſeems to diſtinguiſh them into two very widely different deities. We cannot help thinking, that they had different genealogies for, and traditions of, all their Baals. This appears from what we have obſerved in the note above the laſt. We ſee they were procreated ſucceſſively from father to ſon; and it is hard to ſuppoſe, that they had the ſame ſtories of, and the ſame dependance on, them all: however, we will not anſwer for all the inconſiſtencies that may have crept into the minds of the idolatrous Phœnicians, nor examine into the pretences, that the partiſans of each idol may have broached in favour of its antiquity, or pre-eminence.

(4) On Sanch. p. 107. (5) See, Vol. I. p. 513.

attributes, we may ſuppoſe; but we know nothing particular (E) of their idols. Baal is called ſometimes a god, and ſometimes a goddeſs; and reverſly, Aſtarte is ſometimes termed a goddeſs, and ſometimes a god (F): but by the Phœnician mythology ſhe was wholly a goddeſs; for there we find her mentioned as the mother of many children °. She is particularly called the goddeſs of the Sidonians, and in Hebrew eminence. After all, they may have each laid claim to the firſt honour, and conſequently they might have each tranſlated their Baal into the ſun, or bright GOD of heaven; ſo that all their ſuperſtition may indeed have centred in him. We are very much inclined to think, the ſun and moon were the two great objects of their worſhip; and theſe we take moſt generally to have been ſtiled Baal and Aſtarte; and that they ſometimes addreſſed themſelves immediately to thoſe great luminaries and rulers of the night and day, and ſometimes obliquely, by repairing to the images of their own fancy. For though they had tranſlated them into thoſe lights, yet they remembered, perhaps, that they were once mortals and benefactors, and therefore may have adored them under their human form, as well as in their celeſtial dignity, being taught, perhaps, or taking it into their heads, that their worſhip would be imperfect if they did not thus divide it.

° See Vol. I. p. 302.

(E) Fuller (6) ventures to picture Baal in general as a royal hero, with armour and a mantle on his body, a diadem on his head, and a ſword in his hand; in act to ſtrike.

(F) The Hebrews knew no diſtinction of ſex in the gods; whence this aroſe. There are many inſtances to prove this; but we ſhall only produce one, where in one verſe only, with reference to Baal, he is both maſculine and feminine. Καὶ καλαλείψω ἐν Ἰσραὴλ ἑπτὰ χιλιάδας ἀνδρῶν, πάντα γόνατα ἃ οὐκ ἔκαμψαν γόνυ τῇ Βαὰλ, καὶ πᾶν στόμα ὃ οὐ προσκύνησεν αὐτῷ (7). In other copies however it is τῷ Βάαλ: but the ſame do in other places make him feminine, as well as here maſculine. Bochart (8) will have Baal-berith to have been a goddeſs, becauſe berith in Hebrew is feminine; but, as it is moſt likely, that thereby is meant no more than the Baal of Berytus (9), we do not ſee how this conjecture will ſtand. Aſtarte was called a god by the Hebrews, they having no name in their tongue for a goddeſs (10).

(6) Piſgah-ſight. l. 2. c. 17. col. 775.
(7) Reg. xix. 18.
(8) Canaan
(9) Vide Cumberland on Sanchon. p. 151.
(10) Vide Boch. ubi ſupra.

brew Aſhtaroth (G). Some [p] will have it, ſhe was ſo called becauſe ſhe was repreſented in the form of ſheep. But this is rejected as a mere notion. She was certainly repreſented as Iſis was [q], with cows horns on her head [r] (H), and for the ſame

[p] R. Cimch. apud Seld. de Di. Syr. Syntag. 2. c. 2. [q] See Vol. I. p. 305. [r] See Vol. I. p. 447.

(G) Aſhtaroth, which ſignifies flocks of ſheep or goats. It is conjectured, that men in antient times being chiefly addicted to a paſtoral life, and delighting chiefly therein, drew their moſt favourite ſimiles of beauty from thence. This is ſuppoſed to have been the reaſon why Aſteroth, or Aſtarte, was ſo called (11). It was firſt ſtarted by Biſhop Cumberland (12), that her firſt name was Naamah. His lordſhip tells us, that he could not think of Plutarch's Nemanus, Cronus's wife, but Naamah came into his mind. A late author (13) has taken up this, and puſhed it as far as it can poſſibly go. He finds, that Naamah ſignifies the fair one. He finds alſo, that ſhe was the wife of Ham. That he carrying her about with him, "changed her "name to one that in another language had the ſame ſignification, "and called her Aſtarte, as it is in the Greek, or Aſhtaroth in the "Hebrew; which word ſignifies in Hebrew flocks of cattle, "ſheep or goats." According to theſe interpretations we do not perceive the exact ſimilitude of theſe two names, Naamah and Aſtarte. There is an alluſive one, if you will. A fair woman was a beauty, ſo was a flock of cattle in antient days; ergo Naamah and Aſtarte are tranſlations of each other. However, our author brings us back again to his fair one; for Lucian, in his moſt inaccurate and unſatisfactory account of the Syrian goddeſs, happening to ſay a prieſt aſſured him, that Aſtarte was Europa, the ſiſter of Cadmus, it is ſufficient for our author to believe they really were but one; and ſo he comes round to Naamah his fair-faced one again: for Bochart ſearching after the etymology of Europa, finds, that חור אפא Ur appa, in the Phœnician tongue is, in Greek, λευκο-προσωπον, which may be aptly enough rendered fair of face; wherefore our author calls Bochart in to his aid, and diſcovers ſelf-evidently, that Europa is Aſtarte, and Aſtarte Naamah. Q E D. The inconnection and preſumption in all this, are too glaring for us to animadvert upon them. Nor ſhould we have taken any notice at all of this paſſage, had it not been delivered as from the Tripos. Nor ſhould we have taken notice of this one, had it been the only piece of the kind in the work. As ſome of the Jews abſurdly derive her name from being repreſented under the form of ſheep (14): others (15) derive it from the numbers of victims offered up to her; as if they ſacrificed to her by whole flocks at a time.

(H) Aſtarte, we are told (16), put on a bull's head, as the mark of her ſovereignty; but Hercury claps on a bull's or ox's head upon ſame reaſon; that is, to repreſent the moon's increaſe and decreaſe; for ſhe was undoubtedly conſecrated into that planet[f], and adored under the ſtile of Queen of heaven (I). She was alſo the Phœnician Aphrodite, or Venus (K).

(11) Vide Bedford's Script. Chron. p 234. (12) Ubi ſupr. (13) Beaford's Script. Chron. ubi ſupr. (14) Vide Seld. de Di. Syr. Syntag. 2. c. 2. (15) Scalig. apud eund. (16) See Vol. I. p. 305. Iſis

As

[f] See before, ibid.

Iſis to ſupply the place of her diadem, which the enraged Orus had torn off (17). We may ſee by both theſe ſtories, that the ox's head was eſteemed an enſign of ſupreme dignity; and that Aſtarte and Iſis were names for one perſon Bochart (18) obſerves, that the word Aſhtaroth may be extended to herds in general, and is not confined to the ſmaller cattle only; and inſinuates, that ſhe may be the Grecian Io turned into a cow. It is alſo held that ſhe was the great Juno, as we ſhall ſee anon. Whence, by the way, we may ſeemingly account for the epithet Homer ſo often beſtows upon Juno, Βοῶπις Ἥρη, the ox-eyed Juno. Doctor Clarke in his notes upon Homer (19) thinks that nothing particular is alluded to thereby; that this epithet is uſed only to expreſs the majeſty of her countenance, and cites Libanius, who ſays as much, Ὅμηρος ἐνδείξασθαι βουλόμενος, ὡς εἶησαν ὀφθαλμοὶ τῇ Ἥρᾳ καλοί τε μεγαλοί τε, "βοῶπιν" αὐτὴν ἐκάλεσε· which is, that Homer only underſtood ſhe had a large fine eye.

(I) There is all the reaſon in the world to believe this. It appears ſufficiently from her horned front. Lucian (20) took her for the moon. Herodianus (21), miſtaken in her name, calling her Aſtroarche, ſays, that the Phœnicians would have her to be the moon. Selden (22) thinks it indubitable, that ſhe was the Baliſama, corrupted from Baleth-Samain, the Queen of heaven, as alſo Baaltis. Some (23) ſay on the contrary, that ſhe was worſhipped in the ſtar called Lucifer; but the ſame conſider her under the name of Aphrodite, or Venus, which alſo ſhe bore; ſo that her attribute may have been altered or varied in this caſe, as well as her name. We ſhall have occaſion to reſume this again a little farther.

(K) Cicero (24) is very explicit upon this. Enumerating the ſeveral Venus's, the fourth, ſays he, was a Syrian of Tyre called Aſtarte; who, as the tradition goes, married Adonis. That ſhe was a Venus we underſtand from ſeveral other writers; but for the preſent ſhall content ourſelves with this one very plain teſtimony; upon which we beg leave to animadvert a little. Cicero places her the fourth in order, which we apprehend he does, as ſuppoſing the three, that precede her in his account, to be older than ſhe. Again ſhe marries Adonis, who is univerſally allowed to be an Aſ-

(17) See Vol. I. p. 251. (18) Canaan l. 2. c. 2. col. 709. (19) Il. ix. ver. 451. (20) De Dea Syr. (21) Apud Seld. de Di. Syr. Syntag. 2. c. 2. (22) Ibid. (23) Theoph. apud Gyrald. Hiſt. Deor. Syntag. 13. (24) De Nat. Deor. l. 3.

As there were many Baals, so also there were many Astartes (L). She went under different names, and was doubtless very variously represented (M). She is said to have consecrated Syrian by descent. What are we to conclude from hence? Why, it seems apparent enough, that the superstition in honour of Adonis was introduced by the Assyrians when they conquered Phœnice, and that Astarte was his contemporary. This seems to take off considerably from her great antiquity. Sir Isaac Newton (25) reckons that the Baalim and Ashtaroth came originally from the banks of the Tygris, whence they migrated into Phœnice. Hence he derives all the superstition and idolatry of the Phœnicians and Syrians: the Tyrian, Syrian, and Assyrian Belus, says he *, were all one. If we might be allowed to declare our sentiment on this head, we would add, that the greatest part of what we know of the Phœnician religion is of Assyrian origin, and that it was imposed on them together with the Assyrian yoke. This will bring down the antiquity of these fabulous deities very low. We know how the Syrians boasted the antiquity of their great Adod, or Adad, the king of gods, as Sanchoniatho (26), in his Phœnician Antiquities, stiles him; we know also how vainly they did it, and how falsely (27). If then there be such a flaw to be found in the pretended age of Adad, the same must affect Cronus and Astarte, his contemporaries and confederates (28). They are certainly of late date, in comparison of what the learned have generally thought them.

(L) This we have sufficiently insinuated already. We have already seen her, Venus, Juno, and the Moon. The LXX more than once mention her in the plural number. A father of the church 29 observes, that Juno was undoubtedly the Astarte of the Pœni, and consequently of the Phœnicians; and that she was mentioned in the plural with regard had to the many statues of her; and that as each statue was called a Juno, thence came many Juno, or Astartes. To this we will add, that Astarte was positively the Grecian Io (30).

(M) We cannot doubt, but she was pictured as variously as the characters she bore, and the attributes bestowed on her required. As much a Venus as she was, it seems she was pictured with arms, as the goddess of war (31). She was far otherwise represented in her temple, on mount Libanus, where she was mourning her lost Adonis: her head was muffled up in a veil; her left hand, which was under her mantle, supported her head; and floods of tears streamed down her cheeks (32). It must have been, we think, an

(25) Chronol of ant. kingd amended, p. 161. * Ibid. p. 270.
(26) See Vol I. p. 304. (27) See before in the Notes, p. 255 (E).
(28) See Vol I. p. 304. (29) Aug. ad Jud. 2. quest. 67.
(30) Eurip. apud Seld. ubi. supr (31) Vide Bochart. Canaan. l. 1. c. 42. Col. 664. (32) Macrob Saturn. l. 1. c. 27.

Astarte

ſecrated Tyre, by depoſiting a fallen ſtar there [t] (N). We have little or nothing to ſay of their Apollo (O). He is taken for the Phut of Moſes, and Put [u], whence the Pythius [w] of the Greeks; but as we have occaſionally conteſted the exorbitant antiquity of his kindred gods, we cannot allow his. Hercules, or Melcartus (P), was the great and antient god of Tyre. They antiently repreſented him in no form. His temple

[t] SUID ad vocem Ἀσάρθη. [u] See Vol. I. in the Notes, p. 303 (R) [w] Vide BOCHART. Geogr. Sacr. l. 1. c. 3. col. 11.

Aſtarte that Lucian ſaw crowned with a tower, and with a ſiſtrum in her hand, and ſupported by lions; but we cannot pick out of him in what temple, or where, he ſaw this idol. It cannot be the Syrian goddeſs, as he calls her, of whom he gives a different deſcription (33). This laſt idol reſembles, in ſome particulars, certain images of Iſis (34); but to trace her out through all her forms is a taſk we are unequal to, for want of proper lights.

(N) Hence it was, we ſuppoſe, that ſhe was worſhipped as a ſtar (35); and hence the notion of the ſtar, or globe of light, which at certain times darted down from the top of mount Libanus near her temple at Aphac, and plunged itſelf into the river Adonis below, and was thought to be Venus (36). Bochart (37) knows not what to make of this fallen ſtar, which Aſtarte is ſaid to have carried to Tyre. Inſtead of ἔυρεν ἀεροπετῆ ἀστέρα, he would read ἔυρεν ἀιροπέτη vel ἀέροπετῆ, ἀστερίαν, Ælian acquainting us from Ariſtotle, that there was a kind of eagle called Aſteria; and therefore he would have it a bird inſtead of a ſtar. But, by what precedes, it is moſt likely, that it was really a ſtar they meant. The practice ſquares very nicely with the doctrine, as does alſo the ſtory of the ſtar that was wont to fall from the top of Libanus into the river below.

(O) We only know, that he was in great repute among them; and that the Tyrians, when beſieged by Alexander, were ſo much afraid that he ſhould leave them, as they ſuperſtitiouſly dreaded, and go over to the enemy, that they chained him with golden chains (38) to the altar of Hercules (39).

(P) So called from מלך קרתא Melec-cartha, the king of the city, which Bochart (40) ſuppoſes to be Tyre. Sir Iſaac Newton (41) rejects this notion, and rather derives his name from his having been the founder, or governour, or prince of the city of Carteia in Spain. Heſychius (42) ſays, that the Amathuſians called Her- temple had no images in it * (Q), a seeming undeniable instance of his high antiquity (R). However, that they deviated from this laudable custom may, perhaps, appear, when we come to the siege of Tyre by Alexander y. Among their gods we may also place Adonis, Thammuz, or Osiris, which cules by the name of Malic. Pliny (43) calls him, corruptly, Midacritus. He was a great navigator, and was the first that brought lead from the Cassiterides, or islands of Britain. According to others (44) he invented the shell purple, by an accidental remark of a dog's mouth stained therewith.

(33) See before, p. 257 (34) See Vol. I. p. 446. (35) See before, 309 in note (I). (36) Vide Bochart. ubi ſupr. col. 749. (37) Ubi ſupr. col. 709 (38) Diod. Sic. l. 17. p. 584. (39) Plutarch in vit. Alex (40) Canaan ubi ſupra col. 709. (41) Chronol. of ant. Kingd. amended, p. 111, 112. (42) Apud Bochart. ubi ſupr.

* See before in the Notes, ubi supr. y See ibid.

(Q) This is in part contradicted by Philostratus, in his life of Apollonius of Tyana, who particularly dwells on the temple of Gadira, or Gades, which is (45) said to have had no images in it, and to have continued in that simple state to the time of Silius Italicus (46). In Philostratus we find indeed, that there were no statues erected either to the Egyptian or Theban Hercules; for both were worshipped in this same temple, as he informs us: there were only two plain brazen altars erected to the Egyptian Hercules. But though the gods were unrepresented, their temple was adorned with the twelve labours of Hercules (as they are commonly called) finely wrought; the Hydra, and Diomede's horse. In this temple were kept the golden belt of Teucer, and the golden olive of Pygmalion, bearing Smaragdine fruit, of wonderous workmanship (47). By this may be learned, that, at least, the Theban Hercules was the Tyrian Melcartus; for we need not say, that Pygmalion was king of Tyre.

(R) We have already given his genealogy in the Phœnician Antiquities (48). The Egyptians reckoned their Hercules to be seventeen thousand years older than their king Amasis (49). The Tyrians were more modest, and only reckoned their Hercules to be as old as their city, which was two thousand three hundred years *. The Tyrians paid as great a veneration to their hero as the Egyptians could do to theirs (50); but whether both their Herculess were in reality one and the same, is what we pretend not to decide. Cicero (51) reckons the Tyrian Hercules the fourth of those he enumerates, and calls him the son of Jupiter and Asteria, the sister of Latona, and the father of Carthage. Lucian (52) says, that the Tyrian Hercules was not the Hercules celebrated by the Greeks, but another far more antient, who was a Tyrian hero.

(43) l 7. c. 56. (44) Incertus apud Suid. ad vocem. (45) Ibid (46) See Vol. I in the Notes, p. 304. (47) Philost. in vit. Apoll. Tyan. l. 5. c. 1. p. 211. (48) See Vol. I. p. 303. & seq. (49) Herodot. l. 3. c. 43. * Idem ibid. (50) Vide Macrob. Saturn. l. 1. (51) De Nat. Deor. (52) De Dea Syr.

you

you will (S); nor must we forget the Patæci (T) they carried about in the prows of their ships [z]. Other deities they had [z] HERODOT. l. 3. c. 37.

(S) They were certainly but one, or meant the same object. Whence the people of Amathus, an antient city of Cyprus, conflated their Adonosiris (53), which is a compound of both the names, Adonis and Osiris; for the Phœnicians and Egyptians laid equal claim to him (54) under different appellations, though he was certainly an Egyptian (55). So then the beautiful Adonis, begotten by Cinyras an Assyrian (56), is in reality the Egyptian Osiris. It is a very labyrinth we are in, to consider these things as they are told us; but take the following parallel (57), between the solemnities and ceremonies sacred to them both: they had both of them their ἀφανισμὸς, disappearance or death; they both had their ζήτησις, or their search after them with mourning; and they both had their ἔυρεσις, or invention, with joy and gladness. In reality they were but one. Both the nations in this case meant no other than the sun; concerning whose approach and departure they framed such fables as might best take with the people. The month of June was the season when all this superstition was transacted both by the Phœnicians and Egyptians (58).

(T) They were small statues. Herodotus (59) likens them to pygmies. Hesychius (60) and Suidas will have them to have been placed in the poops of the ships. The fashion was, for certain, changed in the great length of time between them and Herodotus. They were carried about for protection from disasters of the sea. They were the tutelar gods of sea-faring men (61) Thus the Spaniards at this day carry to sea with them, little images of the saints, that they may stand their friends in distress. They will perform you a nine days devotion to St. Francis Xavier for a fair wind and favourable weather when at sea; and if the miracle is not wrought as expected, vow never more to trouble the saints again. The next minute the captain will hang him up an image of our lady of Bethlem, and declare, that he will not take her down till she gives him a fair wind. If she will not do as he would have her, she must give place to our lady of mount Carmel, who upon nonperformance is changed for our lady of the Rosary; and if she prove deaf also, up goes our lady of Solitude instead of her; and she not hearing

(53) Vide Steph. Byzant de Urb. & Popul ad vocem Ἀμαθοῦς. (54) Vid. eund. ibid. (55) Vid. eund. ibid (56) Vide Apollod. Bibliot. l. 3. c. 13. & Cyril. in Is. l. 2. Tom. III p. 274. (57) Vide Marsh. Can. Chron. Secul. 1. p 31. (58) Vide eund. ibid (59) l. 3. c. 37. (60) Ad vocem Παταικοί. (61) Vid. Seld. de Di. Syr. Syntagm. 2. c. 16. Bochart. Canaan l. 2. c. 3 col. 712, 713.

had, which we know nothing of. The Cabiri will have their turn in the Grecian mythology. [a]

We do not read, that the Phœnicians, how nearly ſoever they may have agreed with the Egyptians in the main points of their ſuperſtition, ever extended their worſhip, like them, to the inanimate creation. But ſince there was ſuch a harmony between them in other reſpects, it is by no means unlikely, that they were tainted with ſome of the meaneſt, and moſt unaccountable ſuperſtitions of that fabulous and myſterious kingdom. But this is only a conjecture, which we leave to the readers determination.

Their prieſts, religious cuſtoms, &c.

Beelsamen we have underſtood to have been in an eſpecial manner the ſun himſelf [b]; and to him they addreſſed themſelves with ſtretched out arms, as we gather [c]. What elſe was practiſed, when they made their addreſſes to the ſun only, we no where find.

Baal had his prophets and his prieſts in great numbers. We read of four hundred and fifty of them which were fed at Jezebel's table only [d]. They were wont to offer burnt-offerings and ſacrifices to this their god or gods [e], and to dance and ſkip about the altar, with violent geſticulations (U); and having worked themſelves to the height of frenzy, by this exerciſe, and a violent ſtraining of their voices, they began to cut and flaſh their bodies with knives and lancets: this done, they betook themſelves to propheſy [f], as it is called, or rather raved, as if poſſeſſed by ſome inviſible power [g]. Such was their barbarous way of worſhip (W); nor need we hearing any more than the reſt, our lady of Affliction takes her turn (62), and ſo on ad infinitum. Theſe are Chriſtian Patæci. Why ſhould we wonder at the blind Phœnicians? This we thought worth the notice. It is a good parallel, and comes from a good Roman Catholick, who was an eye witneſs of this practice.

[a] See Vol. I. in the Notes, p 297. [b] See before, p. 306.
[c] See Vol. I. p. 176. [d] 1 Kings xviii. 19. [e] 2 Kings x. 24.
[f] 1 Kings ubi ſupr. [g] Vide Patrick in loc.

(U) It is uncertain whether they danced round the altar, or leaped upon it, or jumped over it, or how this was: "Abarbinel "thinks, this leaping or dancing was a rite uſed in the worſhip of "the ſun; which puts all things in motion (63).

(W) Though all this was practiſed upon a particular occaſion, or when they took on them to perform a miracle, we are perſuaded there is nothing new in it. They are ſaid to have wounded their bodies after their uſual manner (64).

(62) See Frezier's Voyage to the South-ſea, p. 143 of the Eng. Tranſ. in 4^to. (63) Patrick upon 1 Kings xviii. 26. (64) 1 Kings xviii. 28.

wonder

wonder at it, conſidering their more barbarous cuſtom, in earlier days, of ſacrificing even ſuch perſons as were moſt dear to them, to appeaſe or reconcile their imaginary gods, when they laboured under any public calamities. This is charged very home upon them, not only by the teſtimony of others [h], but by their own confeſſion [i]. This alſo they had in common with the Egyptians [k]. This cruel practice, however, was diſcontinued here, as well as in Egypt, pretty early; but at what time, and upon what motives of perſuaſion, we have not to ſay.

MANY prieſts or prophets attended alſo on the rites of Aſtarte. Jezebel had no fewer than four hundred of them to her ſhare [l]. Our verſion calls them, prophets of the groves: but Mr. Selden has proved, by comparing many paſſages of ſcripture together [m], that Aſtarte is meant by them; and ſome [n], who know not how to conteſt this interpretation, believe ſhe was worſhipped in a grove, which is very likely, ſuch places being for the moſt part accounted ſacred to religious rites, in the firſt times [o]. We muſt not doubt, but ſhe was ſerved with much form, pomp, and myſtery; and women, particularly, are ſaid to have been employed to weave hangings, or tabernacles, for her [p]. When ſhe was adored as the Queen of heaven, or the moon itſelf, they offered up to her cakes, which were prepared for that ſervice with great ceremony: The children gathered the wood, and the fathers kindled the fire, and the women kneaded the dough, to make cakes for the queen of heaven [q]. They alſo burned incenſe to her, and poured out drink-offerings to her [r]. This Aſtarte, Queen of heaven, was, as we have ſaid, the moon itſelf [s]; for as they paid their homage immediately to the ſun, the ſame, we may ſafely ſuppoſe, they did to the moon. It was an antient cuſtom. Thoſe great lights were always conſidered together. The inimitable Job [t] ſays, If I beheld the ſun when it ſhined, or the moon walking in brightneſs, and my heart hath been ſecretly enticed, or my mouth hath kiſſed my hand, this alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the judges. Some [u] fancy, upon what authority does not at preſent occur to us, that her cakes were ſtamped with a creſcent. At Byblus ſhe was worſhipped in a particular manner; for there

[h] PORPHYR. περὶ ἀποχῆς, l. 2. § 56, &c. [i] See Vol. I p. 305. [k] See before, p. 30. [l] 1 Kings ubi ſupr. v. 19. [m] PATRICK in loc. [n] CLERIC in loc. [o] See before, in the Notes, p. 101, (D). [p] 2 Kings xxiii. 7. [q] Jerem. vii. 18. [r] Idem xliv. 17, 18. [s] See before, p. 309. [t] Job xxxi. 26, 27, 28. [u] See FULLER's Piſgah-ſight.

ſhe

ſhe had a temple, as the Venus of Adonis [w]. And there, ſuch women as would not conform to the cuſtom of ſhaving their heads, at the annual time of lamenting Adonis, were bound to proſtitute their bodies for one entire day, to all ſtrangers, that would have them, for hire; and the money ſo got was preſented to the goddeſs [x]. Her temple at Aphac on mount Libanus was a perfect ſink of lewdneſs, a very ſchool of the moſt beaſtly luſt. The men there ſunk into the moſt degenerate effeminacy to comfort the mournful goddeſs [y]. The moſt ſhameful commerce between the ſexes was allowed within theſe prophane walls. And this was permitted and practiſed, as ſome [z] conjecture, becauſe in this place Venus firſt ruſhed herſelf into the arms of Adonis. Or, as others [a] ſay, becauſe this was either the firſt, or the laſt place where they enjoyed each other. Other temples ſhe doubtleſs had, and other rites, which it were in vain for us to attempt either to diſtinguiſh or enumerate. What elſe may be ſaid of her, or her worſhip, we may have occaſion to reſume hereafter. Though ſhe is called the goddeſs of the Sidonians, her principal temple ſeems to have been that at Tyre, built by Hiram [b].

After what manner they worſhipped their Apollo is uncertain; but to their Hercules they are ſaid to have paid great honour. His worſhip was performed with great ſolemnity: the aſſiſtants were all clad alike, in Egyptian linen all. They offered the incenſe to him with a looſe flowing garment; the prieſtly veſt was adorned with broad ſtreaks, or ſtripes of purple; their feet were bare; their heads were ſhaven; they were pure from any pollution, as it was thought, contracted from the other ſex; and the fire of the altar never went out. Women were not allowed to enter into the temple, and ſwine were carefully kept from approaching it [c]: ſuch were the ceremonies uſed, and cuſtoms obſerved, in the worſhip of the Tyrian Hercules. They paid him tythes. More might be ſaid concerning this Hercules's temples, and the honours done him; which we ſhall defer till we come to treat of Hercules in general.

We ſhall now cloſe up this account of their religious practices, cuſtoms, and ceremonies, with what they were wont to do in commemoration of Adonis, or Oſiris, or Adoniſiris,

[w] Lucian de Dea Syr. [x] Idem ibid. [y] See before, in the Notes, p. 309 & ſeq. [z] Bochart. Canaan, l. 2. c. 14. col. 749. [a] Etymol. magn. apud eund. ibid. [b] Menand. & Dius apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. [c] Silius Ital. l. 3.

or

or Thammuz; for, as we have already obſerved [d], all theſe names centred in one object. His father, they pretend, was one Cinyras an Aſſyrian, who founded the city of Paphos in the iſland of Cyprus [e]. Some ſay his name was Gingris, or Gingras [f] among the Phœnicians. But whatever his name was, it is agreed, he was a moſt beautiful youth. On the one hand [g] it is reported, that Venus was enamoured of him from his infancy, and committed the care of his education to Proſerpine; that when Venus came to demand him of her, ſhe refuſed to deliver him to her; and that hence a diſpute aroſe between them, which was decided by Jupiter, who decreed, that the youth ſhould be one third of the year with Proſerpine, another third with Venus, and that during the laſt third, he ſhould diſpoſe of himſelf as he beſt liked. That in conſequence of this, Adonis, ſmitten with the charms of Venus, ſpent two thirds of his time with that fond goddeſs; whereat Diana taking offence, ſent a wild boar to put a miſerable end to his life. On the other hand [h], it is reported, that Adonis was the offspring of an inceſtuous embrace. That he was begot by his father Cinyras on his own daughter Myrrha. That to hide the guilt of ſo unlawful a commerce from the eyes of the world, he was expoſed on the mountains, where he was nurſed by the nymphs, and became a great ſportſman. That Venus, ſeeing him at his manly ſport, fell in love with him, and received him into an intimacy with her: and that Mars, conceiving a violent jealouſy thereat, turned himſelf into the ſhape of a wild boar, and ſlew the beauteous youth. That Venus, being unſpeakably grieved at the ſad news, followed him to the ſhades to demand him; but that Proſerpine, at firſt refuſing to deliver him, was at length brought to this agreement. That he ſhould be half the year with her, and half the year with Venus, who returned with joy to the earth again, and acquainted her followers with the ſucceſs of her deſcent, and ordained a feſtival to be celebrated in commemoration thereof. Whoever compares this with what is related of Iſis and Oſiris [i], will find it to be the very ſame ſtory in a different dreſs. In conſequence of this myſterious tradition, there was great grief among the women, at Byblus eſpecially, for the death of Adonis, which was ſucceeded by as great joy for his recovery.

[d] See before, p. 312. [e] APOLLOD. Biblioth. ubi ſupr. [f] JUL. POL. l. 2. c. 4. l. 4. c. 14. [g] APOLLOD. Biblioth. ubi ſupra. [h] CYRIL. in Is. ubi ſupr. [i] See Vol. I. p. 519.

But the Jewish writers have among them another ſtory concerning the origin of the rites of Thammuz or Adonis. Maimonides [k] relates that the antient Zabij held Thammuz to have been an idolatrous prophet, who preaching up to a certain king the doctrine of worſhipping the ſeven planets and the twelve ſigns, the king ordered him to be put to a cruel death. That on the very night of his death, all the idols, from the uttermoſt parts of the earth, met together in the temple of the golden ſtatue, or the ſun, at Babylon; and that he acquainted them with the tragical end of Thammuz. That hereupon the images wept and lamented all night for Thammuz, and that as ſoon as morn appeared they all flew back to their places. Hence, ſays he, was derived the cuſtom of mourning over Thammuz. Finally, it is ſaid he was the ſon of a heathen king, whoſe image the Jewiſh women adored with tears, nor refrained from offering ſacrifices to it [l].

Whoever he was, and whatever they meant by him, the ſuperſtition of mourning over him was an univerſal cuſtom of the women in thoſe parts. They began their lamentations at a ſtated time. They ſet up their outcries as ſoon as they perceived the river Adonis to run with a bloody face [m], as at certain times it did [n]. The lamentations of a mother for the loſs of her only ſon could not be more piercing or extraordinary [o]. They then proceeded to their ſacrifices of the dead, having firſt diſciplined themſelves with whipping; and on the morrow, pretending him to be revived, and aſcended through the air to the upper regions, they ſhaved their heads, as the Egyptians did for the loſs of Apis; and at Byblus at leaſt, thoſe who would not comply, were bound to proſtitute themſelves in the manner, and for the purpoſes above ſpecified [p]. Some [q] relate, that on a certain night, while this ſolemnity laſted, they laid an image in a bed, and, having gone through a bead-roll of lamentations over it, light was brought in, and the prieſt anointing the mouths of the aſſiſtants, whiſpered to them that ſalvation was come---that deliverance was brought to paſs. Upon which their ſorrow was turned into joy, and the image taken as it were out of its ſepulchre. Or as others ſay [r]; the prieſts of Oſiris in Egypt wrote to the women of Byblus, ſignifying to them, That they had found that god. They ſent this letter in an earthen pot,

[k] In More Nebochim. [l] Philast. apud Seld. de Dei. Syr. Syntagm. 2. c. 11. [m] Lucian de Dea Syr. [n] See before, p. 300. [o] Amm. Marcell. l. 19. [p] See before, p. 316. [q] Jul. Firm. apud Purch. Pilgr. l. 1. c. 17. p. 90. [r] Procop. & Cyril. in Iſa. xviii.

as

as ſome ſay, or in a ſmall ark, or head as it is called [r], made of the papyrus, which came by ſea of its own accord to Byblus. This voyage it performed in ſeven days [t], and it no ſooner appeared in the port, but the women danced, feaſted, and rejoiced as extravagantly as they had before wept, mourned, and lamented [u]. This cuſtom has made ſo laſting an impreſſion on the women of thoſe parts, that it is viſibly kept up by them of Aleppo to this day [w].

THERE are different ways of explaining away all this myſtery. Adonis was the ſun. The upper hemiſphere of the earth, or that which we think ſo, was antiently called Venus, the under, Proſerpine. Therefore when the ſun was in the ſix inferior ſigns, they ſaid he was with Proſerpine, when he was in the ſix ſuperior, with Venus. By the boar that ſlew Adonis they underſtood winter; for the boar they made, and not unaptly, the emblem of that rigid ſeaſon [x]. Or by Adonis they meant the fruits of the earth, which are for one while buried, but at length appear flouriſhing to the ſight. When therefore the ſeed was thrown into the ground, they ſaid Adonis was gone to Proſerpine; but when it ſprouted up, they ſaid, he had reviſited the light and Venus. And hence probably it was, that they ſowed corn, and made gardens for Adonis; for ſuch a cuſtom they alſo had [y]. We may ſafely ſuppoſe there was no ſmall variation among thoſe who received this piece of ſuperſtition, when they talked of what it meant, and why it was practiſed. Finally, Plutarch [z] takes Adonis to be Bacchus. Oſiris alſo, the ſun [a], as we have ſeen, was Adonis [b]. To be brief, it was contended, that Oſiris was buried at Byblus [c]. Adonis is lord, ſo is Baal [d].

PLUTARCH [e] alſo informs us, that Iſis had a temple at Byblus, where they worſhipped the heath which had concealed Oſiris's coffin. This Byblian Iſis muſt certainly have been Aſtarte; ſo that we end with the Baalim and Aſteroth as we began.

HERODOTUS [f] mentions the Phœnicians to have been circumciſed: but Joſephus [g] aſſerts, that none of the nations, included under the vague names of Paleſtine and Syria, uſed that rite, the Jews excepted; ſo that if the Phœnicians had

[r] LUCIAN ubi ſupr. [t] Idem ibid. [u] PROCOP. & CYRIL. ubi ſupr. [w] See SELLER's Hiſtory of Palmyra in the Preface. [x] MACROB. Saturn. l. 1. c. 21. [y] Vide Vos. de Idololat. l. 2. c. 5. p. 167. [z] Sympoſ. l. 4. p. 671. [a] See Vol. I. p. 443, & ſeq. [b] See before, p. 313. [c] Luc. de Dea Syr. [d] See before, p. 999. [e] De Iſid. & Oſirid. [f] l. 2. c. 104. [g] Contr. Ap. l. 1.

antiently

antiently that cuſtom, they came in time to neglect it, and at length wholly laid it aſide. They abſtained from the fleſh of ſwine [h].

Their Arts and Learning.

MUCH is ſaid of the Phœnicians, their arts, ſciences, and manufactures. But as what we find concerning them is couched in general terms only, we have it not in our power to expatiate on particulars. The Sidonians, under which we comprehend all the Phœnicians in general, as was antiently a very uſual thing *, were of a moſt happy genius and frame of mind, capable of any thing [i]. Arithmetic and aſtronomy either took riſe among them [k], or were brought by them to their perfection, and applied to mercantile, nautical, architectonical, and fabrical uſes. From them thoſe excellent ſciences flowed into Greece [l], together with their letters [m]. They were from the beginning, as it were addicted to philoſophical exerciſes of the mind; inſomuch that a Sidonian, by name Moſchus, taught the doctrine of atoms before the Trojan war [n], and Abdomenus of Tyre * undertook to grapple even with Solomon, by the ſubtile propoſitions he offered to that wiſeſt of earthly kings. Phœnice continued to be one of the ſeats of learning, and both Tyre and Sidon [o] produced their philoſophers of later ages, Boëthus and Diodatus of Sidon, Antipater of Tyre, and Apollonius of the ſame place, who wrote of the writings and diſciples of Zeno [p]. Their doctrine concerning the origin of the world, and the formation of things, we have already mentioned [q].

Their Language.

THEIR language was at leaſt a dialect of the Hebrew. It was that of the antient Canaanites. Their letters or characters we take to have been the ſame with the Samaritan. But for our particular thoughts of both the one and the other, and for the conſtruction of both, we muſt crave the reader's patience till we come to treat of the Hebrew tongue.

Their Manufactures.

How great ſoever they were for the ſciences, and for their diſcoveries and improvements in the learned way; it is far from being improbable, that they excelled much more in the labours of the hand than in thoſe of the head [r]. The glaſs of Sidon, the purple of Tyre, and the exceeding fine linen they wove, were of their own growth, and their ſtaple manufactures. Theſe are ſaid to have been their own inventions [s].

[h] HERODIAN. l. 5. * Vide BOCHART. Phaleg. l. 4. c. 37. col. 301. [i] Idem. ibid. col. 303. [k] STRAB. l. 16. p. 757. [l] Idem ibid. [m] HERODOT. l. 4. c. 6. [n] POSIDONIUS apud STRABO, ubi ſupr. * MENAND. & DIUS apud JOSEPH. l. 8. c. 2. & contr. Ap. l. 1. [o] STRABO ubi ſupr. [p] Idem ibid. [q] See Vol I. p. 23. [r] Vide BOCHART. Phaleg. l. 4. c. 35. col. 303 [s] Vide eund. ibid.

And for their extraordinary skill in working of metals, in hewing of timber and ſtone; in a word, for their perfect knowledge of what was ſolid, and great, and ornamental in architecture, we need not only put the reader in mind of the large ſhare they had in erecting, and decorating of the temple at Jeruſalem under their Hiram; than which nothing is more known, nothing more certain, nor is there any thing that can more redound to their honour, or inſinuate a clearer or greater idea of what their own buildings muſt have been. Their fame was ſuch for their juſt taſte, fine deſign, and luxuriant invention, that whatever was elegant, great, or pleaſing, whether in apparel, or veſſels, or toys, was called, by way of excellence, Sidonian workmanſhip or contrivance[t].

THUS far we have conſidered them as learned men and artificers, improving themſelves, and cultivating their minds ſedately at home. It remains, that we mention them as merchants, navigators, and planters of endleſs colonies in foreign parts. As they were merchants, they may be ſaid to have engroſſed all the commerce of the weſtern world at leaſt. As navigators, they were the boldeſt, the moſt experienced, and greateſt diſcoverers of the antient times; they had for many ages no rivals. And as they were planters of colonies, they did ſo much that way, that, when it is remembered, that their country was probably little more than the ſlip of ground between mount Libanus and the ſea, it is ſurprizing, how they could furniſh ſuch ſupplies of people, and not wholly depopulate their native ſeat. They were the moſt buſy, moſt enterprizing people, that can well be conceived. Their Trade and Navigation.

WE have ſtarted a conjecture, that the Phœnicians were not a little induced to become foreign dealers by their neighbourhood with the Syrians, whom we have conſidered as the moſt antient of thoſe who negotiated any thing conſiderably, and regularly, with the more eaſtern regions[u]. And we ſee no reaſon we have to depart from this poſition. For their own territory was but ſmall, and but little able to afford any conſiderable exports, if we except manufactures; but that their manufactures were any thing, to ſpeak of, till they began to turn all the channels of trade into their own country, is hard to believe. In Syria, which was a large country, they found ſtore of ſuperabundant productions of the natural growth of that country, and many choice, and precious, and uſeful commodities brought from the eaſt. Hereupon, having a ſafe coaſt and convenient harbours on the one ſide of them, and excellent materials for ſhip-building upon the mountains on the other, and perceiving by degrees how acceptable many commodities, that Syria furniſhed them with, would be in foreign parts; and being at the ſame time, perhaps, ſhewn the way by the Syrians themſelves, who may have navigated the Mediterranean; they turned all their thoughts to trade and navigation, and, by an uncommon application thereto, ſoon eclipſed the Syrians themſelves on the Mediterranean Sea. Nature herſelf pointed to them their advantages, and daily experience before their eyes, and a laudable ambition, may have prompted them to that, which brought them to be conſidered as the firſt of the earth for riches and ſplendor, if not for power.

[t] Vide eund. ibid.

[u] See before, p. 267 & ſeq.

It were in vain to talk of the Edomites, who fled hither in David's time [w]; or to enquire whence Herodotus derives the Phœnicians from the Red-ſea [x]. Their origin we have already ſeen [y]. That ſome of the Edomites fled into this country in the days of David we have already ſhewn. And that the Edomites were a trading people we have elſewhere noted [z]. What Improvements they brought with them into Phœnice is hard to ſay. And by the way, it is as hard to ſpeak of their numbers, or to ſay, how it could be poſſible for a parcel of refugees to communicate their own name to the antient proprietors, as is pretended [a]. It ſeems to be plain, that they brought with them a knowledge of the Red-ſea, and of the ſouth parts of Arabia, Egypt, and Æthiopia; and that by their inſtructions and lights, they made the Phœnicians acquainted with thoſe coaſts, which before they knew nothing of, and enabled them to undertake the voyages they did in thoſe parts for Solomon, and for Pharaoh Necho king of Egypt. But we will dwell no longer on theſe particulars ſo hard to be aſcertained. We have only ſtarted them to exerciſe thoſe of our inquiſitive readers, who have leiſure and inclination to bend their thoughts this way; and ſhall only add, by way of ſummary, That it is our opinion, the Phœnicians were both younger merchants and navigators than the Syrians, and that they reaped conſiderable advantages by the acceſs of the fugitive Edomites, that ſought for ſhelter among them in David's time.

Their whole thoughts were how to advance their trade. They affected no empire but that of the ſea. They ſought to enlarge no other dominion. They ſeem to have aimed at nothing but the peaceable enjoyment of their commerce.

[w] See before, p. 142. [x] See before p. 143, (U). [y] See before, p. 304. [z] See before, p. 134. [a] See before p. 225 & ſeq.

They

They traded to all the known parts they could reach, or knew the way to. The Britiſh iſles, commonly underſtood by the Caſſiterides, Spain, other places in the ocean, both to the north and ſouth of the Straits mouth, in general all the ports of the Mediterranean, the Black-ſea, and the lake Mæotis [b]; in all theſe parts they had ſettlements and correſpondents, from all which they drew what was uſeful to themſelves, or might be ſo to others reciprocally: and thus they exerciſed the three great branches of trade, as it is commonly divided, into importation, exportation, and tranſportation, in full latitude. Such was the extent of their ſea trade, as for their correſpondence by land in Syria, and by the way thereof, in Meſopotamia, Aſſyria, Babylonia, Perſia, Arabia, and even the Indies, not to carry the thing any farther; this may furniſh us with ſome adequate idea of what this people once was, how rich, and how unhyperbolically their merchants are mentioned in ſcripture as equal to princes [c]. Their country was at that time the great warehouſe where every thing, that might either adminiſter to the neceſſities or luxury of mankind, was to be found; which they diſtributed as they judged would be beſt for their own intereſt, which they muſt have had the art of cheriſhing, as much as we have in our days. It would be in vain for us to undertake a detail of what they brought by ſea, or of what was ſent them over land from each particular place, or of what they ſent to the ſeveral countries they dealt with. We ſhall have occaſion to ſpecify the particulars, when we come to mention the antient trade of each country. Their own principal commodities were the purple of Tyre, the glaſs of Sidon, and the exceeding fine linen made in this country [d]: theſe, and other fine pieces of art in metals and wood, ſeem to have been the chief, and almoſt only commodities of Phœnice itſelf. Their country was ſo ſmall, that it is not to be imagined they could afford to export any of the fruits thereof. It is more likely, that they rather wanted, than abounded with, the fruits of the earth.

HAVING thus ſpoken in general terms of their trade, we ſhall now juſt touch upon their ſhipping, and ſome things remarkable in their navigation. Their larger embarkations were of two ſorts. They divided them into round ſhips, or Gauli, and long ſhips, gallies, or Triremes [e]. When they drew up in line of battle, the Gauli were at a ſmall diſtance off each other in the wings, or in the van, and the rear, and about; their Triremes were contracted together in the centre [f]. If at any time their ships bound on a voyage observed, that a stranger kept them company, or followed them in their track, they were sure to get rid of him if they could, or deceive him, if possible; in which they would go so far as to venture the loss of their ships, and even their lives, so that they could but destroy, or disappoint him [g]; so jealous were they of foreigners, and so tenaciously bent on keeping all to themselves. And to add to the dangers of the seas, and to discourage other nations from trusting themselves thereon, they affected piracy [h]; or to be at war with such as they met when they thought themselves strongest. This was but a natural stroke of policy in a people who grasped at the whole commerce of the then known world. Talking of their navigation, we must not forget the famous fishery of Tyre, which so remarkably enriched the city of Tyre in particular. The fish they sought after were those wherewith they dyed purple, the richest dye in the world. They were always careful to take them alive. An antient author [i] attributes the dissoluteness of Tyre to the number of the dyers there; from whence we may gather they were a rich and numerous body of people, proud and extravagant, vain and debauched. This fish is some how or other lost (X), or those on that coast at present know not how to catch it.

[b] Vide HUET. Hiſt. de la Comm. et de la Navig. des Anc. [c] Iſai. c. xxiii. v. 8. [d] See before, p. 320 [e] Vide BOCHART. Canaan, l. 2. c. 11. col. 739.

We might here speak of the Phœnician voyages in the service of Solomon, had we not a more proper place in our eye of expatiating thereon. The long voyage some of them undertook in the service, and to satisfy the curiosity of Necho king of Egypt, round Afric, going out of the Red-sea, and returning by the way of the Straits mouth, deserves not to be passed over. They were three years about it (Y). The reader, [f] Polyæn. l. 6. [g] Vide Strab. l. 3. p. 175. [h] Huet. ubi supr. c. 16. p. 70. [i] Strab. l. 16.

(X) We are assured by an eye-witness, who is too modest to allow us the use of his name, that they have a kind of fish on the rocks on the coast a little to the westward of Panama, with which the Indians dye a red purple. That they carry their yarn down to the sea side, that they bring it back dyed: and that their hands are always discoloured, like those of our dyers.

(Y) We see then the Portuguese were only the Re-discoverers of the Cape of Good-hope. Here we will beg leave to animadvert a little upon a celebrated author (65), who will have it, the Phœnici-

(65) Huet. Histoire de Comm. & de la Navig. des Anc. chap. 8.

ans

reader, we hope, will not be diſpleaſed that we have dwelt ſo long on this extraordinary people. He will perceive we might have ſaid ten times more; and that it was impoſſible for us to ſay leſs of them than we have ſaid, either to refreſh his memory, or give him information. Their colonies and ſettlements will be particularly remarked in the order they may occur.

ans made it a common practice to trade with India, by the way of the Cape of Good-hope, from the times of Solomon. This is incredible on many accounts. 1. The Phœnicians had no ſuch temptation to undertake ſo long and dangerous a voyage as we have: the voyage to them muſt have been much longer than it is at preſent to us, 2. They are not above half ſo far from India as we are. 3. It is incredible, that the ſtructure and rigging of their ſhips were rightly adapted for ſo unfavourable a navigation; nor is it likely that they could at once furniſh themſelves with ſtores and proviſions ſufficient for their uſe and neceſſities, and at the ſame time have any great cargoe of goods on board. 4. Theſe diſadvantages conſidered, it muſt appear, that they might have been ſupplied with all the eaſtern commodities in general, at a much cheaper rate, from the Egyptians and Edomites on the Arabian gulph, and from Syria on the Euphrates; and this certainly was a part of the trade they drove with Syria and Egypt (66). 5. It is not to be imagined, if the contrary practice had been uſual, that all memory of it would have been loſt; that the Romans, in Ovid's time, would have talked of the torrid zone as uninhabitable; and that Herodotus would have reckoned it as ſo noble a tranſaction of Necus's reign, that he ſent the moſt expert Phœnicians he could procure to explore the ſhores of Afric (67); or that the ſame, in other reſpects, moſt knowing hiſtorian, would have diſputed the credibility of what the ſailors reported on their return, that they had the ſun on the right hand of them (68); it being the antient cuſtom, as we have ſomewhere read in Plutarch, to ſet the face to the weſtward; in which poſture the ſun muſt be on the right hand of him who is to the ſouthward of its courſe, which they muſt have been, over and over again who doubled the Cape of Good hope. In ſhort, the Indian commerce by that rout could have anſwered no manner of end to the Phœnicians, nor could they have been tempted to frequent it, ſituated as they were between Egypt and Syria, the two great magazines of what ever the eaſt afforded.

(66) See before, p. 268. (67) See before. p. 46. (68) Mel-pomen. c. 42.

SECT. III.

The Chronology of the PHOENICIANS.

IT were labour in vain to dwell on this ſubject. In general we may ſay, that the hiſtory of the Phœnicians is no other than a continuation of that of Canaan; as is on all hands allowed (A). Their particular epochs it is impoſſible to diſcover. Their records, once ſo faithfully kept [a], are now no more. We will not therefore enter profeſſedly upon ſo dark a matter, but ſhall content ourſelves with touching thereon occaſionally hereafter. It is obſerved [b], that they boaſted an exceſſive antiquity, no leſs than thirty thouſand years; in which, however, they were far more reaſonable than ſome others, who certainly could claim very little, or nothing beyond them in that particular. To adhere to the method we have laid down, we ſhall ſubjoin a ſeries of the kings of the different kingdoms of this country, ſo far as we can collect them.

KINGS of SIDON.

* * * * * * * * *

Agenor, Phœnix, Phalis,

* * * * * * * * *

An anonymous king,

* * * * * * * * *

Tetramneſtus,

* * * * * * * * *

Tennes, Strato,
Ballonymus, Allidolominus, Abdolomius, or Alonymus.

[a] Vid. JOSEPH. contr. AP. l. 1. [b] AFRICAN. apud SYNCELL. p. 17.

(A) We have already given ſeveral proofs to evince this. We ſhall add, that the compiler of the Alexandrine Chronicle (1), ſpeaking of the Canaanites driven out by Joſhua, calls them, in part, Phœnicians.

(1) P. 183. 1.

KINGS

KINGS and JUDGES of Tyre.	Reigned According to MENAND. EPHES.	According to THEOPHIL. ANTIOC.
* * * *
Abibal, or Abeimal, Hiram, Hierom, Hieromen, Irom, Chiram, or Suron,
Baleaſtartus, or Bazor,	7 Years - - -	- - - 17 Years
Abdaſtartus,	9 - - - - - -	- - - - 12
The eldeſt of the murderers of Abdaſtartus,	12 - - - - - -	- - - -
Aſtartus,	12 - - - - - -	- - - -
Aſtapimus, or Atharymus,	9 - - - - - -	- - - -
Phelles, or Helles,	8 Months - -	- - - -
Ethbal, Ithobal or Futhobal,	32 Years - - -	- - - - 12
Badezor, or Bazor,	6 - - - - - -	- - - - 7
Badezor's ſon, Mettinus,	9 - - - - - -	- - - - 29
Pygmalion,	40 - Years - -	- - - - -
* * * * *
Elulæus,	36 - - - - - -	- - - -
* * * * *
Ithobal,
Baal,	10
Judges: Ecnibal, - - -	2 Months -	- - - -
Chelbis, - - -	10 - - - - - -	- - - -
Abbar, the H. Prieſt,	3 - - - - - -	- - - -
Mytonus and Geraſtus,	6 - - - - - -	- - - -
Balator, - - -	1 - - - - - -	- - - -
Merbal, - - -	4 - - - - - -	- - - -

KINGS and JUDGES of Tyre.	Reigned Accord. to Menand. Ephes.	Accord. to Theophil.
Irom,	20
† Maſſen, † Strato,
* * * * *
Azelmic,
* * * * *
Marion.

The KINGS of ARAD, or ARADUS.

* * * * * * * *
Arbal, Narbal,
* * * * * * * *
Geroſtratus

We need only refer the reader to the very unaccountable difference between Menander the Epheſian, and Theophilus of Antioch, in their reigns of the Tyrian princes, to judge of the impoſſibility of fixing on any thing certain in the chronology of even the beſt and cleareſt times of the Phœnicians in general.

SECT. IV.

The Phœnician Kings from the antient fabulous Hiſtory of the Greeks.

Agenor. BEFORE we enter upon the hiſtory of the Phœnician kings, we are, in ſome manner, obliged to inſert the following dark and fabulous account of the family of Agenor, the firſt king of Phœnice mentioned by the Greeks.

Agenor and Belus were, according to Apollodorus [a], the ſons of Neptune by Libya, daughter of Epaphus, who was king of a part of Egypt. Belus reigned in Egypt, and married Anchinæ, daughter of Nilus, by whom he had Ægyptus and Danaus. Agenor paſſed from Egypt into Phœnice, where he ſettled, and became the father of a numerous race. He married Telephaſſa (Stephanus calls her Telephe) by whom he had Europa, Cadmus, Phœnix, Cilix [b], and, according to Pauſanias, Electra [c], and Thaſus [d]. Pherecides, as quoted by the ſcholiaſt of Apollonius, gives him two wives, the one named Damno, by whom he had Phœnix, Iſæa, and Melia; the other called Argiope, who was mother to Cadmus and Europa. Plutarch mentions a fourth wife, called Dioripppe, who brought forth Sipylus [e]. Antonius Liberalis a fifth, named Caſſiopea, who bore him a daughter, by name Carina. And Cedrenus a ſixth, whom he calls Tyrus, pretending, that the city of Tyre borrowed its name from her. Europa (whom ſome writers will have to be the daughter of Phœnix and not of Agenor) was ſtolen by Jupiter, transformed into a bull, that is, in a ſhip named the bull; or bearing the figure of a bull in her ſtern, and carried into Crete. Agenor, being extremely grieved for the loſs of his daughter, ſent his ſon Cadmus with a great ſum of money in queſt of her: but he, not finding her, nor daring to return home without her, reſolved to go and ſettle elſewhere. With this deſign having fitted out a ſmall fleet, he put to ſea, and landed in Thrace, where he had the good luck to diſcover a gold mine, in the mount Pangæus. Being enriched with that metal, and in a condition to purſue his deſign, he was adviſed by the oracle of Delphos to leave Thrace, and paſs into Bœotia, which he did accordingly; and having driven out the Hyantes, who oppoſed him, and allowed the Aones, who voluntarily ſubmitted to him, to live in the country mixed with his Phœnicians, he founded a new kingdom, and built a city; which in derivation from his own name, he called Cadmea. That city was afterwards embelliſhed, and enlarged by Amphion and Zethus, the two ſons of Antiope (for they invaded the throne, during the minority of Laius, the ſon of Labdacus Cadmus's grand-ſon) and by them called Thebes, in honour of Thebe their aunt, by the mother's ſide [f] (A).

[a] l. 2.

he

ISAEA

[b] Idem l. 3. [c] PAUSAN. in BOEOT. [d] Idem in ELIAC.
[e] PLUTARCH de Fluviis. [f] PAUSAN. in Bœot.

(A) We find ſuch a diſagreement among authors, in the accounts they give of Agenor and his deſcendants, that it is impoſſible to come at the truth of the matter; and therefore not worth our while to attempt the unravelling of ſo perplexed and intricate a ſubject. What moſt authors ſeem to agree upon, is; I. That Agenor was by birth an Egyptian; that from Egypt, he paſſed (on what occaſion we know not) into Phœnice, where he ſettled and became the father of a numerous race. II. All the Greek writers agree him to have been the firſt king of Phœnice, and the founder of the cities of Sidon and Tyre.

But

Isaea and Melia, Agenor's two daughters, married Ægyptus and Danaus, their couſin germans. Cilix is ſaid, by Apollodorus [g], to have ſettled in Cilicia, and given his name to that [g] Apollod. l. 3.

But in the ſucceſſion of the kings, ſome of the Latins place Belus the elder before him; and moſt of the moderns, upon the authority of Joſephus (1), make Sidon the eldeſt ſon of Canaan, founder of the city of Sidon, which was ſo called from him. And as to the city of Tyre, the ſame Joſephus tells us, that it was founded 240 years before the building of Solomon's temple: from whence it is plain, if we follow Joſephus (whoſe authority, as to this particular, is far preferable to that of the Greeks) that theſe two cities were not built by one and the ſame perſon. Tyre was, without doubt, a colony of the Sidonians, it being called in ſcripture the daughter of Sidon (2). And Juſtin tells us, in expreſs terms, that the city of Tyre was built before the taking of Troy, by the Sidonians, who being driven out of their own country, by the king of the Aſcalonians were forced to ſeek new ſeats (3). III. It is agreed upon by moſt of the antients, that Europa, Cadmus, Phœnix, and Cilix, were the children of Agenor; and that with them a great many Phœnicians and Syrians went into Aſia Minor, Crete, Greece, and Libya; and there introduced letters, muſic, poetry, and other arts, ſciences, and cuſtoms of the Phœnicians. It is pretended that Europa being carried away by Taurus king of Crete, Agenor ſent her brother in queſt of her; who, on that occaſion, as they were enjoined not to return without her, founded ſeveral Phœnician colonies in Aſia Minor, Greece and Libya; which we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of hereafter. But Sir Iſaac Newton is of opinion, that theſe Phœnicians went not to ſeek Europa but new ſeats, being driven out of Sidon by the Edomites, whom David had conquered and diſperſed. For, according to his computation, the conqueſt of the land of Edom by David, the coming of Cadmus into Greece, and the founding of Thebes in Bœotia, and other Phœnician colonies in other parts, happened much about the ſame time. The Edomites, ſays he, not being able to withſtand David, abandoned Edom, and fled, ſome into Egypt with their young king Hadad, others to the Perſian gulph with their commander Oannes; and ſome from the Red-ſea to the coaſt of the Mediterranean, where they fortified Azoth againſt David; and driving out the Sidonians, made themſelves maſters of their city, it being very convenient for the merchants, who fled from the Red-ſea. The Sidonians, being thus expelled, went in great numbers under Cadmus and his brothers into Cilicia, Aſia Minor, and Greece; while others fled under other leaders to ſeek new ſeats in Libya, where they built, as we are told by Nonnus (4), many walled towns. Their leader was alſo there called Cadmus (which imports, a man come from the eaſt), and his wife Sithonis a Sidonian. Sir Iſaac adds, that ſome of the Sidonians, who were

(1) Joſeph. Antiq. l. 2. c. 6. (2) Iſa. xxiii. 12. (3) Juſtin l. 18. c. 3. (4) Dionyſiac. l. 13.

that country. He adds, that Thasus built the city of Thasos in Thrace, which is confirmed by Pausanias[h]. All we know of Electra is, that one of the gates of Thebes borrowed its name from her[i]. Of Sipylus we read in Plutarch[k], that mount Sipylus was so called from him. We shall have occasion to relate, more at length, what we read of Cadmus in the antient Greek writers, when we come to write the history of the Theban kings.

PHOENIX is supposed by the Greeks to have succeeded his father in the kingdom of Phœnice, or rather of Sidon; which city, as likewise that of Tyre, they pretend to have been built by Agenor, wherein they are followed, among the Latins, by Q. Curtius[l]. That country, according to them, borrowing its name from Phœnix was called Phœnice, and the inhabitants Phœnicians. Eusebius adds[m], that he was the first who found out the scarlet colour, which was therefore called at first Phœnicius, and afterwards, with a small alteration, Puniceus color. Phœnix.

THE next king of Sidon we meet with in history is PHALIS, who flourished in the time of the Trojan war. He Phalis.

[h] PAUSAN in Elia, de Fluviis. [i] Idem in Bœot. [l] Q. CURTIUS l. 4. [k] PLUTARCH. [m] Præpar. Evang.

were driven out by the Edomites flying from David, laid the first foundations of the cities of Tyre and Arad, and made Abibalus, their leader, king of Tyre. So that according to his computation, Tyre was built in the time of David, and about the 16th year of his reign (5). But this is plainly contradicted by Josephus, who tells us, that Tyre was built two hundred and forty years before the building of Solomon's temple (6); which work Solomon undertook in the eleventh year of the reign of Hiram, son and successor to Abibal king of Tyre. It is therefore plain, both from Josephus, and the Tyrian annals, which he quotes, that Abibal was not the founder of Tyre, and that that city was built long before David's time.

Neither was Abibal the first king of Tyre, though he is the first we find mentioned in history; as appears from the same Josephus, who, in speaking of Menander's history, tells us, that Menander, after having given an account of the reigns of the other kings of Phœnice, comes at last to Hiram, who was assumed to the throne upon the death of his father Abibal (8). From which passage it is manifest (if we give credit to Josephus and Menander), that Abibal was preceded by several other kings, whose reigns and actions Menander had described.

(5) Sir Isaac Newton Chronol. of ant. kingd. Amend. (6) Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. (7) Idem ibid. (8) Joseph. contr. Apion. l. 1.

prove l

proved a faithful ally to the Greeks, and uſed his utmoſt endeavours, though in vain, to draw Sarpedon, king of Lycia, over to their ſide [n]. He is mentioned by Homer [o] and honoured with the title of moſt illuſtrious.

These are the kings of Sidon we find mentioned in the antient Greek writers; but as their accounts are no ways to be depended upon, being interwoven, and darkened with a thouſand fables, we have thought fit to treat of them apart, leſt we ſhould ſeem to confound what is fabulous with what is truly hiſtorical.

SECT. V.

The Reigns of the Kings of Phoenice.

PHOENICE, as we have ſaid, was divided into ſeveral ſmall kingdoms; for beſides the kings of Sidon, and Tyre mentioned in ſcripture, we read in hiſtory of Elbaſus king of Berytus, to whom Sanchoniatho, according to Euſebius [a], dedicated his hiſtory of Erylus king of Byblus [b], and of other Phœnician kings [c], whoſe dominions were confined within the narrow bounds of one city, and its territory. Of all the kings of Phœnice, thoſe of Sidon, Tyre, and Arad, ſeem to have been the moſt powerful and wealthy, and make the beſt figure in hiſtory. But their ſucceſſions, and the years of their reſpective reigns, are over-caſt with ſuch a miſt, and interrupted with ſo many chaſms, that it is no eaſy matter to give any tolerable account of them. However, we ſhall here produce what occurs in hiſtory relating thereto, and ſeems chiefly to be depended upon. We will begin with Sidon, the moſt antient city of Phœnice.

The KINGS of SIDON.

Sidon. Sidon, the eldeſt ſon of Canaan, was, according to Joſephus [d], the founder, and very likely, the firſt king of this city, or at leaſt, the father of the people. But as to his actions, or the years of his reign, we are left quite in the dark. Neither are we better acquainted with the kings who ſucceeded him; for though the Sidonians are mentioned in the hiſtories of Moſes, Joſhua, and the Judges, yet we find not, in holy writ, expreſs mention made of their kings, till [n] Dictys. l. 1. [o] Odyſſ. 8. [a] Euseb. præparat. Evangel. l. 1. c. 6. [b] Arrian. l. 2. [c] Strabo l. 16. [d] Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c 7.

the

the time of the prophet Jeremiah, who ſpeaks of ambaſſadors ſent, (on what occaſion we know not) by the king of Sidon to Zedekiah, king of Judah [c].

THE next king we find mentioned in hiſtory, is TETRAMNESTUS, who aſſiſted Xerxes, in his expedition againſt Greece, with three hundred gallies, and is counted by Herodotus [f] among the chief commanders of the Perſian navy. Tetramneſtus.

TENNES appears next: it is uncertain whom he ſucceeded. In his reign the Sidonians, and other Phœnicians, not being able to bear the haughty behaviour, and tyrannical proceedings of thoſe whom Darius Ochus, king of Perſia, had ſet over them, entered into a confederacy with Nectanebes king of Egypt [g], and roſe up in arms, with deſign to ſhake off the Perſian yoke, and recover their antient liberty. As the Perſians were then making vaſt preparations to reclaim Egypt, which they could not well approach, but by marching through Phœnice, this revolt happened very opportunely for Nectanebes. Therefore, to encourage the Phœnicians to ſtand out in it, he ſent a body of four thouſand Greek mercenaries, under the command of Mentor the Rhodian, to their aſſiſtance, hoping thereby to make Phœnice a kind of Barrier to Egypt, and carry on the war at a diſtance. On the other ſide, Tennes king of Sidon (which city then exceeeded all the others of Phœnice in wealth) having fitted out with great expedition a powerful fleet, and raiſed a conſiderable army in his own dominions, took the field; and, being ſtrengthened by the Greek auxiliaries, engaged, and routed the governors of Syria and Cilicia, whom Ochus had ſent to reduce him, and drove the Perſians quite out of Phœnice. The Sidonians, on their firſt taking up of arms, had laid waſte a delicious garden belonging to the kings of Perſia, cutting down all the trees wherein they took great delight; ſeized, and burnt all the forage which the Perſian governor had laid up for the ſubſiſtence of his cavalry; and what is ſtill worſe, puniſhed, with the utmoſt ſeverity ſuch of their Perſian oppreſſors as fell into their hands. Ochus was provoked to ſuch a degree at theſe proceedings of the Sidonians, eſpecially after news was brought him of his lieutenants being defeated, and the Perſians driven out of Phœnice; that now he breathed nothing but revenge, threatening total deſtruction not only to the Sidonians but to all the inhabitants of Phœnice. Being thus bent upon revenge, he drew together all the forces he could, and having muſtered them at Babylon marched from thence into Phœnice, at the head of an army of three hundred thouſand foot and thirty thouſand horſe. Mentor, who was then in Sidon, being terrified at the approach of ſo powerful an army, ſent privately a truſty ſervant of his own, called Theſſalion to the king of Perſia, offering not only to put him in poſſeſſion of Sidon, but likewiſe to aſſiſt him in the reducing of Egypt; where, as he was well acquainted with the country, he was capable of doing him good ſervice. Ochus, glad of this proffer, ſpared no promiſes to engage Mentor in his ſervice; who, having received ſuch aſſurances from the king of Perſia as he deſired, found means to draw Tennes king of Sidon into the ſame treaſon. In the mean time the Sidonians, not miſtruſting Mentor, and much leſs their own king, were preparing for a vigorous defence. The city was furniſhed with arms and proviſions of all ſorts to hold out a long ſiege, and the citizens had drawn a treble trench and a high wall round them. Beſides the mercenaries, the place was garriſoned with a brave body of tall, handſome, and ſtout Sidonians, all well exerciſed, and trained up in martial diſcipline; and the ſea-coaſt was guarded with a fleet of an hundred large gallies. But all was to no purpoſe; for Tennes no ſooner heard that the Perſian army was drawing near, but, feigning to go to the general aſſembly of the Phœnicians, he marched out with a body of five hundred men, and, taking along with him an hundred of the chief citizens to be created ſenators, as he pretended, went ſtrait to the enemy's camp, and delivered them up to Ochus, who received him as a friend, but cauſed all the citizens, as authors of the rebellion, to be immediately put to death. This ſeverity of Ochus, joined with the treachery of Tennes, ſtruck ſuch terror into the Sidonians, that five hundred more of the citizens, all men of rank, went out to throw themſelves at their enemy's feet, and implore his mercy with all the reſpect and ſubmiſſion imaginable. Ochus, on ſeeing them, aſked Tennes, whether it was in his power to put him in poſſeſſion of the city, for he was unwilling to take it upon treaty, being bent on the utter ruin of the Sidonians, in hopes, that ſuch an inſtance of ſeverity would make the other Phœnicians voluntarily ſubmit. Tennes aſſured him, he could deliver the city into his hands whenever he pleaſed: whereupon Ochus cauſed the five hundred citizens, though they were come out with olive branches in their hands, as badges of ſubmiſſion, to be ſhot with darts upon the ſpot. After this Ochus and Tennes marched at the head of the Perſian army towards the city, and were admitted, without the leaſt oppoſition, by Mentor and the Greek mercenaries, to whom Tennes, in leaving the city, had delivered up one of the gates for that end. The Sidonians, on the approach of Ochus's army, army, had designedly burnt all their ships, to prevent any one's withdrawing himself from the defence of his country: and therefore finding themselves thus betrayed, and the enemy within the walls, without any means left them to make their escape either by sea or land, they shut themselves up with their wives and children in their houses, and, setting fire to them consumed themselves, to the number of forty thousand, and the most valuable things they had, in the flames. Tennes met with no better fate than his subjects; for Ochus seeing he could do him no further service, and detesting in his heart the treachery of the man, caused his throat to be cut, lest he should out-live the ruin which he himself had brought upon his country. As Sidon was at that time in a very flourishing condition, and the most wealthy city of Phœnice; a vast quantity of gold and silver was melted down by the flames, and found in the ashes, which Ochus sold for great sums of money. The ruin and total destruction of Sidon terrified the other cities of Phœnice to such a degree, that they all voluntarily submitted to the conqueror, each of them making peace with the king upon the best terms they could. Neither was Ochus unwilling to compound with them, that he might be no longer retarded from putting in execution the design he had upon Egypt. And thus all Phœnice was again brought under the Persian yoke [h], and the prophecies of Isaiah [i], Jeremiah [k], Ezekiel [l], and Zechariah [m], touching the destruction of Sidon, fulfilled.

[c] Jerem. c. xxvii. 3.

[f] HERODOT. l. 7.

[g] See before, p. 67.

Year of the Flood, 2648. Year before Christ 351.

AFTER Tennes reigned STRATO; for such of the Sidonians, as by being absent on traffic at sea, or on other occasions, had escaped the massacre, returning home after Ochus was gone back into Persia, rebuilt the city; but ever afterwards bore an immortal aversion to the Persian name. No wonder then if, a few years after, they so readily submitted to Alexander the Great, and so greedily embraced that opportunity of shaking off the yoke they groaned under. For the Sidonians are counted among the first in those parts, who sent ambassadors to Alexander, as he marched through Phœnice, to make their submission to him. Strato, as it seems, did not approve of this resolution, but could not prevent it, the citizens being obstinately bent against the Persians. For we are told, that Alexander deprived him of the crown, because he submitted at the instigation of the citizens, and not of his own accord [n]. Theopompus, as quoted by Athæneus [o], gives him

Strato.

Year of the Flood, 2667. Year before Christ 332.

[h] DIOD. SIC. l. 16.
[i] Isa. xxiii.
[k] Jerem. xlvii.
[l] Ezek. xxviii, and xxxii. & DIOD. SICUL. l. 17.
[m] Zech. ix.
[n] CURT. l. 4.
[o] l. 12. c. 13.

the

the character of a moſt lewd and voluptuous prince, and tells us in particular, that in order to aſſemble the women, and have thereby an opportunity of chooſing the moſt beautiful for his own uſe, he inſtituted public ſports for them, conſiſting chiefly in dancing and ſinging, wherein ſuch as excelled the others were amply rewarded. Ælian [p] ſays, he died an unnatural death. Of one Strato, king of Sidon, S. Jerom [q] relates, that having adhered to the king of Egypt againſt the Perſians, and finding himſelf in danger of falling into the hands of an enemy, from whom he had no reaſon to expect any favour, he reſolved to prevent the impending calamity, by laying violent hands on himſelf; but fainting in the execution of his deſign, his wife, who was preſent, ſnatching, with a manly reſolution, the ſword out of his hand, freed him from that perplexity, by putting firſt him, and then herſelf, to death, without ſhewing the leaſt concern. But the circumſtances of this king's death, if true, plainly ſhew, that he was not the ſame perſon whom Alexander the Great ſtript of his dominions, on account of his attachment to the Perſian intereſt. This Strato, king of Sidon, is alſo mentioned by Maximus Tyrius [r].

Ballonymus.

Strato was ſucceeded by Ballonymus, of whoſe aſſumption to the throne we have the following account from Diodorus [s]. Alexander, having depoſed Strato, gave Hephæſtion power to beſtow the crown of Sidon upon which of his friends he pleaſed. Whereupon Hephæſtion named to the royal dignity one of the chief citizens, in whoſe houſe he then lodged, and was ſplendidly entertained; deſiring him to accept of it as a pledge of his friendſhip, and an acknowledgment of the many favours he had received in his houſe. The citizen, not at all dazled at the ſight of a crown, returned his generous gueſt a thouſand thanks, but at the ſame time earneſtly begged he would excuſe him from aſſuming a dignity, to which he had no title, as not being of the royal family. Hephæſtion was not a little ſurpriſed at this anſwer; but finding the Sidonian to be in earneſt, deſired he would name ſome one of the royal race to be inveſted with the dignity himſelf had refuſed. Upon this he named Ballonymus, a man of an unblemiſhed character, but ſo poor, that he was reduced to live in a very obſcure condition, and to maintain himſelf with his daily labour. However, his poverty and mean condition were no objection to Hephæſtion, who immediately diſpatched a meſſenger to him with the royal robes, and tidings

[p] l. 7. c. 2. [q] Contra Jovian. l. 1. [r] Serm. 4.
[s] Ubi ſupr.

tidings of his elevation to the throne. The meſſenger found him all in rags, and working in a garden as a common labourer. He was actually employed in drawing water out of a well, when the meſſenger acquainted him with his aſſumption to the throne, and cloathed him with the royal robes. He accepted without more ado the new dignity, and proceeding, with the meſſenger, towards the city, was there received by Hephæſtion with all the marks of diſtinction due to his character, and by him introduced into the Forum, where among the joyful ſhouts of the people who were extremely pleaſed with this election, he was proclaimed king of Sidon *. The ſame occurrence is related, with ſome ſmall variations of circumſtances, by Plutarch [t], Curtius [u], and Juſtin [x]. Plutarch makes this king Alonymus; Curtius calls him Abdolominus, and Juſtin Abdolomius. Plutarch makes him king of Paphus; and Diodorus both him and his predeceſſor kings of Tyre. But in this particular we have abandoned him to follow the current of moſt writers, who place both Strato and Ballonymus (as Diodorus calls him) among the kings of Sidon. All we know of his reign is, that to the laſt he proved faithful to the Macedonians, to whom he was indebted for his crown. And now that we have brought the kings of Sidon down to the conqueſt of Phœnice by the Macedonians, let us turn back to the kings of Tyre.

KINGS of TYRE.

WE are left quite in the dark as to the ſeries of the kings who reigned at Tyre before Abibal, with whom Joſephus and Theophilus Antiochenus begin the ſucceſſion they have furniſhed us with from Menander the Epheſian and Dius, both authors, as Joſephus calls them [y], of unqueſtionable credit. Dius, who was by birth a Phœnician, wrote the hiſtory of Tyre extracted from the public records, which were carefully preſerved in that city. And Menander compiled the lives and actions of princes both Greek and Barbarian, as the ſame Joſephus tells us [z], from the public archives of the places he treats of.

THE firſt king of Tyre mentioned by theſe hiſtorians, as quoted by Joſephus and Theophilus, is ABIBAL, as Joſephus calls him [a], or Abeimal, as he is named by Theophilus [b]. As Abibal.

* DIOD. SIC. ibid. [t] PLUTARCH. de fortuna Alexandri. [u] CURTIUS l. 4. [x] JUSTIN l. 11. [y] JOSEPH. contra APION. l. 1. [z] Idem ibid. [a] Idem ibid. [b] THEOPHIL. ANTIOCH. l. 3.

to his actions and years of his reign we are left quite in the dark. He was contemporary with David, and probably joined with the neighbouring nations against him, since David counts the inhabitants of Tyre among his enemies [c]. The Tyrian officers, who served the Philistines against Samuel, as we are told by Syracides [d], might have been sent by him. But these are, we own, bare conjectures, since neither Josephus, nor Theophilus, make any mention of his friendship or enmity towards the Jews.

Hiram. Year of the Flood, 1987. Year before Christ 1012

Abibal was succeeded by his son Hiram, whom Theophilus calls sometimes Hieromus, and sometimes Hieromenus, Josephus, Hiram and Irom, Tatian and Zonaras, Chiramus. This prince maintained a strict friendship with king David, to whom he sent ambassadors, probably to congratulate him upon his victory over the Jebusites, whom he had just then driven from the strong hold of Zion, and to conclude an alliance with him. He presented him with cedar-trees, and sent skilful workmen to build him a palace in Jerusalem [e]. And hence he is said in scripture to have been ever a lover of David [f]; which shews, that he was not only a faithful ally, but a sincere friend of David's. Upon the death of David and the succession of Solomon to the throne, the affection Hiram had ever maintained for the father, prompted him to send a gratulatory embassy to the son, upon the news of his accession to the government, expressing great joy to see it continued in the family. Upon the return of these ambassadors, Solomon embraced the occasion, and wrote a letter to Hiram in these terms.

King Solomon to King Hiram, greeting.

Be it known to thee, O king, that my father David had it a long time in his mind to erect a temple to the Lord; but being perpetually in war, and under a necessity of clearing his hands of his enemies, and making them all his tributaries, before he could attend this great and holy work, he hath left it to me in time of peace, both to begin, and to finish it, according to the direction, as well as the prediction of Almighty God. Blessed be his great name for the present tranquillity of my dominions! and by his gracious assistance, I shall now dedicate the best improvements of this liberty and leisure to his honour and worship. Wherefore I make it my request, that you will let some of your people go along with some servants of mine to mount Libanus, to assist them in cutting down materials towards this building;

[c] Psal. lxxxiii. 7. [d] Eccles. xlvi. [e] 2 Sam. v. 11. and 1 Chr. xiv. 1. [f] 1 Kings v. 1.

for

for the SIDONIANS understand it much better than we do. As for the workmens reward, or wages, whatever you think reasonable shall be punctually paid them.

HIRAM was much pleased with Solomon's letter, and returned him the following answer:

King HIRAM to King SOLOMON.

NOTHING could have been more welcome to me, than to understand, that the government of your blessed father is devolved by God's providence into the hands of so excellent, so wise, and so virtuous a successor; his holy name be praised for it! That which you write for, shall be done with all care and good will: for I will give order to cut down and export such quantities of the fairest Cedars and Cypress-trees, as you shall have occasion for. My people shall bring them to the sea-side for you, and from thence ship them away to what part you please, where they may lie ready for your own men to transport them to Jerusalem. It would be a great obligation, after all this, to allow us such a provision of corn in exchange, as may stand with your convenience; for that is the commodity we islanders want most [g].

JOSEPHUS assures us, that the originals of these letters were extant in his time, both in the Jewish and Tyrian records (B) [h]. And they are entirely agreeable with what is delivered in scripture upon the same subject [i]. Solomon was highly pleased with Hiram's answer, and, in return for his generous offers, ordered him a yearly present of twenty thousand measures of wheat, and twenty measures of pure oil [k]. Besides the cedar-wood, and other materials for the building of the temple, Hiram sent to Solomon a man, who was very famous in Tyre, for working in gold, silver, and other metals, to assist and direct him in that great undertaking [l]. Nei-

[g] JOSEPH. l. 8. c. 2. [h] Idem ibid. [i] 1 Kings v. 2. & seq. [k] 1 Kings v. 11. [l] 2 Chron. ii. 13.

(B) But it is pretty odd, that Eusebius (1), who calls this king Suron, should give us this letter with so much variation from Josephus as he does. He therein specifies, that he had sent to Solomon eighty thousand Phœnicians and Tyrians . . . That the architect he sent him was a Tyrian by birth; but that by the mother's side he was descended of the tribe of David, and the like.

(1) Præpar. Evang. l. 9. p. 449

ther did Hiram's friendſhip and kindneſs towards Solomon ſtop here; for he not only furniſhed him with the choiceſt wood from mount Libanus, and able architects and workmen, but moreover advanced him 120 talents of gold for the finiſhing of the fabric [m]. And Solomon was not behind-hand with him neither, in his acknowledgments and preſents; for, beſides the yearly ſupply of wheat and oil above-mentioned, he beſtowed upon him twenty cities in the land of Galilee [n], not far from Tyre; which Hiram upon a view of them (they not being much to his liking) fairly declined, with a reſpectful excuſe to Solomon, that he had no need of thoſe cities. From this refuſal, that part of the country was called Cabul, that is, diſpleaſing [o].

Hiram proved no leſs ſerviceable to Solomon in the building of his fleet, than in perfecting the grand work of the temple. For he no ſooner heard, that Solomon deſigned to build a fleet at Eloth and Ezion-geber, two ſeaport towns on the Red-ſea, in order to carry on a trade from thence to Ophir, but he generouſly furniſhed him with as many builders and ſhipwrights as he had occaſion for: and after having thus aſſiſted him in building, fitting, and rigging out of his navy, he ſent him expert pilots and ſkilful mariners, to conduct his fleets to the land of Ophir; the Tyrians being in thoſe days, and for many ages after, the moſt experienced of all men in ſea affairs [p].

Dius, as quoted by Joſephus [q], tells us, that the love of wiſdom was the chief inducement to that tenderneſs of friendſhip betwixt Solomon and Hiram; that they interchanged certain riddles to be unfolded, upon condition, that he who failed of the ſolution, ſhould incur a forfeiture; and that Hiram, finding the queſtion too hard for him, paid the penalty. But one Abdemonus, a Tyrian, reſolved the ſaid queſtion, and propoſed new ones to Solomon, upon the penalty of paying ſo much to Hiram, if he did not uncypher them.

The kingdom of Tyre was in a very flouriſhing condition under this prince. He repaired and improved divers cities in the eaſtern parts of his dominions; enlarged Tyre, and, by the help of a dam, joined it to the temple of the Olympian Jupiter ſtanding in an iſland. In this temple he dedicated a golden pillar to Jupiter. He built two temples, one to Her- cules, cules, another to Aſtarte, and beautified them with rich donatives. To Hercules he alſo erected a ſtatue, and is ſaid to have repaired the temples of other gods, and to have enriched them with offerings to a very great value[r]. Hiram, it ſeems, was rather a religious, than a warlike prince; for the only military expedition we read of, during his reign, is that which he undertook againſt the Lyceans, who refuſed to pay him a certain tribute that was due to him, but were reduced in a very ſhort time.

[m] 1 Kings ix. 14. [n] 1 Kings ix. 11. & Joseph. ubi ſupr.
[o] 1 Kings ix. 13. & Joseph. ubi ſupr. [p] 1 Kings ix. 27. and 2 Chron. viii. 18. & Joseph. ubi ſupr. [q] Joseph. ubi ſupr. & l. 1. contra Apion.

IT is related by Tatian, from Theodotus, Hyſicrates, and Mochus, three Phœnician hiſtorians, that king Hiram gave his daughter in marriage to Solomon: he adds, that by her Solomon was induced to worſhip Aſhtaroth, the goddeſs of the Sidonians[s]. Hiram lived 53 years, and reigned 34[t].

HE was ſucceeded by his ſon BALEAZAR, BALEASTARTUS, or BAZOR, as Theophilus calls him, who reigned ſeven years according to Joſephus, and ſeventeen according to Theophilus, and died in the forty third year of his age[u]. Baleazartus.

ABDASTARTUS, the ſon of Baleazar, ſucceeded his father, and died according to Joſephus, in the twentieth year of his life, and the ninth of his reign. Theophilus ſays, he died at the age of fifty four, after having reigned twelve years. This prince was murdered by his nurſe's four ſons, and the eldeſt of them uſurped the kingdom, and governed twelve years. Abdaſtartus.

ASTARTUS, the brother of Abdaſtartus, recovered the throne to his family, lived ſixty ſix years, and reigned twelve. Aſtartus.

AFTER him, came his brother ASTARIMUS, who lived, if we believe Joſephus, fifty four years, and reigned twelve. Theophilus calls him Athbarymus, and ſays, that he lived fifty eight years. He was murdered by his brother Phelles, who took the government upon him in the fiftieth year of his age. Aſtarimus.

PHELLES, or, as Theophilus calls him, HELLES, did not long enjoy the throne he had wreſted to himſelf, by ſo baſe and wicked an act, being murdered in the eighth month of his reign by Phelles.

ITHOBAL, whom Theophilus names Futhobal, ſon to Aſtarimus, and chief prieſt of the goddeſs Aſtarte; which dignity was next to that of the king. Ithobal lived to the age of ſixty eight years, and ruled thirty two, ſays Joſephus: but if we credit Theophilus, he lived but forty years, and reigned but twelve. He is called in ſcripture Eth-baal, and ſtiled king of the Sidonians[x]. Joſephus gives him the title of king of Ithobal.

[r] MENAND. EPHES. & DIUS apud JOSEPH. ubi ſupr. [s] TATIAN. orat. contra Græcos. [t] THEOPH. ANTIOCH. l. 3. [u] JOSEPH. l. 1. contra APION. JOSEPH. & THEOPH. ubi ſupr. [x] 1 Kings xvi. 31.

Tyre and Sidon [y]. Whence it is plain, that, in Eth-baal's time, Sidon was ſubject to Tyre. When that ſubjection began is uncertain, for even in king Hiram's time, the Tyrians were, in all probability, maſters of Sidon; ſince Solomon, in the beginning of his reign, applied himſelf to Hiram for workmen of Sidon, who were famous for their ſkill in hewing of timber [z]. Ithobal built Botrys in Phœnice, and Auzates in Africa [a]. Jezebel, king Ahab's wife (whom we ſhall have occaſion to mention hereafter), was daughter to this prince. Menander, as quoted by Joſephus, tells us, that in the time of Eth-baal king of Tyre, there was an extreme drought for want of rain, that laſted from the month Hyperberetæus, till the ſame month next year. There were prayers indeed, ſays he, put up for the averting of the judgment, which were followed with mighty claps of thunder [b]. This was undoubtedly the drought under Ahab, for it was in his reign that Eth-baal was king of Tyre.

Badezor. After him his ſon Badezor (who is called by Theophilus Bazor) reigned, according to Joſephus, ſix years, and lived forty five. Theophilus ſays he reigned ſeven.

Mettinus. His ſon Mettinus ſucceded him, and reigned nine years ſays Joſephus, twenty nine ſays Theophilus. He died in the thirty ſecond year of his age, leaving behind him two ſons, Pygmalion and Barca, and as many daughters, Eliſa and Anna.

Pygmalion. Pygmalion aſcended the throne on the death of his father Mettinus, being at that time, as we are told by Juſtin [c], very young; that is, ſixteen, according to the computation of Joſephus, who ſuppoſes him to have lived fifty ſix years, and reigned forty [d]. It was in the ſeventh year of his reign that his ſiſter Eliſa, called alſo Dido, flying from Tyre, built Carthage in Africa. The occaſion of her flight is commonly related thus. Pygmalion coveting the immenſe riches of his uncle Sichæus, who was a prieſt of Hercules, and had married his ſiſter Eliſa, determined by ſome means or other to make them his own. But as that could not be effected ſo long as Sichæus was alive, he invited him one day to hunt with him, and while thoſe who attended him were engaged in the purſuit of a wild boar, ran him through with his ſpear; and then throwing him down a precipice, gave out, that the [y] Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 7. & l. 9 c. 6. [z] 1 Kings v. 6. [a] Menand. Ephes. apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 7. [b] Idem ubi ſupr. [c] Justin. l. 18. [d] Joseph. contra Ap. l. 1.

ſaid

fall had been the occaſion of his death. Juſtin and Virgil ſay, that Pygmalion barbarouſly murdered his uncle at the altar [c]. But however that be, he reaped no fruit from his wicked attempt, being diſappointed, when he leaſt expected it, by the prudent and artful conduct of his ſiſter Eliſa; who, as ſhe was a woman of great ſagacity and penetration, well knew what had prompted him to the murder of her huſband; but at the ſame time, concealing her thoughts with an artful diſſimulation, ſhewed the ſame kindneſs and eſteem for him, as though ſhe had not entertained the leaſt ſuſpicion of him. In the mean while, having formed a deſign of leaving Tyre, and ſaving both herſelf and the treaſures of her deceaſed huſband, from the cruel avarice of Pygmalion; under pretence of retiring to Charta, or Chartaca, a ſmall city between Sidon and Tyre, as if to live there with her brother Barca, ſhe deſired the king to furniſh her with men and ſhips to convey thither her effects. The covetous prince looked upon this as a fair opportunity of ſeizing at laſt what he had for ſo long a time ſo earneſtly deſired, though always in vain; becauſe Sichæus, who was thoroughly acquainted with his nephew's avaritious temper, had taken care to conceal his riches under ground. With this view Pygmalion willingly granted Eliſa her demands; which he ſoon repented; for as ſhe was aſſiſted by her brother Barca and ſeveral ſenators, who were privy to her true deſign, and engaged to follow her at all adventures; her treaſures were put on ſhip-board, and the fleet out of ſight, before Pygmalion was appriſed of her reſolution. We are told, that, ſeeing himſelf thus deluded by a woman, and the vaſt riches, which he deemed already ſecured in his own coffers, ſnatched, by ſuch a cunning device, out of his hands, he ordered a fleet to be fitted out with all poſſible expedition, in order to purſue the fugitives; but was prevented by the tears of his mother, and the threats of an oracle. The firſt place our adventurers put into was the iſle of Cyprus, from whence they carried off a great number of young women, a commodity they wanted moſt of all, ſince their deſign was to plant a new colony. From Cyprus they ſteered their courſe for the coaſts of Afric, where they put an end to their voyage; and, being kindly entertained by the inhabitants of Utica, a Tyrian colony, laid the foundations of Carthage; a city, which, in after-ages, became ſo powerful both by ſea and land, as to contend with

[c] JUSTIN l. 11. VIRG. 1 Æneid.

Rome for the empire of the world [f]. From Barca ſprang the illuſtrious family of the Barcæ in Afric, which produced many celebrated heroes, and among others the great Hannibal. But of the Carthaginian affairs hereafter: Let us now return to Phœnice. Pygmalion is ſaid by Stephanus to have built the city of Carpaſia in the iſland of Cyprus. He ſent to the temple of Hercules, ſtanding in the iſland of Gades, a rich donative, being the figure of an olive-tree of maſſive gold, and of moſt exquiſite and curious workmanſhip; its berries, which were of emerald, bearing a wonderous reſemblance with the natural fruit of that tree [g].

Elulæus. The next king of Tyre we find mentioned in hiſtory, is Elulæus, who reigned in the time of Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria. This prince, ſeeing the Philiſtines brought low by the war, which Hezekiah had made upon them, laid hold of the opportunity of reducing Gath, which had ſome time before revolted from the Tyrians. Whereupon the Gittites, applying themſelves to Shalmaneſer, engaged him in their cauſe; ſo that he marched at the head of a powerful army into Phœnice; but upon the concluſion of a peace between him and Elulæus, he withdrew his troops, and retired. Not long after Sidon, Arce, Palæ-Tyrus, and ſeveral other maritime towns of Phœnice, revolting from the Tyrians proclaimed Shalmaneſer their king. Upon this, a new war being kindled between the Tyrians and Aſſyrians, Shalmaneſer, who could not abide to ſee, that the Tyrians were the only people in Phœnice that diſputed his power and authority, reſolved to uſe his utmoſt endeavours towards the reducing of their city: and therefore, beſides his land forces, he ordered a fleet of ſixty ſail to be fitted out againſt them. But the fleet was encountered and diſperſed by the Tyrians with only twelve veſſels, and five hundred of the rowers were taken priſoners. This victory gained the Tyrians ſuch a reputation for naval affairs, that Shalmaneſer, dreading to engage them a ſecond time at ſea, turned the war into a ſiege, and leaving the army to block up the city, returned into Aſſyria. The forces he left behind him reduced the place to great ſtraits, by ſtopping the aqueducts, placing guards by the ſprings, and cutting off all the conveyances of water. However, by digging of wells within the city they found ſome relief in their diſtreſs, which enabled them to hold out for the ſpace of five years; at the end of which, Shalmaneſer dying, the ſiege was raiſed [h]. Elulæus reigned thirty years.

Year of the Flood, 2282. Year before Chriſt 717.

[f] Justin. l. 18. Eustath. in Dionys. Velleius, vol. 2. Orosius l. 4. c. 2. Appianus de Bell. Pun. Liv. decad. 4. l. 4. Servius in 4. Æneid. Virg. Joseph. ubi ſupra, &c. [g] Philostrat. in vita Apollonii. l. 5. c. 1.

relief

ITHOBAL II. reigned in the time of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, who laid ſiege to the city of Tyre, which kept that mighty monarch, that king of kings, as the prophet Ezekiel ſtiles him [i], employed for thirteen years together [k]: ſuch was the power of the Tyrians, at that time. We have the deſcription of the ſiege in Ezekiel [l], who mentions a fort raiſed againſt the place, a mount caſt up, and engines of war erected to batter down its walls. At laſt Nebuchadnezzar, after a ſiege of thirteen years continuance, made himſelf maſter of the city; but as moſt part of the citizens had retired with all their effects elſewhere before he entered the city, he had nothing but an empty town for his pains, as is plain from the ſcripture, where it is ſaid: Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon cauſed his army to ſerve a great ſervice againſt Tyrus .... yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus. Therefore finding himſelf thus diſappointed, he vented his rage upon the buildings, and the few inhabitants who were left, razing the town to the ground, and putting all he found in it to the ſword. To this deplorable condition was Tyre reduced by the Babylonians, and the ſevere prophecies, foretelling the overthrow of that city, plainly fulfilled [m]. Ithobal, in whoſe reign happened the deſtruction of Tyre, was, according to the character the prophet gives him [n], a moſt proud, arrogant, and aſſuming prince: pretended to know all ſecrets, to be as wiſe as Daniel, and even went ſo far as to rank himſelf among the gods; which brought that heavy judgment upon him, becauſe thou haſt ſet thine heart as the heart of GOD; behold therefore, I will bring ſtrangers upon thee——they ſhall bring thee down to the pit, and thou ſhalt die the death of them that are ſlain in the midſt of the ſeas [o]. From whence we may conclude, that in this war he was ſlain by the Aſſyrians.

Ithobal II. Year of the Flood, 2414. Year before Chriſt 585.

Year of the Flood, 2427. Year before Chriſt, 572.

As it is plain from ſcripture, that Nebuchadnezzar utterly deſtroyed the city of Tyre, which he found empty; and as, on the other hand, we are told by the Phœnician hiſtorians, that Ithobal was ſucceeded in the kingdom of Tyre by Baal, and Baal by ſeveral temporary magiſtrates; it is very probable,

[h] JOSEPH. Antiquit. l. 9 c. 14. [i] Ezek. xxvi. 7. [k] PHILOSTRATUS apud JOSEPH. Antiquit. l. 10. c. 11. [l] Ezek. xxvi. 8. & ſeq. [m] Jerem. xxv. 22. xxvii. 3. xlvii. 4. Ezek. xxvi. 3. Amos i. 9. 10. Joel. iii 4. [n] Ezek. xxviii. 3, 4. [o] Idem ibid. ver. 6, 7, 8.

bable, that the inhabitants of Tyre retreated with their effects, before Nebuchadnezzar got poſſeſſion of the city, to an iſland about half a mile diſtant from the ſhore, where they built themſelves a new city; which, after the deſtruction of the old town, ſubmitted to Nebuchadnezzar, who thereupon Baal. appointed Baal to be king under himſelf; but upon Baal's death, in order to make the government more dependent on the Aſſyrians, changed the royal dignity into that of temporary magiſtrates, called Suffetes (C), or Judges; a name well known among the Carthaginians, who were originally Tyrians, and whoſe chief magiſtrates were called Suffetes [p].

Tyre governed by Judges.

Baal reigned ten years, and upon his death the following judges had the government of the city, viz. Ecnibal, the ſon of Basbech, two months; Chelbes, the ſon of Abdæus, ten months; the high-prieſt Abbar, three months; Mytgonus, or Myttonus, and Gerastus, the ſons of Abdelimus, ſix years. After Tyre had been thus governed for ſome years by judges, the royal dignity was reſtored, Balator king. and Balator created king; but both he and his ſucceſſors were entirely dependent of, and tributaries to, the Aſſyrians, for the ſpace of ſeventy years; which being expired, they recovered, according to the prophecy of Iſaiah [q], their antient liberty and former privileges, of which in its proper place. Balator reigned but one year.

Merbal. Upon his death the Tyrians invited Merbal from Babylon, who reigned four years.

Irom. Merbal was ſucceeded by his brother Irom, who reigned twenty years. In the fourteenth year of Irom's reign, Cyrus, according to the Phœnician annals, made himſelf maſter of the Perſian empire [r].

After Merbal reigned Mapen, the ſon of Siron. He ſerved in Xerxes's navy againſt the Greeks; and, with the other commanders, adviſed him to engage the Grecian fleet at Salamis [s]. The Tyrians, as well as the other Phœnicians, were, at this time, as may be gathered from Herodotus [t], tributaries to the Perſians, though under a king of their own;

[p] Liv. l. 18. 30, & 34. Joseph. l. 1. contra Apion. [q] Iſai. xxiii. 15, 17. [r] Herod. l. 8. [s] Idem l. 3.

" (C) Suffetes . . . . had its derivation from the Hebrew word Sophetim, i. e. Judges, which was the very name, whereby the " chief governors of Iſrael were called for ſeveral generations, before they had kings (1).

(1) Prideaux's connect. vol. i. p. 92.

being

being greatly favoured by the Perſian monarchs, in conſideration of the ſervices they rendered them in their naval expeditions.

ABOUT this time reigned STRATO, whoſe acceſſion to the throne is related by Juſtin thus. The ſlaves who were then very numerous at Tyre, having formed a conſpiracy againſt their maſters, murdered them all in one night (except Strato, whom his ſlave ſecretly ſaved), and, taking poſſeſſion of the city, married their miſtreſſes, and put all the others to the ſword, who were not of their own race. Having thus not only recovered their liberty, but made themſelves abſolute lords of the ſtate, they reſolve to create a king out of their own body, and unanimouſly agree, that he ſhould be raiſed to that dignity, as being the moſt acceptable to the gods, who the next morning ſhould firſt ſee the riſing ſun. In purſuance of this reſolution and agreement, they appointed to meet about midnight in an open field, lying on the eaſt ſide of the city, and there, with one accord, beſtow the crown upon the perſon to whom the ſun ſhould ſhew himſelf firſt. In the mean time Strato's ſlave having imparted the whole matter to his maſter, whom he kept carefully concealed, was by him inſtructed to turn himſelf, not to the eaſt, as the others would probably do, but to the weſt; and there keep his eyes fixed on the top of the higheſt tower of the city. The ſlave obeyed his maſter's directions, and was therefore looked upon by the whole multitude as no better than a mad-man; it ſeeming to them very ſtrange, that a man ſhould look for the riſing ſun in the weſt. But they were ſoon made ſenſible of their error; for while the others ſtood gazing towards the eaſt, in expectation of ſeeing the ſun appear, Strato's ſlave ſhewed them the high edifices of the city already illuminated with his rays: whereupon he was highly applauded by his companions, and eagerly preſſed to name the perſon to whom he was indebted for ſuch a wiſe thought; which they could not aſcribe to him, or any other ſlave. He refuſed at firſt to gratify their curioſity; but at laſt, upon promiſe of impunity for himſelf and the perſon he ſhould name, he owned that out of compaſſion and gratitude toward his maſter, who had always treated him with great humanity and kindneſs, he had ſaved both him and his ſon in the common maſſacre, and acted in the affair, they were ſo inquiſitive about, according to his directions. The multitude hearing this, not only pardoned the ſlave, but looked upon the maſter as one preſerved Strato.

[n] JUSTIN. l. 18 c. 2.

by

by a particular providence of the gods, immediately proclaimed him their king. This is all we know of Strato.

Upon his death, his ſon was placed on the throne; and the kingdom of Tyre was enjoyed by his deſcendants [x], among whom, the only one we find mentioned in hiſtory is Azelmic, in whoſe reign happened the memorable ſiege and reduction of that city by Alexander the great [y]. We may judge of its flouriſhing condition at that time, from the ſtand it made againſt that victorious prince, ſince it ſtopped the courſe of his whole army full ſeven months. As the conqueror approached the territories of Tyre, the Tyrians ſent out ambaſſadors to meet him (amongſt whom was the king's own ſon), with preſents for himſelf, and proviſions for his army: but when he deſired to enter the city under pretence of offering ſacrifice to Hercules, they refuſed him admittance; which provoked Alexander, now fluſhed with ſo many victories, to ſuch a degree, that he reſolved to ſtorm the city, and enter it by force. On the other hand, the Tyrians not at all terrified by Alexander's threats, determined to ſtand it out to the laſt. What encouraged them to this reſolution was the ſtrength of the place, and the confidence they had in the Carthaginians their allies. The city then ſtood on an iſland, half a mile diſtant from the ſhore; was ſurrounded with a ſtrong wall an hundred and fifty foot high, and was ſtored with great plenty of proviſions, and all ſorts of warlike machines: beſides the Carthaginians, who were a powerful ſtate, and then maſters of the ſeas, had promiſed to ſend them ſuccours during the war. What animated the Tyrians to ſtand a ſiege gave Alexander no ſmall uneaſineſs, in the undertaking and carrying it on. For he could no otherwiſe make his approaches to it, than by carrying a mole or cauſey from the continent to the iſland, on which the city ſtood. This grand work he undertook, and as he was reſolved at any rate to reduce the city, he accompliſhed it at laſt, maugre the innumerable, and almoſt inſurmountable difficulties he met with in ſo bold an attempt. He was aſſiſted in raiſing the mole (which was two hundred feet in breadth) by the inhabitants of the neighbouring cities, who were all called in on this occaſion; and ſupplied with ſtones from the ruins of old Tyre, and with timber from mount Libanus. The Tyrians at firſt looked upon this undertaking as a raſh and deſperate attempt, which could never be attended with any ſucceſs: and therefore from their ſhips, laughing at the king, asked him, whether he believed himſelf to be greater than Neptune? But ſeeing the mole, contrary to their expectation, beginning

Azelmic.

Year of the Flood, 2667. Year before Chriſt 332.

[x] Idem. Ibid. [y] Arrianus l. 2.

ginning to appear above water, they reſolved for fear of the worſt, to ſend their wives and children and ſuch as were not fit for ſervice, to Carthage; but were prevented by the arrival of Alexander's fleet from Cyprus. Neither could the Carthaginians aſſiſt them with the promiſed ſuccours, being detained at home by domeſtic troubles. However, the Tyrians fainted not in the reſolution of ſtanding to their defence; firſt from their ſhips, and afterwards, as the mole was brought nearer the city from the walls, with ſhowers of arrows, darts, ſtones, &c. wherewith they made a moſt dreadful havock of the Macedonians, who were employed in the work, and expoſed without any defence. But what moſt of all diſheartened the Macedonians, was a violent ſtorm, which ariſing all on a ſudden, carried away, in great part, the cauſey, after it had been, with unwearied labour and great loſs of men, brought near the walls of the city. This unlucky accident perplexed Alexander to ſuch a degree, that he began to repent he had undertaken the ſiege, and would have ſent ambaſſadors to the Tyrians with terms of peace, had he believed they would have hearkened to them. But as they had thrown headlong into the ſea the ambaſſadors, who before the ſiege had, in his name, ſummoned them to ſurrender; he was afraid, thoſe, he ſhould ſend now, might meet with ſuch like, or more ſevere treatment. Being therefore diverted, by this apprehenſion, from all thoughts of making up matters by way of treaty, and fully appriſed that his reputation, and the future progreſs of his arms, entirely depended on the ſucceſs of the preſent undertaking, he re-aſſumed, with ſeeming chearfulneſs, the work; repaired, with incredible expedition, the breach which the ſea had made in the mole; and having brought it again almoſt home to the city, began to batter it with all ſorts of warlike engines: while the archers and ſlingers haraſſed, without interruption, thoſe who defended it, in order to drive them from their poſts. But the Tyrians ſtood their ground, and by means of a new contrivance of wheels with many ſpokes, which, being whirled about with an engine, either ſhattered in pieces the enemy's darts and arrows, or broke their force, covered themſelves againſt the aggreſſors, and killed great numbers of them, without ſuffering any conſiderable loſs on their own ſide. But, in the mean time, the wall began to yield to the violence of the rams, that battered it night and day without interruption. Whereupon the beſieged, ſetting all hands to work, raiſed in a very ſhort time, a new wall, ten cubits broad, and five cubits diſtant from the former; and by filling up the empty ſpace between the two walls with earth and ſtones, kept the Macedonians a long while employed, ere

they

they could make, with all their engines, the leaſt impreſſion on this new piece of fortification. However, Alexander, having joined many of his ſhips together, and mounted upon them a vaſt number of battering engines, beſides thoſe he had already placed on the mole, ſucceeded at laſt in the attempt, and made a breach an hundred feet wide. But when he came to the aſſault, in hopes of breaking into the city over the ruins, the Macedonians, though encouraged with the preſence of their king, were forced to give ground, and retire with great loſs to their ſhips. Alexander deſigned to renew the attack next morning; but the breach having been repaired by the Tyrians during the night, he perceived himſelf no farther advanced than when he firſt began to batter the walls. Hereupon the Macedonian reſolved to change his meaſures, and, having firſt of all brought the mole home to the wall, cauſed ſeveral towers to be built equal in height to the battlements. Theſe towers he filled with the moſt brave and reſolute men of his army; who purſuant to his directions, having formed a bridge, with large planks, reſting with one end on the towers, and with the other on the top of the ramparts, endeavoured, ſword in hand, to gain the wall, but could not prevail, being oppoſed by the Tyrians with unparalleled bravery, and weapons, which the Macedonians were altogether unacquainted with. Theſe were three-forked hooks, faſtened with a cord (one end whereof they held themſelves), which, being thrown at a little diſtance, ſtuck in the enemies targets, and gave the Tyrians an opportunity, either of plucking their targets out of their hands, and by that means expoſing them, without defence, to ſhowers of darts and arrows: or, if they were unwilling to part with their ſhields, of pulling them headlong out of the towers: ſome, by throwing a kind of fiſhing nets upon the Macedonians that were engaged on the bridges, entangled their hands; ſo that they could neither defend themſelves, or offend the enemy. Others, with long poles armed with iron hooks, drew them off of the bridges, and daſhed their brains out againſt the wall, or on the cauſey. In the mean time, a great many engines placed on the walls, played inceſſantly upon the aggreſſors, with maſſy pieces of red-hot iron, which ſwept away entire ranks at once. But what moſt of all diſheartened the Macedonians in the attack, and forced them at laſt to give it over, was the ſcorching ſand, which the Tyrians, by a new contrivance, ſhowered upon them. For this ſand (which was thrown in red-hot ſhields of iron, or braſs, getting within their breaſt-plates and coats of mail, tormented them to ſuch a degree, that many, finding no other relief, threw themſelves headlong into the ſea; and others, dying in the anguiſh of inexpreſſible torments, ſtruck, with their deſperate cries, a terror into all thoſe who heard them. This occaſioned unſpeakable confuſion among the aggreſſors; which gave new courage to the Tyrians, who now leaving the walls, charged the enemy hand to hand, on his own bridges, with ſuch reſolution, that Alexander, ſeeing his men give ground, thought fit to ſound the retreat, and by that means ſave, in ſome degree, the reputation of his Macedonians. Such deſperate attacks were frequently renewed by the aggreſſors, and always ſuſtained with the ſame unbroken and undaunted courage by the beſieged. And now Alexander began to entertain ſome thoughts of abandoning the enterpriſe, and continuing his march into Egypt: but again, conſidering the dangerous conſequences that muſt unavoidably attend ſuch a reſolution, he determined to go on with the ſiege at all adventures; though of all his captains none was found, but Amyntas, who approved of that determination. Having therefore exhorted the diſheartened Macedonians to ſtand by him, and infuſed into them all the courage he could, he ſurrounded the city with his fleet, and began to batter it on all ſides. In the mean time, a fancy taking the Tyrians, upon a dream ſome of them had, that Apollo deſigned to forſake them, and go over to Alexander, they faſtened his ſtatue with golden chains to the altar of Hercules (D). This ſtatue, or coloſſus (for it was of an extraordinary ſize), belonged formerly to the city of Gela in Sicily, and was ſent from thence by the Carthaginians, when they took Gela, to Tyre their mother city [z]. In this Apollo the Tyrians greatly confided; and therefore, upon the rumour that he was to abandon them, had recourſe even to chains, in order to prevent his departure. But, their utter ruin being already decreed by the true GOD, and foretold by his Prophets [a], the confidence they placed in their idols could not avert the impending judgment. They were deſtined to deſtruction; and deſtruction was their fate: for Alexander, having at laſt battered down the walls, and taken

[z] DIOD. SIC. l. 13. [a] Iſa. xxiii. Ezek. xxvi, xxvii, xxviii.

(D) We have already (2) ſeen, that there were only altars erected to Hercules, and that the Egyptian, in his temple at Gades; but we read (3) that Hiram erected a ſtatue to Hercules at Tyre; whence we may infer, that he was either worſhipped with other rites at Tyre, than in the temple at Gades, or that the antient form of worſhip was corrupted. This we promiſed (4) to take notice of.

(2) See before in the notes, p. 312, (Q). (3) See before, p. 340. (4) See before, p. 316.

the

the town by ſtorm after ſeven months ſiege, fully executed the ſentence, which the Tyrians had, by their pride and other vices, drawn down upon themſelves and their country. The city was burnt down to the ground, and the inhabitants (excepting thoſe whom the Sidonians ſecretly conveyed away in their ſhips) were either deſtroyed or enſlaved by the conqueror, who, upon his firſt entering the city, put eight thouſand to the ſword, cauſed two thouſand of thoſe he took priſoners to be crucified, and ſold the reſt, to the number of thirty thouſand, ſays Arrian, for ſlaves. His cruelty towards the two thouſand that were crucified was highly unbecoming a generous conqueror. Alexander treated them thus for no other reaſon, than becauſe they had fought with ſuch bravery and reſolution in defence of their country. But, to palliate the true cauſe of ſo baſe an action, gave out, that he did it to revenge upon the preſent Tyrians the crime which their forefathers committed, when they murdered their maſters, as we have related above; and that, being ſlaves by origin, crucifixion was the puniſhment due to them. To make this look the more plauſible, he ſaved all the deſcendants of Strato, as not being involved in that guilt, and among them king Azelmic, who in the beginning of the ſiege was out with his fleet upon a naval expedition, in conjunction with Autophradates, the Perſian admiral; but had haſtened home as ſoon as he was acquainted with the danger of his country. After the city was taken, he took ſanctuary in the temple of Hercules; and was not only ſpared by the conqueror, but reſtored to the throne after Alexander had re-peopled the place. For, having thus cleared it of its former inhabitants, he planted it a-new, with colonies drawn from the neighbouring places, and thenceforth ſtiled himſelf the founder of Tyre, a city which he had moſt ungenerouſly deſtroyed. Upon taking the city, he unchained Apollo, returning him thanks for his intention of coming over to the Macedonians; offered ſacrifice to Hercules; and, after performing many other ſuperſtitious follies, continued his march into Egypt [b].

Year of the Flood, 2667. Year before Chriſt 332.

How Marion came to rule over Tyre, will be more regularly told hereafter.

The KINGS of ARAD.

Arad, or Aradus had its kings as well as Sidon, Tyre, and, perhaps, moſt other cities of Phœnice. We find mention of but three of its kings that we are ſure of.

[b] Diod. Sic. l. 17. Plutarch, in Alexandro. Q. Curtius l. 4. Arrian. l. 2. Justin. l. 11. Joseph. Antiquit. l. 11. c. 8.

A Map of Syria and Phœnice, according to this History.

M. Taurus
M. Taurus
M. Amanus
THE PLAIN CILICIA
Antioch ad Taurum COMAGENE
Samosata
Germanicia Cyrrhus or Cyrus Sinus Issicus
Alexandria PART OF THE MEDITER
R. Orontes
Seleucia Pieria
Berrhœa or Berœa
SELEUCIS Cyrrhestica
Bambyce or Hierapolis Antioch ANTIOCHENE Chalcis Chalcidene
PART OF MESOPOTAMIA
Euphrates
RANEAN
I. Aradus
Laodicea Orontes R.
Casiotis Apamea
R. Marsyas
Apamene supposed the ancient Hamath SYRIA Chalybonitis
Chalybon
Palmyra or Tadmor
PALMYRENE
SEA COAST of PHŒNICE Tripolis Theoprosopon Botrys
R. Adonis Berytus
Sidon
Tyre
M. Carmel
M. Libanus
SYRIA proper Canobine Byblus Palæbyblus Enhaca
Balbek
COELESYRIA
Damascus
M. Anti Libanus
Orontes
PART OF PALESTINE
PART OF THE DESART ARABIA

D. Pomarede Sculp.

ARBAL, the father of Narbal [d], who accompanied Xerxes in his great expedition.

NARBAL, the ſon of Arbal, who ſerved under Xerxes [e], as we have ſaid.

MANY years after this, reigned one Geroſtratus, who, whether he deſcended from the two former kings or no, we have not to ſay. He ſerved Darius againſt Alexander, joining the Perſian fleet, as other Phœnician and Cypriot princes did, till hearing, his ſon Strato had put a crown of gold upon the head of Alexander, and given up to him the iſland city of Aradus, the city of Marathus on the main land over-againſt it, as alſo the city of Mariammia, or Mariama, and whatever elſe belonged to the Aradian dominion; he thought it moſt for his intereſt to approve, ſeemingly at leaſt, of what his ſon had done, and to make his ſubmiſſion to Alexander [f].

[d] HERODOT. l. 7. c. 98. [e] Idem. ibid. [f] ARRIAN. de Exped. ALEX. Magn. l. 2.

CHAP. VII.

The History of the Jews to the Babyloniſh Captivity.

SECT. I.

The Jewiſh Hiſtory, from Abraham to Moſes.

The Deſign of the Book of Geneſis.

IT was the Jewiſh Lawgiver's main ſcope to prepoſſeſs the Iſraelites with a firm perſuaſion of the certainty of GOD's promiſes made to their anceſtor, (which he obſerved they were not over forward to credit) that their poſterity ſhould in due time inherit the land of Canaan, and to prevent their natural impatience and deſpondency, during their forty years wandering in the wilderneſs, or even after their entrance into the promiſed land, which they were not to conquer but by ſlow degrees. To this end he is very particular in reminding them how GOD had promiſed it, even with an oath, to Abraham and his ſeed, above four hundred years before they were to be put in actual poſſeſſion of it. He doth not ſtop here, but goes on, and ſets before them the manifold trials and difficulties, through which the divine providence had led them from Chaldæa into Egypt, during that long interval. That they could not but be ſenſible how wonderfully they were encreaſed, even in the midſt of their ſlavery and oppreſſion; ſo that they were now more than ſufficient to atchieve the promiſed conqueſt. That if therefore his promiſes were not ſo ſpeedily fulfilled, as their ſanguine temper might expect, they ſhould patiently wait his time, and not provoke him by their ungrateful miſtruſt, after ſo many wonders wrought in their favour, to put off the accompliſhment of them, till a more hopeful generation ſprang up[a]. But now, ſince it was his pleaſure to call them to the glorious work, they ſhould act like men fully aſſured of his aſſiſtance and protection. This was doubtleſs the reaſon, why Moſes gave them a fuller hiſtory of Abraham and his poſterity, than he had done of his progenitors. In con-

[a] Exod. xvii. 2, 7. Num. xiv. 22. Hebr. iii. 16. & ſeq.

formity

formity to which method, we shall begin ours with Abraham, the father and founder of the Jewish nation (A).

ABRAHAM was the son of Terah, and the tenth in a lineal descent from Shem, the son of Noah, to whom the right of primo-geniture belonged. [b] He was born in Ur of the Chaldees [c], and was about seventy four years of age when his father and he came from thence into Haran [d], where they had not been seated long, before Terah died in the two hundred and fifth year of his age (B). His funeral wes scarce over, when

Year of the Flood, 1077. Year before Christ, 1922.

[b] Gen. ix. 25 & seq. vid. Vol. 1. ch. 2 § 1 & 2. and p. 257 &seq.
[c] Gen. xi. 31. [d] Vid. Vol. I. 291, (Y), 294. [e] Gen. xii. 1 & seq.

(A) We have ventured to call them by that name in compliance with custom, though it was not given them till after the Babylonish captivity, when the tribe of Judah became the most considerable, if not almost the whole of what was left of Israel. The first name, that was given to Abraham and his children, was that of Hebrews, which some derive from Heber, the fifth in descent from Noah (1). But it is hardly probable, that Abraham would call himself by his name, rather than by that of any of his ten predecessors. We rather think, as has been hinted before, that it was given him by the Canaanites, because he came thither from the other side of the Euphrates; the word עבר, Heber, signifying, in the original, the other side, whether of a river, sea, or any other thing: in which sense some people are called transmarine, transalpine, and the like. What seems to confirm this etymology is, that we don't find, that he was called by that name, till word was brought him of his nephew Lot's misfortune (2); so that it is likely the messenger, enquiring for Abraham, of the inhabitants, might describe him by the word עברי, Hibri, or one that came from the other side of the river. However, after Jacob had received the great name of Israel, they preferred that of Israelites to that of Hebrews, though the neighbouring nations did still call them by the latter (3).

(B) There seems to be an insurmountable difficulty in this account of Terah's age: for if he was but seventy when he begot Abraham, and died in Haran, in the two hundred and fifth year of his age; and Abraham left Haran in the seventy fifth of his, it will follow, either that Terah must have lived sixty years in Haran, whereas it doth not appear by the text, that he lived there above one or two; or that Abraham must have lived sixty years longer than the text expresly says he did. We shall not trouble the reader with the ways which some antient fathers and Jewish rabbies have taken to solve this difficulty. Some moderns think with Villet and Tremellius, that though Terah was but seventy years old when he began to have children, yet he was near an hundred and thirty when he be-

(1) Gen. x. 24. D. Kimki. (2) Gen. xiv. 13. (3) Vid. Vol. I. 291

Abraham's Call.

when Abraham, who in all likelihood designed to settle there, was commanded by GOD to depart thence into a land which he should shew to him, and assured him, that he would bless, protect, and multiply him in an extraordinary manner; and that in his seed, all the nations of the earth should be blessed[e]: He readily obeyed, being doubtless well acquainted with the call, and, taking Sarah his wife, and Lot his brother's son, with all his servants and cattle, went into the land of Canaan, and pitched his tents near the city of Sichem[f] (C), then inhabited got Abraham, and that those that were born before him are purposedly omitted by Moses, that Abraham might have the honour of the primo-geniture for the excellency of his faith (4). Others with Calmet choose rather to give him Adar, or Azar, for his father, and Terah for his grandfather, according to the Arabian history of that patriarch; and, to fill up the chasm, suppose that Adar begot Abraham in the sixtieth year of his age (5); but besides the small reliance we can have on that history, the thing seems quite opposite to the text. Others therefore more reasonably suppose with Norton Knatchbull (6), that there is an error crept into the original; and that Terah was either a hundred and thirty years old when he begot Abraham, or that if he was then but seventy years old, he died in the hundred and fifty fifth, and not in the two hundred and fifth year of his age: for the text says, that Abraham was seventy five years old when he left Haran, and that his father died but a little while before it.

[e] Gen. xii. 1 & seq. [f] Ibid. See before, p. 75 & seq.

It may not be improper to take notice here, that though Haran, the land so called, and Haran, the son of Terah, be spelt with the same letters in ours, and other versions, from which some have concluded, that the latter gave his name to the country; yet in the original they are differently writ; viz. the former with a ח Cheth, equivalent to the Greek χ, and might be more properly spelt Charan; whereas Terah's son's name begins only with a ה He, which answers to our H.

(C) If we may credit Nicolas of Damascus, Abraham came with an army from Chaldæa, slopt, and reigned some time in the country of Damascus, before he went to Sichem (7), and his name was still famous there. Josephus seems to have quoted his very words, which are to this effect; Abraham, though a stranger, reigned in Damascus, whither he came with a great number of followers from a country beyond Babylon, called Chaldæa. But the people after some habited by the Canaanites, where he built an altar to the LORD. Here GOD was pleaſed to appear again unto him, to confirm all his former promiſes, and to aſſure him, that he would one day give that land to his poſterity. Soon after this, Abraham fearing, perhaps, an inundation in that low country, betook himſelf to a mountain, which had Bethel (D) on the weſt, and the town of Hai on the eaſt; where he reared a new altar to the LORD; but a great famine, which happened ſoon after in thoſe parts, forced him to remove into Egypt, which was then the only place where he might hope to find proviſion for his numerous family, and great multitude of cattle. However, the fear he was in upon the account of Sarah his wife, who, though ſhe was paſt the ſixty fifth year of her age, retained beauty enough to endanger the man's life who ſhould paſs for her husband, made him reſolve, after ſome heſitation, that ſhe ſhould paſs for his ſiſter, and not for his wife, in every place they came to. He propoſed it to her, and having gained her conſent, he committed her honour and chaſtity to the care of that providence which had hitherto protected him, and ſet out upon the journey. From this deſcent into Egypt the generality of chronologers compute the ſpace of four hundred and thirty years, mentioned by St. Paul [h] agreeably to what Moſes ſays in another place [i], that Iſrael dwelt in Egypt four hundred and thirty years; that is, as the ſeventy interpret it, that from the firſt coming of Abraham thither to the Exodus, ſhould be four hundred and thirty years (E). We ſhall have occaſion

(4) Idem loc. Villet. ch. ii. quæst. 19. (5) Calm. hist. vi. Herbelot. Biblioth. orient. p. 12, 13. (6) Vid. Essay on a new vers. (7) Ap. Joseph. l. 1. c. 8. Euseb. præp. l. 9 c. 16.

Goes into Ægypt.

Year of the Flood, 1080. Year before Chriſt 1919.

[g] USHER's Ann. p. 5. VILLET. & al.
[h] Galat. iii. 17.
[i] Exod. xii. 40.

ſome time conſpired againſt him; whereupon he and his followers removed ſouthward into Canaan, ſince called Judæa; where he fixed his abode, and became the father of a numerous offspring. Thus far Damaſcene; to which Joſephus adds, that Abraham's name was ſtill to that day in great veneration in that country, and that there was ſtill a village which bore the name of Abraham's habitation. However, it is plain, that the ſcripture ſays nothing of this imaginary reign.

(D) Bethel is here called ſo proleptically, for it did not receive that name till ſome time after, as will be ſeen in the ſequel.

(E) This account is contradicted by a learned Romiſh Chronologer (8), who pretends, that from Abraham's going into Egypt to the Exodus, there elapſed ſix hundred years, and that the four hundred and thirty years mentioned by St. Paul (9), have no relation to theſe epochs. We beg leave to ſhew his error, by comparing the occaſion to reſume this point in its proper place. Abraham had not been long in Egypt before Sarah charmed the Egyptians, and in the end captivated Pharaoh himſelf, who, upon the fame of her beauty, ſent for her, and became ſo ſmitten with it, that for her ſake he ſhewed extraordinary favours to her pretended brother. In a ſhort time Abraham ſaw himſelf poſſeſſed of vaſt numbers of ſheep, oxen, camels, aſſes, men and maid-ſervants, beſides gold, ſilver, and other precious things; which Pharaoh heaped upon him, though all too mean to recompence him for the loſs of his wife: at length GOD was pleaſed to interpoſe on his behalf and to deliver Sarah from the imminent danger ſhe was in. Pharaoh and his houſe were infeſted with ſuch plagues, as plainly convinced them on whoſe account they ſuffered. The king then ſent for Abraham, and, having ſharply rebuked him, for deceiving him in a matter of ſuch conſequence, delivered up his wife to him as free from any ſtain of diſloyalty as he had received her, and without ſtaying for an anſwer, went out, and gave orders, that they might ſafely depart his dominions with all the wealth they had.

(8) Genebr. chronol. 1. loc.
(9) Galat. iii. 17.

Return to Bethel.

PERHAPS it may not be unacceptable to obſerve here, that Pharaoh was not the name of this particular king, but an number of years from the one to the other. 1*ſt*, Then, that from Abraham's arrival into Canaan, to Jacob's deſcent into Egypt, are but two hundred and fifteen years, is thus proved. From the time of the promiſe made to him in Haran, to the birth of Iſaac, are about twenty five years; thence to the birth of Jacob are ſixty more; and he was an hundred and thirty years old when he ſtood before Pharaoh; all which make but two hundred and fifteen years. 2*dly*, That the Iſraelites ſojourned but two hundred and fifteen more in Egypt, is not only generally agreed on, but ſhall be farther proved in its due place. Again, that by the promiſe mentioned by St. Paul, as made to Abraham and his ſeed, is not meant that which GOD made to him when he was going to offer up Iſaac, is plain, becauſe there are twenty five years between the firſt promiſe and the birth of Iſaac; and if we ſuppoſe him to have been twenty five years old, as Joſephus thinks (10), there will be fifty years wanting of the four hundred and thirty; and if he was thirty three, as ſome, or thirty ſeven, as others, have ſuppoſed (11), the difference will ſtill be greater, and lengthen the ſpace of their abode in Egypt, to fill up that of ſix hundred years; the contrary of which we have promiſed to prove hereafter.

(10) Antiq. l. 1. c. 14. (11) Bereſh. Rab. 1. loc. Rab. Sal. & al.

appellation

appellation common to all the kings of Egypt (F). They had alſo other particular names, as So, Necho, Shiſhak, &c. but under which of the kings of Egypt this event happened is impoſſible to determine, not only becauſe his particular name is not mentioned by Moſes, but likewiſe by reaſon of the great confuſion we have obſerved in their chronology, and ſucceſſion of their kings [k]; however, A. B. Uſher ventures to call him Apophis [l].

ABRAHAM made no ſtay in Egypt after this; the famine being ceaſed in the place which he had left, he returned thither by the ſame way, and on the altar, he had built before, offered a ſacrifice of thanks for his happy eſcape and ſafe return [m]. In the mean time the herds of Lot, as well as his own, being grown too numerous for the land they lived in, ſuch contentions aroſe between their ſhepherds, that Abraham reſolved in a friendly manner to ſeparate from Lot, and having given him his choice of the whole country that lay before him, Lot choſe the fertile plains of Sodom and Gomorrah, which he ſaw watered by the river of Jordan, and parted from his uncle [n]. Abraham was no ſooner ſeparated from him, but GOD, who ſeems to have been the ſole conductor of this ſcene, that the promiſed bleſſings might fall on him alone, bid him caſt his eye round the horizon, and promiſed to give Separates from Lot.

[k] Vid. Vol. I. p. 491 & ſeq. [l] Annal. p. 5. [m] Gen. xii. paſſ. & xiii. iv. [n] Ibid. v. 7, 8, & ſeq. Vid. ſupr. pag. 76, 170.

(F) It will not be needful, we hope, here to remind the reader of what has been ſaid before, concerning the name of Pharaoh (12) ſeeing all the etymologies of it are ſo very uncertain. The moſt probable ones are theſe that follow. Bochart thinks the word Pharaoh ſignifies properly a Crocodile (13); and that Ezekiel alludes to it in theſe words, —— Behold I am againſt thee Pharaoh, king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midſt of the river (14). — Another critic fancies, that the Arabic word Pharaoh, to be raiſed on high, or be ſuperior to, is the true root of the name (15). Kircher doth indeed derive the word from the ſame root, but will have it to ſignify, to deliver, or be free; and that Pharaoh ſignifies one who is free from, or above, the laws (16). Laſtly and to name no more, the learned Renaudot thinks that Pharaoh is the ſame as the Egyptian Paurro, or Pooro, which ſignifies a king (17).

(12) p. 72. (13) Hieroz. p. 2. l. 5. c. 17. (14) Ezek. xxix. 3. (15) Le Clerc. in Gen. xii. (16) Kircher Oedyp. Egypt. l. c. 76. (17) Renaudot. Differt. de ling. Coptica, p. 127. Ap. Calm. ſub. voc. Pharaoh.

all that land he beheld to him and his poſterity. Abraham ſoon after left Bethel, and went to dwell in the land of Mamre (G), which is in Hebron, and there built an altar unto GOD,

(G) It is ſurprizing that ſo many verſions, ſuch as the Chaldee, Vulgate, Geneva, Munſter, Caſtalio, and others, ſhould render the word אלון Elon a plain, ſince it always ſignifies an oak. The Syriac, Arabic, and St. Jerom's among the old, beſides ſome of the modern ones, render it by that word; and our Engliſh doth the ſame in ſome other places (18). And were it to have any other ſignification, that of valley would ſuit it much better than that of plain, becauſe Sichem is ſaid to be ſituate in the valley of Aulon or Elon (19). As for the name of Mamre, which in the original ſignifies illuſtrious or conſpicuous, it ſeems to have been given to the oak, not from any place near it, but rather by reaſon of its largeneſs, or the eminence of the place on which it ſtood; or more probably, perhaps, becauſe it became famous on ſo many accounts; ſuch as Abraham's dwelling under it, Jacob's burying his wife, nurſe, and ſtrange gods under it. The reader may obſerve the ſame fault committed in theſe verſions, with reſpect to the oak of Mamre, mentioned Gen. xviii. 1. where the word Elon is tranſlated a plain inſtead of an oak. Sozomen tells us, that this oak in Conſtantine's time, was famous for pilgrimages and annual feaſts: That it was but ſix miles diſtant from Hebron; and that ſome of the cottages, which Abraham built, were ſtill ſtanding near it; as likewiſe a well of his digging, where Jews, Chriſtians, and Heathens reſorted, either out of devotion, or to trade. Bronchard doth further aſſure us, that he had ſeen it, and that he had brought away ſome of the fruit and wood. He obſerves, that its leaves are ſomewhat larger than thoſe of the maſtick tree, but its fruit is like an acorn (20).

As for Hebron, it is plain. that it was a very antient city. Some authors (21), after Joſephus, think, that it was built ninety years after the flood, and that it claimed the precedency even of Memphis. Some antient rabbies make it ſtill older, pretending, that Ham built it as ſoon as he was ſettled in that country (22): however, it is certain, that it was ſeven years older than Zoan in Egypt (23), which is not Memphis, but Tanais, the antient ſeat of the kings of Egypt (24). Hebron was afterwards called Arbah (25), or Kirjath-arbah, which ſignifies four cities, or rather the city of Four. The antient Jews will have it to be ſo called, becauſe Adam, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jdeob, were buried there, with Eve, Sarah, Rebekah, and

(18) Gen. xxxv. 4. Joſhua xxiv 26. & alib. (19) Vid. Euſeb. Jerom. Onomaſt in Αυλῶν. (20) Eſſay on a New Tranſlat. (21) Villet. ch. 13. queſt. 15. (22) R. Sal. & al Num. xiii. 23 (23) Chald. Paraphr. LXX & al. (24) Gen. xxiii. 2. Joſh. xiv 15. (25) Ibid.

Leah

GOD, and ſoon after contracted a friendſhip with three of the greateſt men of that place, viz. Mamre, Aner, and Eſhcol; the firſt of whom communicated his name to all the country. This alliance proved very ſerviceable to Abraham in proceſs of time, and was the cauſe of his living peaceably near ten years among them: but a misfortune, which befel Lot about this time, who was taken captive by Chedorlaomer and his allies ° *, forced him to muſter up all his forces and his courage to reſcue him out of their hands. This diſaſter no ſooner reached Abraham's ears, than he communicated the news of it to his three friends, Mamre, Aner, and Eſhcol. He readily obtained their aſſiſtance, and joining three hundred of his men to it, they marched in purſuit of the conquerors, and came upon them at Dan, in the night, routed, and purſued them as far as Hobah, on the left of Damaſcus, and happily reſcued Lot with all his family, ſervants, and cattle, and brought him back to his old habitation. The king of Sodom, who was probably the ſon of him who had periſhed in the ſlime-pits (H), hearing of Abraham's ſucceſs, came out to congratulate him upon it, and would have offered him all the booty which he had retaken, the men and women excepted, but the patriarch nobly refuſed to accept of even the leaſt ſhare of it. Here Melchizedec met and bleſſed him, and he preſented that high-prieſt with the tythes of all the ſpoil P †.

Lot taken priſoner, and reſcued by Abraham.

AFTER this Abraham removed to Mamre, or Hebron, where GOD was pleaſed to appear to him a fifth time in a Removes to Hebron.

° Ibid. c. xiv. paſſ. * Vid. ſup, ibid. P Ib. v, 18.
† Sup. ib.

Leah; but it ſeems more probable, that it had its name from the great Arbah, the father of the Anakims (26) As to the city of Hebron, or rather Chebron, חברון, it is not likely, that it took its name from Hebron, the grandſon of Caleb, as ſome authors imagine (27), but rather from the verb חור Chavar, to couple or join; becauſe thoſe married couples, Abraham and Sarah, Iſaac and Rebekah, and Jacob and Leah, are buried here (28).

(H) As the text tells us, that the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fell into ſome of the ſlime-pits, with which the valley of Siddim abounds (29), and takes no notice of their coming out of them; we think it more probable that they periſhed there, than that Abraham ſtayed to take them out, as the Jews vainly imagined (30), contrary to the ſenſe of the text (31).

(26) Joſh. xiv. 15. (27) Jerom Muſcul. Ap. Villet. ubi ſupr. Orig. Ap. eund. & al.
(28) Gen xlix. 31.
(29) Gen. xiv. 10.
(30) Bereſh. Rab. Rambam & al.
(31) Gen. ubi ſupr.

viſion,

vision, to give him fresh assurances of his special favour, adding, that he would be his exceeding great reward. Abraham, who had hitherto hearkened to GOD's promises without any expression of distrust, ventured now for the first time to expostulate with him, not knowing how they could possibly be fulfilled, whilst himself continued childless, and, to all apearance, must leavé all his substance to Eliezer of Damascus, overseer of his household. This was indeed a modest way to try whether GOD designed to bless him with a child, and GOD did not leave him long in suspence, but assured him, that not Eliezer, but a son of his own should be his heir; then, commanding him to lift up his eyes to heaven, promised to make his posterity more numerous than the stars thereof. Abraham was now eighty five years old, and Sarah, turned of seventy four, was thought barren. All these had been sufficient to stagger a faith less firm than his; but the scripture says that he believed in GOD, and that it was imputed unto him for righteousness[r]; GOD was pleased moreover to repeat his former promises, that he would infallibly give that land to his posterity, assuring him, that it was for that very end that he had brought him thither out of Chaldæa. Here Abraham could not forbear desiring of GOD to give him some certain token, whereby he might be assured, that his seed should possess that land, and GOD was pleased to comply with his request. He bid him to take a heifer of three years, a goat of three years, and a ram of three years (I), with a pigeon, and a turtle-dove, and offer them up. Abraham immediately took them, killed the four-footed beasts, clove them in the midst, and joined the pieces one to the other, laid the birds on the top of them, whilst himself stayed to drive away the fowls from the sacrifice. As soon as the sun began to set, a deep sleep fell upon him, followed by a [r] Gen. xv. 1.—6.

(I) The word, which we translate three years old, in the original is משלשת Meshuleshеth, which doth rather signify triplicated, or thrice told, being the Pahul in the conjugation Pihel, as the grammarians speak. Accordingly Onkelos (32) translates it three heifers, three goats, and three rams; wherein he is followed by other Jewish commentators. One of them tells us (33), that Abraham was then representing the three future sacrifices; namely, burnt-offerings, sacrifice for sin, and peace-offering, but doth not allow, that there were three of each kind.

(32) Vid. Mercer. Villet. Rab. Sal. & al. in loc. (33) Mos. Gerund. ap. Munst. in Gen. xix. sub. not. d horror of great darkneſs; during which, it was revealed to him from GOD, that his poſterity ſhould ſojourn, and be afflicted in a ſtrange land four hundred years [r] (K): at the expiration of which, GOD would puniſh their oppreſſors, and bring his children out of the land which he had promiſed him, whilſt himſelf ſhould be gathered to his fathers in a good old age. After this, Abraham ſaw a ſmoaking furnace, and a burning lamp paſs between the victims, which in all probability conſumed them. Thus was this new and glorious covenant ratified between GOD and Abraham, who, highly pleaſed with all theſe promiſes, went to impart his joy to his beloved wife [t].

horror

SARAH

[r] Ibid. v. 6. Rom. iv. 3. & alib. [t] Ibid. v. 9 ad fin.

(K) Expoſitors have given into various opinions, in order to make out theſe four hundred years: Genebrard, mentioned in a former note †, has affirmed that the Iſraelites dwelt in Egypt the full number of four hundred years (34), whoſe error may be eaſily confuted by the lives of Kohath, the ſon of Levi, who went down with Jacob (35), and died in Egypt in the hundred and thirty third year of his age (36): of his ſon Amram, the father of Moſes, who lived one hundred and thirty ſeven years (37); and of Moſes, who was eighty years old when he brought Iſrael out of Egypt; all which ſeveral numbers make but three hundred and fifty years, out of which we muſt ſubſtract thoſe which Kohath had attained when he went down into Egypt, and likewiſe the time the fathers lived with their children. This has made ſome reduce the number to leſs than two hundred and ten years (38), and others to two hundred; whereas we ſhall endeavour to prove, that they remained there two hundred and fifteen years. St. Paul reckons from the firſt promiſe made to Abraham to the promulgation of the law in the firſt year after the Exodus, four hundred and thirty years (39): Of which two hundred and fifteen were already expired, when Iſrael came into Egypt, as we have already proved ‡. The laſt remaining two hundred and fifteen may be thus reckoned; Kohath came down with Jacob, and, according to Euſebius, begot Amram in his ſeventieth year, and Amram begot Moſes much about the ſame age; to which if we add the eighty years of Moſes's age when he let them out, the whole will make two hundred and twenty, from which may be ſubſtracted five years, the ſuppoſed age of Kohath, when Jacob left Canaan, and the remainder will be the time

† Vid. ſup. pag. 357. ſub not. E. (34) Id. ibid. (35) Gen. xlvi. 11. (36) Exod. vi. 18. (37) Ibid. v. 20. (38) Chryſoſt. homil. l. 1. Nic. de Lyr. in loc. (39) Galat. iii. 17. ‡ Vid. ſup. 357. not. E.

Sarah, not dreaming that ſhe was to be the happy mother of the promiſed child, and having moreover all the convincing proofs that a woman can have, of her being paſt all poſſibility of having any of her own, reſolved to be at leaſt a mother by proxy, according to the cuſtom of that age and country. To this end ſhe perſuaded her huſband to take her hand-maid Hagar to him, that if he had a child by her, ſhe might bring it forth upon her knees, which was all the happineſs ſhe could expect from the promiſe. Abraham did time of their abode in Egypt, namely two hundred and fifteen years (40),

Hence it is plain, that the four hundred years of Abraham's ſeed ſojourning in a ſtrange land, muſt be reckoned, not from their coming into Egypt, but from the birth of Iſaac. For all the time of their ſojourning in the land of Canaan, Gerar, or any other, was ſtill in a ſtrange land, in which they had not a foot of ground, if we except the cave of Machpelah As to what is added, that they ſhall likewiſe ſerve, and be ill treated, it is commonly underſtood to be ſpoken circumſtantially, and might be put in a parentheſis, thus, they ſhall ſojourn and be ſtrangers (and likewiſe ſerve and be oppreſſed) during the ſpace of four hundred years, as St. Auſtin and others have fully proved (41). Accordingly we find Iſaac oppreſſed in Gerar, his wells filled up by its inhabitants, and himſelf forced ſtill farther from them *; and Jacob ſerved, and was oppreſſed by Laban near twenty years, yet neither of them laboured under a continual oppreſſion. The Egyptian ſervitude did not commence till after Joſeph and all his brethren were dead (42), before that the Iſraelites lived in peace and plenty. Allowing therefore, that Levi was forty four years of age at his firſt coming into Egypt, which is the moſt that can be ſuppoſed, he muſt have lived ninety three years in Egypt, becauſe the text tells us, that he died in the hundred and thirty ſeventh year of his age (43). And theſe ninety three years being ſubſtracted from two hundred and fifteen, the time of their abode there, there will remain but an hundred and twenty two years of thraldom, even ſuppoſing it to have began immediately after his death. The natural ſenſe therefore of this prophecy to Abraham can be only this, that his ſeed, from Iſaac on ſhould be ſtrangers in a land that was not theirs, during the ſpace of four hundred years, during ſome part of which they ſhould be oppreſſed, afflicted, and at length brought under bondage; which term being expired, they ſhould find a happy deliverance.

(40) Vid. Merc. Villet. Munſt. & al. (41) Aug. quæſt. in Exod vi. 47. Merc. Jun. Munſt. Villet. c. 159. 15. Le Clerc. in l. & al. * Vid. ſup. pag. 207. (42) Vid. the authors in reference (41) before. (43) Exod. i. 6. vi 16.

eaſily

eaſily acquieſce, and Hagar no ſooner found herſelf pregnant, than ſhe became haughty and inſolent towards her miſtreſs. Sarah, impatient to ſee herſelf inſulted by a ſlave, whom her kindneſs had raiſed to that height of happineſs, could not forbear breaking out into bitter complaints againſt them both; and Abraham willing to ſhew his reſentment againſt her maid, and to convince his wife that he loved her as much as ever, left it to her, to do herſelf juſtice in what way ſhe ſhould think fit; which ſhe accordingly did, but with ſuch ſeverity, that Hagar, not able to bear it, ſtole away from her, and went, and ſat down by a fountain on the road to Shur, leading to Egypt. Here the angel of the LORD met her, and perſuaded her to return, and ſubmit herſelf to her miſtreſs; aſſuring her that ſhe would be ſoon delivered of a ſon, whom ſhe ſhould call Iſhmael(L); that his poſterity would multiply exceedingly, and that both he and they ſhould prove fierce and warlike, that their hand ſhould be againſt every man, and every man's againſt them (M); and that they ſhould dwell in the face of all their brethren [u]. Hagar hearing this comfortable news, was ſoon perſuaded to take the angel's advice, and in memory of this ſurpriſing viſion, ſhe called the well Beer-lahai-roi, which ſignifies, the well of him that lives and ſees me (N). This well was between Kadeſh and Bezed [w]. Soon after her return ſhe brought forth the promiſed ſon, and called him Iſhmael, according to the angel's word. Abraham was now eighty ſix years of age, and did not expect another ſon, but brought this up as the heir of all his ſubſtance, and of all GOD's promiſes. Hagar indeed could eaſily have undeceived him, but thought it more prudent to conceal what the angel had revealed to her; and it was not till almoſt thirteen years after that GOD plainly promiſed him a ſon by Sarah his wife.

Hagar is forced to fly from her miſtreſs

Is perſuaded by an angel to return and ſubmit.

[u] Gen. xvi. 12. [w] Ibid. ver. 14.

(L) Iſhmael is compounded of the words ישמע and אל jiſhmagh, and El, the LORD hath, or will hear. The reaſon of which name is immediately ſubjoined by the angel, namely, becauſe the LORD had heard her complaint.

(M) This prediction has been exactly verified in the ſeveral tribes of the Arabs, Iſhmael's deſcendants, who are generally cruel, warlike, and given to rapine; and whoſe habitation is in tents within the neighbourhood of Judæa and Idumæa.

(N) Theſe words are no leſs obſcure than the reaſon Hagar gives for calling the well by that name. They are both variouſly interpreted; but we chooſe to adhere to our Engliſh verſion, becauſe it ſeems to us the moſt literal and neareſt to the ſenſe of the original.

By

Abram's name changed into Abraham.

By this time Abraham had attained to the ninety ninth year of his age, when God was pleaſed to ratify his former covenant with him, by changing his name from Abram to Abraham (O); and by aſſuring him, that he would make him, the father of many nations; that kings ſhould come out of him, and that his poſterity ſhould ſurely poſſeſs the land wherein he was a ſtranger. And, as a token, or rather trial of his faith and obedience, God commands him to circumciſe all the males in his family, with a further injunction, that for the future all the males that ſhould be born of him, or in his family, whether bond or free, none excepted, ſhould be circumciſed on the eight day after they were born; and that if any male remained uncircumciſed, that ſoul ſhould be cut off, as a deſpiſer of God's covenant, from having any ſhare in the promiſed bleſſings deſigned for him and his poſterity. Laſtly, and to compleat his happineſs, God was pleaſed to aſſure him, that Sarah, his wife, ſhould bear him a ſon, on whom all theſe bleſſings were to be conferred; and therefore, that her name ſhould be no longer Sarai, but Sarah (P). Here Abraham falling on his face, probably to conceal

(O) We have already taken notice †, that Abram is compounded of two Hebrew words אב and רום Ab and Rom, which ſignify high father, and that Abraham is commonly derived from three, namely, אב רב המון Ab Rab Hamon, the father of a great multitude: but this laſt is ſomewhat forced and ungrammatical, having nothing to ſupport it, but the reaſon which God gives in the text, for changing Abram into Abraham, namely, becauſe he was to make him the father of many nations.

(P) Sarai שרי in Hebrew ſignifies my princeſs, and שרה Sarah, the name now given her, princeſs.

It is farther obſervable, that God, in the beginning of this 17th chapter (44), calls himſelf the firſt time, אל שדי El ſhaddai, which our verſion rightly tranſlates Almighty God. Others have underſtood it otherwiſe, by deriving the word Shaddai, from Shad, which ſignifies the breaſt of a woman, to expreſs God's tenderneſs towards his ſervants, others deriving it from the verb שדד Shaddad, which ſignifies to ſpoil, lay waſte, overcome, by Shaddai, the irreſiſtibility of God's power, who, they think, doth here aſſume that name, becauſe he is going to invert the order of nature, and cauſe the old and barren to become fruitful; but the moſt genuine etymology is from ש uſed inſtead of אשר, for the pronoun qui, who, an די Dai, ſufficient, or ſelf-ſufficient, an expreſſion very fit conceal his laughing, which either the ſtrangeneſs or improbability of what he heard had forced from him, began to intercede for the life and preſervation of Iſhmael, beyond which he thought it unreaſonable to aſk or wiſh for any thing; but the Almighty ſoon aſſured him, that theſe great bleſſings were not deſigned for Iſhmael, but for a ſon to be born of the hitherto barren Sarah, whom he ſhould therefore name Iſaac (Q). That as to the ſon of Hagar, he would indeed bleſs him with a numerous poſterity; but that Iſaac alone, whom Sarah ſhould bear in a year from that very day, was alone to be entitled to the covenant and promiſe, that in his ſeed all nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed *.

† Vid. ſup. p. 389, ſub not. K. (41) Ver. 1.

and

GOD was no ſooner departed than Abraham took his ſon Iſhmael, and all the males of his family, and circumciſed them, as well as himſelf, without any regard either to his own age, which was almoſt one hundred years, or to the tenderneſs of his ſon, who was not above thirteen. All ſubmitted alike to the operation, and to GOD's command, on the ſame day (R); and it was not long before his obedience was Year of the Flood, 1102. Year before Chriſt 1897.

* Gen. xvii.

and proper to aſſure Abraham and Sarah of the certainty of his promiſe to them, which none but an all-ſufficient power could fulfil (45).

(Q) Iſaac, or according to the Hebrew יִצְחָק Iſchack, ſignifies he has, or ſhall laugh.

(R) Whether this ceremony of circumciſion was firſt introduced into the world by the Hebrews or Egyptians, had been much conteſted by antient and modern hiſtorians, critics, and others. Herodotus, who declares he had received all his knowledge of the affairs of Egypt from their prieſts, gives it indeed for the Egyptians; but he ſeems in ſome meaſure to retract, if not to contradict himſelf, in this very point, when he affirms, that no nation practiſed it, but what received it firſt from the Egyptians, and a little after owns, that he did not know whether of the two had it firſt, the Egyptians or Ethiopians, though he is inclined to believe the former (46). As for the reſt of the antients, who are on that ſide the queſtion, as they have blindly followed Herodotus, all their authority centers in him. However, it is certain, that neither they, nor any other nation we know of, the Jewiſh excepted, did practiſe it univerſally. The prieſts were indeed obliged to be circumciſed, but the reſt of the people were left wholly at their liberty. Neither doth it appear,

(45) Olcaſt. & al. diſſert. de circumciſ.

(46) Herodot l. 1. c. xlvi. vid. Calm.

was rewarded with a ſeventh and more remarkable viſit from GOD *. Abraham, who dwelt ſtill at Mamre, was ſitting one day at the door of his tent under a tree, when he beheld afar off three men, whom he took to be ſtrangers; he went to pear, that they practiſed it upon a religious account, as the Jews did: Philo (47) has given us the reaſons why thoſe nations uſed circumciſion; namely, firſt, in order to avoid a diſtemper called a carbuncle, to which they who were not circumciſed were often ſubject. Secondly, for the ſake of cleanlineſs, by cutting off whatever was apt to harbour any filth; and for this reaſon it was that they ſhaved their bodies all over. The third is ſymbolical, and foreign to our ſubject. The laſt is, that circumciſion is a help to fertility, and that thoſe who are circumciſed are apter for procreation, than thoſe who are not. Now for the modern, we mean the Chriſtian writers. Theſe do not indeed affirm abſolutely, that Abraham learned it from the Egyptians, but that it is poſſible he might have ſeen it in Egypt, and be ſo much taken with it, that GOD, in compaſſion to his infirmity, whoſe faith could not ſuſtain itſelf without ſome outward and viſible ſymbol, might ſanctify this Egyptian ceremony, by retrenching all that was ſuperſtitious in it, and give it to him and his poſterity, as a ſenſible token of his alliance with them (48).

* Gen. xvii.

Only le Clerc (49) ſubjoins an argument, which, in his opinion, turns the ſcale very much on the Egyptian ſide; for, ſays he, Abraham's family, at his firſt coming into Egypt, was ſo inconſiderable, and his poſterity afterwards ſo hated and deſpiſed by the Egyptians, that it is by no means probable that proud nation ſhould have received ſuch a ceremony from them. But might not this be the very motive that determined them in favour of it? was it not natural for the Egyptians, no leſs ſuperſtitious than haughty, to infer, that ſince it procured ſuch great and valuable bleſſings to that deſpiſed people, it could not fail of proving more ſucceſsful to them, if once they admitted it amongſt them? might not Joſeph's time have been a proper criſis to recommend it to them? and were not thoſe motives we have mentioned out of Philo, of its being reputed a promoter of fertility, cleanlineſs, and health, ſufficient to recommend it, eſpecially to a people who were governed by their wives? and laſtly might not this be the very reaſon which made the Egyptian women uſe it as well as the men? however that be, the notion of the Hebrews having received it from them ſeems ſo contrary to the care and conduct of GOD, to preſerve them from the ſuperſtitions of other nations, that it meets with but few advocates; and indeed it ſeems more reaſonable to think, that the Egyptians had it to meet them, and in the moſt civil and reſpectful manner invited them to come and take a ſmall refreſhment with him, and,

(47) Phil. de circumciſ. pag. 810. ap. eund. (48) Spenc. de leg. ritual. Jud. Le Clerc in loc. (49) Id. Bibl. A. M. p. 2. p. 250. & al.

from

from ſome other nation, whether the Arabs, (as Bochart thinks, by reaſon of the difference there was between the Jewiſh and Egyptian circumciſion) or from any other of their neighbours, or even that they might ſtumble upon that ceremony, without knowing, or having it from any, than to ſuppoſe, that one muſt have it from the other, and that therefore the Jews might as well have it from the Egyptians. As for the reaſon of its being enjoined on the eighth day after the child's birth, the beſt we have met with is that of Cunæus (50), that children were not thought ſufficiently clean or perfect during the firſt ſeven days, being ſtill full of the corruption they brought from the womb. And this ſeems to be the reaſon of GOD's ordaining, that no beaſt that was offered to him ſhould be leſs than eight days old (51). Circumciſion therefore being a kind of ſolemn offering of a child to GOD, it ſeems highly reaſonable, that the ſame law ſhould be obſerved in it, as was enjoined concerning victims. But as to the eighth day being choſen rather than any other afterwards, without ſeeking for myſteries in that number, as ſome are fond of doing, it will be ſufficient to ſay, that the child being reckoned perfect and fit at that age, and there being a neceſſity of fixing a day for it, and not to leave it to the choice of the parents, no time could be fitter than that, becauſe the child is then leaſt ſenſible of the ſmart of, and leaſt in danger of being hurt by, it.

The laſt enquiry we need make upon this ſubject of circumciſion is, the reaſons of its inſtitution: and here we ſhall only mention one or two of thoſe that are thought moſt conſiderable. The firſt is topical; becauſe the heat of the climate required it, for the reaſons mentioned above. Secondly, political; in order to diſtinguiſh thoſe who were in the covenant of GOD, from other nations. Thirdly, moral; to imply the circumciſion of the heart, and the mortification of carnal appetites. Fourthly, religious; in that it was, firſt, the ſymbol and ſeal of the covenant made between GOD and Abraham, and his ſeed, and figurative of the faith which was to be in CHRIST (52). To theſe reaſons we ſhall ſubjoin one more out of a modern author (53), which the reader will hardly meet with elſewhere. He writes thus: We reckon circumciſion among the trials of Abraham's faith. It is eaſy to obſerve, by very many circumſtances of that patriarch's life, that he was deſigned as a pattern to all the faithful. The more his faith was tried, the more conſpicuous it became; the more difficulties he obſerved in the accompliſhment of GOD's promiſes, the more he ſhewed the great idea he had of him that had made them, by overcoming thoſe and, having obtained their conſent, ordered a feaſt to be got ready for them (S). As ſoon as it was over, one of his gueſts enquiring obſtacles. ----- Why did not God give him Iſaac till the laws of nature ſeemed to exclude all hopes of his ever being a father? it was to try his faith. ---- Why did God command him to ſacrifice that very ſon to whom ſo many bleſſings belonged, but to the ſame purpoſe? ---- Why did God ſet ſo long an interval between the promiſe of a ſon, and the accompliſhment of that promiſe, that Sarah, thinking it impoſſible ſhe ſhould be the mother of him, did give him her maid Hagar? ----- Why was Iſhmael born ſo many years before Iſaac, &c. but to make ſtill freſh trials of his faith?--- Why might not then God have the ſame views in enjoining him to be circumciſed? he not only makes him wait for this ſon near twenty years, though promiſed in ſo ſolemn a manner, but when that time is elapſed, and Abraham thinks himſelf on the eve of receiving the reward of his faith, he croſſes his hopes a-freſh, and commands him to undergo an operation that ſeemed wholly to put an end to them. Abraham could not but look upon circumciſion as dangerous in that hot country, even to young men, much more to one of his years; and conſequently, that it muſt put him quite out of condition of ever being a father. The command of his having the covenant in his fleſh ſeemed as oppoſite to the promiſe of his having a ſon, as that of his ſacrificing that ſon was to the promiſe of his being the father of many nations. Notwithſtanding which, Abraham's faith triumphed over this obſtacle alſo --- being fully perſuaded, that God could not only renew the ſtrength of an old man, but likewiſe make him fruitful, after his having undergone an operation which ſeemed ſo contrary to it. It is to extol this triumph that the ſcripture obſerves, he was ninety-nine years old, when he was circumciſed; and it was to preſerve the memory of it, that God enjoined that ceremony to all his poſterity, &c. (54).

(50) Cun. apud Baſnag. Rep. Hebr. p. 351. (51) Levit. xxii. 27. (52) Targ. Onkel. Hieron. Pugnin. Munſt. Mercer. Villet. & al. (53) Saurin Diſc. Hiſt. du V. Teſt.

Abraham entertains three angels.

All that needs be added under the head of circumciſion is, that the Iſraelites did not afterwards underſtand the curſe pronounced againſt thoſe who had it not, ſo ſtrictly as to cut them off, or drive them out from among them, provided they kept the law of nature, worſhipped the only true God, and abſtained from blood; but if they became circumciſed, they were looked upon as children of Abraham, and were bound to keep the law of Moſes. Theſe were called by the Jews, proſelytes of righteouſneſs, to diſtinguiſh them from thoſe of habitation, who were uncircumciſed, and only obſerved the laws of Noah, and were therefore called Noachidæ. Theſe two ſorts of proſelytes became ſo numerous, that in Solomon's time there were an hundred and fifty three thouſand and ſix hundred of them in his kingdom (55).

(S) This feaſt was a whole fatted calf, three meaſures, or pecks, of fine flour, beſides cream and milk; by which, and that of two kids, enquiring after Sarah, and being told that ſhe was in the tent, he then addreſſed himſelf to Abraham, and aſſured him, that he would viſit him again at the end of a year, by which time Sarah would have a ſon. Sarah, who was liſtening at the tent door, and thought herſelf paſt child-bearing, burſt out into a laughter, and the ſtranger aſked the reaſon of it in ſuch a ſerious tone, as ſtruck her with a terrible fright. She would fain have denied it; but it was to no purpoſe, that ſhe endeavoured to hide any thing from the perſon that ſpoke to her, who diſmiſſed her with this gentle reproof, that ſhe was highly in the wrong to miſtruſt what he had ſaid to her, ſince nothing was impoſſible with GOD. The three heavenly gueſts, for ſuch they were, roſe up in order to proceed on their journey, and Abraham courteouſly accompanied them ſome part of the way. At length one of them, whom the original calls the LORD (T), as a further mark of his favour, began to reveal a moſt dreadful ſecret to him, which was, that the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah was gone up to heaven; and that he was going down fully reſolved to deſtroy them utterly, if, upon enquiry, he found their wickedneſs equal to the cry of it; whether the remembrance that Lot was in one kids, which Rebekah prepared for her husband (56), when ſhe was already grown dim with age, if we may gueſs at their ſtomachs, we ſhall be apt to conclude, that they were not of the ſmalleſt. Neither do the patriarchs differ much in this reſpect from Homer's heroes, ſince he tells us, that when Cumæus entertained Ulyſſes, he dreſſed a whole hog, that was five years old, for him and four more (57). However, if we conſider their laborious life, and their enjoying a perfect ſtate of health, we need not wonder at their extraordinary appetite and good digeſtion.

(54) Gen. xvii. 24. (55) 2 Chron. ii. 17.

A ſon promiſed to Sarah.

(T) The name Jehovah יהוה, by which Moſes calls the ſtranger that talked to Abraham, being looked upon, by the generality of Jews and Chriſtians, to be the incommunicable name of GOD, it is believed by the far greater part of the latter, that it was the Son of GOD who appeared in that form: however others, particularly ſome modern ones (58), maintain, that it was but an angel who ſpoke to him in the perſon of GOD. But it is not probable, either that Moſes ſhould call an angel by that name, or that Abraham ſhould intercede with him as he doth, when he ſays, that be far from thee to deſtroy the good with the wicked: ſhall not the Judge of all the earth do right? or laſtly, that an angel ſhould peremptorily ſay, If I find forty, thirty, or twenty righteous men in the place, I will ſpare it for their ſakes. It is therefore more probable, that it was CHRIST himſelf, who is emphatically called the judge of all the world of thoſe cities, or rather his natural compaſſion, gave Abraham freſh courage to intercede for thoſe righteous men that might be found among the wicked, Abraham did not ceaſe expoſtulating with him, till he had obtained a promiſe, that if there were but ten righteous men found in the place, he would ſpare it for their ſakes: Upon which, the LORD departed from him. The fate of thoſe cities, and Lot's deliverance, have been already related †: as for Abraham, he ſaw the next morning the thick ſmoak of thoſe unfortunate cities, aſcending like that of a furnace [y].

(56) Gen. xxvii. 9, 10. (57) Odyſſ. 14. (58) Le Clerc com. in loc. & al.

Abraham pleads for Sodom.

NOT long after, Abraham, leaving the plains of Mamre, probably to be out of the ſtench of the vale of Siddim, went and dwelt in the country of the Philiſtines ‡ between Kadeſh and Shur (U); where the ſame adventure happened to him which he had met with in Egypt. Sarah, whom neither her pregnancy nor advanced age (ſhe being now ninety years old) had deprived of her beauty, was again deſired by Abraham to paſs for his ſiſter; Abimelech, king of that country, ſtill ſaw charms enough in her to invite her to his bed; but the LORD appeared to him in a dream, and threatened him with immediate death, if he did not reſtore her untouched to her huſband, who was a prophet very dear to him; in conſequence of which, Abraham had his wife returned to him, with conſiderable preſents (W) [z].

Abimelech takes Sarah. Is threatened by GOD, and reſtores her.

THE

† Supr. p. 76. [y] Geneſ. xix. ‡ Vid. ſupr. 202.
[z] Geneſ. xx.

(U) Kadeſh and Shur were the names of two deſerts, the laſt of which the Iſraelites entered after the paſſing of the Red-ſea (59) and is the ſame which is afterwards, called Etham (60). Abraham dwelling ſome conſiderable time here, called the place Beerſheba (61). Here it was that Iſaac was born, and Abraham liked the ſituation and people ſo well, that he continued in it upwards of twenty five years: from this place likewiſe he went to offer up his ſon in the land of Moriah (62).

(W) There ſeems to be a double miſtake in our tranſlation in Abimelech's ſpeech to Sarah, which runs thus: Behold, I have given thy brother a thouſand pieces of ſilver: behold he is to thee a covering of the eyes.——and thus ſhe was reproved. For it is plain, the king was purchaſing Abraham's friendſhip, and not quarrelling with him or his wife, and Abraham had already ſo far juſtified both himſelf

(59) Exod xv. 22. contra Nic. de Lyr.
(60) Numb. xxxiii. 8. Vid. Toſtat.
(61) Gen. xxi. 31. Vid. Jun. in loc.
(62) Gen. xxii. 1.

THE time appointed being come, ſoon after their leaving the court, Sarah brought forth the long expected ſon, and called his name Iſaac. And Abraham failed not to circumciſe him on the eighth day. They were now in the zenith of their happineſs. Sarah ſuckled the child herſelf, and weaned him at the uſual time (X); and Abraham made a feaſt to all his houſhold that day: but their joy could not laſt long without ſome mixture of grief, by the jealouſy which Iſaac cauſed to Hagar and her ſon. Iſaac was ſcarce ſeven years old, when Sarah obſerved Iſhmael ſhew ſome contempt to him (Y), which made her reſolve to part them for ever, that Iſaac born. Year of the Flood, 1102. Year before Chriſt 1897.

Iſhmael mocks Iſaac.

ſelf and her to the king's ſatisfaction: and therefore the word נכחת ſhould not have been rendered rebuked, as Kimki and others do, that think ſhe was blamed by all for the lie ſhe had told. Pagninus renders it erudivit ſe, i. e. ſhe learned more wit, whereas it is the participle of the verb יכח, which though it is generally rendered to reprove, or rebuke, yet it as often ſignifies ſearch, or enquire thoroughly into a thing till the truth be found. Abimelech therefore means no more, than that ſhe is acquitted after a full hearing, and the Chaldee paraphraſe hath tranſlated it accordingly. The other miſtake is, Abraham's being ſaid to be a covering to her eyes, whereas the king ſeems to ſpeak of the thouſand pieces of ſilver which he gave them as a token of their juſtification, the veil being always the ſymbol of womens modeſty (63).

(X) It is not eaſy to gueſs how long they gave ſuck in thoſe days, the antient Hebrews are divided about it (64); ſome holding, that Iſaac was weaned at the end of five, and others not till the end of twelve years, and others, at the end of twenty four months (65); if we may judge by what the young Maccabee's mother ſaid to him (66); my ſon, remember I have ſuckled thee three years, that time will appear the moſt probable. However, we may ſafely believe, that Iſaac was not weaned before the uſual time for want of care or affection in his mother (67)

(Y) The Jewiſh interpreters expound the word מצחק in the text, which ſignifies laughing, or, playing, by מלעיג, which ſignifies to deride and deſpiſe, and not without good grounds, ſince Sarah did ſo highly reſent it. They think that it happened on the day in which Abraham made the feaſt for the weaning of Iſaac, and that whilſt the gueſts were congratulating him for having a ſon and heir in his old age, Iſhmael ſhewed ſome tokens of deriſion, which Sarah obſerving, went and complained of it to her husband (68). However it is plain it muſt have been ſomething worſe than childrens play, as the Septuagint has rendered it, ſince St that ſhe might be rid at once of all her fears. You know, ſaid ſhe to her huſband, That Iſhmael has no ſhare in the inheritance with my ſon; for which reaſon, it is not fit, that they ſhould continue longer together; ſend him, therefore, and his mother away, that we may once more be at peace. Though Abraham loved her to ſuch a degree that he could deny her nothing, yet he could not but look on her requeſt as too cruel and unreaſonable, ſeeing ſhe knew, that he had ſtill a great fondneſs for the boy; but, GOD confirming what Sarah had ſaid, and promiſing moreover to protect Iſhmael, and to make him a great nation out of regard to him, Abraham was at laſt prevailed upon to ſend him and his mother away the very next morning (Z). What befel them afterwards is foreign to our preſent ſubject.

(63) Pfeiter Flaccius in loc. Leſcene's Eſſay. (64) Apud Hieron. quæſt Heber. in Geneſ. (65) 2 Maccab. vii. 27. (66) Ap. Calvin. & Mercer. (67) Calv. Villet.. (68) Vid. Munſt. in loc.

Is ſent away with his mother.

ABRAHAM, in the mean time, entered into a ſolemn league of friendſhip with Abimelech, king of the Philiſtines [a]. To ſecure his property in a well he had dug, to guard himſelf againſt the outrage of the Philiſtines, who had taken ſeveral wells from him before, and to ratify the aforeſaid alliance, Abraham preſented the king with oxen, ſheep, and the like; then taking ſeven young ſheep, he deſired him to accept of them, as a token that he had dug ſuch a well, and that he ſhould from thenceforth peacefully enjoy it. Upon this occaſion that place was called Beerſhebah, or the well of the oath, becauſe of the covenant which they had ſworn there (A). The pleaſantneſs of the place, and the friendſhip of Abimelech makes a covenant with Abraham.

[a] Vid. ſupr. p. 204, & ſeq.

Paul calls it a perſecution (69). Beſides, it muſt be remembered, that Iſhmael is deſcribed by the angel (70) as a fierce and cruel man, and conſequently, could not but begin to ſhew ſome tokens of it, being then upwards of twenty one years of age.

(Z) The text tells us, that Abraham gave them only ſome bread and a pitcher of water; a ſmall proviſion if that had been all; but we muſt remember, that bread and water are commonly taken, in Hebrew, for all other neceſſary proviſions Abraham therefore may be ſuppoſed to have given them all things neceſſary for their journey.

(A) באר שבע Beerſhebah is compounded of two Hebrew words, the firſt of which ſignifies a well, and the other an oath, or likewiſe ſeven. Here Moſes applies the name to the oath, though it is more than probable, that Abraham had an eye to the double

(69) Galat. iv. 29. (70) Gen. xvi. 12.

meaning of the king, invited Abraham to ſojourn there many years. He planted here a wood, and built an altar to the LORD, reſolving to end his days in this part, unleſs GOD ſhould otherwiſe determine [b].

BUT GOD had yet a further tryal to make of Abraham's faith and obedience, but ſo ſenſible a one as would put it to the utmoſt proof. Iſaac, the ſon of his old age, the promiſed head of a new and numerous race, the fountain of ſo many promiſed bleſſings, and the dear and only object of ſo much affection; this very Iſaac is now at length commanded to be brought unto a mountain, which GOD was to point out to him, and there to be offered up a burnt-ſacrifice, and that by the hands of his own father (B). Abraham never ſtayed to expoſtulate about the cruelty, illegality, and ſeverity of the command; but on the very next morning he gets all things ready, and, leaving it to GOD to make good his own promiſes, reſolves to obey. He ſets out the next morning for the place, and takes with him his ſon Iſaac, ſome ſervants, and all other things neceſſary for the meaning of the word Shebah, when he made choice of ſeven, rather than any other number of ewes. From this well the adjoining city was called alſo Beerſheba, which was the utmoſt bound of the land of promiſe on the ſouth, as Dan was towards the north; whence came the proverb, From Dan to Beerſheba. This city was one of thoſe which fell to the lot of the tribe of Simeon (71); but becauſe Simeon had his inheritance in the midſt of the tribe of Judah (72), therefore Beerſheba is alſo numbered amongſt the cities of Judah (73).

Abraham commanded to ſacrifice his ſon Iſaac.

[b] Gen. xxi.

(B) As the age of Iſaac is not ſet down in the text, it is uncertain how old he was, when Abraham was ordered to offer him up. The opinion of ſome learned Jews (74), that he was but twelve years old, is ridiculous, ſince it would have been impoſſible for him to have carried ſuch a load of wood as he did Others (75) ſay, that he was thirty ſeven years old, but that was the year of Sarah's death, whereas ſhe was alive when this happened. Joſephus makes him twenty five years old (76): and ſome chriſtians, antient and modern, conjecture, that he was paſt thirty, becauſe that was about the age in which CHRIST ſuffered, whoſe type Iſaac was at leaſt in this tranſaction, in which there were ſeveral circumſtances which bore a great conformity with thoſe that attended CHRIST's paſſion.

(71) Joſh. xix. 2. (72) Ibid. v. 9. (73) Ibid xv 28. Villet. (74) Abenezra ap. Poſtat. (75) Ap. Villet. (76) Joſ. Antiq. l. 14.

dreadful work. And, on the third day after his ſetting out diſcovers mount Moriah afar off (C), the place appointed by GOD. There, leaving his ſervants behind, he goes up to the mount without betraying any ſign of grief or concern, which might raiſe a ſuſpicion in his ſon. Iſaac, on the other hand, being laden with the wood and other materials for a burnt-offering, and obſerving nothing of a victim, could not forbear aſking his father where it was; ſuch a queſtion at ſuch a time was ſufficient to have ſtaggered a heart leſs firm than Abraham's, who only anſwered calmly, that GOD would provide himſelf with one. He little thought how prophetically he ſpoke, for he had no ſooner bound his ſon upon the wood, and ſtretched out his hand to give the fatal blow, but GOD was pleaſed to ſtop him ſhort, being fully ſatisfied with this laſt trial of his obedience. He renewed all his promiſes and covenant afreſh, and bound them with an oath. Then Abraham looking about found a ram, the victim GOD was to provide, caught by the horns in a thick buſh, and with the help of his ſon offered it up inſtead of him; in memory of which he called that place Jehovah-Jireh, the LORD will look to or provide, alluding to the anſwer he had given to Iſaac's queſtion. He went, and rejoined his ſervants, and returned home to Beerſheba, where Sarah, who in all probability was kept ignorant of the important ſecret, was ready to receive them with her uſual tenderneſs and affection [c]. Not long after this he heard the joyful news, that Milcah, his brother Nahor's wife, had bore him a numerous iſſue (D), which determined him to ſend thither for a wife for his ſon Iſaac [d].

But countermanded by an angel from him.

ABRAHAM

[c] Gen. xxii. [d] Gen. xxiv. 3, 4, &c.

(C) This mountain is certainly the ſame on which the temple was afterwards built by Solomon (77); and therefore thoſe who affirm that CHRIST was crucified upon it, don't fix the name to that particular hill; but to the whole ridge of them. Moriah takes its name from the Hebrew רָאָה Raah, to ſee: whence the LXX and Aquila tranſlate it γῆν ὑψηλὴν, a high or conſpicuous land. Fuller derives it from two Hebrew words, מִרְאֶה, viſion, and יְהֹ, GOD; and by contraction Moriah, becauſe GOD was ſeen upon it (78).

(D) The children of Nahor by Milcah were 1. Huz; 2. Buz; 3. Kemuel; 4. Cheſed; 5. Hazo; 6. Pildaſh; 7. Jidlaph; and, 8. Bethuel, who begat Rebekah the wife of Iſaac. He had ſome others

(77) 2 Chron. iii. 1, 2. (78) Miſcel. Sacr. l. 2. c. xiv.

ABRAHAM, well pleaſed with the conſtancy and reſignation which he had beheld in his ſon, lived in great peace and tranquillity for ſome time; but it was at length diſturbed by the death of Sarah, which happened in the hundred and twenty ſeventh year of her age, in the city of Arbah, alias Hebron (E) [c]. Abraham came thither to mourn for her, and to Sarah's death.

[c] Vid. ſupr. p. 360, (G).

thers beſides from a concubine named Reumah (79). Huz, the firſt-born, is ſuppoſed by ſome to have peopled, and given name to, the land of Huz (80), where Job dwelt (81); but it is not improbable, that it was already ſo called from Huz the ſon of Aram (82). From Buz came the Buſites; of which family Elihu, one of Job's friends, probably was (83). Kemuel, called in the text the father of Aram, is therefore thought the father of the Aramites, or Syrians, perhaps the ſame with the Camuelite of St abo (84), in the land of Haram (85): but we are inclined to believe, that by this Aram is only meant a ſon of Kemuel, and not a race of deſcendants, much leſs of the Syrians, as the LXX and Vulgate read it; or of Aram Naharaim, as ſome; or Aram Zoba, as others think (86); for the city of Nahor was in Aram. This city and nation therefore ſeems to have been more antient than Kemuel, and to have been ſo called from Aram the ſon of Shem (87). As for Cheſed, if he was the father of the Chaſims, or Chaldees, at leaſt of that part which was on this ſide Babylon, as is ſuppoſed by the ſame author (88), 'tis certain there were others more antient on the other ſide, for Abraham came from Chaldæa. However, theſe ſons of Nahor gave names to ſome cities and families of Syria, ſuch as Buzan, &c remembered by a Latin author (89). The children of his concubine were Tebah, Gaham, Thahaſh, and Maachah. From this laſt the city of Maachah, or Abel-Beth-Maachah (90), whoſe territories are ſuppoſed to have been ſituate between the two Lebanons, might probably receive its name (91).

(E) The text is ſomewhat obſcure in this place. Sarah is ſaid to die at Arbah, and yet no mention is made of Abraham's removing from Beerſheba thither, only he is ſaid to come thither to mourn for her and bury her. Some therefore are of opinion, that they might be parted upon ſome occaſion or other, and that Sarah went to Arbah, whilſt her huſband kept his old dwelling. Others, not brooking ſuch a ſeparation, think, that he came only from his own

(79) Gen. xxii. 21 & ſeq. (80) Calmet. Hiſt. Vet. Teſt. p. 148. (81) Job i. 1. (82) Gen. x. 22. vid. Hieron. (83) Job xxxii. 6. (84) Strabo l. 16. (85) Calm. ubi ſupr. (86) Toſtat. Cajet. in loc. (87) Gen. x. 22. (88) Calmet. l. 1. vid. Jun. & Villet. (89) Ammian. Marc l. 18. (90) 1 Chron. xix. 6, 7. (91) Calmet. ibid. p. 148.

to pay the laſt devoirs to the faithful partner of and conſtant companion of his travels, till, having given a ſufficient vent to his grief, another care called upon him; viz. to procure her an honourable burial. He therefore aroſe, and went to the gates of Hebron (F), in order to purchaſe a burying-place from the ſons of Heth, who dwelt in that city, and were probably the moſt conſiderable in that place. He had no own tent into that of Sarah, for they had their ſeparate tents, to weep over her. But this ſeems to wreſt the text a little too much; however, we will not venture to affirm any thing on either ſide.

(F) The gates of cities in thoſe days, and for many centuries after, were the places of judicature and common reſort. Here the governors or elders of the city met to hear complaints, adminiſter juſtice, make conveyances of titles and eſtates, and to tranſact all the affairs of the place (92). Whence that verſe in the Pſalms (93), they ſhall not be aſhamed when they ſpeak with their enemies in the gate, i. e. when they are accuſed by them before the court of magiſtrates.

It is probable, that the room or hall where the magiſtrates ſat was over the gates, becauſe Boaz is ſaid to go up to the gate. The like did David when he went to weep for the death of Abſalom (94). How conſiderable they became in time for largeneſs and ſumptuouſneſs appears, by the two kings of Iſrael and Judah being preſent at one of them in all their royal ſplendor, and convening thither four hundred prieſts of Baal, beſides their own guards and officers (95). It ſeems, as if theſe places had been at firſt choſen for the conveniency of the inhabitants, who, being all huſbandmen, and forced to paſs and repaſs, morning and night, as they went and came from their labour, might be more eaſily called as they went by, whenever they were wanted to appear in any buſineſs. Theſe gates were likewiſe markets for proviſions, like thoſe of the Romans, as appears by the prophet Eliſha's fortelling an incredible plenty to happen the next day, in the midſt of famine, at the gates of Samaria (96). What the number of theſe magiſtrates were, how far their power extended, and how many orders of them there were, is not to be gathered from ſcripture; only it is plain there could be but few of the latter, ſince in the time of Joſhua we can find but four ſorts of them; viz. the Zekenim or elders, the Raſhim or heads of the people, the Sophetim or judges, and the Soterim or officers. Abraham therefore could not make his purchaſe from Ephron the Hittite †, without having recourſe to the city gates.

(92) Gen. xxxiv. 20. Ruth iv. 1 & ſeq. (93) Pſal. cxxvii. ver. ult. (94) 2 Sam. xviii. 33. (95) 1 Kings xxii. 10. 2 Chron. xviii. (96) 2 Kings vii. 1, 31. Joſh. xxiv. 1.

† See before p. 171.

ſooner

ſooner declared the occaſion of his coming, but they one and all told him with the utmoſt civility and reſpect, that he might make choice of the beſt ſepulchre in the whole land, aſſuring him, that none of them ſhould withhold his own from him. But Abraham came to purchaſe, and not to borrow one; and therefore having returned their civilities, he begged, that he might be permitted to buy the cave of Machpelah (G) from Ephron the Hittite, who was then one of the aſſembly, and did immediately make him a free offer of it [f]. But Abraham ſtill inſiſting upon paying the full worth thereof, before he would make any uſe of it, they agreed for four hundred pieces of ſilver (H), which he payed down in full weight before them, and became poſſeſſor of the cave, field, and trees belonging to it, and ſoon after depoſited the dear remains of his beloved wife in the cave (I) [g].

Abraham buys the cave of Machpelah.

BY this time Abraham was well advanced in years, and Iſaac was come to the fortieth year of his age. He thought

Year of the Flood, 1142.

Year before Chriſt, 1857.

[f] Vid. ſup. p. 171. c. [g] Gen. xxiii.

(G) Machpelah in Hebrew ſignifies doub'e: whence it is ſuppoſed by ſome, that there was a cave within another, or two, or more, contiguous to each other, in one of which Sarah was buried, and Abraham afterwards in the other (97). Others think that is the name of the field, and that it ſhould be rendered the cave that is in Machpelah. Calmet * tells us of a perſon, whom he doth not name, well verſed in the Arabic, who ſays, that the word Machphelah in that language ſignifies ſhut up, or walled up, it being the cuſtom to wall up theſe tombs to prevent robbers from ſheltering themſelves therein. There are ſtill multitudes of ſuch ſepulchres thus ſhut up, which ſeem to confirm this conjecture, which if it be true, the words ought rather to have been rendered the incloſed cave.

(H) The learned Prideaux, who has given us the laſt and beſt eſtimation of Hebrew and Attic coins, reckons a ſhekel to be equivalent to three ſhillings of our Engliſh money; ſo that the ſum which Abraham paid for his new purchaſe will amount to ſixty pounds ſterling (†).

(I) The art of embalming being known already in thoſe days, it is more than probable that Abraham embalmed his wife before he buried her. The days of mourning, which he had fulfilled before he went to buy her ſepulchre, being three days for any ordinary relation, but at leaſt ſeven or eight for ſo near a one as a wife, he could never have kept her ſweet till the cave had been purchaſed and fitted for her.

(97) Jun. Munſt. Villet. & al. in loc. * Calm. Dictionar. ſub voc. Machpelah. † Prid. Connect. Pref. p. 22.

it

it therefore high time to marry him to ſome of his own family during his life, which, in all probability could not laſt much longer. To this end he called one of his chief and moſt faithful ſervants, and having made him take an oath to get his ſon a wife out of his own kindred (K), gave him all neceſſary inſtructions, and authority to conclude the marriage, and ſent him away with a train ſuitable to the embaſſy he was ſent upon. That is, with ten camels laden with the richeſt preſents for the damſel's dowry; it being the cuſtom in thoſe days for the huſband not to receive, but to pay, a dowry for the wife. The ſervant made the beſt of his way to Haran where Nahor dwelt; and being ſat down by a well, a little before the damſels of the country came to fetch water, penſive and ſolicitous how to perform his meſſage to his maſter's ſatisfaction, he made a mental prayer to GOD, that he would give him a token of his having proſpered his journey, which was, that the damſel, of whom he ſhould aſk for ſome water to drink, and ſhe anſwer, that ſhe would water his camels alſo, might be ſhe who was deſigned for Iſaac. He had not waited long, e're Rebekah's officious courteſy gave him to underſtand, that his prayer was heard; and being informed by her whoſe daughter ſhe was, with ſome other circumſtances relating to her family, he immediately took out ſome gold ear-rings to the weight of two ſhekels, and a bracelet that weighed about ten (L), which

Abraham ſends his ſervant to get a wife for Iſaac.

(K) The text tells us, that the ſervant took the oath by putting his hand under his maſter's thigh, or upon his privities. This is the firſt time we read of the ceremony, but it was afterwards uſed by Jacob (98) and Joſeph (99) in Egypt, when they were dying. The oddneſs of it has inclined ſome judicious writers to think, that it implied a more ſolemn myſtery than men are aware of; viz. a ſwearing by the great MESSIAH that was to come, and the like (100) Some Jews think it was a ſwearing by the covenant of circumciſion, and that whoſoever violated the oath, loſt all the privileges and benefits of that covenant. Kimki tells us, that was ſtill obſerved all over the eaſt by thoſe of his nation (101).

(L) In order to know the value of theſe preſents, we ſhould know what proportion gold bore to ſilver in thoſe days, which is impoſſible. The author above quoted (102) tells us, that in proceſs of time it came to be as ten, eleven, and twelve to one, according as it changed. But if we compute them according to the preſent value, which is as ſixteen to one, they will be worth 27*l.* 6*s.*

(98) Gen. xlvii. 29 (99) Ibid. l. 25. (100) Rab. Sal. in loc. Vid. Alix. in Pentat. (101) Kimki apud Munſt. in loc. (102) Prid. Pref. p. 25.

he

he preſented to her, deſiring, that if they had any room at her houſe, he might be permitted to lodge there that night. Rebekah anſwered in the affirmative, and, taking the preſents with her, ran home to acquaint her family with the adventure. Laban had no ſooner heard the news, than he came and invited the ſtranger to his houſe, who gave them a full account of all his maſter's wealth and great proſperity. Whilſt care was taking of him and his camels, he told them the occaſion of his journey; and when he related to them the ſucceſs which his prayer had had, and that he would neither eat or drink till they had given him a poſitive anſwer, Laban and Bethuel (M) concluded that the hand of GOD was viſible throughout all this affair; and that it would be an unpardonable thing to refuſe Rebekah to his maſter. They thought her extremely well diſpoſed of, and conſented, that he ſhould convey her to her huſband as ſoon as he pleaſed. He then immediately began to take out all the jewels of ſilver and gold, and fine raiment which he had brought, and preſented them to her, and made ſome conſiderable preſents beſides to her mother and brother; after which the reſt of the day was ſpent in feaſting and mirth. The next morning Abraham's ſervant, who thought now the time long till his maſter was acquainted with the good ſucceſs of his negotiation, deſired to be diſmiſſed. This requeſt did ſomewhat ſurprize them. They deſired him to ſtay at leaſt ten days longer; but he ſtanding firm to his reſolution, the thing was referred to Rebekah, who conſenting to go with him as ſoon as he pleaſed, they got all things ready for her departure; and after they had wiſhed her all the uſual bleſſings, and given her her nurſe to accompany her, they took their leave. The ſervant ſoon brought her in ſight of his young maſter, who chanced that night to be taking a ſolitary walk in the neighbouring fields, and as ſoon as Rebekah was informed who he was, ſhe alighted, and throwing a veil over her face, as the manner of young damſels then was, ſhe waited to receive his firſt com-

Rebecca is given to Iſaac.

(M) This Bethuel could not be her father, who had probably been dead ſome time before, but another brother (103); who therefore is here named after Laban, and is never more taken notice of during the whole tranſaction (104). Joſephus makes the damſel tell the man, that her father had been dead long ago, and that ſhe was left to the care of her brother Laban (105).

(103) Gen. xxiv. 50 & ſeq.
(104) Vid. Nic. de Lyra.
(105) Ant. l. 1. c. 16.

pliments

Isaac takes her home.

pliments [h]. He then conducted her to his mother's tent, highly pleased with her extreme beauty and modest carriage, as well as the kindred she came from; all which he looked upon as ample amends for the loss of his mother. He had now nothing to wish for but that she might prove fruitful; but he was forced to wait nineteen years before he could obtain that blessing; during which he comforted himself and her with the assurance of GOD's promises, and the example of Sarah, who remained childless till the ninetieth year of her age.

ABRAHAM could not but be pleased to see his son in the possession of so agreeable a wife; but that not proving sufficient to comfort him for the loss of his own, and finding himself still strong enough to make a new addition to his family, though he was then an hundred and forty one years old (N), and had continued a widower several years; he took another wife, named Keturah (O), by whom he had six sons whom he Abraham being 141 years old, marries Keturah, and has six sons by her.

[h] Gen. xxiv.

(N) We need not wonder, that Abraham, or any of the patriarchs should allow themselves to have concubines, and sometimes more wives than one, if we consider, that a numerous posterity was looked upon as one of the greatest blessings, and as a mark of grandeur and esteem. Accordingly we meet with several places of scripture, in which men of rank are particularly recorded for having a great number of sons (107).

(O) The Jews pretend, that this Keturah was the same with Hagar, whom Abraham sent for again after his wife's death, and by whom he had all these children. The reasons they give for it are, 1. Because the Psalmist calls the Midianites, which came of Keturah, Hagarens (108). 2. It is said elsewhere they made war with the Hagarens, with Jethur, Naphish, and Nadab (109), which were the sons of Ishmael (110). And 3. because Ishmael, Hagar's son, is said to have assisted Isaac at the funeral obsequies of their father Abraham 111). To which they add, that Hagar being Abraham's lawful wife, it was juster for him to marry her than another. But these reasons, and her name's being changed from Hagar into Keturah, which signifies incense, and is the emblem of continency, in which she had lived ever since she had been dismissed from Abraham, are rabbinical dreams, for she is still called Hagar in the same chapter (112) Besides, the text is plain against them, it being said, that Abraham added, or proceeded to take, another wife, which is inconsistent with his recalling the old one. Add to this,

(107) Judg. viii. 30. Ibid. x. 4. Esther. ix. 10. (108) Psal. lxxxiii. 6. (109) 1 Chron. v. 9. (110) Hieron. tradit. Heber. in Gen. xxv. 20. (111) Gen. xxv. 9. (112) v. 12.

that

2

he afterwards portioned, that they might not interfere with Iſaac's inheritance, and ſent them to dwell towards the eaſt (P). Theſe ſix ſons went away eaſtward of Beerſheba and the land of Canaan, and ſettled in both Arabias, the Petræa and the Deſerta, ſome footſteps of whoſe names are ſtill to be met with, of which we have in part given an account already [i].

CONCERNING Abraham we have nothing more recorded, except that he lived to the hundred and ſeventy fifth year of his age, and was gathered unto his fathers, and that his two ſons paid him their laſt devoirs, Iſaac having probably ſent for his brother Iſhmael, and buried him in the cave of Machpelah, near Sarah his wife. By which it is plain, that Moſes has here anticipated his death, by mentioning it before the birth of his two grandſons, Eſau and Jacob, though he muſt have lived to the fifteenth year of their age (Q). Abraham's death.

As

[i] Vid. Sup. p. 110 & ſeq.

that Hagar was only a concubine, and is no where called a wife, as Keturah is. As to the two paſſages of ſcripture above quoted, we need only anſwer, that they prove not the Midianites, or any of Keturah's ſons, to be called Hagarens; but that this laſt name was common to all the poſterity of Iſhmael, ſome of which were called Iſhmaelites, ſome Itureans, ſome Nebeans, &c. (113).

(P) From theſe words ſome authors have concluded, that Abraham had married Keturah long before Sarah's death (114), or even immediately after he parted with Hagar; and that the words ſhould be rendered he had married, inſtead of he married another wife; ſince Abraham doth not ſeem to have lived long enough to have diſpoſed of all theſe ſons in his life-time, as the text ſays he did, if he did not take Keturah till after his ſon's marriage. In anſwer to which, beſides what has been ſaid in the laſt note, that ſuch a notion is contrary to the ſenſe of the original, we may obſerve that Abraham lived at leaſt thirty-four years after it; by which time they might be all big enough to go from him. Beſides, Hagar muſt by this time have been about eighty years of age, and ſo too old to bear ſo many ſons.

(Q) Abraham's hiſtory has been embelliſhed with a great many notorious fictions by the Jews, Arabians, and Indians. We have already touched on ſome of them *; and we ſhall now ſubjoin ſome few more that are remarkable, ſuch as his making a long abode in Egypt, and teaching aſtronomy, and other ſciences there (115); his inventing the Hebrew characters and tongue (116), the

(113) Jun. in loc. Villet. c. 25. Quæſt. 3. & al. (114) Vid. Calvin. in loc. * See before, p. 356. not. C. (115) Artapan. & Eupolem. ap. Euſeb. præp. l. 9. c. 17, 18. Juſtin ex Trog l. 36. Joſeph. Ant. l. 1. c. 8. (116) Id. ibid. Suid. in Abraham. Iſodor. Hiſpal. l. 1. c. 3. Origen, &c.

ſame

Rebekah's pregnancy. As for Rebekah, ſhe continued barren above nineteen years; during which time Iſaac ceaſed not entreating the LORD

ſame we now uſe. His being the author of ſeveral books, and in particular the famous one, mentioned in the Talmud, and highly valued by ſeveral learned rabbies, called Jetzirah, or the creation; of which it gives an account. There is alſo an apocalypſe attributed to him by the Sethians, a ſort of heretics that ſprang up in the earlieſt times of chriſtianity (117). His aſſumption is mentioned by St. Athanaſius, and Origen tells us of an apocryphal book pretended to be written by him, wherein two angels, a good one and a bad one, are introduced diſputing about his ſalvation or damnation (118). The Jews make him alſo the compoſer of ſome prayers, and of the nineteenth Pſalm, and of a treatiſe againſt idolatry (119). The Indian fire-worſhippers, who think him to have been the ſame with their great prophet Zoroaſter, do attribute his books to him, which they call the Zend, Pazend, and Voſtah, containing all the principles of their religion (120). Dr. Prideaux mentions them as one book, or perhaps three books in one volume, which he calls Zendeveſti; or as the vulgar people pronounce it, Zundeveſtow or plain Zund. Which name he tells us ſignifies a fire-kindler, ſuch as a tinder-box is here with us, and was given it by the author to inſinuate, that it would kindle a brighter fire in thoſe who ſhould attentively and devoutly read it †.

The Arabians do likewiſe give us a hiſtory of this patriarch, though ſo altered and blended, that one would hardly think they were deſcended, as they are, from him by Iſhmael.

Abraham, according to them (121), was the ſon of Azar and grandſon of Terah; which account, could it be relied upon, would eaſily reſolve that difficulty about his age when he died, which we have ſpoken of before, note (B) pag. 335. Since Terah might have begot Azar in the ſeventeenth year of his age, and Azar have begot Abraham in the ſixtieth of his; ſo that this laſt number, which is wanting in Moſes's account of his life, would be here found complete; but we dare not affirm any thing about it. Calmet indeed thinks we might eaſily ſuppoſe two Terahs, one ſur-named Azar, Abraham's father, and the other his grandfather; but how he can ſay, that there is nothing in ſuch a ſuppoſition that contradicts the ſacred text, we can't ſo well comprehend. The eaſtern heathen have alſo a long tradition of Abraham's life, though vaſtly different from that of Moſes, and fraught with a great many wonderful additions of their own invention. The reader however may be glad to have a ſhort account of it out of the laſt quoted author (122).

(117) Epiphan. Hæreſ. l. 39. c. 5. (118) Orig. Homil. 35. in Luc. (119) R. Salom. in Bava Bathrah, c. 1. Gemar. Cod. Talm. Tract. Abodah Zarah, c. 1. (120) Herbelot. Biblioth. Orient. p. 16. † Coun. p. 317. (121) Tarikmounteckeb apud eund p. 12. (122) Id. jbid. p. 13. ex lib. Mallem.

LORD for her, who was pleaſed at length to hear his prayers, and ſend him the long deſired bleſſing. They now thought themſelves

Nimrod, the ſon of Canaan, did reign in Babylon, which he is thought to have built, and ſaw in a dream a ſtar ariſing, whoſe light did outſhine that of the ſun. The ſoothſayers, whom he conſulted, told him, that a child, not yet begotten, would be born in Babylon, who would prove very dangerous to him; whereupon Nimrod forbad, by an expreſs order, all the Babylonians to lie with their wives; but Azar, one of his chief officers, found means to get at his own, and one night got her with child. The magicians came next morning, and acquainted him that his precautions had proved vain, and that the child was got that night, and adviſed him to get all the pregnant women to be well guarded, and their children put to death as ſoon as they were born; but Adnah, Azar's wife, not ſhewing any marks of her pregnancy, went on with it, and was brought to bed of a ſon in a cave or grotto, the entrance of which ſhe had carefully ſtopp'd, and then came and told her husband, that the child died as ſoon as it came into the world. She failed not however to go and ſuckle it as often as ſhe could, and was ſurpriſed to find him ſtill ſucking two of his fingers, one of which gave him milk, and the other honey. Being thus ſatisfied that providence took care of him, ſhe viſited him more ſeldom; but obſerving, that he grew as faſt in one day as other children do in a month, inſomuch that at the age of fifteen moons he was as forward as a boy of fifteen years, ſhe acquainted her huſband with the whole ſtory.

Azar went immediately to the cave, and ordered his wife to bring him into the city, where he deſigned to ſettle him in Nimrod's court. Adnah took the boy through ſome meadows where there were abundance of cattle, which made Abraham, who never had ſeen any before, very inquiſitive what they were, and his mother took a great deal of pleaſure in inſtructing him in their names, natures, uſes, and the like; which made him deſirous to know who had made them all; and being anſwered that all creatures owed their being to GOD, Abraham asked how himſelf came into the world, and Adnah told him ſhe brought him forth: he then enquired farther who was her lord, and ſhe anſwered that it was Azar; and who is Azar's lord, continued he? Nimrod, ſaid his mother. But here ſhe thought fit to ſtop all further enquiry, telling him, it was dangerous for him to be too inquiſitive. By this time they were got to the city, which he ſaw ſwarming with all ſorts of idolaters; he returned to his grotto more deſirous than ever of knowing his Creator; and obſerving one night the ſtar of Venus to ſhine brighter than all the reſt, he began to fancy that to be the creator of the world, till he ſaw her ſet, which convinced him of the contrary, ſince he thought GOD incapable of any change. He made the ſame judgment of the moon; and at length ſeeing great multitudes worſhip the ſun, he was tempted to do the ſame; but having likewiſe themſelves happy indeed; but Rebekah did not long continue ſo. The ſtruggles of the twins, which ſhe bore, cauſed her a great obſerved its declination towards the weſt, he concluded that it could not be GOD.

Azar preſented him to Nimrod, who was ſeated on a lofty throne, and attended by a great number of the moſt beautiful ſlaves of both ſexes. Abraham asked his father who he was that was thus ſeated above all the reſt, and he told him that it was Nimrod, whom all that croud about him looked upon as their god; but Abraham anſwered that he could not be their god, ſeeing he was not ſo handſome, and conſequently not ſo perfect as they. He afterwards took occaſion to preach to his father the unity of GOD, which made him ſo many enemies among the courtiers, who would not admit of his doctrine, that Nimrod, being acquainted with it, cauſed him to be thrown into a fiery furnace, out of which he came nevertheleſs ſafe and unhurt.

A famine, that raged ſoon after this, having made him diſtribute all his ſtore to the poor, he ſent to a friend of his in Egypt for a freſh ſupply, but was refuſed, under pretence that he did not want it for himſelf; but to give it away to the poor. The meſſengers, being afraid that the Babylonians would laugh at them, if they came home empty, filled their ſacks with a white ſort of ſand; and being got home to their maſter, acquainted him with their ill ſucceſs. Abraham, without being alarmed at it, went into his little oratory to comfort himſelf with his GOD, and in the mean time Sarah his wife, who knew nothing of this myſtery, ſeeing the camels laden with full ſacks, went and emptied one of them, which ſhe found full of fine flour, and made ſome bread of it for the poor. Abraham having concluded his prayers came out, and was ſurprized at the ſmell of the new bread, and aſked his wife where ſhe had got the flour, and ſhe told him that it was that which had been brought to him from his friend in Egypt; rather, replied he, from GOD, our only true friend, who has not forſaken us in time of need. And from that time Abraham was ſtiled the friend of GOD; a name given him by the prophets (123), and by all the Moſlams, who call Hebron the place where he lies buried, the city of the friend of GOD; though they make him vaſtly inferior to their Mohammed; to whom, one of them ſays, Abraham was but an officer, and the MESSIAH maſter of the ceremonies.

They are not agreed about the number of angels who dined in his tent. One of them (124) reckons there were three; viz. Gabriel, Arraphel, and Michael. The firſt of whom was ſent to deſtroy Sodom, the ſecond to foretel the birth of Iſaac, and the third to deliver Lot and his family. The Kôran tells us, that Abraham treated

(123) Iſa. xli. 8. Dan. iii. 35. (124) Damiati.

a great deal of pain and uneaſineſs, till having conſulted GOD about it, ſhe was anſwered, that two nations were ſtriving in her womb, and that two ſorts of people ſhould be ſeparated from her bowels, one of which ſhould prove ſtronger than the other, and treated them with a roaſted calf; but obſerving that they did not eat, he was frighted with the thoughts of their being enemies, there being no greater token of enmity in thoſe countries, than to refuſe to eat and drink with the perſon that invites. The angels however ſoon eaſed him of that fear, by telling him that they were ſent from GOD to Lot's people, which made Sarah, who was then preſent burſt out into a laughter. Thus far Mohammed, who, being perhaps ignorant of the true hiſtory of Abraham, tells it after his ridiculous manner. His interpreters pretend, that the cauſe of her laughing was either her joy to ſee her huſband rid of his fears, or the pleaſure ſhe ſhould have to ſee Sodom in flames, or her admiration to ſee angels in human ſhapes. However, her laughter made the angel tell her, that ſhe ſhould have a ſon named Iſaac, who ſhould be the father of Jacob. To which ſhe anſwered, that it would be a marvellous thing indeed, if, old as ſhe was, and her lord ſtill much older, ſhe ſhould bring forth a ſon; but they having aſſured her, that the divine power would not be wanting, ſeeing the bleſſing was upon Abraham and her, who were choſen to be the heads of a numerous family, they departed towards Sodom, whilſt Abraham pleaded hard with GOD not to deſtroy the city, if ſo many righteous men were found in it; and ſo on.

The Mohammedans have likewiſe altered the ſtory of Hagar and Iſhmael, in which there is this prayer of Abraham, Lord, I have placed one of my ſons in a barren valley, near thy holy temple. Of which the commentators on the Kôran tell us the occaſion was, that Sarah, who could not endure the ſight of Hagar or her ſon, deſired Abraham to ſend them into ſome dry and barren land: that Abraham, being troubled at her cruel requeſt, was told by the angel Gabriel, to do as his wife bid him; whereupon he conveyed both the mother and the child into the territory of Mecca, which was then barren, and without water; but that the angel made a fountain to ſpring up from under Iſhmael's feet, which is now the well of Zemzem, ſo famed among the Turks, and the only one in all that country. At the ſame time GOD bleſſed the land, and made it ſo fruitful, that it abounds with each kind of fruit of the four ſeaſons of the year, which grow plentifully there all the year round.

There was then no temple built at Mecca, but only a great edifice called Sorah, reared up by Seth in Adam's life-time, in the form of a temple, which was reſorted to with great devotion. But the deluge having deſtroyed it, it was afterwards rebuilt by Abraham and Iſhmael. The Turks call it Caabah, or the ſquare-houſe, and think themſelves bound to viſit it at leaſt once in their life, and always turn their faces towards it when they pray, in what part of and that the elder should serve the younger. Accordingly she was soon after brought to bed of two sons, the first of which, viz.

Year of the Flood, 1163. Year before Christ 1837. Esau and Jacob born.

the world soever they be. A modern author (125) thinks, that both the Arabs and Ishmaelites did formerly worship Bacchus and Urania, or Venus, in that temple; for Herodotus assures us, that they worshipped none but those two deities, the first of whom they called Urotalt, and the latter Alilat (126). Though other authors have since told us, that they worshipped also Jupiter, the sun, moon and dæmons (127). However that be, it is most likely, that the altar and grove which Abraham built at Beersheba (128), gave the first rise to the fiction of his building this temple.

They tell us moreover (129), that Abraham having prayed to God to let him see how he raised the dead, was asked by him whether he wanted faith? no, replied he, but it would be a great satisfaction to me. At the same time the devil having taken notice of a dead body thrown up by the sea, and half devoured by fishes, birds, and wild beasts (130) thought it a proper instrument to ensnare mankind against the belief of a resurrection. He appeared to Abraham, who had been bid to repair to the sea-shore, in the shape of a man that seemed astonished at something, and asked him, how it could be possible for the parts of that dead carcass, which had been devoured by so many living creatures, to be re-united at the general resurrection. To whom Abraham answered, that he who had created all those limbs out of nothing could more easily gather them from the different places where they lay scattered, than a potter could the broken pieces of a potsherd, and make a new one out of them.

After this God bid him take four birds, and cut them in pieces, and to carry the pieces upon four different mountains; and then give them a call, and he should see them all four fly immediately to him. This seems to be taken from the heifers, goats, and pigeons, which Abraham was bid to hew in pieces, &c. (131). To which the Mohammedans have added several other circumstances, such as that the four birds were a cock, a dove, a raven, and a peacock; that he cut them all in small pieces, and jumbled them all together. Some add, that he pounded them in a mortar, and divided the whole mass into four parts, which he carried to the tops of four different mountains; after which holding their heads, which he had kept unminced, he called them distinctly by their names; whereupon each of them came to fetch his own head, and flew away. Thus it was that Abraham was convinced of the truth of the resurrection according to the Mohammedans. And this seems to have some far off relation with what our Saviour says of him (132), that Abraham had desired to see his day, and that he saw it

(125) Calm. Diction. sub voc. Abraham. (126) Herodot. l. 3. c. 8. (127) Strabo l 16. Philostorg. ap. Phot. Ammian. Marcel. & al. (128) Gen. xxi. 23. (129) Koran. c. 2. (130) Herbelot. Bibl. Or. p. 15. (131) Gen. xv. 9. & seq. (132) John viii. 56.

and

viz. Eſau, was all over hairy, and the ſecond came out holding

and rejoiced; which the Mohammedans, according to their cuſtom, have applied to the day of the reſurrection. The Perſian fire-worſhippers do to this day expreſs a great veneration for him; they call him Zeerdooſt, or Zoroaſter, which ſignifies the friend of fire, becauſe when he was thrown into the furnace by Nimrod's or-der, the flames, inſtead of conſuming him, careſſed and embraced him in a friendly manner (133).

Calmet (134) mentions a book in the French king's library. No 792, written originally by St. Ephrem the Syrian, and tranſlated from the Syriac into Arabic, upon Abraham's journey into Egypt; in which book there is alſo a ſermon on his death, preached by St. Atharaſius, patriarch of Alexandria, on the twenty eight of March, on which day the Coptic, or Egyptian Chriſtians do celebrate his feſtival. The antient fathers of the church have highly celebrated him on the account of his great faith and obedience, and the martyrologies have given him a place among their other ſaints, on the ninth of October (135). The church of Rome hath likewiſe or-dered an office for him, and addreſs him in particular for thoſe who are at the point of death.

It is reported, that the tomb of Abraham having been diſcovered near Hebron, they found his body, and thoſe of Iſaac and Jacob, whole and uncorrupted. There were likewiſe ſome gold and ſilver lamps hung up in the cave, which was viſited by multitudes (136). The Moſlems have ſuch a veneration for this place, that they make it one of their four pilgrimages, the three others being that of Mecca, Medina, and Jeruſalem; and the chriſtians built a church over the cave (137), which the Turks did afterwards turn into a moſk (138).

Moſ. Ben. Maimon (139), and after him the learned Spencer, tells us, that Abraham was brought up in the religion of the Zabeans, who are ſuppoſed to have been great aſtronomers, aſtrologers, &c. and by diſcovering the power and influence of the ſtars and hea-venly bodies, came at length to worſhip them. Who theſe Zabeans were, whether a nation, or only a ſect of philoſophers, or whether their name imports any more than their religion and the like, ſhall be enquired into in its proper place. In the mean time, as to what Maimonides ſays, we ſhall only anſwer with Meyer (140), that it is impoſſible to prove that the Zabeans were even as old as Moſes; much more that they were older than Abraham; for though it be ing him by the heel, and was therefore named Jacob (R). Esau became a great lover of hunting, and consequently the darling of Isaac, who was very fond of his venison; but Jacob was the mother's favourite, who knew that he was to inherit the blessings, and could not, perhaps, forbear intrusting him with the secret betimes, though she seems all along to have concealed it from her husband. The two brothers were not above twenty years old, before Jacob gave proof of it. Esau came home one evening from his usual hunting, faint and hungry, and seeing a mess of pottage which his brother had got ready, begged to be refreshed with some of it; which he, it seems, well instructed by his mother, utterly refused, unless he would part with his birth-right to him. And Esau, in his distress, swore away his birth-right to his brother Jacob, as we have said [1].

(133) Prid. Connex. p. 1. Book 4. (134) Ex Bibl. Orient. p. 16. (135) Martyrol. Rom. Adon. Uſuard. &c. (136) Ben Sholman ap. Herbelot. (137) Serm. Quadrag. Elmid 1. 2. p. 773. (138) Vid. Calmet. loc. citat (139) Maimonid. Tractat. More Nevok. part. iii c. 29. & 46. & in Avodah Zarah. c. 11. & 12. (140) Meyer de Feſt. dieb. Hebr. c. 12.

Esau sells his birth-right.

A famine, which happened some years after this, obliged Isaac to seek for another habitation; he thought to have gone down into Egypt, when GOD appeared unto him, and diverted him from it, bidding him go to Abimelech king of Gerar, where Abraham had heretofore been so friendly entertained, promising, that he would protect, and multiply him exceed-granted, that there were some people called Zabeans before Moses's time, and that that idolatry had been in vogue long before him; yet this will not prove, that the Zabeans we are speaking of were older than Moses; and Spencer himself owns (141), that it is almost impossible to discover their beginning, which has given rise to so many different opinions about it, and perhaps not one of them right. However, it is not improbable, that Abraham, being born and educated in an idolatrous country and family, might have been addicted to that superstition, till GOD called him away from the one and the other.

Year of the Flood, 1194. Year before Christ 1805.

Isaac goes to Gerar;

[1] See before, p. 124.

(R) From the Hebrew word עקב, Hekeb, which signifies the heel, is formed the verb עקב, to supplant; and by the addition of the י Jod, one of the formatives of nouns, Jacob, a supplanter, which name he in time made good. As for the name Esau, the meaning is somewhat obscure, unless we derive it, as some (142) do from עשה, Hassah, to make, because Esau came out all hairy, and as it were perfect; whereas other children are born with hair only on their heads. He is also supposed to have been called Sheir, or Sehir, from שער, Shahar, which signifies hair. And lastly Edom, from his selling his primogeniture for a mess of red pottage (143).

(141) Spenc. de Leg. Hebr. ritual. l. 2. c 1. §, 2. (142) Rab. Sal. Mercer. & al. (143) Vid. sup. p. 124.

ingly

ingly. He obeyed; but the fear he was in for his life, on account of his wife's beauty, made him reſolve to let her paſs for his ſiſter as his father had formerly done. This pretence paſſed current a conſiderable time, till at length the king obſerved from his window ſome familiarities between them, which made him ſuſpect, that ſhe was ſomething more than a bare ſiſter to him. He therefore rebuked them ſharply for the fraud, which Iſaac endeavoured to excuſe the beſt he could, telling him that the fear of his own life was the only motive that had induced him to it [m]. Iſaac was glad to ſee himſelf out of danger, and he went and ſowed the ground that had been aſſigned to him, which yielded him an hundred fold, to the great ſurprize of his neighbours, who could not ſee him ſo proſperous in this, and all other things which he took in hand, without envy. His richneſs and multitude of ſervants made him likewiſe be feared as a dangerous man, who might probably prove one day too mighty for them. But as the ſucceſs of open violence was doubtful, they reſolved to harraſs him another way, by filling up all his wells, without which his vaſt multitude of cattle could not ſubſiſt. They likewiſe endeavoured to alarm the king againſt him, which they accordingly did; and Iſaac found himſelf under a neceſſity of retiring to Gerar; where he dug new wells, and opened thoſe which had formerly been dug by Abraham; in doing of which he met with great and repeated troubles and vexations from the Philiſtines of Gerar, and was forced to remove at a good diſtance from thence [n].

Is envied by the people.

AT length he was ſued to by Abimelech in perſon [o], either to revive the old covenant, or to make a new one. Iſaac expoſtulated with them upon the ill uſage he had met with in their land; but nevertheleſs prepared a ſumptuous banquet for them, and on the morrow entered into the covenant they requeſted [p]. On the ſame day word was brought to Iſaac, that his ſervants had found water; upon which account he called the place Beerſheba (S). The tranquillity which this new

A covenant between Abimelech and Iſaac.

[m] See before, p. 205. [n] See before, p. 207. [o] See before, ibid. [p] See before, ibid.

(S) This name is rather revived than given to the place, ſince we have ſeen already on what account Abraham called it ſo (144); though it is not improbable, but the diſcovery of this new well might lead Iſaac into a third alluſion to the word שבע, Shabah, which ſignifies not only to ſwear, and ſeven, but likewiſe to ſatisfy or new alliance had procured him, was soon after disturbed by Esau marrying two wives, Judith the daughter of Beeri, and Bashemath the daughter of Elon, both Hittites [q].

(144) Supr. Gen. xxi. 31.

Year of the Flood, 1239. Year before Christ 1760.

However, Isaac beheld him still as heir, and was reconciled to him. If he did know any thing of the sale he had made of his birth-right, he only looked upon it as a youthful trick, and the effect of hunger and weariness. Finding himself therefore grow old and feeble, and his eyes quite dim with age, and apprehending his death to be nearer than it really was, he being then an hundred and thirty seven years old, resolved to bless him before he died. He therefore called him to him one day, and bad him get some fresh venison, and dress it to his palate, and told him, he designed to confer the blessing on him that day. Rebekah, who over-heard their discourse, knowing the importance of the paternal blessing, laid hold on the favourable opportunity, to procure it for her favourite son, in the absence of Esau. She directed him then to take two choice kids, which she would dress to his father's liking, and send him into his father, therewith to personate Esau. Jacob made several excuses. His skin and his voice he was afraid would betray him, being in both so unlike to his brother; so that if Isaac should detect the fraud, he would more probably curse than bless him. Rebekah, who knew there was no time to lose, took all the curses upon herself, and encouraged him to follow her directions, which he did. Whilst the kids were dressing, she laid their skins on his hands and neck, and then arrayed him in Esau's cloaths, and sent him trembling to his father. When Isaac smelt the meat, he was surprized it was so suddenly got ready, and not knowing what to think of it, he put the question several times to Jacob, whether or no he was in very deed his son Esau? to which he answered in the affirmative, desiring him to rise and taste of his venison, since GOD who knew his zeal to obey his father, had brought it into his hands much sooner than he could have expected. But Isaac still doubtful, desired him to draw nearer, that he might be better satisfied; and when he had felt the hairy skin on his hands and neck, he owned, that the hands were the hands of Esau, though the voice was the voice of Jacob. Thus far satisfied, or rather imposed on, he arose and eat heartily of his son's pretended venison.

Jacob gets his brother's blessing from him.

[q] Gen. xxvi.

satiate; whereby he might intimate that he had wells enough, and would rest satisfied with them.

Rebekah

Rebekah forgot not to ſend ſome wine with it; and after a cup or two, he bid his ſon come near to him, that he might now beſtow the promiſed bleſſing upon him. The ſmell of Jacob's raiment contributed much to Iſaac's chearfulneſs; he ſmelt and praiſed them, and, in a kind of extaſy of pleaſure, embraced and kiſſed his pretended firſt-born; and having wiſhed him all heavenly and earthly bleſſings [r], diſmiſſed him. If the father was pleaſed at his having performed this important ceremony, the ſon was no leſs rejoiced at his ſucceſs, and at his being freed from acting a part, which to an honeſt man muſt have cauſed the greateſt reluctancy, to ſay nothing of the dread he muſt have been under during all that time, leſt Eſau ſhould intervene. But what he did was in obedience to his mother, who aſſured him, that they did only fulfil the divine decrees in all this, and that it had been a direct contravention of them to have acted otherwiſe. Her joy upon this occaſion was great we may be ſure.

WHILST the mother and ſon were congratulating each other, Eſau came to his father with the veniſon he had prepared for him. He invited him in the ſame dutiful manner that his brother had done, and wondered to obſerve ſuch tokens of ſurprize and concern in his fathers's face. Not to repeat what we have already expatiated on [f]. Eſau found he had been circumvented in his abſence; and a mournful ſcene enſued between the father and the ſon; which was cloſed up by Iſaac, who inſiſted, that his bleſſing ſhould remain with Jacob. I have bleſſed him, ſays he, yea, and he ſhall be bleſſed [t] (T). Nevertheleſs, to aſſuage Eſau's grief,

[r] See Gen. xxvii. 28, 29. [f] Vid. ſupr. p. 126. [t] Gen. xxvii. 33. Gen. xxxvii.

(T) Whoſoever narrowly obſerves Jacob's life, after he had obtained his father's bleſſing, will own, that it conſiſted in nothing leſs than worldly felicity, of which he enjoyed as little as any man whatever. Forced from his home into a far country for fear of his brother; deceived and oppreſſed by his own uncle, and forced to fly from him after a ſervitude of twenty one years; in imminent danger, either of being purſued and brought back by Laban, or murdered by his brother. Theſe fears are no ſooner over, but the baſeneſs of his eldeſt ſon in defiling his couch; the treachery and cruelty of the two next to the Sheehemites (145). And laſtly, the loſs of his beloved wife, and ſuppoſed untimely grief, he blessed him in these words, thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above (U). By thy sword and thy bow shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother; and it shall come to pass, that when thou shalt have the dominion, thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck (W).

(145) See before, 172.

and

Esau is al-so blessed.

end of his son Joseph; all these overwhelmed him with fresh successions of grief; and to compleat all, his being forced by famine to descend into Egypt, and to die there: these, and many more, are sufficient proofs, that his father's blessing was of a quite different nature, and consisted in two particulars only; viz. the possession of the land of Canaan in right of primogeniture, which his brother had sold him, and which rather belonged to his posterity than to himself; and in the next place, that the MESSIAH being born of his race, and not of that of Esau. As to the stratagem by which this blessing was obtained, though it appears somewhat harsh and unjust at first sight; yet if we consider, that these two brothers were designed by providence as types; viz. Esau of the Jews (who were afterwards to be rejected for not accepting the spiritual kingdom of the MESSIAH, in hopes of that glorious earthly one which they dreamed, and still dream of, which is in fact preferring a mess of porridge to the noblest birth-right), and Jacob of the Gentiles, who were to be admitted into that kingdom, which the former had rejected; if we consider further, that this alienation from one brother to another had nothing to do with a future state, as the papists, our predestinarians, and others imagine, but was confined wholly to the present; if we consider these things, we shall not want the subtilties of the schools to justify an action which was determined, and conducted, by a divine hand, unless men will affirm, that GOD could not in justice make such an alienation; an assertion so bold and absurd, that we don't think any man of sense and common modesty would venture to maintain it.

(U) These words have been rendered by some modern authors (146), thy dwelling shall neither be fruitful, nor watered by the dew of heaven. And it is true indeed, that Idumæa, or the land of Edom, was not very fruitful; but they that understand the original will easily see, that they have wrested it quite out of its genuine meaning.

(W) We must not think, that these predictions were to be fulfilled in Jacob's time, or in his person, who never had any dominion either over the Edomites, or any other nation, nor ever possessed the least inheritance, Machpelah excepted; but died in a country where he had not one foot of land. How, and when, the Edomites, who multiplied exceedingly, and were a fierce, warlike people, became subject to Jacob's posterity; and when they shook off their yoke, we have already related (147).

(146) Le Clerc. Chatil. in loc. (147) See before. p. 144, & seq.

This

This bleſſing was inferior to Jacob's in the following particulars. 1. It omits plenty of corn and wine, by which it ſeems to be implied, that Eſau's lot ſhould not be ſo fertile as his brother's, as in fact it was not. 2. Here is no mention of GOD as there is in the firſt, GOD give thee, &c. 3. There is a ſpiritual bleſſing promiſed to Jacob, that they ſhould be bleſſed that bleſſed him, &c. but no ſuch thing is ſaid to his brother. Jacob was for a while in danger of his brother's heavieſt indignation; which Rebekah dreading, found an excuſe to ſend him out of the way, as far off as Padan-Aram, that he might there marry one of his couſins. She ſent him therefore to her brother Laban, alledging, that if he ſhould follow his brother's example, and marry a Hittite, it would make the reſt of her life uncomfortable.

Jacob is ſent to Padan Aram.

IT is very probable, that Iſaac had likwiſe ſome ſuſpicion of Eſau's deſign to murder his brother, elſe it is not likely, that he would have ſent Jacob away alone, and with only his ſtaff in his hand, when his father Abraham had ſent thither a ſervant in ſo noble a manner, unleſs it were done to conceal his flight. However that be, the other reaſon which the mother alledged, was thought highly reaſonable, and Jacob was privately ſent for, to take his leave of his father, and to receive his commands and his farther bleſſing; which done, he went away for Padan-Aram. In his way thither he was overtaken by the night near Luz, and forced to lie in the open fields with a ſtone for his pillow. Here he ſaw in a dream a ladder reaching from earth to heaven, and angels aſcending and deſcending, whilſt GOD, who ſtood on the top, was pleaſed to encourage him, by promiſing, that he would be his protector, and that he would bleſs and multiply him beyond meaſure [u]. Jacob awaking from his dream ſurprized and frighted, cried out, Surely God was on this place, and I knew it not! Riſing therefore from his hard bed, he took the ſtone which had ſerved him for a bolſter, and, pouring oil thereon, erected it into a pillar; and in memory of this viſion he called the place Bethel (the houſe of God); for it was called Luz before that time. Here he likewiſe made a vow unto GOD; that if he would grant him his protection, feed and cloath him, and bring him back ſafe to his father's houſe, the LORD ſhould be his GOD, that he would pay the tythes of all he had unto him, and that the ſtone which he had reared ſhould be GOD's houſe. Having finiſhed his prayer, he went on chearfully the reſt of his way, till he came to his journey's end [w].

[u] Gen. xxviii. 12. & ſeq. [w] Ibid.

HIS

HIS uncle Laban received him with joy; and, after a month's ſtay with him, Jacob falling in love with his youngeſt daughter Rachel, a beautiful virgin, they agreed that he ſhould ſerve him ſeven years for her, at the end of which ſhe ſhould become his wife. Jacob was ſo pleaſed with this motion, that he ſpared no pains to make his ſervice acceptable to his uncle Laban, who liked him ſo well for a ſervant, that he reſolved to continue him in the ſame capacity another ſeven years. For when the time was come he was to be put in poſſeſſion of the wife he had ſo dearly bought, he conveyed his new ſon-in-law into his eldeſt daughter Leah's apartment. Jacob did not diſcover the deceit till the next morning, and when he found, inſtead of his beloved Rachel, her homely blear-eyed ſiſter, he could not forbear expreſſing his reſentment thereat to her father. Laban had his anſwer ready, and, in a magiſterial tone, told him, that it was an unprecedented thing in that country to marry the youngeſt daughter before the eldeſt, and that it would have been a great injuſtice to Leah to have given him her younger ſiſter; but, continued he, in a milder tone, if you will fulfil the nuptial week with your wife, and conſent to ſerve me another ſeven years for her ſiſter, I am content to take your word for it, and to give Rachel to you as ſoon as the ſeven days are ended. Jacob could not but be troubled at ſuch an unfair procedure; but he loved Rachel too well not to obtain her at any price; he therefore conſented to theſe hard conditions, and at the week's end he enjoyed the fruits of his ſervitude and conſtancy.

ſerves ſeven years for Rachel;

is cheated by Laban.

Marries Rachel.

DURING this interval, Eſau went and married Mahalath, the daughter of his uncle Iſhmael, in hopes, that ſhe would be more acceptable than his two other wives, and brought her home to his father's houſe (X). He had children by all the three

(X) It will be proper to obſerve here, that Moſes gives theſe three wives of Eſau quite other names, when he comes to ſpeak of the poſterity he had by them (147); which might lead an unwary reader to think, that he had more than three, eſpecially becauſe the fathers of the two former are likewiſe called by different names. Thus his firſt wife, Judith of Beeri, is afterwards Adah, the daughter of Elon the Hittite; the ſecond, viz. Baſhemath, the daughter of Elon, is again called Aholi-bamah the daughter of Anah, the daughter of Zibeon the Hivite; the laſt, called at firſt Maha-

(147) Compare Gen. xxvi 34. xxviii. 9. with xxxvi. 2. & ſeq.

lath.

three wives [x]: his poſterity became very numerous; an account of which has been given in the hiſtory of the Edomites [y] *.

IN the mean time Jacob behaved himſelf very differently towards his two wives. Rachel had his heart and affection, whilſt Leah was forced to content herſelf with a formal civility; but GOD made quite another difference between them, by making the latter mother of many children, whilſt her ſiſter continued barren for a long time. Leah was ſoon brought to bed of a ſon, and it being then the cuſtom of thoſe times for mothers to give names to their children, not without ſome particular reaſon or meaning, ſhe called him Reuben, intimating, that GOD had ſeen her affliction, and had given her a ſon, which would probably engage her huſband to love her. She had another ſoon after him, whom ſhe called Simeon; becauſe, ſhe ſaid, the LORD had heard her complaint. Her third ſhe called Levi, hoping her huſband would be now joined to her; and the fourth ſhe called Judah, thinking herſelf bound to praiſe GOD for her fruitfulneſs; after which ſhe left off bearing for a while [z].

Reuben born.

Simeon, Levi, and Judah born.

RACHEL by this time was ſo extremely mortified at her ſiſter's happineſs, that ſhe came one day in a fit of envy, and told her huſband, that, unleſs he gave her children alſo, ſhe ſhould inevitably die of grief. Jacob who could not forbear being provoked at ſuch a ſpeech, which ſeemed to lay the blame of her ſterility upon him, anſwered her in a paſſion, that it was out of his power to do miracles, that GOD, who had ſhut up her womb, was alone able to open it; but that her behaviour was rather the way to prevent, than lath, is now called Bathſhemath; but what ſhews that theſe two latter names mean the ſame perſon, and that the ſame thing may be ſuppoſed of the other two (eſpecially, conſidering that Eſau is recorded to have had but three wives) is, that ſhe is called in both places the daughter of Iſhmael, and ſiſter of Nebajoth. All the account that can be given for this difference is, that they had two names, and that it was uſual to call them ſometimes by one, ſometimes by the other. Thus, the mother of Abijam, king of Judah, who is called in one place Maachah, the daughter of Abiſhalom (148), is in another place calle Michaiah, the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah (149). Other parallel places might be brought in great numbers, were it needful.

[x] Gen xxxvi. 1, 2. [y] Ibid. * See before, p. 136, & ſeq.
[z] Gen. xxix.

(148) 1 Kings xv. 2. (149) 2 Chron. xiii. 2.

to gain, such a blessing. This mortifying answer made her bethink herself of the usual way, at that time, for women in her case to give their maids to their husbands; she therefore desired him to take Bilhah, and to try to make her a mother by her means; to which he consented, and soon after had a son by her, which Rachel called Dan, meaning that GOD had judged in her favour. She called the other son which Bilhah bore Naphtali, to express the violent struggles she had had with her sister: after which Leah, thinking she had quite left off bearing, gave her maid Zilpah also to Jacob, whose first son she called Gad (a troop), expecting more to come, and the next she called Asher, to express the happiness she now enjoyed.

Dan and Naphtali born.

Gad and Asher born.

BY this time Reuben was about six years of age, and brought home one evening some mandrakes (Y), which he had

(Y) What these mandrakes were, is not easy to guess; but they could not certainly be what we understand by that name. 1. Because they had nothing inviting, either in smell, taste, or colour, to induce a child of his age to gather them; much less could he choose them for any particular virtue or quality they had. 2. The text says, it was then wheat-harvest which in those hot countries is about May, when the apples of that root are far from being ripe. 3, The mandrake has a very strong stupifying smell, and is therefore called by the Arabians Jabrokim; whereas the Dudaim, or mandrakes, are commended for their fragrancy, in the only place of scripture where they are mentioned besides (150). For this reason some have fancied them violets (151); others lilies (152); others jassimin; others have rendered the word desirable flowers (153), agreeable to the word Dudaim, which signifies, loves in the dual, or, the breasts of a woman. Others again and perhaps more probably, have guessed them to be citrons (154). That which has induced so many interpreters to suppose them to be mandrakes, is the virtue attributed to them of helping conception (155), which made Rachel willing to try the effects of them; but besides that they were plentiful enough to have been bought at a cheaper rate, it is plain, that she did not conceive after them. Neither is it probable, that Leah would have parted with them, if they had been known to have had such a virtue, which perhaps was not discovered till a long time after; when it became known among the Greeks and Romans by the name of the apple of love, and of the juice of which the emperor Julian tells his friend (156),

(150) Cant. vii. 13. (151) Onkel. in loc. (152) Oleast. (153) Jun. in loc. (154) Bochart. Brown's Vulg. Err. Calmet. Comm. in Gen. cap. xxx. v. 14. (155) Epiph. ap. Villet. (156) Ludolph. Hist. Æthiop. Com. l. 1. cap. 72.

he had been gathering in the fields in the time of the wheat-harveſt. Rachel no ſooner ſaw them, but ſhe deſired to have ſome part of them. Leah hereupon anſwered, not over complaiſantly, that it was a little too much for her to take her huſband and her ſon's mandrakes too; wherefore, to pacify her and purchaſe the fruit, ſhe agreed, that Jacob ſhould lie with her that night (Z); and Jacob no ſooner came home, but Leah challenged him to confirm the bargain, which he accordingly did; the conſequence of which was, that ſhe bore him a fifth ſon, whom ſhe called Iſſachar (the man of reward), alledging, that it was given her as a reward for giving her maid to Jacob. After which ſhe bore her ſixth and laſt ſon, and called him Zebulun (dwelling), in hopes, that ſo many ſons would make her huſband dwell with her. She had likewiſe a daughter whom ſhe called Dinah, which is the feminine of Dan; after which ſhe bore no more. As for Rachel, her prayers at length being heard, ſhe was happily brought to bed of a ſon whom ſhe called Joſeph, in hopes, that GOD would add another to him. By this time, Jacob, having finiſhed his fourteen years ſervitude, and being deſirous to reviſit his old parents, deſired his uncle to diſmiſs him and his family. But Laban, who had found no ſmall advantage in having ſuch a faithful ſervant, begged of him to ſtay with him a little longer, promiſing him, upon that condition, to give him what wages he ſhould name. Here Jacob took an opportunity of reminding him how much his Iſſachar.

Zebulun and Dinah born.

Year of the Flood, 1254. Year before Chriſt 1745.

Joſeph born.

that he had taken a doſe to excite him to love. A modern author, in his hiſtory of Æthiopia, has confuted the notion of Dudaim, ſignifying mandrakes (157), and affirms, that it ſignifies a certain fruit, which the Syrians call Mauz, not unlike the Banana, or Indian Fig-tree, in ſhape and taſte, and about the bigneſs of a cucumber, thirty or forty of which often hang upon one ſtem: but whatever theſe Dudaim were, whether a fruit or flower, it is certain, they muſt have had ſomething pleaſant and inviting to a child, either in ſmell or taſte.

(Z) The cuſtom of thoſe countries, where polygamy was allowed, was in thoſe days for the huſband to take his wives by turns (*); the kings of Perſia, if we may believe Herodotus (†), were not exempt from that rule. This makes it more probable, that ſhe ſold her turn for that night to her ſiſter, than that ſhe did direct her huſband which of the four he ſhould lie with.

(157) Vid. Calm. in Gen. xxx. 16. Dict. ſub voc. Mandrag. Aug. l. 22. cont. Fauſt. cap. 29.

(*) Vid. Villet. Munſt. & al.

(†) Herodot. l. 2. cap. 79.

ſubſtance

ſubſtance was increaſed, ſince it was put under his care; but that it was now high time that he ſhould make ſome proviſion for his own family; but however, that if he would conſent to let him have all the ſpotted and parti-coloured cattle, whether of ſheep, or goats, and the black ones among the ſheep, for his hire, he would conſent to ſtay ſix years longer with him. Laban could not but think the conditions ſomething hard, ſince the white ones only were to fall to his ſhare, and had he known what project Jacob had in his head, he would hardly have conſented to them; but as he was willing to keep him at any price, the bargain was ſtruck, and a ſeparation made between the white ones and the reſt, and a ſpace of three days journey put between them to prevent all ſuſpicion; after which Jacob began to execute his new project. He had obſerved the rams leaping the ſheep, at the places where they came to drink, from whence he conceived, that if he could lay ſome ſpeckled ſticks in the water at that time, it might make the white ones to bring forth ſpeckled lambs alſo, and tried it ſo ſucceſsfully upon the ſtrongeſt of Laban's flock, that it ſoon dwindled away, whereas his own improved viſibly, both in number and ſtrength (A). Laban, vexed at his heart to ſee ſuch a prodigious difference between the two flocks, and perhaps ſuſpecting ſome trick, obliged him to invert the bargain, and for the future to take all the white lambs and kids for his hire, and leave him the reſt; from which time Jacob took care to lay by the ſpeckled ſticks. This change was renewed more than once or twice, as he complains to him afterwards[a]: in ſpight of all which, Jacob grew exceeding rich, and with the money which he got by his fleeces, &c. bought men and women-ſervants, camels, oxen, and aſſes; which raiſed ſuch envy in Laban and his ſons againſt him, that they began to look upon him with an evil eye; and this made him contrive the means of getting

Jacob's ſtratagem of the ſpeckled ſticks.

[a] Gen. xxxi. 41.

(A) Our antient commentators fancied, that Jacob made uſe of his ſpeckled ſticks in the ſpring of the year, when the lambs had the whole ſummer to grow fat and ſtrong; but that he ſet them aſide in autumn, when he knew the coldneſs of the winter would ſpoil their thriving: But, as the text ſpeaks neither of ſpring or fall, our moderns have thought it more reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that he laid the ſticks only before the young and luſty ſheep and goats, and the old and weak he left to take their chance; by which the beſt lambs came to his ſhare, and the worſt to Laban's (158).

(158) Bochart. de animal. ſacr. Calm. Comm. in Gen. c. xxx. 41.

off with all he had [b]. He acquainted his wives with it, and finding them of the ſame mind, he ſat them and their little ones upon camels, and having got all his ſervants and ſubſtance together, began his journey towards the land of Canaan, whilſt his father-in-law, who was at a pretty diſtance from him, was buſy in ſheering his ſheep; which gave Rachel an opportunity of ſtealing her father's gods (B). Laban, who ſteals away from Laban.

Year of the Flood, 1260. Year before Chriſt 1739.

[b] Gen. xxx.

(B) The word which we tranſlate gods, in Hebrew is תרפים Teraphim, which all the Jewiſh Rabbies own to be a word of no Hebrew etymology. The LXX tranſlate it ſometimes an oracle, and ſometimes vain idols, and Aquila idols. Some think it to be an Egyptian word, and the ſame with Serapis; that Ham and his ſon Mizraïm were the inventers of idolatry, and that the latter, who was the founder of Egypt, filled that country with idols; inſomuch that there was neither town nor village, houſe or road, where they were not to be ſeen (159): As to their figure, uſe, the manner of making them, &c. they are all equally uncertain. As to their ſhape, the moſt received and probable opinion is, that it was human, or ſomething reſembling a human form, as a buſto term, &c. though the Jews pretend, that it was the head of a firſt-born ſon plucked off from the neck, and embalmed; under the tongue of which was faſtened a golden plate, with the name of ſome falſe deity engraven upon it; which head, being placed in a nich, or upon a ſhelf, did give vocal anſwers (160): but theſe are rather to be looked upon as fables not worth confuting; and the figure which Michol put in David's bed (161), which the original calls by the name of Teraphim, ſhews, that it muſt have had an human ſhape. Joſephus indeed, who might think it a reflection on David, that there ſhould be found an image, or Teraphim, in his houſe, has attributed a more ſuitable ſtratagem to Michol, though leſs credible (162): he tells us, that ſhe hid the liver of a kid freſh killed under the bed-cloaths, that the panting of it might be taken for the panting of her husband in a fever; but without enquiring, whether, or how long, a kid's liver would continue panting, ſo as to be ſeen under the bed-cloaths; it is ſcarce credible, that the meſſengers would give her time to do all this; or, if ſhe had notice of their coming, that ſhe could time it ſo well, that the liver ſhould be ſtill panting hot when they came up. However, we ſhall meet with ſo many inſtances in the ſequel of this hiſtory, wherein this author doth depart from the ſcriptures, and from truth, whenever the honour

(159) Kircher. Oedip. Ægypt. Synt. 4. c. 3. Cunæus Rep. Hebr. (160) Jonat. Targ. in Gen. xxxi. R. Tanhuma Eleaz. & al. (161) 1 Sam. xix. 13. (162) Ant. lib. 6. c. 14.

ſubſtance was increaſed, ſince it was put under his care; but that it was now high time that he ſhould make ſome proviſion for his own family; but however, that if he would conſent to let him have all the ſpotted and parti-coloured cattle, whether of ſheep, or goats, and the black ones among the ſheep, for his hire, he would conſent to ſtay ſix years longer with him. Laban could not but think the conditions ſomething hard, ſince the white ones only were to fall to his ſhare, and had he known what project Jacob had in his head, he would hardly have conſented to them; but as he was willing to keep him at any price, the bargain was ſtruck, and a ſeparation made between the white ones and the reſt, and a ſpace of three days journey put between them to prevent all ſuſpicion; after which Jacob began to execute his new project. He had obſerved the rams leaping the ſheep, at the places where they came to drink, from whence he conceived, that if he could lay ſome ſpeckled ſticks in the water at that time, it might make the white ones to bring forth ſpeckled lambs alſo, and tried it ſo ſucceſsfully upon the ſtrongeſt of Laban's flock, that it ſoon diwindled away, whereas his own improved viſibly, both in number and ſtrength (A). Laban, vexed at his heart to ſee ſuch a progreſs difference between the two flocks, and perhaps ſuſpecting ſome trick, obliged him to invert the bargain, and for the future to take all the white lambs and kids for his hire, and leave him the reſt; from which time Jacob took care to lay by the ſpeckled ſticks. This change was renewed more than once or twice, as he complains to him afterwards[a]: in ſpight of all which, Jacob grew exceeding rich, and with the money which he got by his fleeces, &c. bought men and women-ſervants, camels, oxen, and aſſes; which raiſed ſuch envy in Laban and his ſons againſt him, that they began to look upon him with an evil eye; and this made him contrive the means of getting

Jacob's ſtratagem of the ſpeckled ſticks.

[a] Gen. xxxi 41.

(A) Our antient commentators fancied, that Jacob made uſe of his ſpeckled ſticks in the ſpring of the year, when the lambs had the whole ſummer to grow fat and ſtrong; but that he ſet them aſide in autumn, when he knew the coldneſs of the winter would ſpoil their thriving: But, as the text ſpeaks neither of ſpring or fall, our modern have thought it more reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that he laid the ſticks only before the young and luſty ſheep and goats, and the old and weak he left to take their chance; by which the beſt lambs came to his ſhare, and the worſt to Laban's (158).

(158) Bochart. de animal. ſacr. Calm Comm. in Gen. c. xxx 41.

off with all he had [b]. He acquainted his wives with it, and finding them of the ſame mind, he ſat them and their little ones upon camels, and having got all his ſervants and ſubſtance together, began his journey towards the land of Canaan, whilſt his father-in-law, who was at a pretty diſtance from him, was buſy in ſheering his ſheep; which gave Rachel an opportunity of ſtealing her father's gods (B). Laban, who ſteals away from Laban. Year of the Flood, 1260. Year before Chriſt 1739.

[b] Gen. xxx.

(B) The word which we tranſlate gods, in Hebrew is תרפים Teraphim, which all the Jewiſh Rabbies own to be a word of no Hebrew etymology. The LXX tranſlate it ſometimes an oracle, and ſometimes vain idols, and Aquila idols. Some think it to be an Egyptian word, and the ſame with Serapis; that Ham and his ſon Mizraïm were the inventers of idolatry, and that the latter, who was the founder of Egypt, filled that country with idols; inſomuch that there was neither town nor village, houſe or road, where they were not to be ſeen (159): As to their figure, uſe, the manner of making them, &c. they are all equally uncertain. As to their ſhape, the moſt received and probable opinion is, that it was human, or ſomething reſembling a human form, as a buſto term, &c. though the Jews pretend, that it was the head of a firſt-born ſon plucked off from the neck, and embalmed; under the tongue of which was faſtened a golden plate, with the name of ſome falſe deity engraven upon it; which head, being placed in a nich, or upon a ſhelf, did give vocal anſwers (160): but theſe are rather to be looked upon as fables not worth confuting; and the figure which Michol put in David's bed (161), which the original calls by the name of Teraphim, ſhews, that it muſt have had an human ſhape. Joſephus indeed, who might think it a reflection on David, that there ſhould be found an image, or Teraphim, in his houſe, has attributed a more ſuitable ſtratagem to Michol, though leſs credible (162): he tells us, that ſhe hid the liver of a kid freſh killed under the bed-cloaths, that the panting of it might be taken for the panting of her husband in a fever; but without enquiring, whether, or how long, a kid's liver would continue panting, ſo as to be ſeen under the bed-cloaths; it is ſcarce credible, that the meſſengers would give her time to do all this; or, if ſhe had notice of their coming, that ſhe could time it ſo well, that the liver ſhould be ſtill panting hot when they came up. However, we ſhall meet with ſo many inſtances in the ſequel of this hiſtory, wherein this author doth depart from the ſcriptures, and from truth, whenever the honour who did not hear of his flight till the third day after, was full ſeven days before he could overtake him; by which time of his nation is concerned, that his authority will be of little weight in all ſuch caſes.

(159) Kircher. Oedip. Ægypt. Synt. 4. c. 3. Cunæus Rep. Hebr. (160) Jonat. Targ in Gen. xxxi. R. Tanhuma Eleaz. & al. (161) 1 Sam. xix. 13. (162) Ant. lib. 6. c. 14.

Theſe Teraphims were afterwards univerſally known by the name of taliſman, as they are to this day all over India. The Perſians called them Telephim, a name not unlike Teraphim. They were made of different metals, and ſizes, caſt under certain conſtellations, with the figures of ſome planets, and magic characters engraven upon them. What metal thoſe of Laban were, or how big, or how many, is not eaſy to gueſs; only this the text tells us, that ſhe hid them in the ſtraw, and ſat upon them. As for their uſe, it was chiefly to give anſwers, to foretel what was to come, to diſcover what was hid or loſt, and the like. Beſides this, they were likewiſe addreſſed to for temporal bleſſings, and to avert evils. They were to be conſulted and prayed to, at certain times, under particular aſpects of the planets, from which, according to the Jews, they partly received that power, and partly from the characters engraven on them (163). Another Rabbi goes farther, and pretends, that they gave their anſwers viva voce (164), and proves it from the words of the prophet, The Teraphims have ſpoken vain things (165). However we muſt not ſuppoſe, that all the Teraphims were of the ſame make, or for the ſame uſes, even among the Jews. We ſhall have occaſion to mention ſome of other ſorts, when we come to ſpeak of that of Michah (166): beſides, as they came to be more univerſal, every one had them made after his own fancy; though the generality of them had at leaſt a human head.

The laſt thing worth enquiring into is what induced Rachel to ſteal her father's gods. Concerning which we can affirm nothing certain: ſome think, that ſhe did it to repay herſelf for the damage which they had ſuſtained by her father (167); others, that ſhe thought by that means to prevent Laban's enquiring of them which way Jacob went (168); others, that ſhe would thereby cure her father of his idolatry, againſt which Jacob had read his wives many a lecture (169). Laſtly, others think, that both ſhe and her ſiſter were ſtill addicted to that ſuperſtition, and that their deſigning to continue in it, made her to conceal the theft from her huſband (170); but that Jacob, making a thorough reformation in his houſe, cauſed them to be taken from her, and buried under a tree in Shechem (171).

(163) D. Kimchi ſub voc. Teraph. (164) R. Eleaz. cap. 36. (165) Zechar. x. 2. (166) Judges xvii. 1, & ſeq. (167) Perrer, Johnſon, & al. (168) Abenezrah in loc. (169) Theodoret. Quæſt. 9 Rab. Sal. Greg. Nazianz. orat. de S. Paſch & al. (170) Cyril. in Gen. xxxi. Chryſoſt Cajet. Muſc. Calv. & al. (171) Gen. xxxv. 4.

Jacob

Jacob was already got over the river Euphrates (C), and was got up the mountains of Gilead, where he had pitched his tent for that night. The day being too far ſpent for Laban, and thoſe relations he had brought with him, to do any thing, they encamped near him, and waited for the morning. It is evident, that he had ſome ill deſign againſt his ſon-in-law; but GOD, who appeared to him that night in a dream, was pleaſed to avert it, by threatening him ſeverely, if he committed any hoſtility or violence againſt him. Laban's courage being thus cooled, their meeting on the next morning proved more calm than he intended it. He contented himſelf with expoſtulating with him, that he had ſtolen away without giving him an opportunity of kiſſing his children and grand-children, and ſending them away with the uſual ceremonies of muſic and dances. Jacob, on the other hand, was not without his complaints; the cheat he had put upon him in making him ſerve ſo long for a woman he did not care for; the changing his ſalary ſo many times, and his late ſtrange behaviour towards him and his family: all theſe and many more, he anſwered him, were but ill requitals for all his diligence and care, or for the bleſſings which GOD had heaped upon him for his ſake. Laban had yet another thing to lay to his charge, namely, the ſtealing of his gods; and Jacob, ignorant of Rachel's theft, deſired him to make the moſt diligent ſearch for them throughout his family, promiſing, that the perſon on whom they were found ſhould be immediately put to death. Laban loſt no time, but went and ſearched every tent, and laſt of all came to that of Rachel, who had hid the teraphims under the camels litter, and had ſet herſelf down upon them. She kept her ſitting whilſt he was curiouſly examining every corner of her tent, and excuſed it, with telling him, that the condition ſhe was then in, allowed her ſex to diſpenſe with the uſual ceremonies. This prevented all further ſcrutiny, and Laban, who could not think, that ſhe would come near ſuch ſacred ſtuff in that condition, went

Laban overtakes him:

Searches for his Gods.

(C) Though the text doth not ſay what river he paſſed, yet it is plain, it could be no other than the Euphrates, which the ſcripture ſometimes calls the river Perah, ſometimes the great river, and ſometimes emphatically, the river (172); either, becauſe that and the Nile were the only two conſiderable ones they knew; or, becauſe it was one of the four rivers of Paradiſe; or laſtly, becauſe it was the boundary of the promiſed land †.

(172) Vid. Joſh. i. 4. Gen. xxxi. 21. & alib. † Vid. Gen. xv. 18.

away with a heavy heart, and acquainted his ſon-in-law with his ill ſucceſs. This cauſed ſome freſh expoſtulations, which being ended, they fell upon a more agreeable ſubject, which was to make an alliance between them, and to erect a monument, as a ſtanding witneſs of it to future ages. They all put a helping hand, and reared the pile, which Laban called in the Syrian tongue Jegar-Sahadutha, and Jacob in Hebrew Galeed; both which ſignify the heap of witneſs †. Here they like-wiſe ſwore, that neither would paſs over that monument to hurt the other, and Jacob, that he would uſe his wives and children with all becoming tenderneſs and affection. The ceremony being ended, and a ſacrifice offered upon the occaſion, he feaſted the whole company the reſt of that day; and the next morning Laban, having embraced and bleſſed the whole family, returned home to Padan-Aram ‖.

Jacob and Laban make an alliance between them, and erect a monument in memory of it Laban returns home.

JACOB, who thought his abſence a greater ſecurity than the oaths he had ſworn, was glad to have ſo well eſcaped; but one fear ſucceeded another, and the reſentment of his brother Eſau began now to give him a freſh trouble; but a viſion which he had of an hoſt of angels, who met him in his way to Canaan, did diſſipate his anxiety for a while, and in memory of this viſion he called the place Mahanaim (two camps). But being ſtill fearful of his brother ‡, he reſolved to ſoften him with a ſubmiſſive meſſage, or at leaſt, to feel how his pulſe beat toward him. He ſent therefore ſome of his ſervants before, to acquaint him with the ſucceſs he had during his ſtay in Meſopotamia, the riches and multitude of wives, children, ſervants, and cattle, which he had acquired, and that he did not think fit to proceed further homewards, till he had ſent him his beſt compliments. The meſſengers returned with the news, that Eſau was coming to meet him, accompanied with four hundred of his men. This was enough to compleat Jacob's dread: he then began to think himſelf a dead man; but, having recovered himſelf a little, he ſet himſelf about giving orders to his family. He divided them into two bands, in hopes, that if the one periſhed, the other might eſcape; which done, he addreſſed himſelf to GOD in a very humble prayer, acknowledging his great mercies to him, and his own unworthineſs of them, and begged his future protection againſt his brother's ſword, and that he would fulfil all his former promiſes to him. After this he reſolved to try how far preſents would work upon Eſau's temper, and having ſet a-part two hundred ſhe-goats, and twenty he-goats, two hundred ewes and twenty rams, thirty ſhe-

Jacob's vision. He calls the place Mahanaim.

† Vid. ſup. p. 266. ‖ Gen. xxxi. ‡ Vid. ſup p. 128.

camels,

camels with their colts, forty cows and ten bulls, twenty ſhe-aſſes and ten colts, he ſent them before him in ſeparate bands, and charged their drivers, when they met his brother, to tell him, that they were preſents ſent by Jacob to his lord Eſau, in order to entreat his favour and good will. On the next morning he made all his family and flocks go over the brook Jabbok, long before break of day, whilſt himſelf tarried at Mahanaim; where there appeared a man who wreſtled with him till the morning, and not being able to prevail with him, he touched the hollow of his thigh, and put it out of joint, then deſired him to let him go ſince day appeared. Jacob was reſolved to have his bleſſing firſt; upon which he changed his name from Jacob to Iſrael, which ſignifies a man that has prevailed with God. But when he was deſired to tell his own name, he refuſed it, and left him (D). Jacob thereupon

He ſends ſome preſents to Eſau.

Jacob is named Iſrael at Peniel.

(D) Moſt verſions, as well as ours, render the words of the angel to Jacob in the latter part of the 28th verſe, as if Jacob had prevailed over men as well as over him; whereas he had been ſo far from prevailing over the only two enemies he had, viz. Eſau and Laban, that he had been forced to flee from them both. This makes it therefore neceſſary to have recourſe to a better verſion of theſe words, if the original can bear us out in it: which it will do without the leaſt violence; or rather, by following the moſt ſtrict and literal ſenſe of it, which runs thus. Thou haſt acted, or behaved, prince like (in thy wreſtling) with God, and thou ſhalt alſo prevail over men. And indeed, what could be more comfortable to Jacob in the ſtrait he was in, about meeting his brother Eſau, than ſuch a promiſe? or what can more naturally account for this viſion, than to ſuppoſe, that it happened unto him in order to diſpel his fears? Not that we need to confine the meaning of the wreſtling, or the ſenſe of the angel's words to the preſent dread and difficulties, which that patriarch laboured under; for his numerous poſterity was to be no leſs ſubject to the hatred and perſecutions of other nations: nothing therefore could be more proper to ſtrengthen his and his childrens faith and reliance in God, than this prophetic viſion and promiſe, that as he had now wreſtled with God and prevailed, ſo he ſhould likewiſe in the numberleſs difficulties, which both he and they ſhould meet with from their enemies. This verſion is likewiſe more agreeable to the Chaldee paraphraſe, the Septuagint, and the Vulgate, which render it thus, If thou haſt been thus fit able to prevail with God, how much more will thou be able to prevail over men!

This myſterious wreſtling has indeed induced ſome of the antient fathers to think, it was to be underſtood in a ſpiritual, and not actual ſenſe (173): which they conclude from the words of the Apo-

(173) Hieron. qu. Hebr. Orig. et al.

ſtle

therefore called the place Peniel, or the face of GOD, and when he came to march, he found that he halted upon his thigh; upon which account his posterity never eat of that joint [d]. And Josephus tells us, that neither Jacob, nor any of his posterity ever since, did eat that part of any creature [e]; and though the text mentions only the sinew that shrank; yet so scrupulous have some of the Jews been even to this stle (174), we wrestle not against flesh and blood; and some Jews do think, that it was done in a dream (175); and that his halting was either occasioned by weariness, the cold of the night, or the posture he slept in. But besides that the fear of his brother gave him but little inclination to sleep; the circumstances of the story, the imposition of a new name, and above all, the testimony of the prophet Hosea (176), who says, he had power over the angel, and prevailed, that he wept and prayed unto him, seem to make it more than a dream, if it was not a real and corporeal wrestling. As to the person who wrestled with Jacob, some have believed it to have been an angel, only because Hosea calls him by that name in the place above quoted; whereas when it is GOD, or CHRIST, that appears like one, he is distinguished by the angel of the covenant, or some other word (177). But what follows in the very next verse of the prophet plainly confutes that notion, he found him in Bethel, even the LORD GOD of hosts. That it was GOD who met him in Bethel, is plain, by his saying, I am the GOD of Bethel (178). The general opinion therefore of antient and modern authors is, that it was CHRIST who wrestled with Jacob here. 1, Because he blessed him; and 2, Because Jacob says, I have seen GOD face to face, &c. and called the place Peniel (179). As for what is said, that he could not prevail, it might be an expression ad captum; as when he says to Moses, let me alone, that I may, &c. (180.) This Peniel became afterwards a city of some note for we find, that Gideon pulled down one of its towers, because they had denied them bread (181); but it was afterwards rebuilt by Jeroboam (182). Josephus says, that he likewise built a palace there; it stood by the river Jordan, and belonged to the tribe of Gad (183) Strabo mentions a city adjoining to Tripolis, which was called the face of GOD, at one end of mount Libanus (184).

[d] Gen. xxxii. [e] Ant. l. 1. c. 20.

(174) Ephes. vi. 12. (175) R. Levi. l. 1. & al. (176) Hos. xii 4. (177) Perrer. in loc. & al. (178) Gen. xxxi 13. (179) Tertul. lib. 2. cont. Marcion. Hilar. de Trin. l. 4. Ambr. de fid. l 6. Chrysost. in cap. 7. Actor. &. al. Calv. Merc Jun. & al. mult. (180) Exod. xxxii. 10. (181) Judges [illegible] 17. (182) 1 Kings xii. 25. (183) Jos. Ant. l. 8. c. [illegible]. (184) Strabo l. 16.

day,

day, that for want of knowing which it was, they abſtain from the whole hind-quarter; though others, leſs nice, abſtain only from the thigh; and ſome again will eat even that, and content themſelves with plucking the ſinew out of it f. Some think, that Jacob's lameneſs was ſoon over; others, that he halted all his life. However that be, this new viſion gave him ſuch freſh courage for the preſent, that he marched on chearfully till he had overtaken his family.

IT was not long before he diſcovered his brother afar off, coming towards him with his large retinue, at which he could not forbear betraying ſome freſh tokens of diſtruſt. To prepare therefore for the worſt, he divided his family into three bands; the two maids and their ſons went firſt, Leah and her children next, and Rachel and Joſeph, who was then about ſix years of age, followed in the rear, as fartheſt from danger. As ſoon as he ſaw his brother, he bowed himſelf ſeven times down to the ground before him, who, being moved with his ſubmiſſive behaviour, ran to him, embraced and kiſſed him, and wept over him (E). And ſeeing his wives and children, who not to be wanting in their reſpect to him, did proſtrate themſelves before him, one after another, in the ſame order in which Jacob had diſpoſed them; and being informed who they were, returned their civilities

Meets with his brother Eſau.

f CALM. Hiſt. O. T. in loc.

(E) The Mazorites and Cabaliſts obſerve, that there is a large point over the word וישקהו Vaiſhakehu, and he kiſſed him, which implies, that he did not deſign to kiſs his brother, but to bite him; for the word ſignifies alſo to bite; but that Jacob's neck was immediately turned into marble. Wherefore the text ſays, they both wept, he for the odd change in his neck, and Eſau becauſe he had almoſt broke his teeth againſt it, and that this prevented his wicked deſign againſt his brother (185). But it is more than probable, that Iſaac and Rebekah had taken much pains to convince him, during his brother's abſence, that what Jacob and ſhe had done, was by order of GOD himſelf, who had decreed the inverſion of the ſucceſſion before they were born; that it would therefore be not only in vain, but even an unpardonable crime, for him to oppoſe himſelf againſt the decrees of providence; and that, inſtead of recovering his brother's bleſſing, he would bring a terrible curſe upon his own head: by which, and other ſuch like arguments, they had wholly perſwaded him to acquieſce in the divine will, and to ſet aſide all animoſity againſt Jacob.

(185) Bereſhith Rabbah in loc. Mazor. in loc.

with

with the ſame tenderneſs that he had his brother's. He now began to chide him in a civil manner, for ſending him ſuch great preſents, and to deſire him to take them back, alledging, that it was ſuperfluous to him, who had enough of every thing; but Jacob begged ſo earneſtly that he would accept of them, that he at length prevailed. Eſau offered afterwards to accompany him to the end of his journey, or at leaſt to leave a ſufficient number of his men to guard him; but he begged to be excuſed from conſenting to either, ſeeing he was forced to go gently on, by reaſon of his little ones, and the cattle that were with young: upon which his brother took his leave and went away for mount Seir *; and Jacob ſeeing himſelf rid of all his fears, ſtopped at a convenient place, to which he gave the name of Succoth, or booths, by reaſon of the booths and folds he made there for his camels and cattle; he likewiſe built himſelf a houſe there. This Succoth became afterwards a city of ſome ſtrength, and Gideon did ſeverely puniſh ſome of its chief inhabitants, for their ſaucy anſwer to him, when he was in purſuit of the Midianites [g]. It was ſituate between the brook Jabbok and the river Jordan. From Succoth he went to Salem (F), a place near

Jacob ſtopt ſome time at Succoth.

* Vid. ſup. p. 128. [g] Gen xxxiii.

(F) We have here followed the Engliſh verſion, though the original, we think, might be more properly rendered, he arrived ſafe and ſound, or peaceably, at the city of Shechem: for the word Salem or rather Shalem, bears that ſignification; and there are no remains of any place near Shechem, that is called by the name of Salem. For this reaſon ſome have thought it to be that Salem of which Melchizedek was king (186), the ruins of whoſe palace were ſtill to be ſeen in St. Jerom's time; which ſhewed it, he ſays, to have been a magnificent building, and which, he thinks, is the ſame with Salem here ſpoken of (187). But it is not likely, that the former was ſo near Shechem, any more than the Salem where John the Baptiſt did frequent (188), which was near Jordan; whereas Shechem was at a diſtance from it. Beſides Joſephus tells us, that the old Salem was the ſame as Jeruſalem (189). And the Pſalmiſt ſeems to intimate the ſame, when he ſays at Salem was his tabernacle, and his dwelling in Sion (190); but the Salem near Shechem was near thirty miles from Jeruſalem. Others have ſought for Salem in Shiloh, which is about half way between Jeruſalem and Shechem, and have thought that they were the ſame (191). But, beſides, that Shiloh is not near Shechem, it is plain from Judges (192)

(186) Gen. xiv. 18. (187) Hieron. quæſt. Hebr. (188) John iii. 23. (189) Ant. l. 1. c. 11. (190) Pſal. lxxvi. 2. (191) Vid. Villet. c. 33. (192) Judg xxi. 19.

that

near the city of Shechem, in the land of Canaan, where he bought a piece of land from Hamor, the father of Shechem for an hundred pieces of money, and pitched his tents there (G), and built an altar to the LORD, which he called El-elohe-iſ-rael, or the mighty GOD of Iſrael [h]. This was in all likelihood the ſame place where Abraham had heretofore built one, ſoon after his firſt coming into the land of Canaan [i]. And here alſo was probably Jacob's well near mount Gerizim, where CHRIST talked with the woman of Samaria [k]; for that mountain ſtood in the country of the Shechemites [l].

Buys a piece of ground near Shechem.

HERE Jacob might have lived long enough peaceably and agreeably, being beloved and reſpected by all that people, had not Dinah's curioſity of viſiting the women of the city, ſome ſay, to ſee one of their feaſts [m], proved the cauſe of that they were two diſtinct places; wherefore upon the whole we think, that Salem ſhould here be rendered ſafe, or in peace; namely from the dread and dangers he had been in of his brother Eſau, and not becauſe he was cured of his lameneſs, as the Jews imagine.

[h] Gen. xxxiii 20. [i] Gen. xii 7. Annal. USSER p. 9. CALM. Hiſt. O. T. 205. VILLET. & al. [k] John iv. 6. & ſeq. [l] Judg. ix. 7. [m] Jo. Ant. l. 1. c. 21.

(G) The word Keſbitah קְשִׂיטָה, which is here rendered a piece of money, ſignifies alſo a lamb; from whence Onkelos (193), the Septuagint, Vulgate, Oleaſter, and others, have tranſlated it an hundred lambs, as they have alſo that place in Job, where every one of his friends gave him a Keſbitah; but it is more likely that they gave him a piece of money than a lamb; for that would be of greater ſervice to him in the condition he was in. All the Jewiſh interpreters, except Onkelos above-named, render it by the word מֵעָה (194), which ſignifies a piece of money of about the value of a penny, and tell us, that the Arabians called money Keſbitah (195). It is more probable, therefore, that it was a ſmall coin that had a lamb ſtamped upon it, and was called by that name, as we do call an Angel from the ſtamp it bears of one. As for thoſe who think that this price was hardly ſufficient to purchaſe ſuch a piece of ground, it not amounting to above ten or twelve ſhillings (196), they ſhould conſider, that if a lamb in thoſe days was worth no more than five farthings or three halfpence, which is probable enough, money then bearing a higher value, an hundred lambs would be but equivalent to an hundred ſuch pieces of money.

(193) Targ. Onkel. in loc (194) Vid Munſt. in loc (195) Ap. Villet. (196) Le Scene's Eſſay on a new tranſlation, p 166.

with the ſame tenderneſs that he had his brother's. He now began to chide him in a civil manner, for ſending him ſuch great preſents, and to deſire him to take them back, alledging, that it was ſuperfluous to him, who had enough of every thing; but Jacob begged ſo earneſtly that he would accept of them, that he at length prevailed. Eſau offered afterwards to accompany him to the end of his journey, or at leaſt to leave a ſufficient number of his men to guard him; but he begged to be excuſed from conſenting to either, ſeeing he was forced to go gently on, by reaſon of his little ones, and the cattle that were with young: upon which his brother took his leave and went away for mount Seir *; and Jacob ſeeing himſelf rid of all his fears, ſtopped at a convenient place, to which he gave the name of Succoth, or booths, by reaſon of the booths and folds he made there for his camels and cattle; he likewiſe built himſelf a houſe there. This Succoth became afterwards a city of ſome ſtrength, and Gideon did ſeverely puniſh ſome of its chief inhabitants, for their ſaucy anſwer to him, when he was in purſuit of the Midianites [g]. It was ſituate between the brook Jabbok and the river Jordan. From Succoth he went to Salem (F), a place near

Jacob ſtopt ſome time at Succoth.

* Vid. ſup. p. 128. [g] Gen xxxiii.

(F) We have here followed the Engliſh verſion, though the original, we think, might be more properly rendered, he arrived ſafe and ſound, or peaceably, at the city of Shechem: for the word Salem or rather Shalem, bears that ſignification; and there are no remains of any place near Shechem, that is called by the name of Salem. For this reaſon ſome have thought it to be that Salem of which Melchizedek was king (186), the ruins of whoſe palace were ſtill to be ſeen in St. Jerom's time; which ſhewed it, he ſays, to have been a magnificent building, and which, he thinks, is the ſame with Salem here ſpoken of (187). But it is not likely, that the former was ſo near Shechem, any more than the Salem where John the Baptiſt did frequent (188), which was near Jordan; whereas Shechem was at a diſtance from it. Beſides Joſephus tells us, that the old Salem was the ſame as Jeruſalem (189). And the Pſalmiſt ſeems to intimate the ſame, when he ſays at Salem was his tabernacle, and his dwelling in Sion (190); but the Salem near Shechem was near thirty miles from Jeruſalem. Others have ſought for Salem in Shiloh, which is about half way between Jeruſalem and Shechem, and have thought that they were the ſame (191). But, beſides, that Shiloh is not near Shechem, it is plain from Judges (192)

(186) Gen. xiv. 18. (187) Hieron. quæſt. Hebr. (188) John iii. 23. (189) Ant. l. 1. c. 11. (190) Pſal. lxxvi. 2. (191) Vid. Villet. c. 33. (192) Judg. xxi. 19.

that

near the city of Shechem, in the land of Canaan, where he bought a piece of land from Hamor, the father of Shechem for an hundred pieces of money, and pitched his tents there (G), and built an altar to the LORD, which he called El-elohe-iſrael, or the mighty GOD of Iſrael [h]. This was in all likelihood the ſame place where Abraham had heretofore built one, ſoon after his firſt coming into the land of Canaan [i]. And here alſo was probably Jacob's well near mount Gerizim, where CHRIST talked with the woman of Samaria [k]; for that mountain ſtood in the country of the Shechemites [l].

Buys a piece of ground near Shechem.

HERE Jacob might have lived long enough peaceably and agreeably, being beloved and reſpected by all that people, had not Dinah's curioſity of viſiting the women of the city, ſome ſay, to ſee one of their feaſts [m], proved the cauſe of

[h] Gen. xxxiii. 20. [i] Gen. xii. 7. Annal. USSER p. 9. CALM. Hiſt. O. T. 205. VILLET. & al. [k] John iv. 6. & ſeq. [l] Judg. ix. 7. [m] Joſ. Ant. l. 1. c. 21.

that they were two diſtinct places: wherefore upon the whole we think, that Salem ſhould here be rendered ſafe, or in peace; namely from the dread and dangers he had been in of his brother Eſau, and not becauſe he was cured of his lameneſs, as the Jews imagine.

(G) The word Keſhitah קשיטה, which is here rendered a piece of money, ſignifies alſo a lamb; from whence Onkelos (193), the Septuagint, Vulgate, Oleaſter, and others, have tranſlated it an hundred lambs, as they have alſo that place in Job, where every one of his friends gave him a Keſhitah; but it is more likely that they gave him a piece of money than a lamb; for that would be of greater ſervice to him in the condition he was in. All the Jewiſh interpreters, except Onkelos above-named, render it by the word מעה (194), which ſignifies a piece of money of about the value of a penny, and tell us, that the Arabians called money Keſhitah (195). It is more probable, therefore, that it was a ſmall coin that had a lamb ſtamped upon it, and was called by that name, as we do call an Angel from the ſtamp it bears of one. As for thoſe who think that this price was hardly ſufficient to purchaſe ſuch a piece of ground, it not amounting to above ten or twelve ſhillings (196), they ſhould conſider, that if a lamb in thoſe days was worth no more than five farthings or three halfpence, which is probable enough, money then bearing a higher value, an hundred lambs would be but equivalent to an hundred ſuch pieces of money.

(193) Targ. Onkel. in loc. (194) Vid. Munſt. in loc. (195) Ap. Villet. (196) Le Scene's Eſſay on a new tranſlation, p. 166.

much miſchief, and obliged her father to withdraw from that place nearer to Mamre, where his father ſtill lived †. She-

Shechem's amour with Dinah. chem, the ſon of Hamor the Hivite, who was prince of that country, ſaw her, became in love with her, raviſhed her, and ſent her home to her father, with the greateſt aſſurances of marriage, if Jacob's conſent could be as eaſily obtained as that of his father Hamor. Dinah told her miſhap to her father, who was forced to bear it patiently for the preſent; becauſe his ſons were all out in the field. But as ſoon as they were come home, and made acquainted with it, their reſentment grew to ſuch a height, that they reſolved ſeverely to revenge the diſhonour done to their family. In the mean time Shechem having prevailed upon his father to obtain him the damſel, Hamor went with him to make the propoſal of it to her father, and promiſed to give her as large a dowry as he ſhould deſire; adding, that if his family were to intermarry with the Shechemites, it might prove the moſt effectual means for both to live in perfect peace and friendſhip. But the treacherous ſons of Jacob, who meditated nothing but the moſt bloody revenge, replied, that is was not lawful for them to contract any affinity with any uncircumciſed nation; but that, if he and his people would conſent to be circumciſed, as they were, they would agree to his propoſal. The ſequel ihews, that they deſigned nothing leſs. For the prince, having acquainted his people with the whole matter, did eaſily perſuade them to accept the conditions, ſince it would have given them a power over all their ſubſtance and riches. Shechem was no doubt very preſſing to have the ceremony of circumciſion performed out of hand, that he might the ſooner enjoy his deſires, and, in complaiſance to him, the whole city agreed to go about it that very day. Three days after this, when their wounds had rendered them incapable to ſtand in their own defence, Simeon and Levi, Dinah's brothers entered the city, and put all the males to the ſword, and brought their ſiſter back. After this they went and plundered the place, took all the women captives, and carried away all the cattle they found in the neighbourhood. When Jacob came to hear of this barbarous exploit, he was extremely diſpleaſed at it. He reproved them for it, told them the dangerous conſequences that muſt inevitably attend ſuch a treacherous action, which he thought muſt end in the deſtruction of himſelf and family. And indeed we need not doubt, but the reſt of the inhabitants of that country might, and would,

Year of the Flood, 1267. Year before Chriſt 1732.

Hamor demands her in marriage for his ſon.

Jacob's ſons treachery.

They enter the city, and deſtroy all the males, &c.

† Vid. ſup. p. 171.

eaſily

eaſily have made his words good, had not GOD interpoſed, and ſent a panick fear amongſt them, inſomuch that they did even let them depart quietly, and carry of all the plunder they had got from the ſlaughtered Shechemites. However, all the anſwer Jacob's ſons made to him was, why did he uſe our ſiſter like a harlot [n] ?

HOWEVER, GOD was ſoon pleaſed to diſſipate his fears Jacob is bid to go and dwell at Bethel. once more, by ſpeaking to him in a dream, and bidding him go to Bethel, where he had formerly appeared to him, when he fled from his brother, and to dwell there, and build an altar unto him. Jacob therefore unwilling to prophane that holy place, by carrying with him any thing that might be diſpleaſing to GOD, ordered his family to bring all the idols they had taken from the Shechemites, or brought from Padan-Aram, if his wife's were not among them, to purify themſelves even to the very changing of their garments, and to bury all their ſuperſtitious lumber in a deep hole, which Their idols buried. he cauſed to be made under an oak near to Schechem. His commands were forthwith obeyed, and they parted even with their very ear-rings, which they uſed to wear as taliſmans, or charms, againſt ſickneſs and other misfortunes [o]. After which Jacob and his whole family ſet out with all they had, and arrived ſafely at Luz, afterwards called Bethel: none of the neighbouring inhabitants daring to purſue after them. As ſoon as he came there, he built an altar to GOD, and called it, El-beth-el, or the GOD of Bethel: ſoon after which Deborah, his mother's nurſe (H), died, and was buried under Deborah an dies.

[n] Gen. xxxiv. [o] See CALMET, Comm. in Gen. xxxv. 4.

(H) It is not eaſy to gueſs how ſo very old a woman as Rebekah's nurſe muſt then be, ſhould be found in his retinue, unleſs we ſuppoſe, that ſhe was ſent by Iſaac to enquire after Jacob's welfare. Calvin and others indeed think, that ſhe went with him into Meſopotamia, having a deſire to ſee her own country again, and that when ſhe heard that he was gone for the land of Canaan, her deſire to ſee Rebekah made her follow him thither; but it is unlikely, that a woman at her years ſhould take ſuch rambles: For if we ſuppoſe her to have been forty years old when ſhe was taken in to be Rebekah's nurſe (and leſs than that ſhe could hardly be, ſeeing ſhe was not taken to ſuckle her, but to bring her up as a governante), ſhe muſt have been near an hundred and ſeventy years old when ſhe died. The Hebrews tell us, that Rebekah having promiſed her ſon, when he was going from her, that ſhe would ſend for him again, as ſoon as ſhe found that he was out of danger, did now ſend Deborah to fetch him back; but, beſides that a younger meſſenger an oak at the foot of the hill of Bethel, and the place was called Allon-bachuth, or the oak of mourning. He made but a short stay at Bethel, being desirous to go to visit his father, whom, for ought we find, he had not seen since he went to Mesopotamia: but as he was marching towards Ephrath, Rachel fell in labour at a small distance from the place, and perceiving that it would cost her her life, called the child Benoni, or the son of my affliction; but after she was dead, Jacob changed that name, too likely perhaps to revive his grief for her loss, into that of Benjamin, or the son of my right hand. Rachel was buried in the way to Ephrath, and a stone monument was reared over the grave, which was still to be seen in Moses's time. This was not the only misfortune Jacob met with in this place: for his son Reuben, having taken a liking to Bilhah, his father's concubine and Rachel's maid, did not scruple to lie with her: which, when his father heard, made so deep an impression in his heart, that he grieved at it to his dying day [p]. Soon after this Jacob left that melancholy place, and came at length to Mamre, to his old father Isaac; with whom he continued almost the space of thirteen years, some say nineteen, that is, till the good old man departed this life, which he did in a very advanced age, being an hundred and eighty years old; having been almost blind and decrepid a considerable number of years (I). His two sons buried him in the cave of Machpelah, with Abraham and Sarah; after which Esau returned home, and Jacob continued at Mamre [q].

Rachel brought to bed of Benjamin. Dies, and is buried at Ephrath.

Reuben's incest.

Isaac dies, and is buried by his two sons.

HOWEVER, the happiness which Jacob had enjoyed, during his stay with his father, had not been without some allay. Joseph was about seventeen years of age, and was become would have been more proper; it is certain Jacob was not sent for, but called by GOD, and drove by Laban's cruel usage out of that country

[p] Gen. xlix 4. [q] Gen. xxxv.

(I) The Jews tell us, that the masters who taught Isaac the law of GOD were the patriarchs Shem and Heber, who were still living; and that when Abraham took him with him to mount Moriah to sacrifice him there, he told Sarah, that he was going with him to the school of Shem 197. They likewise attribute to him the composing of the noon-prayers which they constantly use: for they think Abraham was the author of those of the morning, and Jacob of those of the evening, and Isaac of those of noon *.

(197) Sgambat. Archiv. Vet. Test. l. 2. p. 197. * Fabric. Apocryph. Vet. Test. 434.

his

his darling, in regard of his excellencies of body and mind; beſides, his father had obſerved ſomething extraordinary and promiſing in him, beyond what he could ſee in his other ſons, which made him ſo exceſſively fond of him (K), that it procured him the envy of all his brothers. What encreaſed it ſtill more was, that Joſeph having obſerved ſome vile actions in the ſons of Bilhah and Zilpah, with whom his father had ſent him to feed the ſheep, in hopes, that they would pay him a greater regard than his other brethren, came and acquainted him with it. But he himſelf helped to compleat their envy, or rather, to turn it into an irreconcilable hatred, by innocently telling them ſome dreams he had, which ſeemed to foreſhew, that he ſhould one day get the power and authority over them. One of them was, that he ſaw in a wheat-field his own ſheaf ſtanding upright, and theirs falling down before it, and paying homage to it. Another was, that he ſaw the ſun, moon, and eleven ſtars, doing the like obeiſance to him. This laſt he likewiſe told to his father, who, though he could not perhaps but be delighted with it, and think it ſignificative of ſome great fortune that would attend him; yet obſerving, with what envy his brethren heard it, thought fit to rebuke him ſeverely before them, aſking him, if he thought, that his father, mother, and brethren were to bow themſelves to the earth to him? but this rather helped to encreaſe their hatred againſt him, and made them

Joſeph beloved by his father.

Hated by his brethren.

His two dreams.

(K) Moſt verſions as well as ours, have made Jacob to love Joſeph, becauſe he was the ſon of his old age, whereas he had two ſons younger than he, viz. Zebulun and Benjamin, and this laſt was born above fifteen years after him. It ſeems they have confounded the words בן זקנים Ben Zekenim, the ſon of ſenators or elders, as he is called here, with בן זקנה Ben Ziknah, the ſon of old age. But the former has a quite different meaning, it ſignifying, according to the Hebrew idiom, the ſon or diſciple of ſenators; that is, becauſe he was endued with extraordinary wiſdom and prudence. Accordingly the Samaritan, Perſic and Arabic verſions have rendered it, becauſe he was a wiſe and prudent ſon; though even this comes ſhort of the energy of the idiom, and might be more properly tranſlated, becauſe he was as wiſe and prudent as a ſenator. And as it is natural for parents, eſpecially fathers, to admire thoſe children that ſhew any degree of wiſdom above their years, ſo Jacob had a great deal of reaſon to ſhew a more than ordinary love for ſuch a ſon; whereas to be fond of a child of old age, had Joſeph been even ſuch, is but a common piece of dotage, which Moſes would hardly have thought worth recording (198).

(198) Vid. Le Scene's Eſſay.

reſolve

reſolve to contrive his death. It was not long before an opportunity offered itſelf to them. Jacob being uneaſy, that he had not heard from them for ſome time, ſince they were gone to Shechem with their flocks, and fearing leſt ſome ill luck had befallen them, ſent Joſeph to enquire after them. When he came thither, he was told that they were removed farther off, about twenty miles farther north towards Dudaim. He went after them, and they no ſooner ſaw him, but they all agreed to make away with the dreamer, as they called him, and to make their father believe, that ſome wild beaſt had devoured him. They had certainly executed their bloody deſign, without any regard either to his tears, his age, or to the grief, which the news of his death would cauſe to their aged father, had not Reuben diſſuaded them from imbruing their hands in his blood, and adviſed them to throw him alive into a pit, and let hunger and grief perform that cruel office. Whether the fear of the guilt of blood, or deſire to make him die a more lingering death, prevailed upon them to take the advice, they let him down into the pit, and, as if they had performed ſome noble exploit, they ſat down to eat and to drink. In the interim a troop of Iſhmaelites happening to paſs by, with ſpices and balm from Gilead, and bound for Egypt, Judah perſuaded his brethren to ſell him to them, ſince his death would do them no more ſervice, than his being carried down into Egypt †. His project was approved, and Joſeph was ſold to the merchants, and carried off unknown to Reuben, whoſe deſign was to have got him out of the pit, and to have ſent him back privately to his father. The ſurpriſe and concern he was in when he found him gone, forced ſuch complaints from him, that they ſoon underſtood what his deſign had been. They took therefore the more care that he ſhould not know what was become of him. Soon after this, having dipped his party-coloured coat, which they had ſtripped him of, in ſome kid's blood, they ſent it home to their father; who no ſooner ſaw it, than he ſuppoſed that his beloved child had been torn in pieces by ſome wild beaſt. He took his ſuppoſed loſs ſo to heart, that he did not ceaſe mourning for him, 'till he heard the ſurprizing news of his advancement in Egypt[r] (L), where

He is ſold, and carried down into Egypt.

† Vid. ſup. p. 114. [r] Gen. xxxvii.

(L) Juſtin in epitome of Trogus makes mention of Joſeph's being ſold into Egypt by his brethren, who envied the excellency of his wit;

where Joſeph happened to be ſold to an officer of the king's guard, named Potiphar (M). Here Joſeph ſhewed ſuch diligence and integrity, and proved ſo ſucceſsful in all he undertook, that his maſter ſoon took notice of him, and committed the care of all his affairs wholly into his hands. He had been about ten years in Potiphar's houſe, when his extraordinary beauty and comlineſs began to inflame his miſtreſs's heart, and ſhe, not being over-nice in ſuch matters, made no difficulty to diſcloſe the ſecret to him, in ſuch plain terms as would force a direct anſwer from him. But how great was her ſurprize, when, inſtead of the chearful compliance ſhe probably expected, ſhe found herſelf denied, and ſeverely reprimanded for her diſloyal paſſion! Howèver, being willing to hope, that another opportunity might prove more favourable, after ſeveral fruitleſs attempts, ſhe laid hold on one when all the family was abroad, and accoſted him in ſo paſſionate and violent a manner, as gave him to underſtand, that ſhe would not bear any further denial. Joſeph, thinking it ſafer to leave her than to ſtay and expoſtulate with her, was forced to leave his upper garment behind, which ſhe held ſo faſt that he could not get it out of her hands. This laſt affront ſo enraged her, that ſhe reſolved his immediate ruin. She began with ſetting up a moſt horrid out-cry, which ſoon brought in all the people that were within hearing of it, then ſhewing them Joſeph's cloak, ſhe told them, that he had made ſo furious an attempt to raviſh her, that nothing but her loud cries could have delivered her from him. By that Sold there to Potiphar.

Is ſolicited to an amour by his miſtreſs

His refuſal makes her accuſe him.

wit; and having got him privately into their hands, ſold him to ſome merchants, who carried him down into that country (199).

(M) It may not be improper to obſerve here, that tho' the text calls Potiphar an eunuch, yet he was not a real one, as the LXX render it, and the Jews fancy; ſome of whom think, that he was not ſo thoroughly caſtrated, but that ſome of the ſtrings being left might make him deſire a wife (200); for though the Hebrew word סָרִיס Saris doth properly ſignify an Eunuch, yet it is often uſed to ſignify an officer belonging to the court, and near to the king's perſon. He is alſo called שַׂר טַבָּחִים Sar Tabachim, which in its primitive meaning ſignifies the prince of the butchers, from Tabach, which ſignifies to kill, ſlaughter, or what is beſt expreſſed by the French word Egorger. For which reaſon ſome have rendered it the prince of the cooks (201). But, as the matter is of no great importance, we have followed the Engliſh verſion, which agrees in this with the generality of interpreters (202).

(199) Juſtin. l. 36. c. 2. (200) D. Kimki & al. (201) Vid. Mercer. Jun. & al. (202) Joſeph. Philo, Ambr. & al.

time

time her ſpouſe came home, ſhe had dreſt up her ſtory ſo well, and made ſuch uſe of the dumb witneſs ſhe had torn from him, that ſhe was eaſily believed. Had Potiphar loved him leſs than he did, it is probable, he would have ſacrificed him that minute to his reſentment; but he contented himſelf for the preſent with ſending him into the king's priſon[f], where we ſhall leave him for a while, to take a view of what paſſed in his father's family.

He is ſent to priſon.

Judah's marriage with a Canaanite.

Nor long after Joſeph had been ſold into Egypt, Judah happened to marry the daughter of a Canaanite, whoſe name was Shuah, by whom he had three ſons (N), Er, Onan, and Shelah. Er being cut off for his wickedneſs, before he had any children by his wife Tamar, Judah bid his ſecond ſon Onan to take her, according to the cuſtom of that country, and to raiſe a poſterity to his brother. Onan obeyed ſeemingly, but, not brooking the thoughts that his children ſhould be eſteemed his brother's, took ſuch a wicked and unnatural way to prevent Tamar's having any by him, that GOD was provoked Er's death.

Onan's ſin and death.

[f] Gen. xxxix.

(N) It is not eaſy to gueſs at what time Judah had theſe three ſons by this Canaaniteſs woman; and if we take the words in the original, at that time, in a ſtrict ſenſe, as if it happened about the time that Joſeph was ſold, he muſt have been too young; being but twenty two years of age; for Joſeph was ſeventeen years old, and he could not be above four or five years older, being the fourth ſon of Leah, and he and Joſeph both born within the compaſs of ſeven years. So that the moſt that can be thought is, that he had married either a little before Joſeph was ſold, or about that time, and that the latter part of the ſtory of his ſon's marriage and death, and the buſineſs of Tamar, happened during the twenty years that Joſeph continued in Egypt. And therefore, though Moſes relates all theſe events in the chapter preceding that, which gives an account of his diſgrace and impriſonment, it is moſt probable, that he has done it to prevent intermingling the ſtory of thoſe two brothers too much, and ſo has made an end of Judah's adventures before he went on with thoſe of Joſeph. Neither need we think ſtrange, that Judah and his ſons ſhould marry ſo young, ſince we have other inſtances in ſcripture of the like nature; ſuch as that of Ahaz, Hezekiah's father, who was but eleven years old when he was born; for Ahaz was but thirty ſix when he died, and his ſon was twenty five when he began to reign (203), though he was his immediate ſucceſſor. And if a prince in thoſe latter days could have a child at that age, much more might they that lived in Judah's time.

(203) 2 Kings xvi. 2. Ibid. xviii. 2.

to puniſh him with death alſo (O). Judah therefore bid her remain a widow in her father's houſe, until his third ſon was grown old enough to ſupply his brother's place; but when ſhe ſaw that time come, and that he neglected to ſend for her, as indeed he never deſigned it, leſt Shelah ſhould meet with the fate of his two brothers, ſhe reſolved to make herſelf amends by ſome other way, which ſhe effected by the following ſtratagem.

JUDAH had buried his wife about this time, and was ſtill young enough to feel the want of her. As ſoon therefore as the uſual days of mourning were over, it being then the ſeaſon of ſheep-ſheering, he reſolved to try whether that diverſion might allay his grief. He took an intimate friend with him, and went up to Timnath, the place where the ſheerers were at work. In the mean while Tamar hearing of it, reſolved to make uſe of that opportunity to ſet on work her deſign. She put off her widow's garments, and dreſſing herſelf like a curtezan, and throwing a vail over her face (P), ſet herſelf between the two ways that lead to Timnath, through one of which ſhe knew her father-in-law muſt needs paſs.

(O) Though Onan's ſin was in it ſelf great enough, yet it is very probable that it was aggravated with a worſe circumſtance; viz. his having an eye to the ſuppreſſing of the MESSIAH'S coming, ſince he ſhould not have the honour to be numbered among his anceſtors (204), which might provoke GOD to cut him off. As for the ſin of his elder brother, it is thought to have been the ſame with Onan's but committed with a different view; that Tamar might not ſpoil her beauty and ſhape by bearing of children; but this is only a rabinic conjecture.

(P) The text ſays, that Judah thought her to be a harlot, becauſe ſhe had covered her face. From whence ſome have fancied that ſhe covered it with paint; but theſe are ſufficiently reproved and confuted by Abenezra (205). Others think that the vail over the face was the ſign of a harlot(206); but whether they were ſo ſhame-faced in thoſe days or not, it ſeems rather, that ſhe had vailed herſelf that Judah might not know her. What therefore made him think her to be a curtezan, was her ſitting alone in ſuch a conſpicuous place; for ſo the original may be rendered. If it be aſked, how ſhe could prevent her voice from betraying her, all that can be ſaid is, either that ſhe had an art of altering it ſo as not to be known, as ſome people have, or, which is more probable, that Judah was ſo hot in purſuit of his pleaſure, that it did not permit him to make any reflection about it. Vid. our next note.

(204) Vide Alix. in Pentat. (205) Abenezra in loc. (206) Jun Calv. & al. in loc.

Judah and Tamar. JUDAH no sooner spied her, but, thinking her to be what she appered, began to make his addresses to her, and she insisting only upon a reward for her compliance, he promised her to send her a kid, and at her desire left her his seal, his bracelet, and staff, as a pledge for it. The intrigue being over, Judah sent his friend Adullam, for that was his name, with the kid, to redeem the pledges, but in vain, for she was gone home; neither did the men of the place, of whom he enquired, know any thing of such a woman plying there. He went to Judah and told him his ill success, who, fearing to be exposed for his amour, answered his friend, let her keep the pledges, as long as I have performed my promise to her, as you yourself will bear me witness. (Q)

Tamar with child. BUT the matter was not so indifferent as he thought. Some months after word was brought to him, that his daughter-in-law had proved disloyal, and was certainly with child. Judah, though glad at the news, because her death would free him from his promise of giving his son Shelah to her, pretended to be highly provoked at her incontinency, and, ordering her to be brought forth, condemned her to be burnt, according to the laws of the country. Tamar, instead of being surprized at the dreadful sentence which he had pronounced against her (R), produced the pledges he had left with her, and

Condemned to be burnt,

(Q) It seems by this action of Tamar, that she had observed something of this propensity to women in him, whilst she lived with his two sons, else it is not probable, that such a project should come into her head, neither would she have appeared so sure of the success, as she seems to have been by the sequel. However, it is plain, that it was neither the virtue, nor sanctity of the twelve patriarchs, that recommended them to the favour of GOD, but his covenant with Abraham, and the glorious designs of his providence on their posterity. And this is what Moses told the Israelites in the wilderness in more places than one (207).

(R Some think, that Judah, as head of his own family, had power of life and death over all that belonged to it; but it is hardly probable, that the Canaanites, in whose country they dwelt, would give a stranger such a power. 'Tis more likely therefore, that he meant only, that she should be brought before a court of Judicature, and sentenced according to the laws of the country. However, whether judge or prosecutor, 'tis certain he acted like an unrighteous one: for Tamar could not be justly accused of adultery, which alone condemned her to be burnt, unless it were because he had betrothed her to his son Shelah, by the promise he made her to marry her to him (otherwise it was lawful for widows to seek their and told him, that ſhe was got with child by the owner of them. Whereupon Judah, in a confuſion and ſurprize, owned, that ſhe was the more innocent of the two, and that he had wronged her in with-holding Shelah from her. He afterwards conducted her home, but never touched her from that time. When her full time was come ſhe brought forth twins; but the manner of their being born was ſomething ſurprizing; for one of them put forth his hand, about which the midwife tied a ſcarlet thread, expecting him to come out the firſt: but when he withdrew his hand, and his brother ſhewed him the way into the world, his mother called him Phares, or breach, by reaſon of the breach he had made between his brother and him; and the other was called Zarah [t]. but abſolved. A ſtrange birth.

(207) Deut. pass.

JOSEPH in the mean while, was got into ſuch favour with the keeper of the priſon, that he entruſted him with the care of all the priſoners. Two of them, men of ſome diſtinction, viz. Pharaoh's chief butler and baker, being very ſad and thoughtful one morning about a dream which each of them had, Joſeph, being informed of the cauſe and the dream, gave each of them its particular interpretation, telling them alſo the preciſe time when they ſhould ſee them fulfilled. Accordingly, three days after the butler was reſtored to his place, and the baker hanged (S). Joſeph took this opportunity Joſeph. Dreams of two priſoners explained.

[t] Gen. xxxviii.

their fortune elſewhere, as appears by what Naomi ſaid to her two daughters-in-law) becauſe he never deſigned to fulfil his promiſe (208). It was moreover an inhuman thing to put a woman to death before ſhe was delivered; and the Romans, bad as they were with reſpect to children, whom they uſed to expoſe when they thought fit, had yet a law to prevent a pregnant woman being put to death before her delivery (209). But it is probable, that his eagerneſs to be rid of her, made him ſpeak more unadviſedly than he would have done, had ſhe been a more indifferent perſon. However, it is plain, that Joſephus looked upon all the tranſactions mentioned in this chapter to be ſo little for the credit of Judah and his ſons, that he has ſuppreſſed them all. This is one, though far from the only one, of the inſtances we told the reader of in a former note, of his ſuppreſſing any thing that caſt a reflexion on his nation †: the reſt will come in courſe.

(S) Our tranſlation has rendered the expreſſion, which Joſeph uſes to the butler and the baker, ſhall lift up thy head, too literally, ſince they imply that they would both have the ſame fate; whereas it is plain they proved vaſtly different. The words in the original mean, that in three days Pharaoh would have them brought forth nity of addreſſing himſelf to the former, and to beg his aſſiſtance and intereſt to get him out of priſon, telling him at the ſame time, how he had been ſold out of his country, and falſly accuſed by his miſtreſs, and what elſe he thought proper to move him to comply with his requeſt.

(208) Ruth i. 9. (209) Ælian. l. 5. † Vid. ſup. p. 401, (B)

But the butler, being got at liberty and reſtored to his place, never remembered his fellow priſoner for two whole years, till a remarkable accident forced him, as it were, to call him to mind. The king his maſter had had two very frightful and portentous dreams in one night, the meaning of which he had in vain enquired of all his Egyptian wiſemen, none of whom could give him the leaſt light into them. The uneaſineſs which appeared in Pharaoh's countenance, and the ſearch he ordered to be made for ſome more learned interpreters, did ſoon make our courtier recollect what Joſeph had foretold him in the priſon. He went therefore inſtantly to the king, and, after an humble apology for his ingratitude and forgetfulneſs, acquainted him, that two years before there was an Hebrew youth in priſon with him, who had interpreted his and the baker's dream with a more than ordinary exactneſs, and ſeemed to have a much greater talent that way, than all the wiſemen that had been hitherto conſulted. Pharaoh was too eager to be ſatisfied about his own, not to ſend immediately for Joſeph, who, having waſhed and ſhaved himſelf, and changed his cloaths, was forthwith introduced to his majeſty. He no ſooner appeared than the king told him his dreams, and promiſed him a conſiderable reward if he could give him an interpretation of them. Pharaoh had dreamed, that he had ſeen ſeven luſty fat cows feeding on the banks of the Nile; ſoon after which ſeven others lean and ill-favoured ones came and devoured them; and yet did neither look the fatter or bigger for it. His ſecond dream was much of the ſame kind, viz. ſeven full ears of corn devoured by ſeven blaſted ones. Joſeph anſwered the king with his uſual modeſty, that the ſeven cows and ſeven ears ſignified the ſame thing; that the dream being repeated was only a ſign, that the thing was to happen immediately after. That the ſeven and examined; for the word here rendered lift up the head, ſignifies to muſter, to call to an account, and to take the ſum of any thing; and the ſequel ſhews this to have been the true meaning, ſince, after ſuch examination, the one was hanged, and the other reſtated. It ſeems therefore probable, by the expreſſion here uſed, that they had been ſuſpected, or accuſed, of cheating the king, and that when their accounts had been examined and caſt up, the one was found guilty, and the other cleared.

Pharaoh's two dreams interpreted by Joſeph. Year of the Flood, 1284. Year before Chriſt, 1715.

fat

fat cows and full ears ſignified ſeven years of exceſſive plenty, which would nevertheleſs be quite forgotten in the ſeven ſucceeding years of famine, ſignified by the ſeven lean cows and blaſted ears. He thereupon adviſed the king to appoint a wiſe and expert man over his whole kingdom, who ſhould take care to build granaries, and ſet officers in every province, to lay up a fifth part of all the corn of the ſeven plentiful years, againſt the ſucceeding years of famine.

THE king and all that heard him, were ſurprized at the wiſdom of this young ſtranger, who was then but thirty years old, and concluded, that he was the fitteſt perſon to be ſet over the kingdom, and to put his propoſal in execution. He was thereupon made maſter and overſeer of Pharaoh's houſe; and orders were given, that he ſhould be obeyed in all things, as if he had been Pharaoh himſelf. The king ſtopped not here, but took his ſignet off his finger and gave it to him, cauſed him to be cloathed in fine linen, and put a golden chain about his neck, telling him, that he appointed him ſuperintendant over the whole kingdom, and the next unto himſelf in authority: he gave him moreover the name of Zaphnath-paaneah, which ſignifies a revealer of ſecrets (T). And to compleat his happineſs, he gave him the daughter of Potipherah, prieſt, or prince of On, to wife (U); and made him ride

Joſeph's advancement and glory.

His marriage.

(T) Theſe are not Hebrew words, as ſome rabbies dream (210), who render it by הצפונות מגלה, for though the firſt word may be derived from צפן Zaphan, to hide; yet the original of Paaneah is not to be found in the Hebrew. St. Jerom and others think, it ſignifies the SAVIOUR of the world in the Egyptian tongue (211); but it is moſt probable, that it ſignifies the revealer of ſecrets, and is accordingly ſo rendered by moſt Jewiſh and Chriſtian expoſitors (212).

(U) As it is not likely, that Joſeph ſhould be grown ſo great a courtier in ſo ſhort a time, as to have forgot his religion, eſpecially ſince we find him making ſo ample a profeſſion of it to his brothers ſeven years after (213); ſo neither is it probable, that he would have married the daughter of an uncircumciſed, whether prince or prieſt. But it was not ſo with Potipherah, who could not but be deſirous to purchaſe ſo advantageous an alliance at any rate, and therefore might eaſily be induced by Joſeph to remove that only obſtacle, by becoming circumciſed. This was therefore a fair opportunity for him to introduce that ceremony among the Egyptian

(210) Rambam. (211) Hieron. in loc. Eguhin. &c. (212) Targ. Onkel. in loc. Joſ. Ant. l. 2. c. 6. LXX. Girot. Jun. in loc. & al. (213) Gen xlii. 18.

prieſts,

ride in his second chariot, while some men that ran before it cried, bow the knee (W). Joseph, being raised to this height of power, took a progress through the whole kingdom, built his granaries, appointed proper officers in every place, and in a word, ordered all things with such prudence and application, that before the seven years of plenty were over, he found his stores filled above numbering. During this time he had two sons born of his wife Asenath. The first of whom he called Manasseh, intimating, that GOD had made him forget all his toils; and the next he called Ephraim, because GOD had made him fruitful in the land of his affliction.

Manasseh and Ephraim born.

THESE seven plentiful years were succeeded immediately by the seven years of famine; neither was the scarcity con-

The years of famine.

priests, which might afterwards be received also by the laity. However that be, we must not mistake the city of On for that of No, threatened with destruction by Ezekiel (214), which was Alexandria. On therefore was Heliopolis, the chief city of the canton of that name, called by Ptolemy Onium (215), distant about twenty miles from Memphis, the metropolis of the kingdom †. Neither must we confound this Potipherah with that to whom Joseph has been sold, as St. Jerom has done. 'Tis much more probable, that they were two distinct persons. 1. Because the names are differently written; the first Potiphar, and the other Potipherah, or rather Potipherangh, ending with the letter ע (Ain). 2. The one is called captain of the guards, the other priest, or prince, of On.

3. The former therefore must have his residence in the capital, to be always about the king; the other lived at On, or Heliopolis; and lastly, it is not likely, that Joseph would have married his master's daughter, lest she should have proved like her mother, whose incontinency he had so severely smarted for (216).

(W) The Jews, Kimki excepted, unwilling to suppose, that so religious a man as Joseph would suffer the ceremony of bowing the knee to be performed to him, have divided the word אברך Abrek, and read it אב רך Ab rak, which in Hebrew signifies tender father; by which they understand, that he was a father with respect of his consummate wisdom, and tender with respect of his years (217). And it is certain, that if the word be Hebrew it signifies both bow the knee, and tender father; but if it be Egyptian, we are to seek for the meaning of it. Josephus says nothing of this circumstance, probably, because for want of understanding the Hebrew, he was forced to follow the Septuagint, which renders it, bow the knee.

(214) Ezek. xxx. 16. (215) Vid. Hieron. loc. Hebr. † Vid. Vol. I. p. 387. (216) August. quæst. in Gen. i. 36. Chrysost. Homil. 63. in Gen. Mercer. Jun. Mulcul. & al. (217) Targ. Onkel. R. Jehud. & al.

fined

fined to the land of Egypt, but was felt all over the land of Canaan, and all the nations round about it. As ſoon therefore as the Egyptians came to be pinched for want of bread, they applied themſelves to Pharaoh, who commanded them to apply to Joſeph; upon which he immediately ordered his ſtores to be opened, and corn to be ſold to the people who flocked to him, not only from all parts of Egypt, but from all the neighbouring countries [u].

By this time Jacob, who was not exempt from the common calamity, hearing that there was corn to be bought in Egypt, ſent ten of his ſons thither to buy ſome, and kept only Benjamin with him. Theſe, upon their arrival into Egypt, were directed to Joſeph, whom they muſt apply to for an order; and as ſoon as they ſaw him they proſtrated themſelves before him, and begged they might be ſupplied with ſome corn. Joſeph knew them immediately, though he was ſo altered that they could not call him to mind: he put on a ſevere look, and in an angry tone aſked them, whence they came? and upon their anſwering, from the land of Canaan, he charged them with being ſpies, who were come to diſcover the weakneſs of the land. Such an unexpected accuſation forced them to juſtify themſelves; they told him in the moſt ſubmiſſive terms, that they were come with no other deſign than to buy corn for their family, which was very numerous, they being all one man's ſons; that they had left another, a younger brother, with their father, beſides another who was now dead. This was what Joſeph wanted, who in a ſurly commanding tone told them, that unleſs one of them fetched this youngeſt ſon, whilſt the reſt were kept in ſafe cuſtody, he would not be perſuaded but that they were ſpies, and would puniſh them as ſuch. To ſhew that he was in earneſt, he ſent them all to priſon, and kept them there three days; at the end of which he ſent for them, and putting on a milder face ſaid to them, this do and live, for I fear GOD. Let one of you remain a priſoner with me, whilſt the reſt go home with proviſion for your family; and when you bring your youngeſt brother hither, he ſhall be delivered up ſafe, and you juſtified. He then commanded Simeon, who had been perhaps one of his moſt zealous enemies, to be bound before their eyes, and ſent to priſon, whilſt he had the pleaſure to hear them confeſs their inhumanity towards their brother, whoſe bitter cries had not been able to ſoften them to pity; acknowledging, that this misfortune had befallen them as a juſt puniſhment for it. Here Reuben had an opportunity of juſtifying himſelf, by re-

Joſeph's brethren come to him for corn.

Joſeph's rough behaviour to them.

Simeon kept bound.

[u] Gen. xli.

minding

minding them of the pains he took to diſſuade them from the horrid fact, little thinking who heard him, any more than his brethren; for Joſeph ſpoke by an interpreter to them. At length, having learned all that he wanted to know, he diſmiſſed them, not without contriving a freſh occaſion of ſurprize to them after they were gone, having bid the officer, who was to fill their ſacks with corn, to return their money in the mouth of the ſacks. Accordingly, when they came to bait, and to give ſome provender to their beaſts, they were not a little frighted to find all their money in their ſacks, and failed not to make all the diſmal reflections upon it, that their fear could ſuggeſt to them; concluding, that the haughty Egyptian lord had done it, that he might have a pretence to enſlave them at their next coming. As ſoon as they were got home they acquainted their father with all theſe adventures, who, though he was grieved at the detention of his ſon Simeon, was much more ſo, when he found, that Benjamin muſt go down to redeem him. He withſtood all their perſuaſions as long as he could [w], till, at length the famine increaſing, and the proviſion being almoſt ſpent, Judah prevailed with him to part with his favourite ſon for a time, promiſing to bring him ſafe back, or elſe to be anſwerable for him at the hazard of his life (X). As it was not without the utmoſt reluctancy

Their money returned.

[w] Gen xlii.

(X) The whole conduct of Joſeph, from his being firſt brought into Egypt to his diſcovering himſelf to his brethren, having been very much canvaſſed and diſapproved, it will not be amiſs to enquire how far it deſerves it, and how far it may be juſtified, even abſtracting from the hand of providence being concerned in it. Firſt then, he is blamed for not having ſent word to his father of his condition, who would have redeemed him at any rate, the city of Memphis, where he was ſold, not being above eighty miles at moſt from Hebron, where Jacob dwelt. To this it may be anſwered, 1. That if he had returned home, his brethren would, in all likelihood have taken a more effectual way to be rid of him, and, upon the firſt opportunity, have put their former bloody project in execution. And ſecondly, that Egypt being the place where he expected the preferment which his dreams had fore-ſignified to him, it was by no means adviſeable for him to leave it, but to wait patiently there for the event. Again, he is blamed for his rough and unjuſt uſage towards his brethren, which, it is pretended, favours of the rankeſt revenge: but it is plain, that if revenge had been the chief motive of his behaviour, he could have indulged it, in a more effectual way, without any danger of being called to an account for it:

tancy that Jacob conſented to this ſeparation, ſo he failed not to give his ſons the ſtricteſt charge about him, and to take all the proper meaſures for their ſafe return, and to gain the favour of the proud Egyptian lord. He bid them carry double their money, and make ready ſuch preſents as they thought would be acceptable to him (Y); and having entreated hea- Jacob's preſents to Joſeph.

ven,

it: whereas it is plain he had a much better deſign in it, namely, either to bring their heinous cruelty towards him into their remembrance, as it actually did †; or, 2. in order to inform himſelf of the ſtate of his family, eſpecially of his father and of his brother Benjamin; or laſtly, to make them reliſh his future kindneſs the better, by the rough uſage they had met with before. The laſt, and indeed the moſt conſiderable thing he is blamed for, is his ſending for his brother Benjamin, which he knew, his former behaviour conſidered, would cauſe an infinite deal of grief to his aged father, if not break his heart; and if he refuſed to ſend him the whole family muſt ſtarve at home, and Simeon remain in bonds. As for the latter part of the charge, Joſeph had it ſtill in his power to have remedied it, ſince, if he had found that his other brethren ſtayed longer than ordinary, he could but have ſent Simeon home with what meſſage and ſupply he pleaſed. But as for the other part of his behaviour, his cauſing Jacob to paſs ſo many days, if not weeks, in all the fear and anxiety that ſo dear a ſon's abſence and danger could cauſe, it cannot eaſily be juſtified any other way than by ſuppoſing, that Joſeph did certainly foreſee what would happen, and that his father's grieving ſometime for Benjamin would be ſo far from endangering his health, that it would only encreaſe his joy when he ſaw him again, and give a greater reliſh to the news of his own advancement and ſucceſs in Egypt. Without this ſuppoſition, 'tis plain, ſuch a ſudden tranſition from an exceſs of ſorrow to one of joy, was of itſelf ſufficient to have deprived him of his life, or of his ſenſes.

(Y) It is to be feared the generality of our expoſitors have not been very happy in their tranſlation of ſome of the preſents which Jacob ſent into Egypt, which has induced ſome learned critics of a later date (218) to endeavour to give us a more rational account of them, ſuch as the honey, nuts, and almonds, which could be no great rarities in Egypt, nor indeed any of the others, except the balm, which was that of Gilead, and of great price all the world over. A ſmall quantity therefore of it was a preſent worth accepting; but as for roſin, or wax, as many of our interpreters have rendered it, it could not be worth ſending.

Bochart, indeed, in the place above quoted, thinks, that it was either roſin, or turpentine, rather than balm of Gilead; becauſe ven, not without abundance of tears, for their good ſucceſs, diſmiſſed them; little dreaming, what glorious news he ſhould hear at their return, to make him amends for his ſon's abſence. They no ſooner appeared before Joſeph with their brother Benjamin, but he commanded his ſteward to conduct them to his houſe, where he deſigned they ſhould dine with him. But they, who had abandoned themſelves to fear, began to ſuſpect, that ſome ill deſign was hatching to enſlave them, upon the account of the money which they had found in their ſacks. To prevent therefore, as much as they could, any quarrel ariſing upon that ſcore, they acquainted the ſteward with the whole affair before they entered the houſe; ad-

† Gen. xlii 21 & ſeq. (218) Bochart paſſim. Le Scene's Eſſay. Eſſay towards a new tranſlation of the Bible, and others.

Gilead was on one ſide Jordan, and Jacob was then at ſome ſmall diſtance from it on the other: but that doth not prove, that there was none to be bought there, or to be ſent for upon ſuch an occaſion. He adds, indeed, that Joſephus affirms balm to have been unknown in Judæa, till the queen of Sheba brought ſome of it to Solomon from Arabia Felix: but Joſephus may be miſtaken. Beſides, how came Gilead to be ſo famous for it afterwards? The Queen hardly brought the trees there, and if Solomon had ſent for them afterwards, he would have planted them in all likelihood nearer to him: but whatever it was, 'tis plain, that roſin and turpentine could not be a preſent worth Joſeph's acceptance. The next is honey, which was indeed very much admired by the antients, as well Jews as Gentiles, for a delicious food (219); but, unleſs that of Canaan was better than ordinary, it was hardly a preſent worth ſending to an Egyptian prime miniſter, ſince 'tis morally impoſſible, that country ſhould be without it. It is more likely, therefore, that they were dates, which are called by the ſame name (דבש Debeſh as the Jewiſh doctors obſerve, and which, when full ripe, yield a ſort of honey not much inferior to the other, The Arabic calls dates Daboos, and the honey of them Dibo, or Dibis, to this day; and it is plain, that Judæa abounded in palm-trees of all ſorts, more eſpecially about Jericho, if we may believe Joſephus and Pliny. The next is what we tranſlate ſpices; but the Hebrew word נכאת Nekoth doth rather ſignify ſtorax than ſpices, being a precious aromatic gum, that was put into all precious ſpicy ointments (220). Myr, or as it is in the original לוט Lot, is rather the ſtacte or ladanum, of the Chaldee and Septuagint, the laſt name coming nearer the Hebrew word. It is thought to be the gum of the cypreſs-tree, and was one of the aromatics in the perfume preſcribed by GOD to Moſes (221).

(219) 1 Sam. xiv. 27. 2 Sam. xvii. 29. Cant. iv. 11. Homer. Iliad λ. v. 630. Odyſſ. η. v. 69. Sueton. de Neron. c. 27. & al. (220) Vid. Bochart Hieroz. lib. 4. col. 531, 532. (221) Exod. xxx. 34.

ding,

ding, that they had brought it back with them, with a new ſupply to buy ſome freſh proviſions. The ſteward, ſeeing their concern, bid them not be under any apprehenſions about it, for they ſhould never be aſked for it again. He then brought them into the houſe, ordered them water to waſh their feet, and provender for their beaſts, and in the mean time he brought Simeon unbound to them. He afterwards acquainted them, that they were to dine with his lord, who would be back by noon; upon which they ſet themſelves about making ready their preſents, which they accordingly laid before him with the utmoſt reverence, as ſoon as he came home. Joſeph, having ſaluted them round, began to enquire after their father's health, and whether that was their youngeſt brother that ſtood before him. Benjamin bowed his head to the ground, and Joſeph having bleſt him, ordered the victuals to be brought in, and made them ſit down by themſelves, and to be ſerved according to their rank and ſeniority, whilſt he ſat at a table by himſelf, and his Egyptian gueſts at another by themſelves; it being an abomination to the Egyptians to eat with the Hebrews (Z). Joſeph, according to the cuſtom of the country, and of thoſe times [x], ſent diſhes from his own table to all his brethren, and they were not a little ſurprized to ſee how exactly he ſerved them according to their ſeniority;

Benjamin and his brethren dine with Joſeph.

[x] Vid. XENOPH. in vit. CYR. lib. 8.

(Z) This extreme averſion of the Egyptians to eat with the Hebrews has been variouſly accounted for. Some attribute it to the exceſſive pride of that nation, which deſpiſed all but themſelves; others to the Hebrews being ſhepherds, and ſo eating of the ſheep and other cattle which the Egyptians worſhipped (222). Accordingly we read in another chapter (223), that ſhepherds were alſo an abomination to the Egyptians, whether Hebrews or otherwiſe; and Moſes tells Pharaoh, that they could not ſacrifice in Egypt what was an abomination to them (224); that is, to kill and eat part of thoſe beaſts which they worſhipped (225): but the moſt probable reaſon of this averſion to ſhepherds, and to the Hebrews, as ſuch was the great oppreſſion and tyranny under which they had groaned, when the Hykſos or king-ſhepherds, as the word ſignifies, poured in upon them, enſlaved, and held them in ſubjection above five hundred years; and of which an account has been given in a former chapter (226).

(222) Muſcul. Munſt. Tremel & al. in loc. (223) Gen. xlvi. 34. (224) Exod. viii. 26. (225) Chald Paraph. (226) Vid. ſup. p. 4 vid. Manetho apud Joſeph. cont. Apion.

but much more so, when they saw Benjamin's portion five times larger than any of the rest, which was an usual mark of honour to the person to whom it was sent. After they had eat and drank plentifully, they began to think of taking their leave, and of going about their other affairs [y]; but Joseph had yet one fright more in reserve for them before he discovered himself. He bid his steward to put his drinking-cup into Benjamin's sack, and to overtake them at some distance off the city, and, after a thorough search, to bring the pretended thief back to him. The thing was punctually executed, and we may easily imagine their surprize and concern, when the silver cup was produced out of the sack of their younger brother. They made all possible haste to load their asses again, and returned to Joseph, who received them with a warm reprimand for thus requiting his kindness and civility to them; which he concluded however with assuring them that though he might justly punish them all, yet the person only upon whom the cup was found should remain a slave, whilst the rest might go home in peace. After they had expressed their grief and shame in the humblest manner they were able, Judah, who had taken Benjamin under his care, having recovered himself from his surprize, addressed himself to Joseph in the most submissive and pathetic terms. He acquainted him with his father's extreme fondness for the lad, the great difficulty they had to persuade the good old gentleman to part with him, and the danger of his grieving to death for the loss of him. He likewise offered himself at the same time as an equivalent for his brother, with such zeal and concern, that Joseph was no longer able to contain himself. His [z] bowels began to yearn, and his tears to flow so fast, that he was forced to send all the by-standers away, whilst he made himself known to his brothers. He no sooner had told them, that he was Joseph their brother, which was all that his full heart would let him utter, but they were all struck with such mixture of joy and surprize for a considerable time, that they could make him no answer; neither did they dare even to look towards him, to convince themselves whether it was really he or an allusion. By this time Joseph having recovered himself, desired them to draw nearer unto him; he embraced them all round with a surprizing tenderness, and to dispel all their further apprehensions, he told them, that their selling him into Egypt having been directed by an unseen providence, and proved the means of so much good, both to himself, to them, and to all Egypt, he would be so far from re-

Joseph's cup found in Benjamin's sack.

Judah's speech to Joseph.

Joseph discovers himself.

[y] Gen. xliii. [z] Gen. xliv.

senting

ſenting it, that they ſhould never hear it ſo much as mentioned by him from that day. Whilſt this was doing, ſome of the Egyptians, one of whom might be the interpreter, went and acquainted the king and the whole court, that Joſeph's brethren were come to buy corn. Joſeph had no deſign to make a ſecret of it, when he ſent the Egyptians out of the room; he only wanted to be without witneſſes whilſt he diſcovered himſelf to them, diſſipated their fears, acquainted them with his good fortune, and tried to perſuade them to bring his father down with all their families and cattle; ſeeing there were yet five years of famine to come, during which the earth would hardly return the ſeed it had received. However the news had pleaſed Pharaoh ſo well, that he ſent for him, and told him, that ſince his father had ſuch a numerous family, and the ſcarcity not half over, he might ſend for them, and place them in what part of the country he thought fit; promiſing him, that they ſhould never want proviſions, nor any other favour he could ſhew them. He likewiſe bid him to ſend them a freſh ſupply of grain, and ſuch other things as he thought they might want for their journey, and chariots to bring their wives, children, and beſt moveables; telling them, that they needed not regard the ordinary ſtuff, ſince the good of the land was before them. Joſeph gladly obeyed the king's orders, and, beſides the chariots and proviſions, ſent to his father ten aſſes laden with the choiceſt commodities of Egypt; he likewiſe preſented his brethren with changes of garments, and diſtinguiſhed Benjamin by the addition of a large ſum of money; after which he diſmiſſed them with a ſtrict charge that they ſhould not fall out by the way. It is not to be doubted but their journey was performed more briſkly this time than the laſt. They found their father alive and well, whoſe firſt care was to look out for his favourite ſon, whom having joyfully received he thought himſelf at the height of his happineſs. But when they acquainted him with Joſeph's grandeur, and told him, that he was the very man who had cauſed them ſuch mortal frights, the good old man, not being able to bear ſo much good news at once, fainted away in their arms; and being come to himſelf, doubted whether it was not a dream. At length, when they ſhewed him Joſeph's preſents, and the Egyptian chariots, his doubts and fears vaniſhed, and he cried out in an exceſs of joy, It is enough for me that my ſon Joſeph lives, I have now nothing more to wiſh, but to go down and ſee him once more before I die [a].

Pharaoh's orders to Joſeph.

Joſeph ſends for his father, &c.

[a] Gen. xlv.

Thus

THIS great deſire of ſeeing ſo dear a ſon, whom he had ſo long mourned for, in all his Egyptian glory, ſpurred him up to haſten his departure, and to overcome all the difficulties which the number of his children, cattle, and all the other lumber of houſhold-ſtuff laid in his way. However, as his gratitude to GOD for all the mercies he ſaw himſelf bleſſed with, and his further want of the divine protection to accompany him ſafe into Egypt, demanded ſome freſh act of religion from him, he choſe to go to Beerſheba to offer ſome ſacrifices there; both becauſe it was the place where Abraham and Iſaac had lived ſo long and ſo happily, and becauſe it was in his way to Egypt, being the utmoſt boundary of Canaan towards the ſouth. Here God appeared again unto him, and bid him not fear to go down, ſince he would be with him and protect him, and in due time bring his poſterity out of it, to enter into the poſſeſſion of the promiſed land; adding moreover, that as for him, he ſhould have the comfort to live near his ſon Joſeph, to die in his arms, and to have his eyes cloſed by him. Jacob, thus comforted and encouraged, haſted his way to the metropolis of Egypt, and when he came within ſome ſmall diſtance from it, he ſent Judah before to acquaint Joſeph with his arrival, and to deſire him to come to him in the land of Goſhen, where he had promiſed to ſettle them (A). Joſeph was no ſooner informed of it, than he got up into his chariot, and went to meet his father, and their mutual joy upon this occaſion was ſuch, as is better imagined than expreſſed. As ſoon as this tender greeting was over, Joſeph told them, that he would go out of Jacob goes down into Egypt.

Joſeph acquaints Pharaoh with it.

(A) It is a wonder how the Septuagint came to place the land of Goſhen in Arabia, at leaſt ſome copies have it Goſhen in Arabia, ſince that was farther off from Egypt than the land of Canaan. St. Jerom thinks, that it was the ſame as Thebais in Æthiopia, or bordering to it (227): but that was too long a journey for Jacob, neither would Joſeph have been near enough to have ſeen and ſupplied his wants: whereas he gives it as a reaſon to his brethren in the former chapter for his chooſing this land, that they might be near him: but this Goſhen was ſituate between the Red-ſea and the Nile, upon the borders of Canaan, not far from On, or Hierapolis (228), where his chief habitation was. It was a fruitful ſpot of ground and fit for cattle, and therefore Joſephus tells us, that Pharaoh kept his own there (229): it was ſeparate from Egypt, and therefore fitteſt for Jacob and his family, which would be out of all danger of interfering with the Egyptians (230).

(227) Hieron. loc Hebr. (228) Joſeph. Ant. l. 2. c. 7. (229) Id. ibid. (230) Vid. Jun. Merc. & al.

hand

hand to give Pharaoh notice of their arrival, who would no doubt have the curioſity to ſend for them, and to enquire after their occupation; in which caſe he charged them to tell him, that they, as well as their fore-fathers, were ſhepherds from their youth. This was indeed an occupation which the Egyptians abominated, as we have ſeen before †; but Joſeph had his ends in it, being afraid, leſt Pharaoh ſhould detain them in his ſervice, inſtead of ſending them into the land of Goſhen where he was deſirous to place them. Accordingly, when five of his brethren were brought before the king, and were asked what their profeſſion was; they anſwered him as Joſeph had bid them, adding, that the famine, which raged in Canaan, had forced them to come with all their cattle into Egypt, and begging, that he would be pleaſed to appoint them the land of Goſhen to dwell in; which Pharaoh readily granted. Joſeph likewiſe preſented his father to him, who wiſhed the king abundance of happineſs; and being aſked how old he was, anſwered an hundred and thirty. Here the king expreſſing, perhaps, ſome wonder, to ſee a man ſo old, and in ſo good a caſe, Jacob added, that his life had been ſo full of trouble, that he came vaſtly ſhort of the years of his anceſtors. After this Joſeph conducted him and the whole family to the land of Goſhen; where he took care to ſupply them with all the neceſſaries of life, during the whole time of the famine. Pharaoh likewiſe ordered Joſeph to chooſe ſome of the ableſt of them, and to commit the care of his cattle to them, which he accordingly did [b]. It will not be amiſs to give here the names of Jacob's children and grand-children, which came down with him into Egypt. As to the difficulties in adjuſting the account of them, and reconciling it with ſome other places of ſcripture, we chooſe to give them to our readers in a note, rather than interrupt the thread of the hiſtory (B).

Jacob ſtands before Pharaoh.

Year of the Flood, 1293. Year before Chriſt 1706.

A Liſt

† Vid. ſup. p. 427, ſub. nota (Z). [b] Gen. xlvi.

(B) Moſes makes mention of two numbers of ſouls in Jacob's family, excluſive of his daughters-in-law, viz. ſixty ſix (231) and ſeventy (232); he doth likewiſe reckon thirty three ſouls to Leah, including Dinah (233); and to Zilpbah her handmaid ſixteen ſouls, including Serah, Aſher's daughter, and Beriah's two ſons (234). To make which reckonings agree with the fourteen of Rachel (235) and the two firſt ſums of ſixty ſix and ſeventy. It is to be obſerved.

(231) Gex. xlvi. v. 26. (232) v. 27. (233) v. 15. (234) v. 18. (235) v. 22.

firſt,

A liſt of Jacob's family.

A Liſt of Jacob's ſons and grandſons.

The ſons of Jacob, and their ſons.

- By Leah
  - Reuben; Hanoch, Phallu, Hezron, Carmi.
  - Simeon; Jemuel, Jamin, Ohad, Jachin, Zohar, Shaul.
  - Levi; Gerſhon, Kohath, Merari.
  - Judah; Er, Onan, Shelah, Pharez, Zerah. (Er and Onan died in Canaan.)
  - Iſſachar; Tola, Phuvah, Job, Shimron.
  - Zebulun; Sered, Elon, Jahleel.
- By Zilpah
  - Gad; Ziphion, Haggai, Shuni, Ezbon, Eri, Arodi, Areli.
  - Aſher; Jimnah, Iſhuah, Iſui, Beriah, Serah, a daughter.
- By Bilhah
  - Dan; Huſhim.
  - Naphtali; Jahzeel, Guni, Jezer, Shillem.
- By Rachel
  - Benjamin; Belah, Becher, Aſhbel, Gera, Naaman, Ahi, Roſh, Muppim, Huppim, Ard.

The ſons of Pharez, Judah's ſon; Hezron, Hamul. of Beriah; Heber, Malchiel.

IN

firſt, that in the number ſixty ſix Jacob is not reckoned, but only the ſouls that came out of his loins; but in the number of thirty three he ſeems included, elſe we ſhall find but thirty two, viz. Leah's twenty nine ſons, two grandſons by Pharez, and Dinah, in all thirty two; but that Jacob is reckoned in this number ſeems intimated by the eighth verſe of the chapter, in the words Jacob and his ſons, viz. by Leah. Accordingly Joſephus gives us a liſt of them to the number of thirty two, including Dinah; yet ſums them up thirty three, without acquainting us that he includes Jacob; though it is plain by the amount that he doth. This being premiſed, the whole account will ſtand thus:

Leah	33	including Jacob.
Zilpah	16
Rachel	11	excluſive of Joſeph and his two ſons.
Bilhah	7
	67

Out of which deduct Jacob, becauſe Moſes reckons here only thoſe that came out of his loins, and there will remain ſixty ſix.

To

IN all threeſcore and ſix, excluſive of Dinah, Jacob's daughter by Leah, and of Joſeph and his two ſons Manaſſeh and Ephraim; which being added to the number, it will amount to ſeventy ſouls.

THREE

To which add Jacob, Joſeph, Ephraim, and Manaſſeh; becauſe this ſecond reckoning is of all the ſouls of Jacob's family, in which caſe he may be included, and the whole amount will be ſeventy ſouls (236): but if we reckon Serah, Aſher's daughter, as Joſephus has done (237), and in all probability Moſes too, ſince he mentions her in his liſt, we need not to include Jacob in the number: for it will be ſeventy complete without him.

It is true that St. Stephen (238) reckons the whole number of them ſeventy five, which diſagrees with that of Moſes; but it muſt be remembered, that the apoſtles and firſt preachers made uſe of the Septuagint verſion, as being the only one then univerſally underſtood by the Jews; which verſion adds five more to Manaſſeh and Ephraim, namely, Machir and Gilead, ſons of Manaſſeh, Sutalan and Tuban, ſons of Ephraim, and Eden, Sutalan's ſon. But, beſides that they differ from the Hebrew, by reading eighteen inſtead of fourteen ſouls to Rachel (239): they likewiſe differ from themſelves; for fourteen and the five which they add will make nineteen, and not eighteen. Some antient fathers, thinking this knot inſoluble, have endeavoured to pick ſome myſteries out of it (240); but we need not be at any trouble to free the Septuagint verſion from error, which doth in ſo many inſtances differ from the original. However, there is ſtill another rational way to account for this difference between St. Stephen's reckoning and that of Moſes, which is as follows. That St Stephen follows the firſt number of Moſes, viz. ſixty ſix; out of which he excludes Jacob and Joſeph, and his two ſons, to which he adds nine of their wives; for Judah's wife was already dead, and Benjamin is ſuppoſed to be ſtill unmarried, and Joſeph's wife out of the caſe: ſo that if we add theſe nine wives, which, though not of Jacob's blood, yet belonged to his family, and to Joſeph's kindred (which is the expreſſion St. Stephen makes uſe of) to the number of ſixty ſix, it will amount to ſeventy five (241).

Some antient and modern writers have ſuppoſed, that all theſe grandſons were not born when Jacob went down into Egypt, but either ſoon after, or at leaſt during his life; for which reaſon they think Moſes made no ſcruple to ſet them down with the reſt (242). So far are they from thinking, for inſtance, that Benjamin had ten

(236) Villet cap. xxxvi. (237) Joſ. Ant. l. 2. c. 7. (238) Acts. vii. 14. (239) Gen. xlvi. 22. (240) Auguſt Queſt. in Gen. clii. Euchar. & al. (241) Berruyer Hiſt. du peup. de Dieu, p. 373, 374. 4° Edit. Kidder in pentat. (242) Calmet. Comm. in Gen. in loc. & Hiſtoire de Juifs. p. 245. Berruyer loc. citat. St. Auguſt. Queſt. cit.

THREE things are to be obſerved in the liſt which Moſes has given us in this chapter, namely, 1. That the wives are not ſet down in it; becauſe they were not deſcended from him, any more than his ſervants and ſlaves. 2. That he doth not ſet them down according to the order of their birth as in other places c, but mentions thoſe that were born of Leah and her maid, and then thoſe of Rachel and her maid. And 3dly, c Gen. xxxv. 24, & ſeq. & alib.

ſons by that time, being but a little turned of thirty, that they think he was hardly married. The ſame thing they ſuppoſe of Pharez's two ſons, alledging, though falſely, that Pharez was but one year old at Jacob's departure (243). But all theſe ſuppoſitions are point blank contrary to the text, and if Moſes muſt have reckoned all thoſe that were born in Egypt before Jacob's death, we don't know why he might not almoſt as well have reckoned ſeven hundred as ſeventy; ſince they muſt have encreaſed very faſt there, and married very young, elſe they could hardly from ſeventy have encreaſed to upwards of ſix hundred thouſand in the ſpace of two hundred and fifteen years, which was all the time of their abode in Egypt. It will therefore be more reaſonable to ſay, according to Moſes's account, that Pharez's two ſons were then born, though very young; for Pharez, being begotten of Judah in the thirtieth year of his age, might take a wife at fourteen or fifteen, and ſo have two ſons before Jacob left Canaan (244). The ſame may be likewiſe ſaid of Benjamin, who might have a number of children and two grand-children at the age of thirty one. We have already given inſtances of men, if they may be called ſo, who have had children when they were ſome years younger than we ſuppoſe theſe (245); ſo that there is no reaſon to depart from the plain text of Moſes, to fall into more difficult ſuppoſitions, than any that are in his narrative.

Another difficulty, that is raiſed againſt this genealogical liſt, is the difference of the names here mentioned and in other places of ſcripture, where the ſame genealogy is rehearſed, as in 1 Chronicles and Numbers (246); but we have already obſerved, that it is very common for men to have two names in the ſcriptures, and to be called ſometimes by one, and ſometimes by the other *. Concerning which the reader may conſult our commentators at their leiſure; as well as about the omiſſion of ſome of theſe perſons mentioned in Moſes's liſt, which are left out by the author of the book of Chronicles (247).

(243) Perrer. (244) Mercer. Villet. (245) See before, p. 410, ſub nota (N). (246) 1 Chron iv. 24. Numb xxvi. p iff. * Vid. ſup. p. 396, ſub nota (X) (247) Vid. Villet. in loc.

That

That the number ſixty ſix, in one part of the liſt, is only of the ſouls which came out of Jacob's loins, and the ſecond number of ſeventy is that of all the ſouls which belonged to the Houſe of Jacob; to which therefore Joſeph and his two ſons, and a grand-daughter named Serah, Aſher's daughter, muſt be added, in order to make the number of ſeventy complete.

WHILST Jacob and his family were kept in peace and plenty, by the provident care of his ſon, the Egyptians felt the diſmal effects of the famine, which encreaſing daily upon them, and Joſeph holding up his corn at a high rate, ſoon drained them of all their money. After this they were reduced to ſell their cattle, houſes, land, and at length their very ſelves, for ſubſiſtence. By this means he bought all their lands and perſons for the king's uſe; and from that time they all became ſlaves to the crown, except the prieſts, who had a ſufficient quantity of proviſions allotted to them out of the royal ſtores, without being at any expence for it. One would be apt to think, that Joſeph's zeal for the king's intereſt carried him beyond the bounds of common prudence, and that he did not conſider, that, whilſt he took ſuch an advantage over a ſtarving people, he raiſed the king's power to the degree of an abſolute tyranny, under which his family or their poſterity would one time or other ſeverely groan, as they effectually did. The text, as well as Joſephus[d], tells us, that he tranſplanted the people from one end of the kingdom to the other; and that the miſerable multitude went ſome one way and ſome another[e], ſubmitting to any miſery rather than ſtarving. However, when the ſeventh and laſt year of ſcarcity was come, Joſeph acquainted them, that they might now expect a crop againſt the next year, that the Nile would overflow, and the earth produce again as uſual; that he would diſtribute freſh lands, cattle, and corn to them, that they might return to their uſual tillage; upon this condition nevertheleſs, that from thenceforth the fifth part of all the product of their lands ſhould go to the king, and the reſt ſhould be theirs. The poor people were glad to ſubmit to theſe conditions, which were much better than they probably expected. They all ſet about cultivating the ground that was allotted to them, and from that time it paſſed into a law, that the fifth part of the product of the whole land of Egypt ſhould belong to the crown, which law continued in force for ſeveral centuries after, till a new regulation and diviſion was made †. However, Joſeph by this means gained the love and eſteem both of the king and people.

The Egyptians ſell their lands and themſelves for corn, and are tranſplanted from one end of the kingdom to the other.

The fifth part of the product of their lands aſſigned to the crown.

[d] Ch. xlvii. ver. 22. Antiq. lib. 1. c. 7. [e] Vid. Hebr, Chald. & Arab. verſ. † See before, p. 28.

WHILST he was enjoying the fruits of his great ſucceſs and policy, his family at Goſhen, whom he failed not to viſit often, did wonderfully encreaſe both in children and wealth. At length Jacob, by that time he had lived there ſeventeen years, finding himſelf to grow old and feeble, and that his end could not be far off, ſent for his ſon Joſeph, and ſpoke to him to this purpoſe: Though the deſire of ſeeing a ſon, ſo dear to me as you are, raiſed to the height of Egyptian glory, joined to the raging famine with which our land was viſited, made me willingly come down into this ſtrange country; yet, Canaan being the inheritance which GOD promiſed to Abraham and his poſterity, and where he lies interred with my father Iſaac and ſome others of our family, in the ground which he purchaſed of the inhabitants; my laſt and dying requeſt to you is, that you will not ſuffer me to be buried here; but that you will ſwear to me to ſee me carried to Machpelah, and there depoſited with my anceſtors: your great power with the king of Egypt will eaſily obtain you and me that favour, which is the laſt I have to aſk of you. Joſeph did not make his father wait long for that ſatisfaction; he promiſed and ſwore to him that he would fulfil his deſire; and Jacob, who in all probability had ſat up upon his bed whilſt this ceremony laſted, bowed down his head towards his bed's teſter, in token of adoration and gratitude for the ſatisfaction which his ſon had now given him (C) [f].

Jacob's requeſt to Joſeph.

Year of the Flood, 1310. Year before Chriſt 1689.

JOSEPH.

[f] Gen. xlix.

(C) In this place, where Jacob is ſaid to have bowed himſelf, or rather, to have worſhipped, towards the bed's head; the Septuagint, if it has not been corrupted, ſeems to have read מַטֶּה Matteh a ſtaff, for מִטָּה Mittah a bed. So that they have tranſlated it, he worſhipped towards the end of his ſtaff; and the Rhemiſh divines, he worſhipped the head of his ſtaff (248). From which, and what the apoſtle to the Hebrews ſays (249), that he worſhipped leaning on his ſtaff, (where the word leaning is added, to expreſs the meaning of the particle עַל hal in the Hebrew, and ἐπὶ in the Greek; both which ſignify upon, and preſuppoſe his reſting, or leaning upon, and not worſhipping the top of the ſtaff;) they have not ſcrupled to defend the worſhip of the croſs, of which this ſtaff, they pretend, was the type (250). But, without entering into the controverſy, it will be ſufficient, in order to juſtify our verſion, to obſerve, Firſt, that the apoſtle made uſe of the Septuagint, and ſo quotes it as he finds it there, and not as it was in the original,

(248) Bibl. Remens. in loc. (249) Hebr. xi. 21, (250) Do Annotat. in Heb xi. 21. & al.

which

JOSEPH, who could not long be abſent from the court, took his leave of his father, not without giving ſtrict charge to ſome of the family, that, upon the very firſt appearance of danger, they ſhould immediately ſend for him. Accordingly, as ſoon as word was brought to him that his father was a dying, he took his two ſons Manaſſeh and Ephraim with him, and went to preſent them to him, begging him, that he would give them his bleſſing before he died. Jacob, at the ſight of them, found his ſtrength, as it were, renewed. He ſat up upon his bed, and addreſſing himſelf to him, ſpoke with ſuch chearfulneſs, and in ſuch ſtrong and lively terms, as ſhewed nothing leſs than the dotage or weakneſs of a dying old man. He began with recapitulating all the glorious promiſes which GOD had formerly made to him, concerning his numerous poſterity's inheriting the land of Canaan, and concluded with the death of his dear Rachel. How tenderly I loved her, continued he, my whole family can teſtify; but I deſign to give her and you a further proof of my affection: you have had two ſons born in this ſtrange land, which, according to the uſual order of inheritance, ſhould have only the portion of grand-children in the diviſion of the promiſed land; but I will do more for them, and they ſhall from this day be called by my name, be eſteemed my ſons, and, as heads of two diſtinct tribes, receive a double lot: thus, inſtead of the tribe of Joſeph, they ſhall be called the two tribes of Manaſſeh and Ephraim. But if you have any more ſons after them, they ſhould only be allotted the portion of grand-children. I have yet one thing more in ſtore for you above the reſt of your brethren, viz. the portion which I took out of the hands of the Amorites by my ſword and bow. This ſhall likewiſe fall to the lot of your poſterity, when GOD ſhall bring you into that happy land (D). He then deſired his Joſeph brings his two ſons to Jacob.

Ephraim and Manaſſeh are made two tribes in Iſrael.

which the Jews did no longer underſtand. And ſecondly, that he ſpeaks there of a different action, viz. Jacob's bleſſing Joſeph's children, which did not happen till ſome time after, whereas here Jacob makes Joſeph ſwear not to bury him in Egypt. Here he ſeems to have kept his bed, and there to have received freſh ſpirits, and to have ſat on it, leaning, perhaps on his ſtaff (251).

(D) There is a threefold queſtion ſtarted from this place, viz. 1. What portion this was which Jacob gave to Joſeph. 2. How he is ſaid to have conquered it by his ſword. 3. If Shechem be the place here meant, why he ſays, that he got it from the Amorites:

(251) Compare Gen. xlvii and xlviii. Vid. Villet. c. 47.

Whereas

his two grand-ſons to be brought to him, which Joſeph accordingly did, placing the eldeſt at Jacob's right, and the youngeſt at his left hand: But he was ſurprized to find his father croſs his deſign, by croſſing his arms and laying his right on the head of the youngeſt, and his left on that of the eldeſt. He would have hindered it, thinking that it was done by a miſtake; but his father convinced him of the contrary, and, in bleſſing of the lads, which he did with great fervency and tenderneſs, he not only preferred Ephraim to Manaſſeh, but gave him much the larger and nobler bleſſing. The ſequel of this hiſtory will ſhew how exactly this prophecy of Jacob was verified in thoſe two tribes, as well as the next grand one, which he pronounced concerning all the twelve [g].

Jacob bleſſeth the younger before the elder.

[g] Gen. xlviii.

Whereas Hamor the father of Shechem was a Hivite (252). As to the firſt; it is generally agreed, that it was the city and territories of Shechem; for we don't read of any other conqueſts that Jacob made; and accordingly we find Shechem mentioned in St. John's Goſpel 253) as the place which he gave unto Joſeph. 2. How he could ſay, that he got it by his ſword and his bow, when he ſo far diſallowed his ſons barbarous action towards the Shechemites, as even to curſe their reſentment which was the cauſe of it, has puzzled all our antient and modern expoſitors to account for; we ſhall only mention ſome of the moſt notable conjectures about it. 1. Some think it was the ſword and bow of his innocence (254); others of his prayers (255); others of his money (256): others think, that he ſpeaks proleptically, and that it was to be conquered afterwards by Joſeph's poſterity (257): others again think, that Jacob had atchieved ſome warlike exploit againſt the Amorites, as Abraham had againſt the four kings (258). But the moſt general and probable opinion is, that when his ſons had once got that city and territories by the murder of all the inhabitants, he was forced to ſtand up in his own defence, and to keep the poſſeſſion of it by force of arms, 'till he removed to Bethel, and to recover it again by the ſame means from the Amorreans, who, living intermixed with the Hivites, had taken poſſeſſion of it during his abſence. And this is the reaſon why he ſays he got, or recovered it from the Amorites, and not from the Hivites (259).

(252) Gen. xxxiv. 2. (253) John iv. 5. (254) Hieron. tradit. Hebr. (255) Chald. Paraph. (256) Hieron. ibid. Auguſt. (257) Jun. & al. (258) Cajetan Andr. Maſius. (259) R. Sal. N. de Lyr. Mercer. Villet. Berruyer, & al.

FOR

FOR Jacob, having now exhauſted his ſpirits, and finding his death approaching, reſolved to conſecrate his few remaining hours in foretelling to his ſons, whom he had gathered about him, what ſhould happen to them in the latter days; and, as no prophecy was ever more punctually fulfilled than this, we ſhall endeavour to give it to our readers in a more modern and intelligible ſtile, than we have it in our verſion, without departing from the ſenſe of the original; and where any difficulty happens in our way, we ſhall acquaint him with it in a marginal note, and endeavour to make it as plain as we can. However, we beg leave to premiſe here, that what Jacob pronounces, or rather propheſies, concerning his ſons, is not ſo much to be underſtood as foretold of them, as of their tribes; nor of what ſhall immediately happen to them, but of what was not to have its completion till ſome time at leaſt after their entrance into the promiſed land. Thus, for inſtance, when he ſays, that Zebulun ſhall dwell along the ſea-coaſts, or that Naphtali is a well-ſpread tree yielding grafts and fair branches; it is plain, that he means by the firſt, that the lot of the tribe of Zebulun ſhould be by the ſea-ſide; and the laſt, that the Naphtalites ſhould prove in time very powerful and numerous. This is what the event has fully verified, and what ſhall be further proved in the following notes. The good old patriarch, after a moſt pathetic preface to draw their deepeſt attention, began with the firſt-born in theſe words:

Jacob's laſt bleſſing to his twelve ſons.

" REUBEN, thou art my firſt-born, and waſt once the " firſt-fruits of my might and my ſtrength, and as ſuch thou " waſt entitled to the right of primogeniture, the beſt por" tion in the inheritance, to the dignity of the prieſthood,
" and the ſupreme authority over thy brethren: but all " theſe prerogatives, like the unſtable waters, that paſs by
" and return no more, are gone from thee; becauſe thou,
" little regarding the ſacredneſs of thy father's bed, didſt
" defile it, and alienate it from me [h]; for which crime,
" though thou continue ſtill to be a tribe in Iſrael, yet thou
" ſhalt ever be far inferior to the reſt of thy brethren, either " in number, wealth, or ſtrength (E).

Reuben.

" SIMEON

[h] Gen. xxxv. 22. Vid. MUNST. in loc.

(E) The ſequel of the Jewiſh hiſtory ſhews, that the tribe of Reuben did ſtill remain in obſcurity, and without any of the marks of diſtinction, which uſed to be annexed to the right of primogeniture, ſuch as a double portion, ſupreme authority, and the prieſthood. Accordingly the Jewiſh expoſitors, eſpecially the Engliſh Rabbah

Simeon and Levi.

" SIMEON or Levi might have ſucceeded to the right of " primogeniture, which their brother's inceſt has juſtly " deprived him of, had they not proved ſuch inſtruments of " treacherous cruelty. May my ſoul be for ever preſerved " from ſuch bloody councils, and my honour unſtained from " their horrid guilt: For the fierceneſs of their anger hur- " ried them to commit murder, and the impetuouſneſs of " their fury made them break through all obſtacles that op- " poſed them. Curſed be their fury, for it was violent, and " their malice, for it was inhuman. This cruel diſpoſition " of theirs forces me to divide their tribes, that they may " never be rejoined in Iſrael [1]." Thus far the good old patriarch performed a ſevere and ungrateful taſk, and his prophecy againſt thoſe tribes was exactly verified in due time (F). Then caſting his eyes on Judah, with a joy equal to the indignation which he had expreſſed againſt his other brethren, he addreſſed himſelf to him thus:

Judah.

" JUDAH, thy name ſignifies praiſe †, and accordingly " thou ſhalt have the praiſe of all thy brethren. They ſhall " fall proſtrate before thee, as before their king and ſove- " reign, and thine enemies ſhall be forced to ſubmit their " necks to thy yoke. Like a young lion ſhall my ſon fall " upon his prey, and like an old lion, or a fierce lioneſs

[1] Gen. xlix. ver. 5, 6, 7. † Vid. ſup. p. 397.

Rabbah, or large comment on Geneſis, tells us (260), that he fell from a threefold dignity, viz. הבכורה הכהנה והמלכית, primogeniture, prieſthood, and royal dignity. But becauſe thou art fallen, continues the commentator, thy primogeniture is given to Joſeph (who accordingly had two portions allotted to him) the prieſthood to Levi, and the ſceptre to Judah. And where it is ſaid of this laſt (261), thy brethren ſhall praiſe thee, he paraphraſes it thus: ויהיו כל אחיך נקראים על שמך, Thy brethren ſhall be called by thy name, i. e. they will not ſay I am a Reubenite, or a Simeonite, but a יהודי Jehudi, a Jew.

(F) Jacob's words imply a double diſperſion, viz. of the two tribes from one another, and their being interſperſed among the reſt. And accordingly Levi had no inheritance among his brethren in the land of Canaan, but had a certain number of cities aſſigned to it in every tribe. As for that of Simeon, it had properly but a portion of Judah's inheritance (262), if we except ſome few places which they got upon mount Seir and in the wilds of the valley of Gedor (263).

(260) Bereſh. Rab. ſect. 98. (261) Gen xlix. 8. (262) Joſh. xix. 1, & ſeq. (263) 1 Chron. iv. 39 & 40.

" ready

" ready to ruſh upon it, who ſhall dare to rouſe him up?
" The ſceptre ſhall not depart from Judah, nor the law" giver from between his feet, until Shiloh be come and the " people be gathered unto him (G); his portion ſhall a" bound

(G) The ſenſe, as well as completion of this noble prophecy, being very much diſputed between the Jews and us, we have endeavoured to render the latter part of the verſe more agreeable to the original, which in its plain and obvious ſenſe affirms, that the ſceptre ſhall not depart from Judah——till both Shiloh was come, and the nations gathered unto, or brought to his obedience. This verſion is further proved by the event; for the Jews did not loſe their ſceptre, or Sanhedrim, which was their בית דין Beth din, or higheſt court of judicature and ſupreme legiſlative power, till the Heathen became converts to Chriſtianity, of whom Cornelius was the firſt (264): And the Jews themſelves own, that this ſupreme court did ſtill ſubſiſt from the time of Moſes, the founder of it, to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans. They likewiſe own, that the word שבט Sheveth, which we tranſlate Sceptre, doth not always ſignify the royal power of dignity, but ſometimes only the legiſlative; and this has been further proved by two eminent divines (265). The latter Jews therefore, finding themſelves pinched by this prophecy, rather than allow the received interpretation of the antients, which is agreeable to ours have fallen into various abſurd notions, which they are not aſhamed to defend with a zeal peculiar to them. Thus ſome will have the meaning of this paſſage to be, that the Meſſiah ſhall not come, till Shiloh, the place ſo called, be deſtroyed, or the Jewiſh monarchy be at an end (266). Others by Sheveth underſtand a tribe, which that word alſo ſignifies, and think the meaning to be, that Judah ſhould not ceaſe to be a tribe till the coming of Meſſiah (267): in which they have been alſo followed by ſome Chriſtians (268); becauſe that tribe did viſibly ſubſiſt as ſuch till the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, but ſo did that of Levi. However, many of our modern Jews ſtand ſtifly to this ſenſe, and ſcruple not to affirm, that it has ſubſiſted not only to that time, but even to this very day, pure and unmixed. Others add, that it retains ſtill a kind of ſceptre, or royal power, beyond the river Euphrates, and that the Naſſi, or head of it, is a prince lineally deſcended from Judah, whoſe ſplendor, dignity, and power over his own tribe, is little inferior to that of a king (269): but credat Judæus. 'Tis certain we have only their bare word for this imaginary kingdom. They likewiſe

(264) Acts 10. paſſ. (265) Vid. in Mede's works, a ſermon on that text and Saurin's Diſcours Hiſtoriques, &c. diſc. XLI. (266) Aben-Ezra in loc. & al. (267) Vid. Munſt. in loc. (268) Oleaſt. Jun. Villet. & al. in loc. (269) Benj. de Tudel. Itiner & al.

" bound with ſuch fertile vineyards, fruitful trees, and paſture " grounds, that he ſhall tie his aſs to the vine and palm-" tree, and waſh his garments in the juice of the grape,
" and his teeth with the milk of his kine (H) [k].

" ZEBULUN'S

[k] Gen. ibid. ver. 8. & ſeq.

diſagree not only with us, but even among themſelves, about the meaning of the word מחקק Mechokek, law-giver. Concerning which we ſhall refer our readers to the two laſt-mentioned divines for further ſatisfaction (270).

As to the word שילה Shiloh, though it be almoſt univerſally owned to mean the Meſſiah, yet as to its original ſignification there is no ſmall diſagreement. St. Jerom reads it Shaloach from שלח Shalach to ſend, reading ח for ה (271). Others from שלה Shalah to be peaceable (272), and underſtand by Shiloh a peace-maker. Others derive it from שיל Shil, which they will have to ſignify a ſon, becauſe שליה Shiliah, or Shilijah, ſignifies the ſecundine of a woman (273); but 'tis plain the firſt of theſe is no where to be found in the Old Teſtament, and the ſecond only in one place, where it moſt probably ſignifies the ſecundine (274). A modern critic takes the word Shiloh to ſignify the end, and the ſenſe of the words to be, that from the time the ſceptre comes into the tribe of Judah, it will continue in it till that tribe be at an end (275); but his opinion has been lately confuted, among many others, by the above-mentioned Monſ. Saurin, in an elaborate diſcourſe on that ſubject †. Another modern author tells us, that it ought to be derived from Shulah, to fatigue, be tired, ſuffer, and to be applied to the ſufferings of the Meſſiah (276): but without fatiguing our readers any further, the moſt probable ſenſe of the word, if the change of a letter be allowed, will be that of the Septuagint, Onkelos, and ſome others (277) who read it שילו Shelo, that is, he to whom it belongs, ו and ה being often interchanged in the ſacred book *, the ſenſe will be plainly this, that the ſceptre or legiſlative power ſhall not depart from, but be depoſited in the tribe of Judah, until the right owner, or he, ſhelo, to whom it of right belongs, has made his appearance in the world. This ſenſe ſeems the moſt eaſy, natural, and agreeable to the original, as well as the moſt applicable to CHRIST the king of kings. As for the י redundant in שילו Shilo, it is agreeable to the property of the word Ebævi as the Grammarians ſpeak.

(H) Judah's lot did exactly anſwer this prediction, it was a fertile land, full of vineyards, fruit-trees, and noble paſture-ground

(270) Mede and Saurin loc. citat. (271) Hieron. queſt. Hebr. (272) Mercer. & al (273) Vid. Villet cap. 49. & Saurin loc. cit. (274) Deut. xxviii. 57. (275) Le Clerc. in Com. Pentat. in loc. † Saur. loc. cit. (276) Gouſſet Comm. ling. Hebr. ſub voce שלה fatigare. Vid Calm ſub voce Schilo. (277) LXX. Targ Onkel. in loc. Mornay cont. Jud. Oleaſt & al. * Vid. 2 Sam. xvi. 10. & 18. ap. Munſt. in loc.

for

" ZEBULUN'S (I) dwellings ſhall ſpread themſelves a- Zebulun.
" long the borders of the ſea, and he ſhall ſtretch the num" ber of his commodious havens as far as the city of Zi-
" don [l].

" ISSACHAR, like a ſtrong, but indolent aſs, ſhall Iſſachar.
" chooſe to carry burdens in the midſt of his brethren, ra" ther than be deprived of his beloved eaſe, in the pleaſant
" land of his inheritance, and prefer ſervitude and tribute
" before the fatigues of war and conqueſt (K) [m]."

FROM the ſix ſons of Leah Jacob paſſes to thoſe of Bilhah, Rachel's maid. He begins with intimating, that the ſons of [l] ibid. 13. [m] Ibid. 14.

for cattle. It was in this tribe that the valley of Eſhcol, or the brook of the grape, was, a bunch of which was brought by two of the ſpies whom Moſes ſent to ſearch the land, as a ſpecimen of the richneſs of that ſoil: here was likewiſe the brook or torrent of that name, along whoſe banks were the moſt delicious paſture grounds: (278) and ſome travellers aſſure us, that there are ſtill very large grapes to be met with in the valley of Hebron, which may be probably that along which that torrent runs (279).

(I) Zebulun is mentioned next, though Iſſachar was elder than he, for which no certain reaſon can be aſſign'd, unleſs we ſuppoſe, that the patriarch had a prophetic eye to the lot which was to fall to Zebulun, which was in time to become famous for being the chief dwelling of the Meſſiah; for Nazareth and Capernaum were in that tribe, and himſelf was denominated a Nazarene from the firſt of theſe cities (280); but this is a conjecture only. Certain it is however, that if Jacob had been preſent at the diviſion of the promiſed land, he could hardly have given a more exact deſcription of Zebulun's lot, than he did then above two hundred and fifty years before it happened: for it extended from the Mediterranean on the weſt, to the lake of Genezareth on the eaſt ſide.

(K) No leſs wonderful and exact was he in the deſcription of Iſſachar's tribe, and the lot that fell to it. The Chaldee paraphraſt, who is alſo followed by the generality of Jewiſh Rabbies, gives a quite different turn to this prophecy: they read it thus, " Iſſachar, " finding that his lot is fallen in a fertile land, ſhall ſubdue the in-" habitants of it, and bring them under tribute"; but the firſt ſenſe is more agreeable to the original, and verified by the event: for that tribe had the richeſt and moſt fertile ſpot in all the land of Canaan, but was often infeſted and ſubjected by ſtrangers, eſpecially in the time of the Judges.

(278) Num. xiii. paſſ. Calvin. Mercer. Jun. Grot. & al. (279) Vid. Calmet Comm. in Numb. xiii. ver. 23, 24. (280) Matt. ii. ult. & cap. iv. 13. & ſeq.

the handmaids ſhould have the ſame priviledge with thoſe of the miſtreſſes, and be heads and judges of their own tribes.

Dan. Then alluding to the name of Dan, a judge, he declares, "that he ſhould judge his people, that is, his own tribe, "like the reſt of the twelve;" and then adds, "that like a "ſerpent hid in the highway, or a viper in the ſand, which "doth not openly aſſault its enemy, but bites him by the "heel; ſo Dan ſhould overcome more by policy and ſtrata-"gem, than by valour and open force (L) [n]." Here the prophetic patriarch breaks out into an ejaculation, I wait for thy ſalvation, O LORD. The meaning of which ſeems to be this, that whether his poſterity were preſerved by their valour or policy, whether they owed their ſucceſs to the drawn ſword of Judah, or the hidden ſnares of Dan; yet their ſafety and happineſs did chiefly depend on the gracious promiſes of GOD, on whom he did rely. Others think however, that Jacob, foreſeeing either the grievous oppreſſions which that tribe was to labour under, as it actually [n] Ibid. 16. & ſeq.

(L) The word נחש Nachaſh in the original ſignifies a ſerpent in general, which having no ſuch qualities as are here deſcribed, the Septuagint have tranſlated it by the word Ceraſtes, which is a kind of ſerpent, ſo called from its having two fleſhy horns; its inſtinct is to hide itſelf in the ſand, and by faſtening on the horſes heel, to make him overthrow his rider (281). The Jews think, that this prophecy was more paticularly fulfilled, when Samſon, who was of that tribe, pulled down the large building, which cruſhed him and the Philiſtines to death (282). Others, both Jews and Chriſtians, ſuppoſe, that Jacob deſigned to intimate by it, that though Dan's tribe was but ſmall, he having had but one ſon, yet it ſhould produce one of the moſt famous Judges of all Iſrael (283): As for thoſe who apply this prophecy to Antichriſt, as if he was to come out of that tribe; becauſe he is omitted in the Apocalypſe in the liſt of the tribes that were ſealed (284); they are ſcarce worth confuting, ſince they may as well fetch him out of that of Simeon, which Moſes omits when he bleſſes the reſt (285). Beſides, Jacob pronounces theſe words as a bleſſing, not as a curſe, to Dan, whoſe tribe moreover was diſperſed, if not extinguiſhed, a thouſand years before Antichriſt appeared in the world, if he has yet at all.

(281) Vid. Bochart. Hieroſoic lib. 1. col. 28. (282) Vid. Munſt. in loc. Villet. c. 49. (283) Chald. Paraph. Jun. in loc. Calmet. Hiſt. O. T. (284) Perrer. contr. 1. (285) Deut. xxxiii.

did

did from the Amorites [o], from which nothing but a miracle could ſave them, or their defection from the true worſhip of GOD, that tribe being the firſt that ſet up the public worſhip of idols [p], did breath out this ſhort prayer for their deliverance. However, it is not improbable, that Jacob might have a much higher view than any of theſe, and that his comparing Dan to a viper might bring into his mind that univerſal ſalvation, which was to be wrought by the ſeed of the woman, which was to bruiſe the ſerpent's head, and to have his heel bruiſed by it [q].

" GAD, continued he, ſhall be often infeſted by bands Gad.
" of robbers and plunderers, but he ſhall conquer them at laſt (M) [r].

" ASHER's portion ſhall make him happy; it ſhall abound Aſher.
" with excellent corn and oil, the bread and dainty meats

[o] Judg. i. 34. Vid. TREMEL. in loc. [p] Ibid. cap. xvii. & xviii. paſſ. [q] Gen. iii. 15. [r] Ibid. xlix. 19.

(M) What was propheſied of Gad was likewiſe exactly verified. His lot happened on the other ſide Jordan, where he was continually expoſed to the excurſions of the plundering Arabs, but, by the continual watchfulneſs and bravery of that tribe, they were not only prevented, but ſometimes alſo caught and plundered in their turn by the Gadites. Others indeed underſtand it quite otherwiſe, and it muſt be owned, that the original is ſomewhat obſcure in this place: they read it thus, Gad, being girded for the battle, ſhall lead an army and bring it back conqueror, which they apply to Jephtha, who is thought to have been of that tribe; but, as this ſenſe is rather too forced, others read it, Gad armed ſhall fight at the head of all Iſrael; which they think was in ſome meaſure verified, when, having received their portion on one ſide Jordan, they offered likewiſe to go and help their brethren on the other ſide to conquer theirs. But beſides that this is alſo far fetched; theſe prophecies ſeem rather to intimate the fate and ſucceſs of the tribes in general, than any particular action or circumſtance of theirs. And therefore we prefer the firſt reading, and think, that the prophecy refers chiefly to the continual conflicts the Gadites had with the Hagarenes, that is with Jetur, Nephiſh, and Nodab, whom they at length overcame, and took from them in one battle fifty thouſand camels, two hundred and fifty thouſand ſheep, and an hundred thouſand men priſoners (286). This ſenſe is likewiſe more agreeable to the character which Moſes gives of that tribe, who compares it to a lion that leapeth upon his prey (287).

(286) 1 Chron. v 20, 21. Vid. Mercer. Villet. Jun, & al.
(287) Deut. xxxiii 22. & ſeq.

" that

" that ſhall be made of them ſhall be fit for a king's " table (N) [r]".

Naphtali. " NAPHTALI is like a large tree, well-ſpread, or having " grafts, which ſhoot out pleaſant branches." Or, according to our Engliſh verſion, Naphtali, like a hind newly eſcaped, or let looſe ſhall excel his brethren in ſwiftneſs, and be remarkable for the ſweetneſs of his eloquence (O) [t].

THESE four laſt were the ſons of the two hand-maids, from whom he paſſes with a ſeeming joy to thoſe of his beloved Rachel; and Joſeph, whoſe turn came next, heard [r] Ibid. ver. 20. [t] Ib. v. 21.

(N) The bleſſing ſpoken to Aſher is capable of a double ſenſe, and both verified by the event, namely, either that his country ſhould be the moſt fertile, and produce the nobleſt corn in the whole land of Paleſtine, which it actually did; or elſe, that it ſhould abound with the fineſt and moſt delicious oil, fit to be mixed in all kinds of paſtry-work, which his portion was alſo remarkable for, inſomuch that its oil was the moſt famed of all Canaan's, as ſhall be ſhewn in the ſequel: for which reaſon we have choſen to word it in ſuch terms as ſhould expreſs the two excellencies of that noble ſoil, rather than to confine the ſenſe to either particular; though Moſes in his bleſſing of that tribe ſeems to intimate the latter, when he ſays that Aſher ſhould dip his foot in oil (288).

(O) We have alſo given this prophecy in both the ſenſes which the original will bear; but as that which our Engliſh verſion gives us is ſomewhat uncouth and unintelligible we have endeavoured to make the ſenſe of it a little plainer; though that reading be the moſt generally received both by antient and modern expoſitors; and the firſt part applied to Barak's overcoming Siſera. and the latter to the ſweet words which Deborah and he ſang in the noble canticle which was made on that occaſion (289); yet as we have obſerved, that Jacob's bleſſings have a more general ſcope, we prefer the firſt reading, which compares him to a well-ſpread oak, which is agreeable to the original, and more exactly verified by the event; for no tribe multiplied ſo wonderfully as this of Naphtali, who had but four ſons when he came into Egypt; yet could muſter up upward of fifty three thouſand men fit to bear arms (290) when they came out of it; i. e. in leſs than 220 years. Thoſe who make a difficulty againſt our tranſlating the Hebrew אילה Ailah a great tree, becauſe it is contrary to the Mazorah's punctuation, may find that verſion juſtified by the learned Bochart and Le Scene, as well as that of the whole verſe (291) which is agreeable to the Septuagint, Chaldee, and Arabic verſions.

(288) Ibid. ver. 24. (289) Judg. c. iv. & v. p. tot. (290) Numb. i. 43. (291) Bochart. Hieroſ. Le Scene. Eſſ. on a new Tranſlat. & al.

his

his bleſſings pronounced in the moſt pompous and endearing terms.

JOSEPH, ſaid the good old father, ſhall increaſe daily more and more, as his name doth emphatically imply. His beauty attracted the eyes of the fair ſex, the damſels ran upon the walls to ſee him (P); or, according to our verſion, he ſhall multiply like a fruitful bough planted by a well ſide, whoſe branches run up and ſpread againſt the wall. Men armed with the poiſoned darts of rancour and envy, meaning his brethren, have cauſed him a world of woe; his ruin would have been unavoidable, had not the Almighty, in whom he truſted, proved his ſtrong ſhield and defence, broken his bonds from off his arms (Q), and brought him out of priſon, to be a father and protector to the houſe of Iſrael; for this the LORD, even the GOD of thy father, ſhall bleſs thee with the dew of heaven, and with the fatneſs of the earth, with the fruit of the womb, a numerous poſterity, and the fruit of the breaſt, and plenty of all ſorts of cattle. May all the bleſſings promiſed to me and to my forefathers, be Joſeph.

(P) The original has בֵּן פֹּרָת Ben porath; which if derived from the root פָּרָה Para, he has fructified, as ſome do, the ſenſe will be Joſeph is a fruitful ſon; and then the word בָּנוֹת Banoth (daughters) muſt be underſtood figuratively of the branches that run along the wall; but we rather chooſe to derive the word from פָּאַר Paar, to make, or be, beautiful, the א being quieſcent in holeim, as the grammarians ſpeak, and then the literal ſenſe will be, Joſeph is a ſon of beauty; the daughters ran upon the walls to ſee him, and this reading has by far the moſt votes.

(Q) Our Engliſh verſion and ſome others render this verſe thus; but his bow abode in ſtrength, and the arms of his hands were made ſtrong: but this interpretation is ſomething forced, and the literal ſenſe runs thus; but he continued in the ſtrength of his bow; and the hands of his arms (not weapons but the arms of his body יְפוּצוּ Japhuſu were (not ſtrengthened, as it is there rendered) but broken, ſcattered; which therefore may be more applicable to his fetters, in which ſenſe the Septuagint, Vulgate, Chaldee, &c. have taken it; the ſame word alſo occurs in the firſt verſe of the 68th pſalm; let GOD ariſe, and let his enemies be ſcattered, is therefore rightly rendered there, and it would have been nonſenſe to have ſaid let his enemies be ſtrengthened, that verſe being the very words which Moſes and the Iſraelites uſed, whenever the ark was taken up, before they marched from one place to another (292): to which may be added, that the verb פּוּץ Phos, has ſeldom any other ſignification than that we have given it, which however we ſubmit to the reader.

(292) Numb. x. 35.

doubled

doubled upon Joseph's head, even upon his crowned head, (R); may they out-top and out-stretch the everlasting mountain, and prove to him more fruitful and lasting than they [u].

Benjamin. BENJAMIN, the last of all Jacob's sons, who had been so great a favourite of his father, did probably expect a suitable blessing from him; but whether it were that Jacob foresaw no extraordinary merit or happiness attending his tribe, or that its being afterwards blended with that of Judah, would make it to share in all its blessings, he contented himself with describing him by his fierce and warlike disposition, who wolf-like should shed the blood of his enemies, and in the evening divide their spoil (S). Having thus pronounced his prophetical blessing to every tribe (T), he reminded them, especially Joseph, [u] Ibid. ver. 22. & seq.

(R) We have here likewise ventured to depart from the English version, which renders the words נזיר אחיו Nazir Achauf, him that was separate from his brothers; for though the verb נזר Nazar signifies to separate, whence the word Nazarite comes, and Joseph was really separated from his brethren when he was sold into Egypt; yet it is not probable, that Jacob would have couched so barbarous and unnatural an action in such soft terms, when the original abounds with the most expressive: besides Nazar doth rather signify a separating upon a religious account; it is therefore more probable that he used the word Nazir, which signifies crowned, in allusion to the superintendants of the king's houshold, in all the eastern empires, who were called Nazirs, and probably wore some kind of diadem about their heads by way of distinction and grandeur (293). This sense will be more agreeable likewise to the solemn and pompous style, which the patriarch uses throughout all Joseph's blessing.

(S) The warlike and untameable disposition of this tribe was sufficiently verified afterwards in many instances, but more particularly the two following ones; namely, first, by the fierce battles which they fought against the united force of all the other tribes, though for a very bad cause, the Levite's abused concubine (294), wherein they came off conquerors twice, tho' vastly inferior in numbers (295): and secondly, by the war, which the house of Saul, who was of that tribe, had with David and the house of Judah, for the kingdom (296); however, 'tis certain, that they are describ'd in scripture as the fiercest warriors, and experteſt archers in Israel.

(T) Some critics have cavilled at the words of Moses, he (Jacob)

(293) Vid. Calmet. Hist. Old. Test in loc. (294) Judg. xix. (295) Ibid. c. xx. (296) 1 Sam. pass.

Joſeph, that they ſhould bury him with his anceſtors in the cave of Machpelah; and they having renewed their promiſe to him, he laid himſelf again in his bed, and ſoon after expired [w], being 147 years of age, ſeventeen of which he ſpent in Egypt in the land of Goſhen (V).

THE

[w] Gen. xlix.

cob) bleſſed every one of them with a ſeparate bleſſing (297); whereas they think the three firſt might have been more properly called curſes than bleſſings; and this has given others and us unneceſſary trouble of anſwering them. Some authors have been too fond of having recourſe to the ſubtilties of the ſchools to elude this difficulty: thus St. Ambroſe tells us, that they being rather propheſies than bleſſings, muſt therefore be bleſſings becauſe they are propheſies (298): and another Romiſh author (299) ſays, that they were called bleſſings from the greateſt part being ſuch; whereas it is ſaid, that he bleſſed every one (300): others therefore have bethought themſelves of that thread-bare ſolution, that the ſame word in the original ſignifies to bleſs and to curſe, which has been applied to other caſes as well as this, and to as little purpoſe. Thus, when Job's wife bids him bleſs GOD and die, they have thought that ſhe meant curſe GOD, and die; whereas 'tis plain ſhe only ſpeaks ironically to him, and means nothing but that he bleſſes GOD in vain; ſince he would die as well as thoſe that let it alone. As for R. Salomon's anſwer, we mention it only for its abſurdity and impiouſneſs, who ſays, that Jacob deſigned indeed to bleſs all his ſons, but that he was ſeized with a phrentic fit at the beginning, which made him curſe the three firſt that came to hand. It will be ſufficient to ſay, that he bleſſed them all, though not alike; and if his ſevere rebuke to the three eldeſt, and the puniſhment he pronounced againſt them, did bring them to a ſenſe of their wickedneſs, it was a bleſſing to them, though not a temporal one; tho' even in this laſt ſenſe he may well be ſaid to have bleſſed them likewiſe, ſince he aſſigned each of them a lot in the inheritance of the promiſed land, which he had power to have deprived them of; and as Moſes did afterwards bleſs them, 'tis plain, he did not think that they had received a curſe from their father.

(V) Beſides theſe propheſies of Jacob, which Moſes has preſerved to us, and which have been ſufficiently verified by their events, the Jews attribute ſome other works to him, ſuch as the treatiſe, entitled, The Ladder to Heaven; in which there is an explanation of that which he ſaw in a dream at Bethel; and which the Ebionites adopted as canonical; and a teſtament called by his name, The Teſtament of Jacob, reckoned by Pope Gelaſius among the Apocry-

(297) Gen. xlix. 28. (298) Ambroſ. de benedict. Patriarch. Jacob. cap. ii. (299) Perrer. (300) Ver. 28.

AND now Joseph, who had hitherto suppressed his grief, began to give it full vent; he fell upon his dead father, bathed his face with tears, and expressed all the filial sorrow that such a loss could inspire; at length, remembring his dying charge, he went to get his body embalmed, and to make all other preparations for his funeral. The Egyptians on their part mourned for him as long as the days of his embalming lasted, viz. seventy days, the ceremony of which was performed as follows; the body was sent to the physicians or embalmers, who first took out the brain and entrails, and washed them in palm-wine, impregnated with strong astrinphas. The Jews do likewise use some prayers every night, which they pretend to have been composed by him: they affirm, that he wrote the fourteen gradual psalms, and some others, whilst he lived with Laban; all which fables are only fit for a Jewish creed. However, as to the great praises which they give him, no one can blame them for it; and the author of Ecclesiasticus has justly summed up his character in few words, chap xliv. 25, 26. Some divines, especially of the church of Rome, look upon him not only to have plainly foretold the coming of the Messiah, but to have been likewise a kind of type of him in his laborious and troublesome life; in his flights and travels; in his marriage with Leah, the figure of the Jewish synagogue; and afterwards with his beloved Rachel, the figure of the christian church.

The Mohammedans allow him to have been not only a prophet, but also the father of all the prophets, who were all descended from him except Job, Jethro, and Mohammed. They likewise believe, that the royal dignity did not depart from his posterity till the times of John the Baptist and JESUS CHRIST, and that the twelve tribes of the Jews did spring from him, as their own twelve tribes did spring from Ishmael. Jacob gave name to two places, viz. the well and the ford of Jacob: the former was still known by that name in our SAVIOUR's time, and we read of a famous church formerly built there in the form of a cross, and dedicated to St. John the Baptist; and that the well was just before the rails of the communion-table, to which sick folks resorted in great numbers to drink some of its waters for the recovery of their health. As for the ford of Jacob it is not easy to guess whereabouts it was; but as for those who think, that he forded the Jordan near the place where it empties itself into the sea of Tiberias, they seem to have gone much out of the way, and it is more likely, that he crossed somewhere near Bethshan, since he came back by that way, when he returned from Mesopotamia, and that he crossed the Jabbok at Mahanaim, and went from thence to Peniel and Succoth, which are near Bethshan, and his prayer, that he had passed over that river only with his staff, and now with two bands, makes it probable, that he came back the same way he went.

gent

gent drugs ; after which they began to anoint the body with oil of cedar, myrrh, cinamon, and caſſia, and this laſted thirty days. They next put it into ſalt of nitre during the ſpace of forty days longer ; ſo that they allowed threeſcore and ten days to compleat the ceremony[x]. This method however was only uſed for perſons of the greateſt rank ; the meaner people had a cheaper way, but Joſeph was too ſenſible of his father's merit to ſpare any coſt on him. His being in deep mourning making him unfit to appear at court, he begged of ſome of Pharaoh's officers to acquaint him of his father's death, and with his laſt commands, who made no difficulty to grant his favourite's juſt requeſt, and ordered moreover the chief officers of his houſhold, and the grandees of the kingdom, to accompany the funeral pomp. All Jacob's family went likewiſe along with it, none ſtayed behind but their wives and little ones. The cavalcade conſiſted of a great number of chariots, and a vaſt multitude of men on horſeback. As ſoon as they had croſſed the river Jordan, and were entered into the land of Canaan, they made a halt of ſeven days at the threſhing-floor of Atad, and there performed a funeral ceremony, which made the Canaanites call the place Abel-Mizraïm, or the mourning of the Egyptians. They then continued their march 'till they arrived at Machpelah, where Iſrael's ſons depoſited him in the cave, and then returned to Egypt with the reſt of their company. It was then that Joſeph's brethren began to fear his reſentments for the former wrongs they had done him ; to prevent which as much as they could, they ſent an humble meſſage to him, that it was their father's earneſt requeſt to him, that he would forget all paſt injuries, and take them ſtill under his protection. Such an injurious and undeſerved ſuſpicion might have had a quite contrary effect than they deſired, had he been of a leſs generous temper ; but Joſeph was ſo far from reſenting it, or enquiring into the validity of this pretended laſt requeſt of their father, which he never had heard of before, though he was the proper perſon to whom it ſhould have been made, that he could not refrain his tears, whilſt the meſſenger was acquainting him with the concern and dread his brethren were in : to remove which he ſent immediately for them, and received them with the ſame affection as when Jacob was alive ; he excuſed and comforted them, and gave them ſuch freſh aſſurances of his future love and protection, that they went joyfully home to their families, though probably very much amazed at the greatneſs of his ſoul, a virtue to which they ſeem to have been utter ſtrangers.

[x] See before, p. 264.

HE outlived his father about ſixty years, and when he found his death approaching, he ſent for his brethren and told them, with the ſame prophetic ſpirit that Jacob had done before, that GOD would, according to his promiſe, bring their poſterity out of Egypt into the land of Canaan: he charged them therefore not to bury him there, but to lay his body in a coffin, and depoſit it in ſome place where they might find it, and carry it away with them, and bury it in the ſpot of ground which Jacob had given to him by his laſt will. He gave up the ghoſt ſoon after [z], and his brethren took care to fulfil his laſt requeſt, having firſt got him embalmed, after the manner of the Egyptians (W). The [z] Ibid cap. ult.

(W) The Jewiſh rabbies have been very fertile in their inventions, in adding many particulars to the life and death of this great man, of which there is not the leaſt footſtep in ſcripture. An inſtance of the firſt kind is the bloody fight, which he had with one Tzepho, the ſon of Eliphaz, at his father's funeral, who would have withſtood their burying him in that cave of Machpelah, diſputing their title to that ground, whom Joſeph and his men having overcome, carried away with them into Egypt, and kept him there a priſoner as long as Joſeph lived; but as ſoon as he was dead, Tzepho found means to eſcape into Italy. This ſtory is quoted by ſome learned rabbies (301) out of Joſephus Ben-gorion, by which name the Jews call Joſephus the hiſtorian After his death, they tell us, the magicians of Egypt told Pharaoh, that if he had a mind to keep the Hebrews in his dominions, he muſt hide the body of Joſeph in ſome place where they ſhould never find it; for it would be impoſſible for them to go out of Egypt without it: upon which his body was ordered to be put into a אדון של תק ניכרים cheſt that weighed 500 talents, which, even according to the Syrian talent which is but 12 pound, amounted to 6000 pound weight, which they carefully laid in the bottom of one of the branches of the Nile, after they had turned the courſe of it another way, whilſt they ſunk it in the mud: and that Moſes was forced to work a miracle to get it out and carry it away (302). Some tell us, that his coffin was carefully laid up in the king's treaſury, becauſe his magicians had foretold, that if ever it was carried out of Egypt, the land

(301) R. Abr. Sepharhaji. R. Moſ. Gerund. (302) Elle Haddevarim Rabba. ſect. זאת הברכה See alſo the life of Moſes, publiſhed by Gaulmain in French p. 32. and his notes, l. 2. c. 2.

The ſequel of the ſtory ſhews how punctually their poſterity fulfilled the latter part of his will, taking his body with them, and burying it in the place which he had appointed (X). He was 110 years old, when he died, an land would fall into moſt terrible darkneſs, and be plagued with an infinite number of other evils (303): beſides theſe Jewiſh fables, Joſeph has likewiſe been thought to have inſtructed the Egyptians in all thoſe ſciences which they became ſo famous for, by applying to him that verſe in the pſalms, that he might inſtruct his (Pharaoh's) princes, and teach his ſenators wiſdom. In a word, he has been taken for Serapis, Oſiris, Adonis; for Mercury, alias Hermes; for the famous Thaut, or Hermes Trismegiſt, the reputed inventor of arts and ſciences (304): on the other hand, ſome heathen authors (305) tell us, that he learned ſeveral magic arts in Egypt, and in particular that of interpreting ſigns and dreams, and there is a book of magic ſtill extant, which has been falſely attributed to him, entitled Joſeph's Looking-glaſs: it is mentioned by Trithemius, Naude, and others. He is thought to have been the inventor of the art of meaſuring, and contriver of land-marks; which latter is more than probable, becauſe he was forced to diſtribute the lands again to the Egyptians, after the famine was over, which might put him upon excogitating ſome kind of boundaries to them. And Artaphanes, quoted by Euſebius, tells us, that the Egyptians had their fields all in common, 'till he taught them to divide and bound them, that every one might cultivate his own inheritance; adding, that he likewiſe invented the art of meaſuring, which procured him the reſpect and admiration of that people (306); they do ſhew to this day in Egypt ſome wells, baths, and other works of that patriarch, but thoſe eaſtern nations have added ſo many ridiculous fancies of their own to hiſtory, that they do not deſerve to be credited (307).

(X) Notwithſtanding what has been ſaid in the laſt note, we ſhall venture to tell our readers upon the teſtimony of St. Jerom (308) that the Iſraelites raiſed a moſt noble monument to Joſeph's memory, which was ſtill to be ſeen in his days. It ſtood in Shechem, in the field which Jacob bought of Hamor, and which he afterwards gave to him, in which field Joſeph was actually buried (309).

Mohammed in his Koran Sarat XII. gives us a long hiſtory of Joſeph, which he has ſtuffed with many fabulous circumſtances, and which the eaſtern people have ſtill more enlarged upon (310). The Mohammedans pretend to have ſeveral books of his amours with Zo-

(303) Teſtam. XII patriar. in vit. Simeon. (304) Vid. Calmet Hiſt. O. T. c. xxxv. (305) Juſtin ex Trog. lib. xxxvi. (306) Artaph ap. Euſeb. de præpar. lib. ix. cap. xxiii. (307) Vid. Calm. loc. citat. (308) Hieron. qu. hæbr in Geneſ. (309) Joſh. ult. 32. (310) Vid. Marace. notes on the Alcoran. Herbel. Diction. in the word Jouſouph.

leikhab,

an age which came very ſhort of that of his anceſtors, and might probably be owing to his being forced to a different leikhah, Pharaoh's daughter, his maſter Potiphar's wife, which they make uſe of to kindle the love of GOD in their hearts, it being among them what the canticles are with the Jews and Chriſtians, that is, an allegory of the love of GOD and a pious ſoul. As for Mohammed's hiſtory of Joſeph, though it differs much from that of Moſes, yet the reader may not think it amiſs to have a ſketch of it. It is to this purpoſe (311) Joſeph having acquainted his father with his dream of the ſun, moon, and 12 ſtars falling down before him, Jacob forbid him to tell it to his brethren, leſt the devil ſhould put it into their heads to conſpire againſt him, adding, that Joſeph would be the choſen one of GOD, &c. but his brethren, ſeeing that he was better beloved than they, reſolved to murder him; to which end they perſuaded their father to ſend him into the fields with them, under pretence that it would be a diverſion to him, promiſing at the ſame time, that they would take great care of him: Jacob anſwered, that he was afraid leſt they ſhould be careleſs of him, to which they replied, are you afraid the wolves ſhould come and eat him in our preſence, or that we ſhall not have ſtrength enough to defend him? The father being thus prevailed upon, they took him next morning along with them, and flung him into a well; they came home that ſame night, and told him, that whilſt they were playing and running a race, and Joſeph was watching over their garments, a wolf had come and devoured him; and finding that Jacob was hard to credit their ſtory, they ſhewed him Joſeph's bloody ſhirt; upon which Jacob told them, that they had done the deed, and would certainly anſwer for it before GOD; after which he endeavoured to bear his loſs patiently.

A caravan, which chanced to go by that very day, and wanted ſome water, let down their bucket into the well, and Joſeph laying hold on it was drawn out; they cloathed him forthwith, and carried him into Egypt, where they ſold him for a little ready money. The perſon who bought him gave him in charge to his wife, telling her, that he would one day prove uſeful, and be inſtead of a ſon to them. By that time he had attained the twentieth year of his age, his miſtreſs Zoleikhah became ſo exceſſively in love with him, that ſhe ſhut him up one day in her chamber, and declared her paſſion to him: Joſeph rebuked her for it, and ran towards the door, but before he could open it, ſhe caught hold of his ſhirt, and tore it off his back: her huſband happened to be behind the door, and ſhe no ſooner ſaw him, but ſhe began to make a loud complaint of an attempt made by Joſeph againſt her chaſtity, whom ſhe therefore deſired to be ſeverely puniſhed, appealing to a child that was there in its cradle, for the truth of what ſhe ſaid: the child

(311) Biblioth. Orient. Jouſouph ben Jacub.

ferent way of living from theirs, having continued 80 years in that pinacle of grandeur, to which Pharaoh, or rather his great child readily anſwered, that if the ſhirt was torn before, he was guilty and ſhe innocent; but if it was torn behind, he was innocent, and ſhe accuſed him falſely. The ſhirt upon examination, proving to be rent behind, acquitted Joſeph, and diſcovered the ill intention of his miſtreſs,

The whole city was ſoon filled with the noiſe of this adventure, and Zoleikhah being informed that the ladies ſpoke of it much to her diſadvantage, reſolved to invite them to a feaſt, and whilſt they were eating, to introduce Joſeph to them. She did ſo, and he no ſooner appeared, but his beauty did aſtoniſh them beyond meaſure; inſomuch, that, not knowing any longer what they did, they cut their fingers inſtead of their meat, and whiſpered to one another, that he muſt be an angel and no man! By this means ſhe put a ſtop to their reflections; but it was not long before ſhe made another puſh at her ſervant, though with as little ſucceſs; which ſo enraged her, that ſhe got him ſent into priſon, where he expounded the buttler and the baker's dream. Here he continued confined nine whole years, after which he was fetched out to interpret Pharaoh's dream, which he did ſo much to his ſatisfaction, that he was made ſuperintendant of all his finances.

Mohammed goes on afterwards with the ſtory of his brethren coming to buy corn; of his ſtopping his brother Benjamin, and of his diſcovering himſelf to them; and adds, that Joſeph hearing that his father had wept ſo much for him, that he had loſt his ſight, he gave them one of his ſhirts, and bid them go home, and lay it over his face, and he would recover his ſight; after which he charged them to come back to him with their whole family.

By that time the Caravan was got half way homewards, Jacob told thoſe that were with him, that he ſmelt the ſmell of his ſon Joſeph, deſiring them not to laugh at him, for he was ſure of what he ſaid. Accordingly a few days after one of his ſons brought him Joſeph's ſhirt, and as ſoon as he laid it over his face, his ſight came to him again: he made all the haſte he could to go down into Egypt with his family, and all he had; where Joſeph met him, and taking him by the hand, deſired him not to be afraid of coming into Egypt. He then made him ſit down, whilſt his brethren did fall proſtrate before him, which made him take notice to his father that now his dream was fulfilled. Thus far Mohammed, whoſe followers further add, that Joſeph was 17 years old when he was ſold; that the king who then reigned was Rian the ſon of Walid; that he was likewiſe called Pharaoh, which ſignifies a deſpotic monarch; that Joſeph did afterwards inſtruct him in the knowledge of the true GOD; but that his ſucceſſor, named Rabous, the ſon of Maſſaab, proved a wicked prince: that the Iſraelites continued 430 years in Egypt, from the time of Jacob's firſt coming down, great wisdom and merit had raised him. However, he had the pleasure to see of his offspring to the third generation, which none of his fathers did, viz. Shuthelah and Tahan, the sons of Ephraim, and Eran the son of Shuthelah; as likewise Machir the son of Manasseh, and Gilead Machir's son. These five are those whom the Septuagint version adds to the number of the seventy that came down into Egypt though 'tis plain they were not born 'till some time after *.

How the Israelites, after the death of their great patron and protector, became by degrees as dreadful and odious to the Egyptians, as they grew numerous and powerful, 'till they were at length brought under most cruel slavery, will be seen in the next section. In the mean time we hope, our readers will not be displeased, if we make a short retrospection on their forefathers, and add some few observations on the simplicity of their religion and manner of living, which were neither so obvious, nor could be interspersed in their history, without too frequently interrupting the thread of it. Sure it is, that if we examine them impartially, compare them with those of the most polite and celebrated nations of antiquity, such as were the Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, and many others, and make a candid allowance for the distances of time, place, and other obvious circumstances, they will appear to be the most natural and perfect pattern of civil society, and of a happy life. If therefore their posterity, after they became possessors of that happy land, did so strangely deviate from them, as it will appear by the sequel of this history that they did, it can be attributed down, to their being delivered out of it by Moses, who took care to carry away the bones and coffin of Joseph, which had lain buried in the bottom of the Nile.

* See before, p. 431, (B).

Ebn Batrik, otherwise called Eutychius, patriarch of Alexandria, tells us, that Joseph married Azimah, the daughter of the Kahen of Aen Shem, that is, the priest, or diviner of the fountain of the sun, which was the name of the city of On, called also by the Greeks, Heliopolis. He assures us likewise, that the Nilometer, which is in the city of Memphis, the description of which has been given before, Vol. I. p. 392, &c. and the canal in the city of Cairo, for the discharge of the waters of that river, were Joseph's own works. In a word they attribute to him all the curious wells, cisterns, aqueducts, and public granaries, as well as some obelisks, pyramids, and other antient monuments, all which are still called by his name, and pretend, that he had something shining like a star upon one of his shoulders, which was an indelible character of the gift of prophesy, and a sure token of his future grandeur. to to nothing but to that unavoidable degeneracy, which their long and horrid thraldom had cauſed in them, which took ſuch deep root, that neither their forty years wandering in the wilderneſs, during which time a new generation was, as it were, ſprung up, nor the wholeſome laws, which providence had calculated for their welfare, nor the example of their forefathers, which Moſes had ſet before them in ſuch lively colours; nor, laſtly, all the heavy judgments, which their invincible obſtinacy brought upon them, could effectually cure.

IT muſt be owned, however, that unleſs we can diveſt ourſelves of that fond partiality which we have for the cuſtoms of our own times and country, we ſhall be apt to condemn, not only thoſe of the antient patriarchs, and of the many nations who have cloſely followed them, but likewiſe all thoſe who have commended them for it: that part of their religion which conſiſted in the butchering of a number of living creatures; their plainneſs and ſimplicity; their wandering and laborious life; their ſeeming contempt of arts and ſciences; their real one of eaſe, luxury and high titles; all theſe and many more, will be apt to be cenſured by the lump, and every deviation from it will be looked upon as an improvement in ſociety, and a refinement of their dull inſipid taſte, which ſome will be apt to attribute to the increaſe of arts and ſciences, and others more abſurdly to religion. But it is not to ſuch partial judges that we appeal, for the juſtneſs of theſe remarks, but to the more thinking and unprejudiced ſort, whoſe judgment is not warped by emulation, cuſtom, and example.

AND here we need remount no higher, than where we began our hiſtory, that is, to Abraham. He had converſed with ſome of the antediluvian patriarchs, and was well acquainted with their way of living; or rather he had been educated in it, and was ſo great an admirer of it, that he preferred it to that of thoſe nations he lived amongſt, and brought up his children the ſame way. For here we muſt remember that in thoſe days every family did as it were compoſe a kingdom or free eſtate, of which the chief was in all reſpects, if we except the name and a few needleſs and troubleſome ceremonies, ſupreme and abſolute monarch, and as ſuch made either war or peace, and alliances offenſive or defenſive with his neighbouring kings, as he thought fit[a]: if there was any difference between them, it was only this, that the latter did begin betimes to live in walled and fortified tified towns, whereas the former chose to live more at large, and after the primitive way. In other respects it is plain, they were inferior to none of the contemporary princes, though they despised those pompous titles, and other marks of royal grandeur, which their neighbours so much affected.

[a] Gen. xiii. 13. ibid. xxi. 22. & ſeq.

THEIR riches consisting chiefly, in a prodigious quantity of cattle [b], such as sheep, oxen, camels, and asses (horses we read of none), they were obliged to have a proportionable number of servants and slaves to look after them. Accordingly we find, that Abraham was able to arm upwards of three hundred of his men-servants to Lot's rescue, besides those he left behind to guard his substance, and his old men, women, and children [c]. As for gold, silver, jewels, and such like valuable things, we do not find, that he was possessed of any, 'till after his return from Egypt, where Pharaoh had heaped those rich presents on him, though they might probably barter some of the wool of their flocks for bullion, which was already current in those days; but neither this, nor his other kinds of riches, did exempt him or his posterity from a laborious life, to which their choosing to live in tents for the benefit of often shifting their habitations for the sake of their numerous herds, did unavoidably oblige them. To this pastoral life they likewise joined agriculture, as often as the fruitfulness of the country, the time of their sojourning in it, and other concurring circumstances permitted it. Thus we find Isaac sowing his land in the country of Gerar, where the situation and the king's friendship invited him to make a considerable stay [d]; but it is plain, they always gave the preference to the former, whenever the two kinds proved incompatible; and how laborious that was in those hot countries where water was scarce, and where it rains so seldom, may be gathered from the complaint which Jacob made to his father-in-law [e]. Neither was the fair sex exempt from bearing their share in it; and though Abraham's posterity doth not afford us any instance of it in his own family, where we meet but with one female, viz. Dinah, Jacob's daughter, and she only remembered for her fatal curiosity; yet if we look back into those of his kindred, whom he left in Padan-aram, we shall find, that neither their birth, youth or beauty, exempted them from going to the well with their pitchers, and watering their flocks

[b] Gen. xiii. 6. & seq. ibid. xxxii. 16, & seq. [c] Gen. xiv. 14, &c. [d] Gen. xxvi. 11, 12, & seq. [e] Gen. xxxi — 40, & seq. vid. supr. p. 403.

flocks at proper ſeaſons. This we find to have been the caſe of Rebekah, Rachel, and other fair damſels of that country, and of Jethro's daughters ſome hundred years after them. And how diſtaſteful ſoever this primitive ſimplicity may appear to our preſent age, yet Homer [f] will tell us how much, and how long, it was imitated by the Greeks, whoſe politeneſs is to this day ſo juſtly admired; inſomuch, that the chief employment of the ſeven ſons of Eetion, king of the Cilicians, was the keeping of their father's flocks [g]; and we find that kind of life extolled, not only in Sicily and Greece, but likewiſe in Syria, and other countries above 1500 years after Abraham, in ſome of the moſt beautiful paſtorals of antiquity.

THIS laborious life ſeldom failed to keep both men and women in a good ſtate of health; and as they never wanted a good appetite, nor a good digeſtion, ſo they were the more ſimple in their way of living: the milk of their kine, the fruits of the earth were their common diet; a kid, a fatted calf, or a diſh of veniſon, was reckoned a rich feaſt; and one would think, that Homer had drawn the pictures of his Heroes in his Odyſſes, after that of the patriarchs, ſo far was he from thinking ſuch a life unworthy of the greateſt men. Whoever conſiders that Jacob had been his mother's favourite, and conſequently more tenderly brought up than his brother Eſau, will no doubt wonder at his being ſuffered, at the age of forty, to take a journey of above 500 miles, for ſo far it was at leaſt from Beerſheba to Padan-aram, without a ſervant, or any other conveniency for travelling than his bare ſtaff; but yet it appears, that he had been ſo well enured to that laborious life, that he made no difficulty of laying himſelf down in the open field, as ſoon as night came upon him, and taking the firſt ſtone that came to hand to ſerve him for a pillow [h]. That he took care to breed up his ſons in the ſame hardy way, is plain by his ſending his favourite Joſeph at the age of 16 as far as Hebron, to enquire after his brethren, which was above 80 miles from Mamre, where he dwelt. Neither did Joſeph's hearing, that they were removed about 30 miles farther, diſcourage him from continuing his journey 'till he had met with them [i].

THIS laborious life did not only contribute very much to their health and vigour, but was likewiſe an effectual means to lengthen their days, and to make their deaths ſweet and eaſy. If we except Iſaac, who is deſcribed rather as a contemplative than a laborious man [k], and began to fail in his ſtrength much ſooner than the reſt; we read of no diſeaſes they were ſubject to, nor of any phyſicians they needed, except to embalm their dead bodies. All thoſe, whoſe age is ſet down by Moſes, lived to above 150 years, except Joſeph, whoſe courtly way of living may probably have ſhortened his days [l].

[f] HOMER. Iliad Δ. [g] Idem. Iliad Ζ. [h] Gen. xxviii. 11. [i] Ibid. xxxvii. 17.

THEIR conjugal temperance was in no ways inferior to their other virtues, how far otherwiſe ſoever it may appear at firſt ſight: Abraham lived in a country where polygamy was allowed, and a numerous offspring eſteemed one of the greateſt earthly bleſſings; he ſaw himſelf unfortunately yoked to a barren woman, and though maſter of vaſt poſſeſſions, yet choſe to make his ſervant his heir, rather than to marry another; neither doth he take Hagar to his bed 'till he is promiſed an heir that ſhould come out of his loins, and is perſuaded to it by his wife [m]. The children he had of Ketturah, after Sarah's death, ſhew that his continence was far from being the effect of old age and impotency. Iſaac and his promiſed poſterity had the nobleſt title to all the bleſſings that were denounced to Abraham; Rebekah proves barren for a conſiderable time, and had but two ſons at laſt, and yet we do not find, that ever he expreſſed a deſire of taking another wife [n]. Jacob indeed was unwarily drawn in to marry two ſiſters, and afterwards to take their maids to be his concubines; but whoever conſiders how contented he would have been with Rachel; alone that Leah was, as it were, forced upon him; that Rachel's barrenneſs, and deſire of children, and his fondneſs for her, made him accept of her handmaid; that when he had once done it for one ſiſter, he could not decently refuſe it to the other [o]; that it was the cuſtom of the country for the wives to adopt their handmaids children, and that it was looked upon as conſiſtent with the laws of conjugal fidelity; whoever, I ſay, conſiders all theſe, will not lightly tax him with incontinency upon that account: however, it is plain, that the jealouſies and diſcords between the two ſiſters, and probably between the miſtreſſes and their handmaids, gave but little encouragement to his ſons to follow his example, ſince we do not read of one that did not reſt contented with one wife. Judah indeed is juſtly taxed with incontinency, but it muſt be remembered, that his adventure with Tamar was wholly accidental, and unſought

[k] Ibid xxiv. 63. xxvii. 1 & ſeq. [l] Gen. xlix. 26. [m] Gen. xv 3. ibid xvi. 2. [n] Ibid. xxv. 21, & ſeq. [o] Ibid xxix, & xxx. paſſim.

for

for by him, and that he did not give himſelf that liberty, 'till after his wife's death [p]. However, we are far from undertaking to vindicate all their actions, much leſs do we intend to write panegyrics upon them; for which reaſon we ſhall forbear expatiating upon their extraordinary hoſpitality to ſtrangers, their faithfulneſs to their allies, and many other eminent virtues they were conſpicuous for; and ſhall content ourſelves with adding a few words concerning their religion, and ſhewing that that joined to their primitive ſimplicity, afforded an excellent pattern for a civil and a happy life; and that every deviation of theirs from it doth indeed give us a lively inſtance of the early depravity of mankind, but caſts no reflexion on their excellent and admirable rule of life, which gave every head a full and abſolute ſway over his whole family, obliged him to breed them up in the knowledge and fear of the true GOD, and a ſtrict obſervance to his laws, which was the moſt effectual means to make them live in that peace and plenty, that eaſe and tranquillity, for which they are ſo juſtly admired.

As for their religion, it was not only the freeſt from idolatry and ſuperſtition, but the ſimpleſt and pureſt in the world, or, at leaſt, that the world was then capable of. It conſiſted chiefly in a ready obedience to GOD's commands, under whoſe immediate guidance they continually were, in a firm reliance on his promiſes under all dangers and difficulties, and in a thankful remembrance and acknowledgment for all his bleſſings and deliverances. This laſt part ſeems to have introduced the religious cuſtom of tithes, if they were not of a much older date: accordingly we find Abraham giving the tenths of all the ſpoils of his late gotten victory to Melchizedek [q], and Jacob vowed the like portion of all his poſſeſſions to GOD, if he would bleſs and bring him back ſafe to his father's houſe [r]. How theſe were at firſt paid, or to whom, is not eaſy to gueſs, whether to Shem or Eber, or any of their deſcendants, who ſtill held the high prieſthood; or, as is moſt likely, by conſecrating a tenth part to religious uſes, ſuch as building of altars, rearing of pillars and monuments, and offering of ſacrifices to GOD, ſince ſuch things as are conſecrated to GOD's worſhip are, in the language of ſcripture, ſaid to be given to GOD. Theſe ſacrifices have indeed ſomething in them that is ſhocking and unnatural, as we obſerved before, and when we conſider how ſoon they began, and how univerſally they ſpread themſelves, reaſon will be at a loſs how to account for their introduction and progreſs, any other way than by ſuppoſing them to be of God's own inſtituting, as types of that grand ſacrifice which Christ was to offer up for the ſins of the world : but this is rather a point of divinity than hiſtory, and ſo out of our ſphere. In all other caſes, it is plain, their religion was pure, ſimple, and uniform, and might have continued ſuch after their deliverance out of Egypt, had not their degeneracy and ſtubborneſs obliged their divine law-giver to clog it with a numerous train of rites and ceremonies, in order to prevent their intermixing thoſe of other nations with their own, as the ſequel of their hiſtory will ſhew. We ſhall only add, that as other nations ſeem to have received from the antient patriarchs the ceremony of ſacrificing beaſts to their gods ; that is, of ſubſtituting an innocent lamb, ſheep, &c. in their guilty ſtead, without retaining the notion of the deſign, or typical inſtitution of them ; ſo it is very probable, that the intended ſacrifice of Iſaac, by the father of the faithful, by which he gave ſuch a glorious teſtimony of his faith, and reliance on God's promiſes, may have given birth to the bloody cuſtom of ſacrificing of children, which became afterwards ſo univerſal, not only among all other nations, but even among the Iſraelites themſelves. The notion of its being enjoined to that patriarch, only as a trial of his faith, might wear off by degrees, and nothing more be remembered of it than the great applauſe and bleſſings he received upon that account ; from which they might conclude as it were a fortiori, that if his bare intention proved ſo meritorious, much more would the real ſacrificing of their own children be ; and when they had once imbibed the notion, that the main merit of ſuch a bloody ceremony conſiſted chiefly in the ſtifling all ſenſe of humanity and natural affection, it was eaſy for them to infer, that the more they did ſo by the cruel torments they put the poor infants to, the more it would enhance the value of the ſacrifice ; but this we ſubmit to the reader's judgment.

[p] Ibid. xxxviii. 12 & ſeq. [q] Gen. xiv. 20. [r] Ibid. xxviii. ult.

other

SECT.

SECT. II.

The hiſtory of the Jews from their Egyptian bondage, to their entrance into the land of Canaan.

The great increaſe of the Iſraelites in Egypt.

WE return now to the Iſraelites in Egypt, who did ſo prodigiouſly increaſe both in number and in ſtrength, during the 215 years of their abode there [a], (A) that the jealous Egyptians had already long ago looked upon them as a dangerous, if not formidable people. And indeed if we conſider to what a prodigious multitude theſe ſeventy ſouls, which came down with Jacob, were increaſed, inſomuch that Moſes tells us, they amounted to 600,000 men, from twenty years and upwards [b], all able to bear arms; beſides thoſe under 20 years of age, old men from ſixty to a hundred and upwards, for they lived even much longer than that, and women, which may be reaſonably ſuppoſed to have been much more numerous than the men, who were allowed a plurality of wives. I ſay, if we conſider this wonderful increaſe (which in a proportionate and moderate computation, allowing them to have brought 70 wives with them, (which is the utmoſt that can be ſuppoſed) will be as 140 to 280,000, that is as 20,000 to one) we ſhall not wonder at Egypt's fearing, leſt they ſhould in a ſhort time cover the whole face of it. Neither need we have recourſe to miracles, as the Jews do [c], for this prodigious increaſe (B). We have

[a] Exod. i. 7. [b] Numb. i. 46. [c] Vid. ABEN-EZRAH, & MUNSTER in loc.

(A) Moſes was ſo ſurprized at this wonderful increaſe of his people, when he came to take an account of them, that he makes uſe of four of the ſtrongeſt verbs in the whole Hebrew tongue to expreſs it, viz. פרו pharù, they fructified, or multiplied like the fruit of trees; ישרצו jiſrezzù, they multiplied like fiſhes; רבו rabbù, they daily increaſed in number; יעצמו jabatzmù, they grew ſtronger and ſtronger (1). Had their hard bondage ſuffered them to have increaſed as much in wiſdom and greatneſs of mind, they had not given him ſo much trouble, as we find they did, both in Egypt and in the wilderneſs.

(B) St. Auſtin (2) thinks, that this prodigious increaſe of the Iſraelites was altogether miraculous, in which many of the Jews agree with him. Aben-Ezra tells us, that they brought forth 3 or have already given in the first volume some tables * of the probable increase of mankind in any number of years; and if this seems to out-do that calculation, it must be remembered, that they had a peculiar promise for it, and a peculiar blessing from God attending them. Neither was their courage or strength less to be feared than their number. The sons of Ephraim had already given a proof of it to the Egyptians, when they made that bold, tho' unsuccessful, attempt upon the Gathites, in one of the cantons of the land of Canaan, even before their father's death, who, as we hinted before, lived upwards of 90 years in Egypt. This adventure, though not recorded by Moses, has been preserved to us by the author of the first book of Chronicles [d], and might easily let the Egyptians see, what the united force of twelve such fructifying tribes might do in process of time, when one single one, of so short a standing, could venture upon such a hazardous enterprize. However that be, it is not easy to fix the time when their bondage began, nor how long they had groaned under it, when Moses was born; sure it is, that from, or even before, that time they began to be more and

(1) Exod. i. 7. (2) Aug. de civit. lib. xviii. cap. 7.

The sons of Ephraim's incursion on the Gathites.

* Vid. Vol. I. p. 223. [d] 1 Chron. vii. 21. Osiand in loc.

4 at every birth; and affirms that a woman may bring forth as far as seven children at once (3). This he seems to have taken from Aristotle (4), or from Trogus, who says, that in Egypt the women were sometimes delivered of 7 children at once: but, without having recourse to such prodigious births, which happen but seldom, we need but suppose, that the Israelites, both men and women, were very fruitful, that they began soon, and continued long in begetting, which has been shewn in the former section to have been the fact. We see no impossibility for 70 males, in the compass of 215 years, to have multiplied to this degree, even at the rate of one child every year; for, according to Simler's computation, 70 persons, if they beget a child every year, will in 30 years time have above 2000 children; of which admit that one third part only did come to procreate, in thirty years more they will amount to 9000; the third part of it will in 30 years more be multiplied to 45,000: according to which moderate calculation, in 210 years, the whole amount will be at least 2,760,000. If therefore there was any thing miraculous or extraordinary in all this, it was, that they should be able to multiply at that rate, notwithstanding their hard labours and cruel bondage.

(3) Aben. Ezra. ap. Munst in loc. Pelican & al. (4) Histor. animal. lib. vii. c. 4.

more

more cruelly oppreſſed by the Egyptians, whoſe unheard of treatment towards that oppreſſed people, might be owing to more cauſes than one; ſuch as their contempt of all nations but their own; their hatred of the Iſraelites, both as ſhepherds and as Hebrews, who killed and lived upon thoſe beaſts that were worſhipped in Egypt; the great difference of religion; envy to ſee them ſo ſucceſsful and the like; but the main, and indeed ſufficient motive mentioned in the text, was, their being grown more mighty than the Egyptians, and the danger there was, leſt upon any war they ſhould join with their enemies, and drive them out of the land [e]. This laſt made ſuch an impreſſion upon them, that though they were reſolved to cruſh them as much as poſſible, if not totally to deſtroy them; yet they did not dare to come to an open rupture with them, but made it their chief endeavours to weaken them by degrees, by hard labours, taxes (C), and all kinds of oppreſſion, as the ſequel of this hiſtory will ſoon ſhew.

They are hated by the Egyptians.

THIS

[e] Exod. i. 9, 10.

(C) It is to be obſerved, that the original words שָׂרֵי מִסִּים Sarè Maſſim, which we tranſlate taſk-maſters, do properly ſignify tax-gatherers; the burthens are mentioned afterwards under another name; ſo that they laid heavy tributes upon them to impoveriſh, and heavy burthens to weaken them. Philo tells us (5), that they were made to carry burthens above their ſtrength, and to work night and day; that they were forced to be workers and ſervers; that they were employed in brick-making, digging and building: that if any of them dropped dead under their burthens, they were not ſuffered to bury them. Joſephus tells us moreover (6), that they were made to dig trenches and ditches; to drain rivers into channels; to wall whole towns, caſting up dikes and banks to keep off inundations; nay to erect phantaſtical pyramids; that they obliged them to learn ſeveral laborious trades, and confined them to perpetual reſtleſs labour. Another author tells us (7), that, in order to render them more odious to the Egyptians, they made them go differently apparelled. But, without troubling ourſelves further than with what Moſes tells us, we ſhall find their work hard enough (8); they were forced to work in clay and brick, and compelled at length to go and ſeek out for ſtubble inſtead of ſtraw, without the leaſt diminution of their taſks, of which if they chanced to come ſhort, which could not poſſibly be avoided, their overſeers were ſeverely beaten for it (9). Thus they tried by theſe three ways to bring them under, viz. by ex-

(5) Philo in vit. Moſis, lem. apud Euſeb. præp.

(6) Antiq. l. ii. c. 9.

(7) Eupo-

(8) Exod i. 14.

(9) Exod. v.

Their cruel bondage. THIS terrible perſecution, if we may be allowed to call it by that name, began under the reign of a new king [f], who knew not Joſeph (D), or had forgot the great ſervices which that acting a tribute to leſſen their wealth, laying heavy burthens on them to weaken their bodies, and thereby to prevent their generating and increaſing.

[f] Ibid. ver. 8.

(D) There was nothing extraordinary in this forgetfulneſs, taking the words of Moſes in their literal ſenſe, if we conſider, that kings were then only elective, and all the ſubjects looked upon as their ſlaves (10). Archbiſhop Uſher mentions ſeven kings between Joſeph's death and this who knew not Joſeph, i. e. in about 60 years, which was more than ſufficient to obliterate all his ſignal ſervices. Some indeed thinking this impoſſible, there being ſtill ſo many monuments extant of them, have underſtood Moſes's words in a leſs ſtrict ſenſe, as if he had not forgot, but refuſed to acknowledge them. Thus St. Paul is made to ſay (11), that he knew not that it was the high-prieſt that cauſed him to be ſmitten, when every child might have known him both by his particular dreſs, and the place where he ſat: whereas it is thought, that he meant, he did not acknowledge him to be the high-prieſt, becauſe he had obtained the mitre by bribery (12); but as Moſes calls this a new king, probably becauſe he was of another family, if not a ſtranger, there will be no reaſon to depart from the literal ſenſe. Who this new king was is not ſo eaſily agreed. Cajetan thinks him to have been an Aſſyrian born, from the words of the prophet (13) My people went down into Egypt to ſojourn there, and an Aſſyrian oppreſſed them But we don't find, in the Egyptian chronicles, any Aſſyrian kings either before Moſes, or for above 1000 years after. Neither could it be Mephres, in whoſe ninth year Joſeph is ſuppoſed to have died, and the bondage to have begun (14), becauſe Levi outlived Joſeph above 23 years (15); whereas the thraldom did not commence 'till all the patriarchs were dead. Some therefore ſuppoſe, that it was Amenophis, becauſe Euſebius thinks, that Moſes was born in the 18th year of his reign, and ſo doth St. Jerom (16). This king is alſo called Memnon, the ſpeaking ſtone, whoſe ſtatue did uſe to ſpeak at the ſun-riſing, and is thought by ſome to have continued 'till our ſaviour's time (17). Archbiſhop Uſher, after Mercator, thinks, is was Rameſes Miamun, the latter part of whoſe ſurname ſeems to have been deduced from the forepart of Amen-Ophis, by which name ſundry of his predeceſ-ſors, that glorious miniſter had done, both to the crown and nation of Egypt. This we need not wonder at after ſo many years, when Ahaſuerus could ſo ſoon forget Mordecai, who had ſo lately ſaved his life [g]. Though it muſt be owned, that had Joſeph's merit been never ſo freſh in their memory, yet that prince's conduct, if politically conſidered, had nothing ſtrange or uncommon; ſince it would rather have been a prodigy, if his gratitude to a man, that had been dead above fifty years, had prevented his taking all the cautious meaſures to ſecure his own kingdom, againſt the danger it ſeemed threatened with from a people, who from an indigent family were become ſuch a numerous and formidable hoſt. The religion of the Iſraelites ſo oppoſite to Egyptian idolatry; their ſtrict union among themſelves; the great riches they had heaped up during Joſeph's life; their indefatigable induſtry in feeding their numberleſs herds, in trade and agriculture; their bodily ſtrength and warlike temper; in all which and many other reſpects, they ſeem to have been far ſuperior to the Egyptians: all theſe I ſay, did ſufficiently juſtify Pharaoh's fears, if not ſors, as well as his ſon after him, were called. This king the above mentioned Primate affirms to have reigned 62 years and 2 months; during which, being frighted at the number and ſtrength of the Iſraelites, he began to oppreſs them with a cruel bondage, laying upon them, beſides their continual labour and tillage of the ground, the building alſo of royal magazines, ſtorehouſes, and the whole cities of Raamſes, or Rameſes, and Pithom; the former of which took its name from the king, and the latter probably from the queen (18), but we ſhall find a great difficulty here, viz. how to reconcile that learned prelate with what Pliny ſays (19), that this Rameſes reigned in the time of the Trojan war, that is, about 300 years after the death of Moſes. Upon the whole the reader is deſired to remember, what we ſaid in the hiſtory of Egypt concerning the difficulty of adjuſting their chronology, and particularly who thoſe kings were under whom the Iſraelites ſuffered this ſlavery †. As for thoſe who pretend, that the Iſraelites continued above 400 years in Egypt, as Genebrard (20), or that they groaned under that ſlavery all that time, as Joſephus (21), they'll ſend us ſtill farther to ſeek for a king that will fit them; but we hope, we have ſufficiently proved their error in our notes in the former ſection, p. 363. not. K, and made it more than probable, that they did not continue there above 215 years.

(10) Diod. Sicul l. ii. c. i. Gen. xlviii. 19, 20. (11) Act. xxiii. 5. (12) Le Scene Eſſay d' une nouvelle verſion & al. (13) Iſai. lii. 4. (14) Vincent in loc. (15) Exod. vi. 16. (16) Euſeb. Hieron. in Chron. (17) Perrer. Simler. & al.

[g] Eſther vi. 1, 3.

(18) Uſher's annal. p. 12. (19) Plin. lib. xxxvi. c. viii.
† Vid. ſup. p. 30. not. (I). (20) Genebrard chronogr. p. 11. ſub. An. M. 2660. (21) Antiq. l. ii. c. ix.

in some measure to authorise those violent measures which he took against them (E). We have seen in our days christian princes take as cruel and inhuman precautions against their own natural subjects, of whose fidelity and loyal attachment they had much greater proofs, than ever the kings of Egypt had from the children of Israel; and yet these persecutions have been justified, nay canonized, whilst Pharaoh's have been branded with the worst of epithets, and are not mentioned without horror.

HAD indeed the Egyptian court been less a stranger to the Israelites, they would have had little cause to fear being driven out of their own country, against which these were so far from designing any attempt of that nature, that they never looked upon themselves but as sojourners for a while, still waiting for the happy day when GOD should call them out of it, to go and conquer another land. But perhaps they wisely concealed this secret from the Egyptians, who would be too loath to lose the service of such a numerous people, not to prevent their going by all possible means. Besides, had it been known, there was still that danger of their joining with their enemies, upon any war or invasion, in order to facilitate their escape. Pharaoh indeed makes the great advantage of their servitude a pretence for not letting them go where Moses desired [h]; but had that been all, it is not likely, he would have taken such effectual methods of depriving himself of it, by totally destroying them: for when he found, by the experience of at least ten years, that neither the hardships he laid upon them, nor all the cruelties which his officers and people used towards them, could prevent their multiplying as fast as, if not faster, than ever [i], he [h] Exod. xiv. 5. [i] Ibid. c. i. 12.

(E) Josephus, not thinking all these sufficient to alarm the king of Egypt, tells us (22), that there was a certain scribe famous for his predictions, who went and told him, that there was a Hebrew child to be born about that very time, that would prove a scourge to the Egyptians, and advance the glory of his nation, and that, if he lived to grow up, he would be eminent for his virtue and courage, and make his name famous to posterity: that Pharaoh was so startled at this prediction, that he ordered the Egyptian midwives, under pain of death, carefully to attend the labour of all the Hebrew women, and to destroy all their males. But, as Moses doth not hint any thing like it, the reader may as safely reject as admit it.

(22) Ibid.

sent

ſent for the two chief Hebrew midwives, Shiphrah, and Puah, (F) and ſtrictly charged them, that when they performed

Pharaoh's cruel orders to the Hebrew midwives.

(F) Though Moſes mentions but two midwives, yet we muſt not ſuppoſe, that they could ſuffice to ſuch a vaſt number of women. Some therefore think, that theſe two only attended on the nobler ſort of Hebrew women, whoſe children Pharaoh chiefly intended to cut off (23), whereas his charge was to kill all the males, none excepted. Others think that the Hebrew women being ſtrong and eaſily delivered (24), might probably ſhift with two midwives; but it is to be conſidered, that this was not ſo much the real fact, as an excuſe of the midwives for not obeying the king's orders. It is therefore more probable that theſe two were the chief ones, who had the charge and direction of all the reſt (25); and that there was ſuch a precedency or ſuperiority among the midwives, whatever Cajetan ſays to the contrary, appears very probable at leaſt from what Plutarch tells us, that among the Grecians, there were ſome, to whom the care of that buſineſs was committed, and that public ſchools were kept for that purpoſe (26). Several learned expoſitors, eſpecially among the Romiſh (27), following the Septuagint and vulgate verſions, which read המילדות העבריות Hamialedoth haghibrioth, the mid-wives of the Hebrew women, inſtead of the Hebrew mid-wives, as the grammatical conſtruction rather requires, have fancied, after Joſephus (28), that they were Egyptian midwives, as being moſt likely to obey the king's bloody command, and that the Iſraelites had no midwives among them. This laſt is wholly improbable, and contrary to ſeveral places of ſcripture; beſides, their being influenced by the fear of GOD to diſobey the king's order, is more applicable to the Hebrew than to the Egyptian midwives. Laſtly, their names, which were wholly Hebrew, ſhews them to have been ſuch; for the word Shiphrah comes from שפר Shaphar, which ſignifies to be, or to make beautiful; and therefore the Jewiſh etymologiſt gives us this reaſon for her being called ſo, viz. becauſe שמשפרת את היולד ſhe ſhaped the babe into form. The other was called Puah, from פעה to cry out, either becauſe they generally make the women to cry out luſtily, that they may be the ſooner rid of their burthen; or becauſe they are moſt accuſtomed to the cries of the mothers and the children. And whereas Joſephus ſays, that Hebrew women would have been too partial to their people, the ſame reaſon did hold againſt Pharaoh's ſetting up Hebrew taſk-maſters over them, which yet we find he did, and the fear of death might as eaſily influence the one as the other nation to obey the king (29). As for thoſe who think,

(23) Cajet. in loc. (24) Exod. i. 19. (25) Pelican. Vatabl. Outran. & al. (26) Vid. Jun. in analys. Villet & al (27) Perrer. Aret. Simler. &c. (28) Ant. l. ii c. ix. (29) S. Aug. lib. contr. mendac. cap. xv, xvi.

with

performed their office to the Hebrew women, they ſhould deſtroy all the males, and let the females take their chance. But theſe women, who feared GOD and abhorred ſuch a cruel office, neglected the king's commands, and ſaved all the children that were born, males as well as females. Pharaoh, being extremely provoked at it, commanded them to be brought before him, and in a threatening tone aſked them, how they dared to diſobey his orders? The women had not their anſwer to ſeek, for they readily told his majeſty, that the Hebrew women did not, like the Egyptian ones, want a midwife to deliver them, being luſty and ſtrong, and bringing forth more like the beaſts of the foreſt than like women (G); ſo that their children were born before they could come to them. Moſes tells us, that their piety and mercy did not go unrewarded, and that GOD bleſſed them with a numerous poſterity [k] (H): not becauſe their having told a lye

They are reproved for their diſobedience, and rewarded by GOD for their piety.

[k] Ibid. ver. 21.

with ſome Hebrew rabbies (30), that theſe two midwives were Jochebed, Moſes's mother, and Miriam her daughter, and that they are here only ſurnamed in alluſion to their office; they are not worth confuting, ſince Miriam could not be above ſix or ſeven years old when this order was given, as we ſhall ſee by and by.

(G) The word חיות chaioth, which we tranſlate lively, doth likewiſe ſignify wild beaſts, and may be taken in that ſenſe in this place, ſeeing the midwives wanted to throw the fault upon the pregnant women, who, like the beaſts of the field, needed no help to be delivered. A great deal of learned duſt has been raiſed about this anſwer of the midwives; as, 1. Whether it was, ſtrictly ſpeaking, a lye. 2. Whether, and how far, it was excuſable in them. 3. Whether the reward mentioned by Moſes was given them for the lye, or for their mercy, or both. It is plain, this anſwer of theirs was the effect of their fear of the king's diſpleaſure, and not of that merciful diſpoſition which they ſhewed towards the poor children: this laſt was the virtue here rewarded, whatever betided them for the lye they told, if it was really ſuch; for it is very probable, that the Hebrew women, who were kept more ſtrictly than the looſe and maſterly Egyptian dames, might have much eaſier labours than they, and ſo have leſs need of midwives. Their anſwer might therefore be true in part, though not in the whole, and as to their ſtretching the truth a little beyond its due bounds, upon a good deſign, they had the examples of Abraham and Iſaac, who made their wives paſs for their ſiſters, though they were only ſo in a far fetched ſenſe.

(H) Our Engliſh, and ſeveral other verſions, having followed the Hebrew too literally, have rendered this place, the lord made

(30) Rab. Abr. Sepharad. & al.

them

lye to the king, made them worthy of no better than a temporal reward, excluſive of any other, as ſome antient fathers have thought [1]. But Moſes records this temporal recompence, as them houſes; which though it may imply the ſame ſenſe we have given it, yet it is too obſcurely expreſſed, and has led ſome expoſitors, for want of attending to the Hebrew idiom, into ſome abſurd notions. Thus St. Jerom underſtands it of houſes in heaven (31); others of ſtrong houſes built by the Iſraelites, to defend them againſt the rage of Pharaoh (32); others, thinking them to have been Jochebed and Miriam, have underſtood it of the kingdom and prieſthood, which was afterwards ſettled upon their poſterity; becauſe Jochebed was mother to Aaron, and Miriam to Caleb (33); but, beſides that Miriam was too young for ſuch an office, it is not certain ſhe was Caleb's mother; on the contrary, Joſephus tells us (34), that ſhe was the wife of Hur. Some again taking them to have been Egyptians, have underſtood it of their being incorporated into the common-wealth of Iſrael (35), as Rahab afterwards was. Others think that their families were enriched by a particular bleſſing (36); but the trueſt ſenſe is, that their houſes or families were greatly increaſed. For the word בֵּן Ben, a ſon in the Hebrew, comes from בָּנָה Banah, to build, becauſe he is as it were the builder of the houſe or family: in this ſenſe Sarah gives her maid to Abraham, that ſhe might be built, that is be made a mother by her (37). Accordingly the Pſalmiſt (38) ſays, who maketh the barren woman to become a houſe or family, and to be a joyful mother of children (39).

[1] GREGOR. lib. viii. moral.

There is ſtill one difficulty more in the text, which is, that the word לָהֶם lahem, to them, is of the maſculine gender; whereas if it had related to the midwives, it ſhould have been לָהֵן lahen, from which ſome have imagined, that it refers to the Egyptians who built themſelves ſtrong houſes to put the pregnant Hebrews in, that they might not elude the king's deſign: but if that had been the caſe, he muſt rather have built large cities to have ſufficed the vaſt multitude of Hebrew women. Others think that it was the Iſraelites, and not the midwives, that were ſo multiplied; becauſe, ſay they, women cannot be ſaid to build families, but men (40); but the contrary of this is plain, by the bleſſing which was given to Ruth (41), that ſhe might prove like Rachel and Leah, which two did build the houſe, or family of Iſrael. We rather therefore think it more probable, that the Mem is put for the Nun, which very often happens, and the maſculine for the feminine, (31) Hieron. in cap. lxv Iſai. (32) Sepharadi in loc. (33) R. Salom. & al. (34) Ant. l iii. c. 9 (35) Vatabl. Pined. &c. (36) Auguſt. Theodor. (37) Gen. xvi 2. (38) Pſ. cxiii. 9. (39) D. Kimchi, Perrer, Le Scene, &c. (40) Simler. Jun. Villet in loc. (41) Ruth. iv. 11.

nine,

as beſt ſuiting the carnal people he had to do with, who ſeem to have had little thought of another life, if they could but make themſelves comfortably happy in this.

The Iſraelites commanded to drown all their male-children.

HOWEVER, Pharaoh, finding that theſe underhand ſtratagems proved ineffectual, reſolved to act more openly againſt the Iſraelites, and to make the parents become the executioners of their own children. To this end he iſſues out an order, under the ſevereſt penalties, that every Hebrew male-child that was born, ſhould be caſt into the Nile, and that none but the females ſhould be ſuffered to live; by which the people ſaw themſelves obliged either to drown their own children, or to ſee it done by the Egyptians, as ſoon as they were diſcovered, and themſelves ſeverely puniſhed for not obeying the king's edict. Such a bloody command could not but cauſe the greateſt conſternation in the afflicted Iſraelites, too prone naturally to deſpond and deſpair of GOD's promiſes. They thought themſelves on the eve of their deliverance from the hardeſt of ſlaveries; a glorious deliverer was promiſed to them, whom they now ſee condemned to die as ſoon as born. But GOD, whoſe deſigns could not be fruſtrated either by the private artifices or open violence of the king of Egypt, made him the inſtrument of bringing up that very child whom he took ſuch pains to deſtroy.

AMRAM, the ſon of Kohath and grandſon of Levi, had married Jochebed, the daughter of Levi, his own aunt (I), by nine, as we find it in the next chapter (42), where the maſculine relative is applied to Jethro's ſeven daughters, and many other places beſides (43); and that the maſculine pronoun is given to the midwives by way of excellency, which is no uncommon thing in the ſacred tongue.

(I) We have ventured to call Jochebed Amram's aunt, though the Septuagint, Vulgate, and after them many learned expoſitors, both Papiſts and Proteſtants, have thought, that ſhe was no more than his uncle Kohath's daughter, and conſequently his couſin-german, becauſe the marriage of an aunt was afterwards forbidden in the Levitical law (1). For though the word דוד Dod in the original, doth ſometimes ſignify an uncle's ſon(2), and דודה Dodah, an uncle's daughter or couſin-german; yet, ſeeing Moſes tells us (3), that ſhe was born unto Levi, and accordingly calls her Amram's aunt (4), in another place, we thought we might ſafely give her that name (42) Exod. ii. 17. (43) Vatabl. Piſcat. Munſt. & al. in loc.

(1) Nic. de Lyr. Moutan. Cajetan. Perrer. Caſtal. & al. in loc.
(2) Jerem. xxxii. 12. (3) Numb. xxvi. 59. (4) Exod. vi. 20.

afte

by whom he had had two children before the king's edict, viz. Miriam and Aaron (K); but Moſes not being born till ſome time after the promulgation of it, and he proving a lovely and beautiful child, GOD inſpired them with a more than ordinary reluctancy to obey it; ſo that they ventured to keep him privately during the ſpace of three months (L), till after many learned men (5). And here we cannot forbear taking notice of a miſtake, which Calmet muſt have been led into by ſome Amanuenſis, who mentions the learned Uſher in the number of thoſe who think, that ſhe was but firſt-couſin to Amram; whereas the contrary appears by the very place quoted by him, where that prelate calls her Levi's daughter, and Amram's aunt and wife. Some Hebrew writers (6) pretend, that ſhe was born about the time that Jacob came down to Egypt; at which rate ſhe muſt have been 135 years old when Moſes was born, that is, above 40 years older than Sarah was when ſhe bore Iſaac: but had Moſes's birth been ſo miraculous, we need not doubt, but he would have recorded it as well as that of Iſaac. It is therefore more likely, that Levi begot her in Egypt in the 100th year of his age, which was nothing wonderful, ſeeing Abraham begot ſeveral children of Keturah after the 137th of his; and Jacob begot Benjamin when he was 107; and as for Jochebed, ſhe may be ſafely ſuppoſed to have bore Moſes when ſhe was 68 years old, nothing being more common than for the Hebrew women in thoſe days to bear children at, and even after, that age (7); and then we need not to go ſeek for another Jochebed, to make her coincide with the time of Moſes's birth, as ſome have done, ſince whatever other of that name were found, ſhe muſt be Amram's aunt, as the text calls her in the places above quoted.

Moſes is born, Year of the Flood, 1428. Year before Chriſt 1571.

and concealed three months.

(K) Though Moſes doth mention nothing of the age of his ſiſter, either when ſhe was born, or when ſhe died, yet it is plain, ſhe was the eldeſt of the three, becauſe ſhe was old enough to watch Moſes when he was expoſed; whereas Aaron was but three years older than he; but that ſhe ſhould be ſo old as the Jews make her, viz. to have been one of the two midwives mentioned in a former note, is both improbable, and contrary to the opinion of our chronologers and expoſitors, who make her but ten years old at moſt when Moſes was born.

(L) This pious concealment is ſufficiently juſtified by St. Stephen, and the epiſtle to the Hebrews (8), not only on the account of the child's beauty, which is alſo mentioned by Juſtin out of Trogus, but alſo upon the account of their faith, they looking upon him as the future deliverer of their nation. However, Joſephus (9) tells us, that Amram, finding his wife with child, and being ſolicitous about at laſt, fearing the extreme danger of a diſcovery, which would have proved fatal both to the child and themſelves, they were forced, though with the utmoſt regret, to expoſe him like the reſt. However, nature, ſhrinking at the thoughts of his immediate death, made them contrive to make him a ſmall ark of bull-ruſhes, or rather of the flags of the tree of which the Egyptians made their paper [m], which was ſtrong enough to hold out the water, and ſmooth enough to receive the pitch and tar with which it was beſmeared, and by its lightneſs fitteſt to ſwim with the child's weight. This ark being daubed with pitch within and without, they put the child in it, and, committing him to the mercy of the waves, or rather to the care of providence, they left Miriam his ſiſter, who was then about eight years of age, at a convenient diſtance to watch and ſee what would become of him. The reeds and flags, with which that river abounds [n], ſoon and expoſed to the common fate,

(5) Chald. Paraph. Jun. Munſt. Pagnin. Simler. Uſſer. & al. (6) Calm. Hiſt. V. T. lib. ii p. 296. not. b. Uſſer. Annal. ad An. Mund 2385. (7) Vatabl. in loc. (8) Act. vii. 20. Hebr. xi. 13. (9) Ant. lib. ii. c. ix.

[m] JOSEPH. Ant. l. ii. c. 9. [n] Iſai. xviii. 2. HERODOT. lib. ii. DIODOR. SICUL. lib. 1. & al.

the king's edict, prayed earneſtly to GOD to put an end to this dreadful perſecution, and that GOD appeared to him and told him, that he would ſhortly free his people from it, and that the ſon, that ſhould ſhortly be born to him, ſhould prove the happy inſtrument of their glorious deliverance, and eterniſe his own name thereby; —— that this made them conceal him as long as they could, but fearing a diſcovery, they reſolved to truſt him to the care of providence, ——— who accordingly conducted Pharaoh's daughter to the river's ſide, and inſpired her with ſuch ſentiments of pity, that ſhe adopted him for her ſon. He calls that princeſs Thermuthis, and after him Epiphanius in Panario, and others: Artaphanes (10), Meris, and the Alexandrian chronicle Myrrina. Joſephus adds further (11), that Thermuthis having ſent for ſeveral wet nurſes one after another, the child did ſcornfully turn away his head from their breaſt; and that Miriam, who was then preſent, told that princeſs, that if the nurſe and the child were of different nations, her milk would never agree with it, but that if an Hebrew woman was fetched, he would probably take the breaſt from her. Upon which ſhe was bid to go for one, and quickly brought the child's mother, whom he fell a ſucking moſt heartily, to the admiration of the princeſs and all the by-ſtanders. Thus far Joſephus. The Jews obſerve further, that the word river here uſed, is not נהר Nahar, which ſignifies a great river ſuch as the Nile was, but יאור Jeor, which ſignifies a river, or rather canal, that is drawn from the great one to water the country (12); and as the land of Egypt abounded every where with the latter, the Iſraelites needed not to go far for a place to drown their children in.

(10) Ap. Euſeb. præp. lib. ix. cap. iv. (11) Ant. loc. cit. (12) Ibid.

ſtopped

ſtopped the cradle from being carried by the current, and here it was that GOD ſent him a happy deliverance from all future dangers on account of the king's edict.

WHILST his ſorrowful mother was retiring from him, providence directed thither the princeſs, whom he had made choice of to breed him up as her own. It was Pharaoh's daughter, who, being come to the river with deſign to bathe herſelf, ſpied the ark as ſhe was walking along the ſhore. Her curioſity ſoon made her ſend one of her retinue to fetch it to her. It was not long before her ſurprize at the ſight of ſo beautiful a child, was ſucceeded by an irreſiſtible love and pity for him, whoſe cries and tears would have reached a heart leſs gentle and pitiful than hers. She immediately concluded, that it was the child of ſome of thoſe unfortunate Hebrews, who groaned under her father's heavy thraldom; her pity told her, that ſo lovely a boy deſerved a better fate, and that it was her duty, ſince chance had thus thrown him in her way, at any rate to ſave him from the common ruin.

and taken up.

PROVIDENCE, which conducted all this ſcene, put it into her heart to have him educated as her own ſon, and into young Miriam's head to approach the princeſs, and to offer herſelf to fetch her an Hebrew nurſe to ſuckle him. She was no ſooner bid to go, but ſhe flew with all imaginable joy to call the mournful Jochebed, who did not make them wait long, before ſhe came and received the dear infant from the hands of the princeſs, and with him an expreſs order, to take the ſame care of him as if it had been her own. At the ſame time ſhe told her, that as ſhe did not know the boy's name, ſhe would give him that of Moſes, ſeeing ſhe had drawn him out of the water (M); and having promiſed her an and brought young Miriam up to Pharaoh's daughter.

(M) Moſes is here thought to have Hebraized his name, in order to expreſs the ſenſe of the Egyptian one, which had been given him by Pharaoh's daughter †. The word Mo, or Moy, in the Egyptian tongue, according to Joſephus *, ſignifies water; and Yſes or Iſes ſignifies preſerved, and ſo Mo-yſes, one preſerved out of the water. But Aben Ezra tells us, out of an Arabic book, entituled עבודת האדמה, or, the cultivation of land; that Moſes was called מוניום Monios, or Monious, which in the Egyptian tongue ſignifies drawn out (13); but it is very likely, that if his name had differed ſo much, and had been altogether Egyptian, Moſes an ample reward for her care of him, ſhe returned to the palace, without acquainting any one with the adventure, whilſt the joyful mother went home to impart to her huſband the news of this happy accident.

† Vid. Vol. I. p. 339. (H). * Ant. loc. citat. (13) Aben Ezra, in loc.

THIS ſignal care of providence failed not to make them look upon Moſes as a child deſigned for ſome glorious purpoſe, and to give him an education ſuitable to the idea they had conceived of him, whilſt he ſtayed with them. They brought him in due time to Pharaoh's daughter, who adopted him for her ſon, and had him brought up in all the kinds of learning which that country was famous for [q] (N). However, would have taken notice of it, as he doth of the new name that was given to Joſeph, or as Daniel doth his own, and that of his three friends. It is therefore moſt likely, that the word Moſeh is derived from the verb משה Maſſah, which ſignifies to draw out, and is taken in that ſenſe by the Pſalmiſt, Pſalm xviii. ver. 17. ימשני ממים רבים he ſhall draw me out of many waters. Which verb might probably be common both to the Hebrew and Egyptian tongues, both in ſound and ſignification (14), only with this difference perhaps, that in the Egyptian it may be in the paſſive, and ſignify drawn out; whereas in the Hebrew, it is the participle active, drawing out, and may allude to his bringing the Iſraelites out of their bondage.

His education.

[q] Act. vii. 22.

(N) Clemens Alexandrinus tells us (15), that Moſes was taught arithmetic, geometry, phyſic, muſic, and hieroglyphics, otherwiſe called enigmatical philoſophy: to which Philo adds (16) aſtronomy, which he learned from the Chaldeans, and the Aſſyrian characters, from the Aſſyrians; and that they ſent for the beſt maſters from Greece, to inſtruct him in all liberal arts and ſciences: but that was not a time for the Egyptians, who excelled the reſt of the world in all ſorts of learning, to ſend for maſters from Greece, which rather ſtood in need of Egyptian teachers; ſo that when Moſes is ſaid to have been inſtructed in all the learning of Egypt, it plainly implies, that he had the beſt and moſt learned education, that the whole world could then give him. If it be aſked how the Egyptians came by all thoſe ſciences, as we can affirm nothing certain or new concerning it, we ſhall content ourſelves with referring the reader to what has been ſaid of it, in the deſcription of that country in a former chapter. An antient author, quoted by Clement biſhop of Alexandria, and by Euſebius (17), calls Moſes the firſt of all the ſages or wiſe-men, and ſays, that he was the firſt in-ever, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that his parents had ſo well inſtructed him in their religion, and taken ſuch care to let him know both what relation they bore to him, and what hopes they had conceived of his being deſigned by heaven to be the deliverer of his nation, that he made no other uſe of the education which the princeſs gave him, but to confirm himſelf more and more againſt the ſuperſtitions and idolatry of the Egyptians, and to make himſelf fit to anſwer thoſe ends, for which he ſeemed deſigned by providence. It was this noble motive, which made him ſympathize with the oppreſſed Hebrews, and prefer the reproachful and deſpiſed name of Iſraelite, to all the pomp and glory of Pharaoh's court [r]. It was this generous love to his people, which made him venture to viſit and commiſerate them, and, where it was in his power, to relieve them from their intolerable oppreſſion, though at the hazard of his own life. For having obſerved one day an Egyptian uſing an Hebrew with ſome uncommon barbarity, being perhaps one of thoſe cruel taſk-maſters, whom Pharaoh had ſet over the Hebrew ones, and who uſed to beat them, upon the leaſt default of thoſe that were under their inſpection; Moſes was ſo exaſperated at it, that he had only patience enough to look about and ſee that the coaſt was clear, before he fell upon him, killed him, and buried his carcaſs in the ſand. If what Joſephus tells us [s] be true, that he had before this time been at the head of Pharaoh's troops, and made ſeveral ſucceſsful campaigns againſt the Ethiopians, who had ravaged and plundered ſome provinces of Egypt (O), we ſhall not wonder venter of the art of grammar, which he taught to the Iſraelites, from whom the Phœnicians received it, and the Greeks from them.

(14) Simler. Oſiander. in loc. Villet in Exod. ch. ii. quæſt. 17. (15) Clem. Alex. lib. i. (16) Philo in vit. Moſis. (17) Eupolem. ap. Clem. Alexandr. ſtrom. lib. i. & ap. Euſeb. præp. lib. ix. cap. xxvi.

He kills an Egyptian.

[r] Hebr. xi, 24, &c. [s] Ant. lib. ii. c. x.

(O) A great deal of pains has been taken to find Moſes ſuitable employment for thoſe forty years of his abode in Egypt. Joſephus has given us ſeveral remarkable particulars of his life during that time, which having nothing contrary to the text, but ſeeming rather to have been univerſally known and believed by the Jews of his time, the reader may perhaps be glad of an abſtract of them. He tells us, that the princeſs Thermuthis, having no children of her own, and having adopted Moſes on the account of the ſingular beauties of his body and mind, brought him to her father who took him into his arms, and received him with great tenderneſs, and taking his crown off his head, laid it on that of the boy's; but Moſes, inſtead of being pleaſed with it, took it off, flung it to the ground, and ſet his foot upon it: whereupon the ſame prieſt, who had foretold his birth, cried wonder at his martial temper ſhewing itſelf upon ſuch an occaſion as this ; but, as we are not ſure, that what this hiſtorian ſays is really fact, ſeeing Philo, who had purpoſely wrote Moſes's life, and had as great opportunities of being informed of cried out, that he ought to be put to death immediately, and that Egypt could not be ſafe otherwiſe. But Thermuthis ſoon ſnatched him away, the king no ways oppoſing it, and left the old prophet to rave at his leiſure, who ceaſed not to contrive means to be rid of a perſon ſo dangerous to the kingdom.

After this Moſes, being grown to man's eſtate, had an opportunity offered him of ſhewing his courage and conduct. The Ethiopians, who inhabited the upper lands, on the ſouth ſide of Egypt, had made many dreadful incurſions, plundered, and ravaged all the neighbouring parts of the country, and beat the Egyptian army, which Pharaoh had ſent to oppoſe them, in a ſet battle, and were become ſo proud of their ſucceſs, that they began to march towards the capital of Egypt. In this diſtreſs the Egyptians had recourſe to the oracle, which anſwered, that they muſt get an Hebrew general at their head. As none was more promiſing than Moſes, the king deſired his daughter to conſent, that he ſhould go and head his army ; but ſhe, after having firſt expoſtulated with her father, how unreaſonable it was for the Egyptians to implore the aſſiſtance of a man, whom they had been ſo long plotting againſt, did not give her conſent, 'till ſhe had his promiſe and oath, that no attempt ſhould be hatched againſt her ſon. Moſes's firſt care, as ſoon as he was at the head of the Egyptian army, was to reach the enemy as ſoon as poſſible, and inſtead of going up the Nile, as was uſual before, he choſe to croſs the country, and thereby ſhorten the way, and ſurprize the Ethiopians, who could not expect him to come by that way, becauſe that whole country was infeſted by flying, and other poiſonous ſerpents, which did even poiſon the very air ; but Moſes found out a method to rid his army of that danger, by carrying with him a vaſt number of birds called Ibis in iron cages, whoſe nature is to devour all ſorts of ſerpents, and to be friendly to all other creatures. His project ſucceeded to admiration, and the birds being once let looſe, made a ſpeedy end of all thoſe venemous creatures, and opend to him a quick and ſafe paſſage to the enemies army, which having taken at unawares, he cut it all in pieces. He afterwards entered their country, took ſeveral of their cities, and obliged them to retire into the city of Saba, called afterwards Meroe by Cambyſes, where he cloſely beſieged them. The place being ſtrongly fortified, and ſituated in the middle of an iſland, kept him employed ſome conſiderable time, and the ſiege would in all probability have laſted much longer, had not Tharbis, the king of Æthiopia's daughter, fallen in love with him, as ſhe ſaw him fighting, with the utmoſt gallantry and valour, from the top of the city wall. She therefore ſent privately to him to let of all the particulars of it as Joſephus had, is altogether ſilent about it, and Moſes himſelf is ſo far from mentioning any ſuch warlike proweſs, that he rather deſcribes himſelf as a man of the utmoſt meekneſs and patience; we ſhall be forced to ſuppoſe, that he was ſtirred up by ſome divine impulſe, as being the perſon choſen by heaven to be the deliverer of Iſrael. This ſeems to be hinted at by St. Stephen *, and we may probably ſuppoſe, that the injury done to the Hebrew was of ſuch a nature, that it deſerved death; or that it could not be prevented but by the death of the Egyptian. However that be, Moſes was not ſo ſafe as he thought himſelf, for endeavouring ſoon after to compoſe a difference between two Hebrews, whoſe cruel ſlavery could not hinder them from injuring one another, the moſt guilty of the two gave him a very ſaucy anſwer, aſking him, whether he deſigned to kill him as he had done the Egyptian (P)? Finding, therefore, that let him know, that the city ſhould be ſurrendered to him, upon condition that he ſhould marry her immediately after. Moſes conſented to the conditions, and, having taken poſſeſſion of the place and of the princeſs, returned with his victorious army to Egypt, where, inſtead of reaping the fruits of his lawrels, the ungrateful Egyptians accuſed him of murder to the king, who, having already taken ſome umbrage at his valour and great reputation, was reſolving to rid himſelf of him. Moſes, having ſome ſuſpicion of it, made his eſcape, and, not daring to go by the common roads for fear of being ſtopped by the king's guards, was forced to go through a great deſert to reach the land of Midian *. Thus far Joſephus, from whoſe account we may gather, that there were three motives why Pharaoh and his people ſought Moſes's death. Namely, 1. their envy at his great ſucceſs and conſummate wiſdom in this warlike expedition. 2 Their jealouſy leſt he ſhould attempt to make ſome dangerous inſurrection in Egypt. And laſtly, the propheſies which that country was threatened with from an Hebrew. To which Philo (18) adds a fourth, namely, his being too great a friend and favourer of the Hebrews, whom Pharaoh did already look upon as his moſt dangerous enemies.

* Acts vii. 35.

(P) A jeſuit, who has lately writ the hiſtory of the people of GOD, thinks it highly probable, that theſe two quarrelling Hebrews were that Jannes and Jambres, mentioned by the apoſtle (19) to have withſtood Moſes, becauſe they would not acknowledge him to have been a proper judge of their quarrel, though GOD had made

* Ant. lib. ii. cap. x. & xi. (18) Philo in vit. Moſis. (19) 2 Tim. iii. 8.

that the fact was known, and fearing, leſt, if it ſhould come to Pharaoh's knowledge, he would ſuſpect him of being too much in the intereſt of the Iſraelites, and puniſh him for the death of the Egyptian, he was forced to fly into the land of Midian; not daring to rely too much upon the protection of his adoptive mother, or having perhaps already diſclaimed her adoption, as ſome are inclined to think. It is ſuppoſed, however that he had made uſe of that princeſs's intereſt long before, to get that bloody edict againſt the Hebrew male children recalled, ſince the ſequel of the hiſtory ſhews, that that order had not been put in force for ſome time. It was well for him, however, he left Egypt ſo ſoon; for the news of the ſlain Egyptian was brought to the king, and in all likelihood aggravated with the blackeſt circumſtances by the courtiers, who could not but hate a man in ſo high eſteem as he was; ſo that if Pharaoh could have caught him, he would infallibly have put him to death: but Moſes was out of his reach, having paſt thoſe great deſerts that lay between Egypt and Midian (Q), and being ſafely got near hoſpitable Jethro's made him the judge of all his people (20). What induces him to think ſo is, that their names are Hebrew ones; for which reaſon he thinks, that they could not be the Egyptian magicians whom Pharaoh made uſe of in oppoſition to Moſes. But in order to make theſe names Hebrew, he muſt with ſome Jews call them Jochanan and Mambri, or Jonah and Jambri (21); but we ſhall ſhew in the ſequel of this hiſtory, that theſe two men, let their right names be what they will, were the magicians who mimicked ſeveral of Moſes's miracles, though they could not follow him throughout.

(Q) We muſt remember not to confound this land of Midian, of which an account has been already given *, with another of that name, whoſe chief city was alſo called Midian, and might be a colony of the other, which was ſituate by Arnon and Areopolis, according to St. Jerom, who tells us, the ruins of it were ſtill to be ſeen in his days (22). Whereas this, which Moſes went to, was in Arabia Petræa, whoſe metropolis was called Petra, not far from mount Horeb, where he kept Jethro's flocks (23); which mountain was either near that of Sinai, or more probably Sinai and Horeb were two tops of the ſame mountain (24); the former of which St. Paul places in Arabia (25); though it is more probable, that

(20) Berruyer Hiſtoire du people de Dieu. Tom. ii. p. 25. (21) Buxtorf. Lexic. Talmudic. Fabric. de Apocryph. Vet Teſt.
* Vide ſup. p. 110. & ſeq. (22) Hieron. loc. Hæbraic.
(23) Exod. iii. 1. (24) Joſ. Antiq. l. ii. c. xii. (25) Galat. iv. 25.

Horeb

thro's habitation. At his arrival in that country he met with much ſuch another adventure as Jacob had in Padan-Haram *, at the well where the damſels uſed to come to water their flocks. An account of which, and of his forty years abode there, has been given in the hiſtory of the Midianites [t].

and is forced to fly into Midian.

How he ſpent his time in thoſe forty years retirement, ſave that he kept Jethro's flocks, is what he has not thought fit to acquaint us with. Thoſe who ſuppoſe that he wrote the book of Job during this interval, have certainly this ſtrong argument on their ſide, that it appears to have been written before the deliverance of the Iſraelites out of Egypt; otherwiſe it were abſurd to ſuppoſe, that either Job or his friends, conſidering what kindred and country they were of, could be

* Gen. xxix. 9. [t] Exod ii. paſſ. Vid. ſup. p. 114 & ſeq.

Horeb was the common name of the whole ridge of mountains on which Sinai was ſituated; and that it was called Horeb, or as the original has it Choreb, from the exceſſive drineſs of it (26). Philo adds (27), that it was full of buſhes, and that at the bottom of the mountain grew that in which GOD appeared to Moſes, which the original calls סנה Sinah, which ſignifies a buſh or ſhrub, that is ſo full of thorns, that the birds cannot pearch in it without being ſtripped of their feathers. The Hebrews ſay, that mount Sinai had that name from it (28). However that be, this mount is alſo called the Mount of GOD, not from any religious worſhip that had been performed there before that time, as Joſephus thinks (29), or becauſe of its height and ſupereminency, as ſuch things are frequently ſo called in ſcripture, as the cedars of GOD, &c. (30), but it is ſo named by anticipation, as it became famous upon many accounts; ſuch as 1. GOD appearing to Moſes in the buſh. 2. His being afterwards worſhipped there, and ſhewing himſelf by the moſt wonderful viſible ſigns at the delivery of the law (31), 3. The ſtriking the rock with Moſes's rod (32). 4. Moſes lifting up his hands to make Joſhua prevail againſt the Amalekites (33). 5. The law being given to Moſes there (34). 6. His faſting twice forty days and nights (35). 7. Bringing the two tables of ſtone from thence (36). 8. The noble viſion which the prophet Elijah had there (37), and ſome others of leſs conſequence.

(26) Cajetan. Villet. Jun. in loc. & al. (27) Philo. in vit. Moſis. (28) Vid. Munſt. in loc. (29) Ant. lib. ii. c. xii. (30) Pſal. civ. 16. (31) Exod. iii. 2. & cap. xix. & xx. paſſ. (32) Numb. xx. 11. (33) Exod. xvii. 11. (34) Exod. xxiv. & ſeq. paſſ. (35) Ibid. xxxiv. 28. Deut. ix. 9. (36) Exod. xxxii. 15, 16, & alib. (37) 1 Kings xix.

either so ignorant of the wonders which GOD had wrought in favour of that oppressed people, or so forgetful of them, as not to have urged them in the strongest terms, during their long and intricate controversy about the various dispensations of providence. And indeed, were not Job so often mentioned by Ezekiel † with Noah and Daniel, much might be said for those who look upon this history as a parable, or rather a dramatic piece, written on purpose to comfort the afflicted Israelites under their heavy bondage. But the words of the prophet will not admit of such a supposition.

WE have already taken notice in the history of Edom [u] ‡, how uncertain and unsatisfactory every thing is that relates to the genealogy of this holy man, or the author of his history; but as some of our readers have expressed a desire to know all the probable particulars that can be gathered on that subject, we shall beg leave to subjoin them here in few words.

A digression concerning Job.

THE most antient monument we have concerning the genealogy of Job, and which has been received and allowed by Aristeus, Philo, Polyhistor [w], and several antient fathers of the Greek and Latin church [x], is an addition to that history, which is to be met with at the end of the Greek, Arabic, and Vulgate versions, and affirmed to have been taken from the antient Syriac one, to this purpose; that Job dwelt upon the confines of Idumæa and Arabia; that his first name was Jobab, and that he married an Arabian, by whom he had a son named Ennon. As for Job he was the son of Zerah, and the fifth in descent from Abraham by Esau, and reigned in Idumæa. The order of the kings, that reigned before and after him, is as follows; Balac the son of Beor reigned in the city of Denebah; after him reigned Job, called also Jobab; who was succeeded by Asom prince of Teman. His successor Hadad the son of Bedad was he, who overthrew the Midianites in the plains of Moab; the name of his city was Jethem. Job's friends, who came to visit him, were Eliphaz king of Teman, of Esau's posterity; Bildad king of the Zeucheans, and Zophas king of the Minæans. Thus far the additions, which have been preserved by Theodotion, in his version of the book of Job [y]. If this genealogy be admitted, † Ezek. xiv. 14. 20. [u] ‡ Gen. xxxvi. 33, 34. Vid. sup. p. 137. [w] Apud EUSEB. præp. l. ix. c. xxv. [x] Vid. FRED. Spanheim in vit. Job. c. iv. MERCER, PINEDA, DIEG. de STUNICA & al. comm. in Job. [y] Vid. CALM. dissert. in JOB.

and

and that Job is the ſame with Jobab, mentioned in Geneſis [z], and Chronicles [a], it will follow, that he and Moſes were cotemporary, being both but three generations removed from Iſaac, thus;

Iſaac,

Jacob	Eſau,
Levi,	Reuel,
Amram,	Zerah,
Moſes,	Jobab or Job.

IT will likewiſe be plain, that he reigned in the city of Denebah or Dinhabah; for ſo the author of the firſt book of the Chronicles expreſly affirms; but how to find ſuch a city in the land of Uz, ſeeing Euſebius and St. Jerom place Denebah in the land of Moab, between Areopolis and Heſhbon [c]: whereas they affirm the land of Uz, or the place where Job dwelt, to have been according to the antient tradition of the inhabitants of Paleſtine, the city of Aſtaroth Kernaim on the other ſide Jordan, upon the brook Jabbok, between Mahanaim and Edreis [d], is not ſo eaſy to determine. However that be, thoſe who embrace the notion, that Job is the Jobab mentioned in thoſe two places of ſcripture above quoted, and conſequently, that he was cotemporary with Moſes, have with much ſtraining pumped out two paſſages in his hiſtory, which, they pretend, do make expreſs mention of Pharaoh's pride and overthrow, and of the Iſraelites paſſing through the Red-ſea. The firſt is, where Eliphaz ſays of the wicked, that trouble and anguiſh ſhall make him afraid, and prevail againſt him, as a king ready to the battle [e]. Which words they apply to Pharaoh's pride and hardneſs of heart, though 'tis plain, by what goes before and after thoſe two verſes, that Job's friends ſpeak only of the wicked in general, ſuch as he ſuppoſed him to be from the afflictions which had befallen him. The other text is, where Job ſays, that GOD divideth the ſea with his power, and by his underſtanding ſmiteth through the proud [f]. And this they think to allude to the paſſing of the Red-ſea, and to Pharaoh's overthrow in it. But here, beſides that the word in the original doth more properly ſignify to ſtill than to divide, it is plain from the tenor of the whole chapter, that Job ſpeaks only of the wonderful power and providence of GOD in general, and not of this miracle in particular. Besides, it is hardly probable, as we observed a little before, that had this conference between Job and his friends happened after so remarkable a deliverance as that of the Israelites, a more ample and express mention should not have been made throughout the book, than we find in these two obscure passages; especially if we consider, that Job's desire of vindicating his own integrity, did naturally lead him to it; and that the afflictions, as well as the deliverance, of the Israelites, were a full confutation of what his friends alledged against him, that if he had not been guilty of some great crimes, GOD would never have inflicted such heavy punishments on him [g]. Neither do we see any necessity for making Job to have lived since this miraculous deliverance of the Israelites, in order to adjust the genealogy abovementioned, since it will be sufficient to suppose, that those four generations on Esau's side, were by some few years shorter than those on Jacob's, which is not at all improbable, seeing the latter were remarkable for their long lives [h], and then it will be possible enough for Job to have seen an end of all his sufferings before Moses left the land of Midian; in which case, he being justly supposed to be the most antient writer, he has been likewise thought the author of his history, by the majority of writers. That his poetic genius was equal to this excellent performance, those few Canticles, which he has left us in the Pentateuch [i], will not permit us to doubt of. However, there is one main objection against this notion, which is, that if Jobab be the same with Job, and he cotemporary with Moses, it will be impossible for the latter to have outlived him by so many years as to be able to give us an account of his death, and of his numerous posterity; for it is said, that Job lived an hundred and forty years after his sufferings were ended, and that he saw his son's children to the fourth generation: whereas Moses lived but forty years in the land of Midian, and forty more after he was come out of it. This difficulty therefore cannot be removed, but by supposing, that the three or four last verses of the book were added afterwards by some inspired person, in order to make the history complete; in the same manner as Joshua, or some other, added the account of Moses's death and burial at the end of Deuteronomy: but how far this supposition may be allowed, we choose to submit to our reader's judgment.

[z] Gen. xxxvi. 33, 34. [a] 1 Chron. i. 43, 44. [b] Ibid.
[c] Loc. Hæbr. [d] Id. ibid. [e] Job. xv. 24, 25. [f] Ibid. xxvi. 12.

[g] Vid. particularly cap. xxii. 25, & alib. pass. [h] Vid. sup. p. 459. [i] Vid. Exod. xv. Deut. xxviii. 31.

BEFORE

BEFORE we cloſe this digreſſion, we ſhall beg leave to ſay ſomething of the book itſelf. Though ſome learned men have thought it to have been writ originally in Syriac or Arabic, either by Job himſelf, or by one of his friends [k]; yet it is now univerſally allowed to have been written in Hebrew. What has given birth to the former notion is, its being ſo blended with Syriac and Arabic expreſſions and idioms, as makes it very difficult to be rightly underſtood [l]. It is juſtly ſuppoſed to be written in verſe, from the loftineſs of the ſtile, the ſublimeneſs of the thoughts, the livelineſs and energy of expreſſion, the grandeur of its imagery, and variety of characters; though the metre and cadence of it be altogether looſe and unconfined. Thoſe who have been moſt converſant with it, will readily allow, that antiquity cannot produce a more lofty and magnificent, a more florid, eloquent, pathetic, and learned performance, whoever the author of it was. A bold critic indeed [m] has not ſcrupled to tax him with oſtentation, and with making a vain ſhow of prophane learning and poetic fiction, and for putting ſuch expreſſions in the mouth of that holy man, as are not only incompatible with his character, but even of a dangerous nature, being in his opinion, more fitted to corrupt than to edify his readers. But it is certain, that that learned author was only acquainted with the Greek verſion of it, which abounds, it muſt be owned, with expreſſions that allude too much to the fables and fictions of the poets. Had he been acquainted with the original, he would eaſily have acquitted it of ſuch an unjuſt imputation. Beſides, it muſt be remembered, that the eaſtern nations had a much more lively, ſtrong, and paſſionate way of expreſſing their thoughts than we; ſo that it is impoſſible to come at their true meaning, or to make a right judgment of thoſe hyperbolical expreſſions, without lowering them very much from their literal ſignification. The Jews have added ſeveral particulars to the hiſtory of Job, ſuch as that he was a king and high prieſt in Idumæa, and that he had married Dinah, Jacob's daughter [n]; which latter can hardly be credited, unleſs we ſuppoſe him to have been of much older date than Moſes. The Eaſtern writers, eſpecially the Arabians, have very much improved upon them, according to cuſtom; but we need not trouble our readers with a further detail of them, [k] Vid. CALM. Diſſ. in Job. [l] HIERON. præfat. in Job. [m] THEOD. MOPSUEST. Vid. Synod. V. OEcum. Collat. iv. art. 63. [n] Chald. Par. il MAIM more Nevoch. & al.

thoſe

thoſe who are deſirous to be informed in that particular, may conſult Herbelot's Bibliotheca Orientalis °.

We return now to our Jewiſh Law-giver in the land of Midian, whom we may reaſonably ſuppoſe to have had ſuch convincing reaſons to look upon himſelf as the deliverer of his afflicted people, that he could not but have many anxious thoughts about them during that long interval, and think the time long, till he ſaw that glorious promiſed deliverance happily fulfilled. Nay, this long delay ſeems to have made him conceive quite other notions, as if God had either made choice of ſome other inſtrument to work out their deliverance, or had been provoked by their ſins to ſuſpend it for ſome longer time. For when God was pleaſed to appear to him at the end of forty years, in a burning buſh, upon mount Horeb, and by his own voice, as well as by the miracle of the buſh not having one leaf conſumed, though all over in a bright flame (R), evidences that it was the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, that ſpoke to him, and commanded him to go into Egypt, and to execute his deſigns there; Moſes did not leave one plea untried to be excuſed from the difficult

God appears to him in the burning buſh.

° Bibl. orient. Sub Art. Ajub.

(R) The word flame in this place is לבת Labath, and not Lahebab, which is the common word for the flame; and though ſome Jews do think with us, that it ſignifies the ſame thing, yet others will have it, that it is put for לב Leb, or לבב Lebaf, which ſignifies the heart or middle of any thing, and that it is here uſed to expreſs, that it was only the centre of the buſh that appeared inflamed. The large comment on Exodus adds, that God was pleaſed to appear in that manner at this time, to convince Moſes (who was afraid leſt the Iſraelites ſhould one time or other be deſtroyed by the Egyptians, if they were not ſo already during his forty years abſence), that as the buſh remained unconſumed in the midſt of the flames, ſo ſhould Iſrael in the midſt of all their fiery trials (38). As to the time when this viſion was ſeen by Moſes, St. Stephen (39) tells us, it was about forty years after his flight out of Egypt; that is, in the eightieth year of his age; for ſo old he was when he came and ſtood before Pharaoh (40); and it was in the fortieth year of his age, that going to viſit his brethren, he committed the fact which obliged him to fly the kingdom, and to go ab aulâ ad caulam, from the court to the cart. It was in this retirement that he is ſuppoſed to have wrote the books of Job and Geneſis, for a comfort to his afflicted brethren (41).

(38) Elleſhemoth Rab in loc. Philo. loc. citat. (39) Acts vii. 23. (40) Exod. vii. 7. (41) Perrer. ex Philon. Villet & al.

task,

taſk, whilſt GOD was graciouſly pleaſed to diſpel all his fears, to clear all his doubts, and to give him ſuch promiſes of his miraculous aſſiſtance, as would have emboldened the moſt fearful, which was not Moſes's caſe.

THE divine viſion (S) began with telling him, that the afflictions, under which the Iſraelites groaned, were grown to ſuch a height, and the cruelties of their enemies ſo enormous, that the time was now come both for their deliverance, and for their receiving that happy promiſed land, as a recompence for their long patience and ſufferings; bidding him at the ſame time to go to Pharaoh, and in his name to demand Commands him to return into Egypt.

(S) We need not repeat here what has been ſaid before about theſe apparitions, whether they were angels ſpeaking in the perſon of GOD, which we think we have ſufficiently confuted, or GOD himſelf, or, as the moſt received opinion is, CHRIST the SON of GOD. All that need be added here is, that this, which appears now in the buſh, is the ſame who was afterwards to be the captain and guide of the Iſraelites in the deſert; that is, not an angel, or GOD the FATHER, but CHRIST himſelf, as St. Paul affirms (42); for neither the FATHER nor HOLY GHOST are ever called by the name of angel, i. e. a meſſenger or perſon ſent: whereas the SON is called the Angel of the Covenant by the prophet Malachy (43), as a title of his office, though not of his nature (44). As for thoſe who think not only that it was an angel (45), but pretend to gueſs, that it was Michael that appeared here, as he did afterwards to Joſhua (46), and to Daniel (47); it is plain their conjecture is not only contrary to what we have quoted out of the apoſtle, but even abſurd, if not impious. For can they prove that Michael was a created angel, ſeeing that name ſignifies one like unto GOD, and can only be applicable to CHRIST? can a created angel be ſtiled the captain of the LORD's hoſts, as he is called in Joſhua, or the prince of the people of GOD, as he is in Daniel, which office and title the apoſtle tells us (48), belong only to CHRIST, who is the captain or prince of our ſalvation? did ever any angel ſuffer himſelf to be worſhipped, as that which appeared to Joſhua did? ſuppoſing, therefore, that it was the ſame that appeared to Moſes, Joſhua, and Daniel, as Perrerius thinks 49, yet it will be far from following, that he was a created angel or miniſtring ſpirit; on the contrary it will be plain, that it was CHRIST the king of men and angels, bleſſed for ever (50).

(42) 1 Cor. x. 4. (43) Malach. iii. 1. (44) Theodor. Oti. and. Simler, & al. (45) Aug. de Trinit lib. iii c. xi. & Tract. 3 in Johan N. 17. 18. Hieron. epiſt. ad Galat. iii. Greg. moral. lib. xxviii. cap. i. (46) Joſh. v. paſſ. (47) Dan x. paſſ. (48) Hebr. ii. 10. (49) Perrer. & al. (50) Villet in cap. iii, Exod. quæſt. 6.

their

their diſmiſſion, and aſſuring him, that thoſe who ſought his life were now all dead, and that he had now nothing to fear from the Egyptians. In vain did Moſes plead his weakneſs and inſufficiency for ſuch a work, GOD told him, that it was not to be performed by an arm of fleſh, but by his own irreſiſtible power, which ſhould manifeſt himſelf in ſuch miraculous deeds, that not only Egypt, but all the world ſhould be aſtoniſhed at them. Here Moſes objected further, that he very much doubted, whether the Iſraelites had not ſo far forgot the GOD of their fathers, that when he came to acquaint them with his Commiſſion from him, they would be apt to aſk what his name was, in which caſe he would be at a loſs what anſwer to make to them (T). Here GOD was pleaſed to anſwer

(T) The Cabaliſtical Jews, and after them Joſephus (51) and ſome Romaniſts (52) think, that Moſes did not ask for the name of GOD, but for the true pronunciation of it, which they think had been loſt through the wickedneſs of mankind: for which reaſon the former affirm, that the word עלם Holam, uſed by GOD preſently after (53), being written without a ו Vau, ſhould not be rendered for ever, but hid, from the root עלם halam, to hide, not conſidering, that if that was the caſe, it ſhould be written עלום Halum, and not Holam. Upon this account the name יהוה is by all the Jews called Shem Hamphoraſh, the unutterable name, which Joſephus in the place juſt now quoted ſays, was never known or heard of before GOD told it to Moſes, and adds, that he dares not ſo much as mention it: for which reaſon they never pronounce it, but uſe the word Adonai, or Elohim, or plainly the word Haſhem, the name, to expreſs it. Thus in their letters and common diſcourſe, inſtead of ſaying, the LORD bleſs or protect you, they ſay, the Name bleſs you, &c. and they think, that the words uſed by Daniel in his prayer (54) למען אדני Lemaghan Adonai, do not mean, as we underſtand them, for the ſake of the LORD or the MESSIAH, or, as we expreſs it, for CHRIST's ſake, but for the ſake of the word Adonai, which they were obliged to uſe 'till the MESSIAH came, and taught them the true pronunciation of the name יהוה: not but their high-prieſt did pronounce it Jehovah once a year on the day of expiation, from the time of their return from the Babyloniſh captivity to the laſt deſtruction of the temple; but they had but few diſciples near them that could learn its pronunciation, and during the time of the bleſſing in which this name was repeated, the prieſts and levites did ſing louder than ordinary, that none elſe might hear it. But even then they were very far from thinking

(51) Ant. lib. ii. c. 12. (52) Genebrard. Bellarmin. Berruyer Hiſt. du peup. de Dieu. Tom. 2. p. 36. (53) Exod. iii. 15. (54) Dan. ix. 17.

it

anſwer a queſtion which he had formerly refuſed to Jacob *, though it the right pronunciation of the Tetragrammaton ; for they think, that any man that could once attain it, might ſhake heaven and earth with it, work the greateſt miracles, and dive into the deepeſt ſecrets of the Deity. They tell us, that Moſes had it engraven upon his rod, and by virtue of that ineffable word wrought all thoſe mighty wonders in favour of his people : that Noah could ſteer the ark which way he pleaſed by it, and that JESUS CHRIST having ſtolen it out of the temple, or, as others affirm, brought it with him from Egypt, and clapped it between the skin and the fleſh of his thigh, had obtained the power of working all his miracles, which they ſay any man elſe might do, that could pronounce that name right (55).

* Gen- xxxii. 29.

They add, that Simon ſirnamed the Juſt, one of their high Prieſts, who flouriſhed about the year of the world 3702, and died 3711, i. e about 289 years before CHRIST, was the laſt that knew it ; but that the number of prophane people encreaſing, they thought it beſt to ſubſtitute another name to it, conſiſting of twelve letters, which the high prieſt made uſe of when he bleſſed the people (56). Tarpho, a noted Rabbi, ſuppoſed to be the ſame with the Trypho of Juſtin martyr, tells us, that being got one day near the high prieſt, to hear this bleſſing, he found, that he only muttered the name of GOD in an articulate manner, whilſt the Levites did drown his voice with their ſinging, that it might not be learned, and abuſed by the wicked. But ſince Simon Juſtus it has been wholly loſt, not to be recovered again, 'till the MESSIAH come. In the mean time the Talmud has left a moſt horrid curſe againſt thoſe that ſhall dare to utter it, becauſe they think the very angels themſelves are not allowed to pronounce it.

The truth is, thoſe who think that Jehovah is the right pronunciation are far enough from being ſure of it. It is plain that the antients did write it very differently from them. Sanchoniatho ſpells it Jevo (1) ; Diodorus Siculus (2), Macrobius (3), Clement of Alexandria (4), St. Jerom (5), and Origen (6) pronounced it Jao. The Samaritans, and after them Epiphanius (7) and Theodoret (8), Jave, or Jabe. Others of the antients write it, Jabob, Jaho. Jaon, Jabo, and Jabod. Among the moderns, Capellus is for pronouncing it Javo ; Druſius, Jave ; Hottinger, Jehva ; Mercer, (55) Vid. Midras Tehileim in Pſal. xii. Druſ. de nomine Tetragrammat. (56) Maimonid. More Nevochim. Part I. c. lxii. (1) Sanchoniat. ap. Euſeb. præp. lib. x. c. 9. (2) Diod. Sic. Bibliot. lib. ii. (3) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. i. cap. xviii. (4) Clem. Alex. Stromat. lib. v. (5) Hieron. or ſome other under his name, in Pſal viii. (6) Orig. contr. Celſ. lib. vi. (7) Epiph. Hæreſ. 40. (8) Theodoret. in Exod. quæſt. 15.

though in ſuch terms as might eaſily make him ſenſible of the irregularity

Jehovah; Caſtalio, Jovah, and Le Clerc, Javoh or Javoh. Something like theſe the Romans had in their Jovis, to which Varro ſeems to allude when he ſays, Deum Judæorum eſſe Jovem, that Jove was the God of the Jews, as St. Auſtin alledges out of him in the firſt book of his defence of the goſpel, c xxii. The Moors likewiſe call GOD Juba, or Jubah, and the Mohammedans Hou (9), which with them ſignifies the ſame as Jehovah, i. e. he who is; which name they write at the beginning of all their patents, paſſes, and the like, and do often repeat in their prayers. Some of their devotees will ſometimes repeat that word ſo often, and with ſuch quickneſs and vehemence, that they drop down with giddineſs. However, it is plain, that the four letters of which that great name conſiſts may be pronounced in all the above-mentioned ways, and ſeveral others, according to the vowels that are joined with them. Thus much for the pronunciation of יהוה.

As to the uttering of it, beſides what we have already obſerved out of the Talmud and Joſephus, we have ſtill another witneſs of the Jewiſh exceſſive and even ſuperſtitious reſpect for that word, viz. Philo, who affirms (10), that, after the ſtoning of the blaſphemer to death in the wilderneſs (11), GOD commanded Moſes to publiſh a new law, that whoſoever ſhould curſe the LORD ſhould be guilty of ſin, and whoſoever ſhould pronounce the name of GOD ſhould be put to death; which is the verſion which the Septuagint and Theodoret have gaven us of the 15th and 16th verſes of the above-quoted chapter: whereas in the original it is, whoſever curſeth אלהיו his GOD, or GODS, ſhall bear his own ſin; and whoſoever ſhall blaſpheme the name of יהוה the LORD ſhall ſurely be put to death. This Law, continues Philo, is full of the profoundeſt wiſdom, the firſt part of which forbids the curſing or blaſpheming the falſe gods of the Gentiles; and the ſecond the uttering of the name of GOD in a vain or looſe manner, or by way of ornament to our ſpeech; which he thinks deſerves the worſt of puniſhments. But as to the firſt part of this law, according to Philo's expoſition, that author ſeems to have forgot, that Jeremiah commands the Jews (12), a little before they were carried into the Babyloniſh captivity, that, when they came thither, they ſhould not only ſpeak againſt the gods of Babylon, but even denounce death and deſtruction againſt them all, as being no gods; and that not in their native Hebrew, which was not underſtood there, but in plain downright Chaldee, the language of that country. And it is obſervable, that this verſe is the only one in that prophet, that is written in the Chaldee, all the reſt being in Hebrew. But to return from this di-

(9) Herbelot. Bibliot Orient. p. 460 ſub. voc. Hou & p. 336. ſub. Eſma. (10) Philo in vit. Moſis. (11) Levit. xxiv. 11, & ſeq. (12) Jerem x. 11.

greſſion:

irregularity and unreaſonableneſs of it; for, as Juſtin Martyr

greſſion: it is not eaſy to determine, whether the ſeventy had loſt the right pronunciation of the name יהוה; whether they purpoſely concealed it under the name of Κύριος LORD, or whether they did make uſe of that Greek word at all. For firſt, they could not but be ſenſible, that the word יהוה was no relative word as Κύριος, or LORD, is; for though we can properly ſay, Κύριός μου, Κύριος ἡμῶν &c i. e. my LORD, our LORD, &c. yet יהוה has never any pronoun affixed to it: whereas Elohim and Adonai have as Elohai, Elohenù, &c. for which reaſon, even St. Jerom chooſes to render it by Adonai, in Exod vi. 3 and nomen meum Adonai non indicavi eis, where it is in the Hebrew ובשמי יהוה לא נודעתי להם but by my name Jehovah was I not known to them Thoſe verſions therefore, which have rendered that word by Dominus, as the Vulgate, or LORD, as our own, don't ſeem to have ſufficiently attended to what we have juſt now obſerved; for יהוה not being a relative, one ought not to have been rendered by one that is ſo. The French Geneva tranſlation has made uſe of a much better word to expreſs it, viz. L'Eternel, the eternal Being; which name in the firſt place is not relative. for we cannot properly ſay, Mon Eternel, vôtre Eternel, &c.; and ſecondly, expreſſes the etymon of Jehovah far better than Κύριος, Dominus, or LORD, as we ſhall ſhew by and by. But ſecondly, it is very probable, that the Septuagint left this, as well as ſome other names of GOD, ſuch as Jah, Sadai, Zabaoth, &c untranſlated, 'till the ſecond reviſion of that verſion; and that they concealed the true reading of יהוה under the Samaritan characters (as being leſs underſtood by the reſt of the world than the Hebrew or Aſſyrian ones were), or under the Greek capitals Π I Π I which bore a reſemblance to the four letters of יהוה, and yet had a ſound ſo different from it, that they would never lead the Heathen reader to the true pronunciation of it. St. Jerom (13), Origen (14), and Euſebius (15), aſſure us, that they had ſeen copies of the Septuagint written in the two above-mentioned ways, and that, even in their time, the Jews choſe to write that name, as often as it occurred, in the old Samaritan letters; their reaſon for which was, leſt that venerable name ſhould be abuſed by the Heathen to ill purpoſes: though Origen adds, that theſe precautions did not prove ſo effectual; but that they made uſe of it in their exorciſms, in their charms againſt diſeaſes, and other ſuperſtitious rites (16). And Clement of Alexandria informs us (17), that thoſe Egyptians, who were allowed to enter into the temple of the Sun, did wear the name Jaou about their middle. We find likewiſe in ſome magic tyr rightly obſerves, names are given only to ſhew the difference verſes againſt the gout mentioned by Trallian the names Jas or Jaath. Something like this we meet with in Pythagoras's golden verſes, where there is an oath by Τετρακτὺς, i. e. by him whoſe name is ſpelt with four letters (18); as alſo the inſcription, Tu es, in that famous frontiſpiece of the temple of Delphos, mentioned by Euſebius (19), which alludes to the Hebrew name of GOD. Such was alſo that of the Egyptians, I AM, written over one of theirs (20). Cicero gives an inſtance (21) of ſome names of the heathen gods which they did not dare to pronounce, to which Lucan adds that the very naming of them would have ſhook the earth (22).

(13) Jerom. præfat in lib Reg. & in Ezek. ix. (14) Orig. Fragm. in palæograph. Græc lib. ii. c. i (15) Euſeb. in Chronic ad an. 4740. (16) Orig. cont. Celſum lib. i. (17) Clem. Alex. Stromat. lib. v.

There remains, that we enquire into the ſignification of the name יְהוָה, in which we ſhall not find ſuch a diſſonancy among expoſitors, as we did about the pronunciation of it. For firſt, they are all agreed, that it is derived from the root הָיָה hajah, he has been, and denotes GOD's ſelf-exiſtence and eternal nature. Accordingly in the place we are annotating upon, he calls himſelf אֶהְיֶה אֲשֶׁר אֶהְיֶה Ehjeh Aſher, Ehjeh, I am that I am, or rather I am becauſe I am. Where the verb, though it be in the future, yet, according to the genius of the Hebrew tongue, is applicable to the preſent or perfect tenſe, and implies his immutability as continuing the ſame that he has been, and is to all eternity (23). It is likewiſe more than probable, that GOD chooſes to expreſs himſelf in the future tenſe, to ſhew that he is the only Being that can truly ſay, I ſhall or will be what I am, &c. (24). Aretius makes the two words Ehjeh to be proper names (25); but it ſeems to be only in the firſt Ehjeh in the ſenſe in which it is taken in the latter part of the verſe. I am Ehjeh, has ſent me, and the ſecond Ehjeh to be aſſigned as the cauſe of the firſt; namely, I am becauſe I am (26). Neither was this name unknown to the wiſer ſort of heathens, as we have ſeen by ſome of their inſcriptions, to which we ſhall add one more mentioned by Egubinus, written on the doors of the Egyptian temples, and exactly agreeing with this wonderful name of GOD, viz. I am whatſoever was, is, and ſhall be. According to which Thales of Mileſium, being asked what GOD was, replied, that which always is, and has neither beginning nor end. Thus Plato truly ſays (27), that nothing really exiſts but that which is immutable; for which,

(18) Vid. Selden de Diis Syr. Synagog. ii. c. i. (19) Euſeb. præpar. lib. xi. c. x. (20) Plutarch Tract. de εἰ inſcript. forib. Temp. Delph. cap. ii. (21) Cic. de Nat. Deor. lib. iii. (22) Lucan. l. vi. ver. 744, 745. ap. Calmet ſub. voc. Jehovah. Villet. c. vi. in Exod. & al. (23) Greg. Nazianz. Homeil. in loc. S. Auguſt. in loc. Revel. i. 8. (24) Simler, Villet. & al. (25) Aret. in loc. (26) Simler. Jun. Pined. Munſt. & al. (27) Plato in Timæo.

and

ence of things: whereas GOD being one, and there being none and ſome other of his wiſe ſayings, he is ſuppoſed to have read Moſes's books, or converſed with ſome of his diſciples when he was in Egypt; which is not improbable, ſeeing Ariſtobulus, who flouriſhed in the Maccabees time, writes to Ptolemy Philometer, that Moſes's books having been tranſlated into Greek in Alexander's time, Pythagoras and Plato had taken many things from them (28). Some divines, and in particular our learned Ainſworth, think, that Jehovah is the participle of hajah in piel, and that it doth not only ſignify to be, but to cauſe to be, or to give being; by which not only his omnipotence, but likewiſe his faithfulneſs and truth are plainly intimated and implied, as being alone able and ſure to make good his promiſes (29). Upon all theſe accounts therefore Jehovah is looked upon to be the incommunicable name of GOD, there being no created beings unto whom it can be properly, or indeed at all, applied in any of theſe ſenſes; whereas thoſe of Elohim, Adonai, Gibbor, &c. have been given to angels and men (30).

We ſhall not trouble our readers with all the myſtical notions, which cabaliſts have raiſed from the letters that compoſe this awful name, nor with the preference they give to it, above all the other names of GOD, as being, as it were a monarch upon his throne, and the others only as guards or officers under him (31); but conclude this note with a ſhort enquiry, why the word Jehovah is thought ineffable, not only by the Jews, but alſo by ſome Chriſtians. Firſt, Genebrard confidently affirms, it is neither a Hebrew nor Chriſtian word or name; that it is neither received by the fathers, nor by the rabbies, nor ever known or uſed by CHRIST or his apoſtles. But to this it may be anſwered, that they all were forced to uſe the Septuagint verſion then in vogue, which every where tranſlates that word by Κύριος LORD, as has been already obſerved. Secondly, Bellarmin pretends, that becauſe St. Jerom, and Origen in his Hexapala after him, read it Adonai, and that the vowel points are the ſame in both; therefore it ought to be read and pronounced Adonai, and not Jehovah. But had theſe gentlemen conſidered, that theſe two words are of different originals and ſignifications, and written with different letters; that the one is relative, and the other not; that the one is communicable and the other incommunicable; that the points, or vowels, being almoſt univerſally acknowledged to be of human invention, can be of no authority here; and that their likeneſs, though not ſameneſs, in both theſe names was owing to a ſuperſtitious reſpect which the Mazorites had for one of them; that St. Jerom might be too much influenced by his Jewiſh maſter in this, as well as in many other caſes; and that both he and Origen have not ſcrupled to pronounce

(28) Ap. Perrer. Villet. & al. (29) Similer, Outran, Burratus, Ainſworth, & al. (30) Perrer. Jun. Munſt &c. (31) Perrer. & al.

it

none other but him, there needs no name to diſtinguiſh him*. GOD therefore ſaid to him I AM THAT I AM, and bid him tell his brethren, that I AM had ſent him to them, that he was it Jao, as we have hinted above; that their writing it by Adonai might be more owing to a ſuperſtitious fear, than to any judgment or conviction of the unlawfulneſs of pronouncing that name; and laſtly, that they have no where ſaid that it was ineffable; had they, I ſay, conſidered theſe things, they could never have fallen into that Jewiſh ſuperſtition. As for the general reaſon that is given on all hands by thoſe of that ſide of the queſtion, viz that the right pronunciation having been loſt, whether during the captivity, or at any other time or place, it is unlawful to ſubſtitute any other inſtead of it, it may be ſafely anſwered, that the deſign of words or names being to convey ideas into the mind, of thoſe things of which they are but types, the differences will be very ſmall, whether the pronunciation be right or wrong, provided the idea it conveys be right. And we are much miſtaken, whatever theſe gentlemen ſay, if in this caſe the pronouncing the word Jehovah, which conveys the moſt perfect idea we can have of the Godhead, let the pronunciation be never ſo wrong, is not much ſafer than their pronouncing it Adonai, which being a word of a vaſtly inferior ſignification, and applicable to every man that has any maſtery or ſuperiority over another, conveys a much more imperfect idea of the Godhead, and is therefore liable to be uttered with leſs awe and reſpect. This is ſo true in fact, that one may obſerve thoſe ſcrupulous gentlemen, eſpecially of the Jews, who would be ready to ſwoon at the hearing the name Jehovah, pronounce that of Adonai, though carrying the ſame idea, with leſs ſeeming reverence than they would that of a king or lord mayor, and one would hardly think they can be in earneſt, when we find them branding their adverſaries with the epithet of Jehovaiſts. However, it muſt be owned, that though all the names of GOD ought to be uttered with the utmoſt awe, yet this, if poſſible, with a greater, and that we ought to be cautious not to uſe it without a warrantable occaſion. And when we converſe with Jews, or with ſuch chriſtians as are againſt pronouncing that name, if we make uſe of the word Adonai in complaiſance to them, it will be much better than to make them uneaſy, or break off converſation by pronouncing it in our own way. The main text which terrifies the Jews againſt uttering this ſacred name is that of Leviticus (32), where it is ſaid he that blaſphemeth (which they read nameth) the name of GOD ſhall be ſtoned: where the word נקב Nakab, which in its primitive meaning ſignifies to pierce, and is therefore often uſed for writing,

* Dial cont. Tryph.

(32) Levit. xxiv. 16.

was the GOD of their fathers, of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob (V), and that he would be remembered and acknowledged by ting, engraving, or enrolling, doth more properly forbid the writing than the ſpeaking it: for Nakab never ſignifies to utter, unleſs it be in a bad ſenſe, as curſing, or blaſpheming; and therefore if the prohibition is to be ſtretched beyond that, it muſt be only againſt doing it irreverently or lightly, which is a lighter degree of prophaning; but as they allow that the name may be lawfully writ, though the word Nakab doth ſignify alſo to write; nay, ſince they allow, that the high prieſt may and doth actually uſe it in that public bleſſing, which is preſcribed by GOD himſelf (33), Jehovah bleſs thee and keep thee, it is plain, the prohibition is not againſt naming, but againſt blaſpheming, or uſing it with contempt or diſdain, or to an ill purpoſe, as to curſe our neighbours and the like; as the word Kallal, uſed in the foregoing part of this prohibition, ſufficiently ſhews (34).

(V) It is aſked here why GOD calls himſelf ſo particularly the GOD of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, ſeeing he was the GOD of all the Iſraelites, as well as of thoſe three; for firſt, it could not be upon the account of their ſanctity, nor excellent virtues, ſeeing Abel, Enoch, and Noah, whoſe GOD he likewiſe was, were at leaſt as holy as they; nor ſecondly to hint unto Moſes the myſtery of the Trinity, as Perrerius imagines (1), becauſe the word of GOD is there thrice repeated; for it is rather repeated four times; viz. the GOD of thy father, that is of Amram, the GOD of Abraham, and ſo on. It is more probable therefore, that they are particularly mentioned, becauſe it was to them that the promiſe of a numerous poſterity, of their being ſtrangers in Egypt, and brought out of it, of their inheriting the land of Canaan, and eſpecially that of the MESSIAH, had been made.

And now we are upon this text, it will not be improper to enquire, why our SAVIOUR chooſes to alledge it againſt the Sadducees, rather than ſome others in the Old Teſtament, which do more fully prove the reſurrection of the body; to this it may be anſwered, that the objection, being made out of the Pentateuch, was more fitly anſwered by it, eſpecially to the Sadducees, who, as St. Jerom tells us (3), admitted of no other books of the Old Teſtament. The main queſtion therefore will be, how theſe words, I am the GOD of Abraham, &c. 2. which ſeem at moſt to prove only the immortality of the ſoul, can be urged here to prove the reſurrection of the body? to which ſome antient fathers anſwer (4), that theſe names being given to them, whilſt they conſiſted of ſoul

(33) Numb. vi. 24. (34) Simler, Villet. Munſt. & al. in loc. (1) Perrer. in loc. (2) Matth. xxii. 31. Mark xii. 26. Luke xx. 37. (3) Hieron. in Job. xix. & alib. (4) Iren. lib. iv. cap. xi. Chryſoſt. in Mat. xxii. & al.

and

by that name throughout all generations, as their great redeemer and deliverer: not, continued he, that Pharaoh will let you go at your first or second asking, nor indeed at all, 'till I have convinced him both of my justice and power, by the terrible punishment I shall send upon him and his land, for their oppression of my people; neither shall the Hebrews come away altogether unrewarded for their long and cruel servitude; for I will inspire the Egyptians with such sentiments of pity and humanity towards them, that they shall part with their sumptuous raiments and choicest jewels to them, and

And to bring his people out of bondage.

and body, and the former of them being here plainly affirmed to be living with GOD, it follows, that the latter cannot be dead, but asleep for a time, and that they will re-united and live again, and both together enjoy the reward of their labour. Others say, that if the immortality of the soul be granted, the resurrection of the body must follow of consequence, by reason of the natural desire which the former has to the latter, without which it cannot be said to be perfectly happy; and this induced Pythagoras, Plato, and other philosophers, who held the immortality of the soul, to provide her with a constant supply of bodies, either by remigration or returning into its own body again, or transmigration or passing into some other body (5). But the best solution seems to be that of St. Jerom 6, that the Sadducees believing neither the immortality of the soul, nor resurrection of the body, both which were received by all the rest of the Jews, the most effectual way to remove the ground of their error was, to prove by this text the being and living of the soul after death 7).

As to those places where GOD commands Moses to put off his shoes, and of Moses covering his face, we hope, we need not acquaint the reader, that they were both marks of reverence used then, and since, by all the eastern nations. The first of these, viz. putting off the shoes, has a threefold signification in scripture, viz. first, it was common and usual to put them off in token of mourning and grief, as David is said to have gone from Jerusalem barefoot when he fled from Absalom; whilst his retinue went with their faces covered in token of respect (8). Secondly, it signified the yielding of one's right to another, and is so prescribed in Deuteronomy (9, and practised by Boaz (10); the third was in token of respect and reverence, as appears by this command of GOD to Moses, and the reason assigned for it, viz. that the ground whereon he stood was holy, or sanctified by GOD's immediate presence.

(5) Th. Aquin. cont. Gent. cap lxxix. (6) Hieron. Com in Matt. xxii. (7) Cajet. Villet. & al. (8) 2 Sam. xv. 30.
(9) Deut. xxv. 9. (10) Ruth. iv. 7, 8.

made

make them thus far amends for their paſt labours and hardſhips * (X).

AFTER ſuch ample aſſurances, one would hardly expect, that Moſes would have ſtarted any new difficulties, at leaſt without receiving ſome ſevere rebuke for it; nevertheleſs he freely owns, that his doubts were far from being wholly diſpelled; he knew the temper of the Iſraelites too well, not to foreſee, that they would moſt likely call his miſſion in queſtion. He therefore begged to be informed what he muſt do in ſuch a caſe, and GOD was pleaſed to clear this doubt alſo, by two miracles which he wrought in his preſence. The firſt was by turning his rod into a frightful ſerpent, and then into a rod again. The ſecond was by ſmiting one of his hands with leproſy upon his pulling it out of his boſom, and then healing it again by the ſame way; adding moreover, that if the working of theſe two miracles before the Iſraelites did not give a ſufficient ſanction to his meſſage, he ſhould then have liberty to try the ſucceſs of a third, by taking ſome water out of the Nile and ſpilling it upon the ground, which would immediately turn the river into blood †.

MOSES had ſtill, he thought, one material objection to make, namely, an impediment in his ſpeech, which, he ſaid, rendered him unfit to ſpeak, either before Pharaoh and his court, or even to the Iſraelites. He had probably raiſed many more, had not GOD removed this difficulty alſo by telling, that his brother Aaron, who was now by his appointment to meet him, ſhould be his interpreter both to Pharaoh and to the Hebrews, and commanded him immediately to prepare for his journey, and not ſpend any more time in raiſing new

* Exod. iii. † Exod. iv. 9.

(X) That ſome retaliation was due in ſtrict juſtice from the Egyptians to the Hebrews, for the great ſervices they had done to them, is what can hardly be denied; however, we do not pretend to anſwer all the objections which have been raiſed againſt this action. We think it ſufficient to ſay, that the former were ſpoiled with the ſame juſtice for their unheard of Oppreſſion to the latter, as the Canaanites and other nations were deſtroyed for their abominable wickedneſs. GOD indeed alone could appoint thoſe puniſhments, and make uſe of what inſtruments he pleaſed to inflict them; but, ſince Moſes gave ſufficient proof of his being authoriſed by GOD, we cannot ſee where the injuſtice is in either caſe, nor the pretended ill tendency of ſuch a precedent, ſince it is allowed on all hands, that it is in no caſe to be followed, unleſs it be evidently commanded by the ſame divine authority.

ſcruples and objections [u]. There was certainly ſomething very ſurpriſing in this reluctancy of Moſes, as well as in the patience with which GOD heard him; yet, when he found that he had removed all the obſtacles which his diffidence had ſuggeſted to him, he could not forbear having recourſe to prayers, earneſtly begging of GOD, who certainly knew many among the Hebrews more fit for the work than himſelf, to make choice of ſome other to execute his command, and leave him to ſpend the remainder of his days in ſolitude and obſcurity. Had Moſes been leſs ſincere, he would hardly have recorded this extreme weakneſs of his, ſo little to his credit; and which nothing could excuſe or extenuate, but this free and ingenuous confeſſion of it. Being therefore afraid, leſt he ſhould incur the divine diſpleaſure by a further refuſal, he made the beſt of his way towards Midian, reſolved for the future to be as ready, as he had before been backward, to obey the divine command.

Moſes begs to be excuſed.

WHETHER he acquainted Jethro with his commiſſion, or, as he tells us [x], only expreſſed a deſire to go and viſit his brethren in Egypt, he eaſily obtained his diſmiſſion from him, and taking his wife Zipporah (Y) and his two ſons with him, the Obeys at laſt and leaves Midian.

[u] Ibid. ver. 13. ad 17. [x] Ibid. ver. 18.

(Y) This Zipporah, having afterwards a ſquabble with her ſiſter-in-law Miriam, in which Aaron took the latter's part, is by them called a Cuſhite, or Ethiopian (11), though it is plain ſhe was a Midianite, being one of Jethro's daughters. To reconcile which, ſome have affirmed, that Midian was in the land of Cuſh, or at leaſt very near it, from the words of the prophet (12), I ſaw the tents of Cuſhan in affliction, and the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble. Others think, that it was not Zipporah, but Tharbis the Ethiopian princeſs, whom Moſes is affirmed by Joſephus to have married, and whom he would now have forſaken (13). But it ſeems more probable, that Cuſhite was a term of reproach or contempt, as Gipſy is with us; and that they called her by that name with no other view. The words therefore might be properly rendered thus; and Miriam and Aaron reflected upon Moſes, upon the ſcore of his Cuſhite, becauſe he had taken a Cuſhite to wife, there being nothing more frequent than ſuch repetitions in the Old Teſtament. As for the reaſon of this quarrel, 'tis likely, that Zipporah had ſpoken, as they thought, too much in praiſe of her huſband, upon the account of his having converſed ſo often with GOD, which made the leaſt of which being too young to walk, he ſet upon an aſs; with this mean equipage, and the miraculous rod in his hand (Z), he marched directly to Egypt.

(11) Numb. xii. 1. (12) Habak. iii. 7. (13) Hieron. Perrer. Jun. & al.

them

DURING

them reply, has GOD ſpoken to him alone, has he not ſpoken to us alſo? upon this GOD called them to the tabernacle, ſharply reproved Miriam and Aaron, and highly extolled Moſes's merit, but not a word is mentioned about his wife.

(Z) Concerning this ſtaff, from which Zipporah had her name, the Jews tell us a wonderful ſtory; viz that it grew in Jethro's garden, was called Zaphir, and had the Tetragrammaton written upon it: that it had been created in paradiſe on the ſixth day, and brought away by Adam, and had paſſed from him to Noah, Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, and Joſeph, and from him to Pharaoh. That Jethro had been one of his mildeſt counſellers, and daily adviſed him to lighten the burthen of the Iſraelites, whilſt Balaam, courtier like, peſtered him with contrary counſels: that being forced to fly the court, and retire into the land of Midian, he had privately conveyed this miraculous rod away, and ſtuck it in his garden, where it took ſuch deep root, that no force could pluck it up. That when Moſes came firſt to him, and acquainted him with what happened to him in Egypt, Jethro cauſed him to be cloſely confined, intending to ſend him back to the king of Egypt. In the mean time Zipporah being fallen in love with him, and having acquainted her father with it, he conſented that he ſhould be ſet at liberty and marry her, if he could pluck up the Zaphir rod which grew in his garden, and at the ſame time iſſued out a proclamation, that the man that could pull up the plant ſhould have his daughter in marriage. That immediately a great number of luſty men came and tried their ſtrength in vain; for Moſes alone was the man that could perform the feat; which he did with wonderful eaſe by virtue of the name of GOD, with the true pronunciation of which he was perfectly acquainted, and ſo obtained Jethro's daughter. They add, that he got the rod into the bargain, by which he afterwards wrought all his wonders in Egypt (14) Theſe abſurd fables would hardly be worth mentioning, were it not to ſhew, into what monſtrous extremes of credulity men are apt to fall, who have once denied the plaineſt truths. Were thoſe reverend gentlemens heads as long as their beards, they could never think, that ſuch ſtories can be of any credit either to their great law-giver, or to the inventers of them. Neither have the Arabians been more ſparing of their curious, though fabulous, conceits of Jethro and his rod. As for Jethro, he was, they ſay, the ſon of Taskir, the ſon of Midian, whom they make the immediate ſon of Iſhmael (15), though Moſes men-

(14) R. R. Tanchum-Mechit. & Scip. Sgambat. L. ii. Arch. Vet. Teſt. (15) Herbelot's Bibli. Orient. ſub. voc Schoaib. p. 790.

Aaron's children during his brother's absence.

DURING Moſes's retreat in Midian, Aaron his brother had married Eliſheba, the ſiſter of Naaſhon, both deſcended from Judah by their father Amminadab, the ſon of Ezron. He had already had four ſons by her, viz. Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar [y], the firſt of whom had likewiſe a ſon named Phineas, by a daughter of Putiel [z]. This was the ſtate of Aaron's family, when GOD commanded him to go to meet his brother [a]; but before he could reach to the mount of GOD (Horeb), a dreadful accident was like to have happened to Moſes, the particular occaſion and circumſtances of which we are left to gueſs at, he not having thought fit to commit them to writing. The account we have of it being but darkly expreſſed in the original, and having been miſunderſtood and miſtranſlated in moſt verſions, and particularly our own, we ſtill venture to depart from it, (where the original and the authority of thoſe, who, by their diligent application to it, have been able to give it a better light, will bear us out,) not forgetting to make our explication good by proper marginal notes.

He goes to meet him at Horeb.

MOSES was upon his firſt day's journey, as is probably ſuppoſed by the ſmall diſtance between Midian and Horeb, where he afterwards met his brother, when GOD appeared again to him, and charged him to perform all thoſe wonders tions no Midian among the ſons of Iſhmael *. They tell us that he made a preſent of this wonderful rod to his ſon in-law: that he had the gift of propheſy, and was ſent by GOD to preach the Unity of the Godhead to the Midianites (16), which as Mohammed tells us (17), he confirmed to them by miracles, and that when he went up to the top of a mountain to pray, it lowered its head to receive him. Another of his commentators adds, that Jethro made it his chief buſineſs to reprove the Midianites for their horrid robberies, falſe weights, and meaſures: but that thoſe incorrigible wretches, inſtead of taking his wholeſome counſels, threatened to drive him and his diſciples out of the country: that GOD provoked at their wickedneſs, ſent the angel Gabriel to deſtroy them by an earthquake, in which none were ſaved but Jethro and his diſciples, who went afterwards to meet his ſon-in-law in the wilderneſs (18), as we have it in the book of Exodus (19). They add, that the advice which he gave to Moſes there, got him the name of preacher to the prophets (20).

[y] Exod. vi. 23. [z] Ibid ver. 25. [a] Ibid. cap. iv. 27.

* Gen. xxv. paſſ (16) Ex. lib. Arab. Leb. Tarik. (17) Korin Araſ. (18) Comment. in ſupradict. cap. (19) Exod. xviii. 1, & ſeq. (20) Vid. Calm. ſub voc Jethro.

which

which he had ſhewed him before the king of Egypt, and to demand of him the diſmiſſion of his people Iſrael, whom he calls here by way of excellency his firſt-born, aſſuring him, that he would be with him, and that in caſe of an obſtinate refuſal, which he foreſaw he would certainly meet with, he would ſlay all the firſt-born of Egypt. Moſes was by this time got to the end of his firſt day's journey and arrived at the inn, when GOD appeared to him again, but with an angry look, and ſtruck him with a terrible diſeaſe (A). Moſes doth not tell Moſes ſmitten by the angel in the inn.

(A) The reader may remember, that we have already hinted ſomething concerning this adventure, in the hiſtory of Midian †, but reſerved the examination of the particulars of it to this place, to which they more properly belong. The greateſt part of commentators and expoſitors have ſuppoſed, that Moſes was troubled with a turbulent wife, which is the caſe of many a meek man, and that ſhe had conceived ſuch an averſion to the ceremony of circumciſion, that he had been forced for peace and quietneſs to neglect the performing it upon his youngeſt ſon, 'till the danger ſhe ſaw her husband or the child in (for the text is not plain which of the two it was) obliged her, not without great reluctancy and ill language, to perform the operation. We ſhall therefore endeavour to let this matter in a clearer light, and ſhew, that they have quite miſtaken the ſenſe of the original, and that there was neither quarrel nor ill language in the caſe, but that the ceremony was performed with all the decency and decorum that the ſolemnity of it, and their imminent danger, could poſſibly require.

Firſt then, as to the words, the LORD met him at the inn and ſought to ſlay him, which the Septuagint, Vulgate, and ſome other verſions render (21), the angel of the LORD, &c. it is plain, that they relate to Moſes, and not to the child, as Tertullian thinks, becauſe if it had been the latter, Moſes, rather than his wife, would have performed the operation. This ſhews likewiſe, that the words import no more, than that GOD ſmote him with ſome grievous diſeaſe, which ſo diſabled him from circumciſing the child, that Zipporah was forced to do it herſelf, though otherwiſe unfit. Thoſe who are acquainted with the genius of the Hebrew tongue know, that the phraſe here uſed ſignifies no more Some antient interpreters have indeed underſtood it in a different ſenſe, ſome thinking, that the angel appeared with a drawn ſword ready to kill Moſes (22). Others among the Jews telling us (23), that the viſion was a monſtrous large ſerpent which ſwallowed up Moſes's body מיר ושנו ועד המילה from the head to the place of circumciſion, where he ſtuck, by which ſhe gueſſed at the cauſe of his danger, and having forthwith circumciſed the child with the uſual form of חתנן דמית לי את

† Vid ſupr. pag. 116. (21) Pelican, Jun. & al. (22) Theodoret. in loc. (23) Elleſhemoth Rab. R. Sal & al.

which

tell us, whether the divine anger was occasioned by his incumbering

(which words we mistranslate a bloody husband thou art to me); she observed with joy her husband spued up again unhurt; upon which she began to exclaim in praise of circumcision, which she saw accompanied with such virtue. All that is worth observing from this Jewish comment is, that Zipporah expressed no passion against her husband during the whole action, much less in the words she spoke, seeing they were part of a form used in circumcision, as will appear in its proper place.

Secondly, As for the cause of GOD's anger against Moses, St. Austin and some others (24) supposed it to have been because he had taken his wife and children with him, the encumbernent of whom did not suit with the business he was sent about: for which reason, say they, he dismissed her as soon as he was delivered from his danger. But, unless there had been some indication of GOD's forbidding it, it is plain, it was his duty to take her and them with him, since man is to forsake all other relations to cleave to his wife (25). Theodoret thinks (26), that Moses was afraid to go on for fear of Pharaoh, but that doth not appear, seeing he was on his journey thither. The true reason therefore seems to be the neglect of circumcising the child, since Moses was delivered from the danger as soon as Zipporah had done it (27).

Thirdly, it is not easy to guess, how long, or why Moses deferred the circumcising of the child. Those who follow the Jerusalem Targum, which says, that Jethro and Zipporah took offence at it (28), seem to forget, that Jethro was a Midianite, descended from Abraham by Keturah, and consequently, that circumcision was most probably adopted by them, as it was by the Ishmaelites and all other descendants of that patriarch. Besides, they are fallen into this notion by mistaking the words and action of Zipporah, and thinking, that there was a sharp dispute between Moses and her about it, which we shall presently shew not to have been the case. Some think, that Moses did not suppose circumcision so necessary in a strange land, especially his children being only Israelites by the father's side (29). But the most learned of the Jews rather think most probably, that the child was not above eight days old, or so much, and that Moses, being in haste to fulfil GOD's commands, would not stay till she was brought to bed, and took her along with him, though ready to lie in (30). Neither is it plain from the text, that she went that first day's journey with a design to follow him quite to Egypt; for she might only accompany him thus far, thinking to have been back time enough to have lain in at her father's (24) August. Serm. de temp. (25) Genes. ii. 24. (26) Theodoret. in loc. (27) D. Kimchi, Rupert, Tostat Perrer. Mand. Villet, & al. (28) Targ. Jeros. in loc. Jun. Simler, Pelican. Piscat. & al. (29) Feru & al. (30) Aben Ezra R. Tanchum.

house

bering himſelf with a wife and two children, when he was ſent houſe. Though it fell out otherwiſe, and her labour came upon her ſooner than ſhe expected, being perhaps accelerated by the fatigue of the journey.

Fourthly, We come now to enquire into her behaviour and words after ſhe had performed the ceremony, which have proved the main ſtumbling-block of moſt tranſlations. For firſt, they have underſtood it, that ſhe flung the child's foreſkin at his (Moſes's) feet, though the text doth not ſay whether it was at his, the child's, or the angel's feet, and the words be ſo far from ſignifying flinging, eſpecially in anger, that they rather imply a laying the prepuce down in a decent or humble manner: for the literal ſenſe is, ſhe made it touch his feet. This has made Lud. Brugenſis and ſome others think, that ſhe humbly laid it at the angel's feet, beſeeching him, that for the ſake of that circumciſion-blood ſhe had now drawn, her huſband's life might be ſpared: and that her prayer having been heard, and ſhe ſeeing Moſes free from the danger, congratulated him and herſelf with the words in the text, which he renders, thou art now become, as it were, a new huſband or bridegroom to me by this child's blood (31). But we are going to ſhew, that the words were neither ſpoken to Moſes, nor to the angel, but to the child. Only let it be obſerved here by the by, that it is unreaſonable to ſuppoſe, that ſhe ſhould fling the child's fore-ſkin in anger at her huſband, who could not be blamed for the misfortune that had happened to him; much leſs likely is it, that ſhe would have dared to have flung it at the angel, if any ſuch had appeared to him at the inn; whereas, as we hinted before, the words do not imply an apparition, but Moſes being ſmitten with a deadly diſeaſe.

Fifthly, As to the words, A bloody huſband art thou to me, &c. one of our learned divines has fully proved them not to have been ſpoken to Moſes but the child (32). He very judiciouſly obſerves, firſt, that the word חתן Chatan, which we tranſlate huſband, ſignifies only a bridegroom, and it is not likely that Zipporah ſhould call him by that name after having been married ſo long, and having had two children by him, that appellative ceaſing immediately after the eight days of the nuptial ſolemnity were over. Another Obſervation he makes is, that this word Chatan doth properly ſignify a ſon-in law, and ſo expreſſes not the relation the man has to his wife, but to her parents; for which reaſon it never has any affixed pronoun, unleſs it be with relation to the latter. The ſame may likewiſe be ſaid of the word כלה Calah, bride, or rather daughter-in-law; it being uſed only with relation to the huſband's parents, who alone can properly call the married woman כלתי Calathi, my daughter-in law, but the bridegroom never calls her

(31) Lud. Brug. in loc. & in Oper. Criticor. Tom. iv. (32) Jos. Med. Sermon on the words

by sent upon so glorious and important a message, or because he had deferred to circumcise his youngest son, either out of regard to his tender age, or in complaisance to his wife, who might fear lest such an operation should make him unfit to travel for a while, if not endanger his life in that hot country. Zipporah, however, taking it in the latter sense, made what haste she could to get a sharp stone, with which she cut off the child's prepuce, and laid it at his feet, telling him at the same time, that he was now become a joyful bridegroom to her by the blood of this circumcision. The ceremony was no

Zipporah circumcises her son, and Moses is restored.

by that name to signify his bride; it being certain, that the Hebrew language has no word to express a bridegroom or bride, with respect to the relation they bear to one another. It would therefore have been nonsense in Zipporah to have called him by the name of Chatan, which neither expressed an old or a new husband; the question then will be, how it could be applied to the child? and herein the Hebrew doctors are best able to help us out, who tell us, that it was the custom of the women to call the circumcised child Chatan, הנשים לקרא לבן כאשר יטול חתן (33). Kimchi says, that it signifies originally one that gives joy, and is therefore used to express the joy that attends a wedding, or the circumcision of a child (34). Accordingly we find, that the Arabians called the circumcised מחתון Machtun, or one that is made a Chatan, in the same manner as we call a baptized child christened. The words then used by Zipporah ought to have been translated, thou art (now) to me a joyful circumcised son. To which if we add the last observation of the same learned author that the word לי Li, which we translate, to me, doth more properly signify here by me, as it doth in a great many other places of scripture, the sense will be still more plainly this; thou art now here by me made a circumcised child, which was the form of words used in the circumcision, and might be more properly rendered, I do pronounce thee circumcised. Neither is it at all improbable, that this word חתן was originally used in this form, not only to express the usual joy of a child's circumcision, but likewise his admission into the alliance made by God with Abraham and his posterity, or his spousal with the church of God; in both which senses that word is very fitly applied; from which it is most probable, that it was at the child's feet that she laid the foreskin, when she spake the words above-mentioned. This is so far from being a new or peculiar notion of Mr. Mede, that we find several antient versions expounding it after the very same manner (35); from all which it plainly appears, that there neither was any squabble between Moses and his wife, nor any indecency or ill language used by her.

(33) Idem ibid. Septuagint & al. (34) D. Kimchi in Radic. (35) Chald.

ſooner over, but Moſes was reſtored again, and able to purſue his journey towards mount Horeb, whilſt his wife took the two children back to her father Jethro, reſolved to wait there, 'till a more favourable opportunity offered to rejoin her huſband.

Joins his brother at mount Horeb.

IN the mean time Moſes and Aaron met at the foot of mount Horeb, and after the firſt embraces of two brothers who had not ſeen, or perhaps heard from, one another during the ſpace of forty years, Moſes acquainted him with the commiſſion he had received from GOD. Aaron expreſſed a ſenſible joy at the news, and was ſo far from conceiving the leaſt uneaſineſs to ſee his younger brother ſo far preferred before him, that he promiſed to be obedient in all things to the divine will. After this they continued their journey towards Egypt, and being happily arrived at the land of Goſhen, their firſt care was to aſſemble the elders or heads of the Iſraelites, and to impart to them the joyful news of their ſpeedy deliverance; whilſt Moſes, to confirm their heſitating belief, failed not to work thoſe miracles before them, by which GOD had commanded him to eſtabliſh his credit and authority among them. Theſe firſt eſſays were received with incredible joy by the whole aſſembly, every one of them bowing themſelves in token of gratitude and adoration to the divine goodneſs, which had at length taken pity of their miſerable ſlavery [b]. But this docile diſpoſition laſted no longer than they thought their deliverance would coſt nothing but miracles, and that the care and danger of it would only fall upon Moſes and Aaron; but when it came to touch them a little nearer, they became ſo reſty and deſponding, that Moſes found them as hard to be perſuaded to embrace their freedom, as Pharaoh was to grant it to them (B).

Declares his commiſſion to the Iſraelites.

[b] Exod. iv.

(B) Some hiſtorians have ventured to give us the name of this Pharaoh. Apion calls him Amoſis, or Amaſis; Euſebius, Chremeris; but archbiſhop Uſher thinks after Manetho, that is was Amenophis the ſon of Rameſes-Miamun, and father of Seſothis, called alſo after his grand-father Rameſes. He is alſo of opinion, that this Amenophis is the ſame monarch whom the Grecks call Belus, the father of Ægyptus and Danaus, though the fable-writers have confounded him with Belus the Aſſyrian and father of Ninus (36); the truth is, that we have ſo little light from hiſtory as to this point, that it is very dangerous to affirm any thing about it *.

(36) Uſſer An. p. 13.

* See Vol. I. p. 503, &c.

Delivers his meſſage to the king of Egypt.

MOSES and Aaron, however, did not delay to open their commiſſion before the Egyptian king, but the preamble of it, Thus ſaid the LORD GOD of the Hebrews, ſounded ſo ſtrangely in his ears, unuſed to ſuch an expreſſion, and perhaps to the naming of any other GOD beſides himſelf, that he could not forbear wondering at their boldneſs, telling them that he knew no ſuch GOD, and that as to the Iſraelites, they ſhould not find him ſo eaſy to part with them. This was indeed what they were bid to expect; nevertheleſs they ventured to tell him, that they knew that great GOD of whom they ſpoke, though he did not; and that he had charged them, that they ſhould all go three days journey to celebrate a feſtival to him, and that if they ſhould omit complying with his command, he would ſoon puniſh their diſobedience, either by peſtilence or by the ſword. Moſes could not expect, that Pharaoh ſhould concern himſelf about their danger upon that account; but he was not perhaps as yet commiſſioned to make uſe of more urgent motives. He was therefore diſmiſſed with his brother Aaron, with a ſevere reprimand, for putting ſuch idle notions into their people's heads, and debauching them from their work, bidding them to return to their own taſks, and they ſhould ſoon know the ſucceſs of this wiſe embaſſy. As this proved the beginning of that famous conteſt between Moſes, or rather the GOD of Iſrael, and the king of Egypt, ſo it did likewiſe the fatal ſource of new ſorrows and complaints to the Iſraelites. For Pharaoh fearing their exceſſive numbers, and thinking, or at leaſt pretending, that idleneſs and wantonneſs were the cauſe of this rambling fit of religion, ordered their taſk-maſters to harden their work ſtill more, and, inſtead of giving them ſtraw to dry their bricks with, to make them wander over the land, ſince they had ſuch an inclination for a change of air, and to gather themſelves ſtubble inſtead of it, without diminiſhing one tittle of their work. This was indeed expecting impoſſibilities from them, but their mercileſs taſk-maſters, not regarding it, failed not to puniſh their overſeers, whenever they found them come ſhort of their appointed taſk. Theſe therefore, not thinking perhaps, that Pharaoh could be the author of ſuch a cruel and unreaſonable order, went in a body to make their grievances known to him; but he, inſtead of minding their piteous complaints, only accuſed them of being grown idle and wanton for want of work, and diſmiſſed them with the utmoſt unconcern. They were ſcarce got out of Pharaoh's palace before Moſes and Aaron met them, probably to enquire of their ſucceſs, but if they had not read it in their their dejected looks, they could not fail of hearing of it; for the poor overſeers had no ſooner caſt their eyes on them, but they began to inveigh againſt them in the bittereſt terms, as the authors of this new addition of miſery, which could terminate in nothing but death and deſpair. It would have been in vain for Moſes to have offered any thing either in his own defence, or by way of comfort to them at that time; he thought it more adviſeable to apply himſelf to GOD, and in the humbleſt terms to expoſtulate with him for the ill ſucceſs of this firſt meſſage.

The Iſraelites burthens encreaſed.

MOSES had no ſooner made an end of his complaint, but GOD gave him freſh aſſurances of his love and compaſſion for his groaning people. He bid him go to them, and aſ- Moſes is ſure them from him, that he would ſpeedily let all Egypt bid to go ſee that he was their GOD, and would be their deliverer and again to conductor into that land, which he had promiſed to their Pharaoh. fathers, to whom he had indeed appeared, and been known heretofore by the name of El Shaddai, GOD Almighty or All-ſufficient, though never 'till now by his great name Jehovah (C). But, continued he, I will ſignalize their deliverance, by ſuch tokens of my juſtice on that obſtinate Monarch and his cruel people, that they ſhall be forced at laſt to acknowledge the divine hand that ſmiteth them, and diſmiſs my people, though never ſo much againſt their will. This was more than enough to give new life to Moſes, though all too little and inſufficient to adminiſter the leaſt comfort to his unhappy people, who, ſinking under the weight of their oppreſſion, did hardly give an ear to what he ſaid to them. Moſes was going away from them, grieved at his heart to behold their miſery and deſpair, when GOD commanded him to go immediately to Pharaoh, and to renew his demand in his name, not to detain his people any longer at his peril. But Moſes was ſo diſheartened at his ill ſucceſs, that he could not forbear ſhewing an exceſſive reluctancy to obey. Alas, ſaid he, if my words can find ſo little credit with thy own people, how can I expect, that they will be regarded by that faithleſs king, eſpecially conſidering with what difficulty I am forced to utter them. To which GOD was pleaſed to anſwer, behold Moſes, I give thee a miraculous, a divine power, over Pharaoh, and thy brother ſhall be as thy prophet and interpreter to him. And though I ſuffer his heart to continue hardened (D), 'till thou

(C) Thoſe who conclude from this paſſage, that the name Jehovah (37), or the genuine meaning (38), or laſtly the true pronunciation of it (39), had been unknown to the patriarchs Abraham, Iſaac, &c. and that Moſes uſed it by way of anticipation, and ſpoke according to the time in which he wrote, when GOD had made it fully known to his people, ſeem to forget, that Abraham called the mountain on which he was to have ſacrificed his ſon Jehovah jired. However it muſt be owned, that there is a great obſcurity in the words of Moſes, out of which many Hebrew and Chriſtian commentators have endeavoured to bring out ſome myſteries, which we ſhould be loath to vend after them. The moſt natural expoſition is, that which renders the Hebrew word Shem by character inſtead of name, and then the ſenſe will be this; In my character of El Shaddai, or omnipotent, was I only known to them; that is, they only relied on my word and all-ſufficient power for the fulfilling my promiſes to them; but now I'll be known by the character of Jehovah, or performer of thoſe promiſes (40). Vid. our notes under the word Jehovah, page 488, not. T.

(37) Kimchi, Aben-ezra, Oleaſter, &c. (38) Paul Brug. Rupert. Lyra. Cajetan. Toſtat. (39) Oleaſt. Gloſs. Berruyer, &c. (40) Simler, Junius, & al.

(D) We have ventured to depart from our own, and almoſt all other verſions, which make GOD the chief hardner of Pharaoh's heart, that he might inflict the more ſevere puniſhments on him. A notion, which however embraced by the Predeſtinarians, ſeems ſo ſhocking to reaſon, that one would ſooner chooſe to ſay with the fool there is no GOD, than to believe him capable of ſuch manifeſt injuſtice. We ſhall have occaſion to reſume this ſubject in the ſequel of this hiſtory upon another occaſion, and to ſhew, that the Jews have been the firſt broachers of this monſtrous doctrine, and, by their verſions and paraphraſes, have led the way to others to render theſe, and many other texts of the old teſtament, in a ſenſe, in which neither the original, nor the whole tenour of ſcripture, nor the notion of a deity, nor even the context in this particular caſe, could bear them out. For who can deny, but what GOD did to Pharaoh and the Egyptians, was much more proper to ſoften, than to harden, his heart, eſpecially when it is obſervable, that it was not 'til after ſeeing the miracles, and after the ceaſing of the plagues, that his heart is ſaid to be hardened? we think ourſelves therefore obliged to do juſtice to thoſe learned critics, who have been at the pains of clearing the ſcriptures from charging the great judge of heaven and earth with ſuch foul injuſtice, by proving, even againſt the Jews, that the verbs here uſed are in the conjugations Piel and Hiphil, as they are called by the grammarians, and ſignify often a bare permiſſion, of which they have given us very many unqueſtionable inſtances, which we ſhall not trouble our reader with here, ſeeing he may conſult the authors themſelves whoſe thou haſt wrought all the miracles I have charged thee with; yet be aſſured, that I will bring Iſrael out of their bondage like a triumphant army, and the Egyptians ſhall know that I am the LORD. Pharaoh indeed will not conſent 'till he is forced to it. For, ſince he refuſed to acknowledge me and hardeneth himſelf againſt my commands, it is but juſt I ſhould ſo far forſake him, that, though my wonders are multiplied before him, and the whole land is aſtoniſhed at them, he alone ſhall continue obdurate and inſenſible of them. Go then, let your mighty works convince that proud tyrant at leaſt, that your meſſage is from a greater and more powerful monarch than he [d]. Moſes and Aaron did forthwith obey, and, having preſented themſelves before Pharaoh, confirmed their meſſage by the firſt miracle, and Moſes threw down his rod, which turned immediately into a ſerpent. Pharaoh, though ſomewhat ſurpriſed at it, yet failed not to try what his magicians could do, who were no ſooner come but their rods were likewiſe turned into ſerpents, ſo that all the ſuperiority which Moſes ſhewed over them at that time was, that, whilſt the king and court were applauding their ſkill, his rod ſwallowed up thoſe of the Egyptians (E), However, theirs.

First miracle. Moſes's rod turned into a ſerpent. The Magicians do the ſame by whoſe names he will find in the margin (41). From all theſe and many more authorities, it is plain, that the words ought to have been tranſlated, as we have, that GOD ſuffered the heart of Pharaoh to be hardened, as all thoſe who are never ſo little verſed in the Hebrew will readily own. As for thoſe places where it is ſaid, for this cauſe have I ſet thee up, that I might ſhew my power, &c. it is plain, they ought to have been rendered; for this cauſe have I ſuffered thee to ſubſiſt or to ſtand, &c. that is, I have forbore to cut thee off, or ſpared thee from the common ruin, &c. which bear quite another ſenſe, and only ſhew, that, though he had long ago deſerved to be deſtroyed, yet GOD thought fit to let him ſubſiſt, 'till he had by his many wonders delivered his people in ſpight of all his oppoſition.

[d] Exod vii.

(E) The Talmud has preſerved us a tradition of a proverbial taunt, with which the Egyptians flouted Moſes, when he began to work his miracles among them; thou bringeſt ſtraw to Aſſra, a place

(41) Arr. Montan de Idiom Hæbr. N. 42. Fin. Can Theol. Cent. 2. Gerhard de Provid Calov. & Rung. in Exod. Hommin. qu. de Provid. 57, 91. Meitzer. diſp: Gieſſ. Tom. p. 745. Meiner Anthropol. dec. 1. Pfeifer dubia V. T. Cent. 1. l. 87. Pelling & Whitby againſt Predeſt. Le Clerc in loc. Grot. Le Scene Eſſay & al.

ever this advantage made no great impreſſion on Pharaoh, who might attribute it only to his ſuperior ſkill in magic. This place in Egypt where ſtraw abounded; meaning, that he had choſen the wrong place to play his conjuring tricks, in a country that was ſo well ſtocked with conjurers. Origen ſays, that they (the Egyptians) did not abſolutely deny the miracles of Moſes, but only pretended, that they were done by deluſion, and not by a divine power (1). And Philo introduces the Egyptian magicians ſpeaking to Pharaoh and his court to this purpoſe; why are you frighted, we are not ignorant of ſuch things, ſeeing we profeſs the ſame ourſelves (2)?

And here, ſince we are entering into a long ſcene of Moſes's miracles, the greateſt part of which were imitated by the magicians of Pharaoh, it will not be amiſs to enquire, who the latter were, by what power they did perform thoſe wonders, and why they came ſhort of ſome of thoſe of Moſes. As to the firſt we promiſed in a former place to prove that they were Jannes and Jambres * mentioned by St. Paul to have withſtood Moſes (3), or as Pliny calls them Jannes, and Jotapha (4), when ſpeaking of the ſect of the magicians, he ſays, that Moſes, Janne and Jotapha, were the heads and founders of it. They are celebrated in the Talmud † under the names of יוחני וממבר Jochani and Mamri. The targum of Jonathan (5) affirms them to have been Balaam's ſons, and that they went along with him to Balak king of Moab. Some Jewiſh authors call them Jares and Jambres; others Jochanan and Mamre, and others Jonah and Jombres (6), and pretend that they were drowned in the Red ſea with the Egyptians, though others think, that they were not deſtroyed 'till the war which Phineas waged againſt the Midianites (7). The apocryphal book entitled Jannes and Jambres, quoted by Origen (8), and by Hilary the deacon (9), affirm them to have been two brothers; and Numenius quoted by Euſebius (10) gives us this account of them. "Jannes and Jam-
"bres, interpreters of the myſteries of Egypt, were in great re"pute at the time when the Hebrews were driven out of Egypt,
"being in the opinion of all men inferior to none in the art of "magic. For, by the general voice of the Egyptians, they two "were choſen to oppoſe Moſes, ring-leader of the Jews, whoſe "prayers were of all others, moſt prevalent with GOD; and they "only were able to fruſtrate and undo all thoſe moſt grievous,

(1) Orig. cont. Celſ. lib. iii Warren cont. Barnet, p. 40. (2) Phil. in vit. Moſ. vid. * Vid. ſup. Vol. I. p. 477. (3) 2 Tim. iii. 8. (4) Lib. xxx. c. i. † Tract מנחות cap. ix. (5) Targ in Num. xxii. 22. (6) Buxtorf Lexic. Talmud. Fabric. de Apocr. Vet. Teſt. (7) Num. xxv. 7, 8. (8) Orig. in Matth. Tract. xxxv. (9) Ambroſiaſt. in 2 Tim. iii. 8. (10) In Ariſtob. ap. Euſeb. prep Evang. lib. ix. c. viii.

"plagues

This miracle therefore was ſoon followed by another, which was turning all the running and ſtanding waters of Egypt into Second Miracle. The waters turned into blood.

" plagues which Moſes brought upon Egypt, in the open view and " ſight of all the Egyptians." Thus much for the names and character of thoſe magicians.

The Mohammedans, however, have not failed, according to cuſtom, to ſtuff this part of Moſes's hiſtory with ſome of their fables. We ſhall juſt give a ſhort ſketch of what they have writ of it. They tell us, that Moſes having wrought ſome miracles before the king of Egypt, and very much ſurpriſed him with them, he was adviſed by his council to amuſe him with fair hopes, 'till he had ſent for ſome of the moſt expert magicians from Thebaide. Accordingly Sabour and Gadour, two brothers renowned for their magic ſkill, were ſent for; but before they repaired to Pharaoh's court, they went to conſult the Manes of their father about the ſucceſs of their journey, acquainting him withal, that the two magicians, whom they were ſent to oppoſe, had a rod which they turned into a ſerpent, and devoured all that made head againſt it. Their father's ghoſt anſwered, that if that rod turned itſelf into a ſerpent whilſt they were aſleep, they muſt never expect to prevail againſt them. Upon their arrival at Memphis, their firſt care was to inform themſelves about this material circumſtance, and found, that their rod did guard them in the ſhape of a ſerpent whilſt they ſlept, and let none come near them. However, this did not hinder them from appearing before Pharaoh, at the head of his other magicians, to the number, as ſome make it, of 70,000. Beſides theſe there were two other excellent ones with their diſciples, and laſtly, the Egyptian High-prieſt at the head of all the magicians of that country. All theſe had prepared rods, and cords filled with quick-ſilver, which, being heated by the ſun, imitated the winding of a ſerpent, but they were ſoon deſtroyed by that of Moſes, to the great ſurprize of all the beholders, but eſpecially of Sabour and Gadour, who thereupon renounced their profeſſion and embraced Moſes's religion, and were put to death for it by order of the Egyptian king, as holding ſecret correſpondence with Moſes (11).

From this account it is plain, that the Mohammedans looked upon the wonders wrought by the Egyptians rather as Hocus Pocus tricks, than ſupernatural works. However, though this opinion has been likewiſe maintained by ſeveral eminent perſons, both Jews and Chriſtians (12); yet that of St Auſtin (13), that they were done by

(11) Herbelot. Bibliot. Orient, p. 648, & ſeq. Monoſah ap. Calmet. ſub. voc. James. (12) Joſ. Ant lib. ii. c. xiii. Juſtin Mart. quæſt Orthod. xvi. Tertul. lib. de anima. Greg. Nyſſen. Ambroſ. Hieron. cont. Jovin. lib ii. & al. (13) Auguſt lib. xxxvii. quæſt. 79, 98, & lib. iii. de Trinitate cap vii. Theodoret. in Exod. lib. xviii. Aquin. Toſtat. Lyra. Brug. Cajet. Uſſer. Ann. Vet.

the

into blood; so that there was not a drop of water left in the whole land for the Egyptians to drink: how long they continued so Moses has not told us; for what is added afterwards in the last verse of this chapter, that seven days were compleated after the turning of the waters into blood, is rather the space between this miracle and that of the frogs, which they are bid to perform in the beginning of the next chapter. For as the division of the bible into chapters was of later invention, and introduced for the better conveniency of reading it, if we join the last verse of the seventh with the beginning of the eighth, it will run thus; And seven days were fulfilled after the turning the waters into blood, and the LORD spake, and so on, which is the same as if he had said, and seven days after the turning of the waters into blood GOD spake to Moses. However, this change continued long enough the power of the devil, has been more universally received, and that for the two following reasons; first, because the scriptures of the old and new testament seem to attribute some such power to evil spirits; and secondly, because Moses expresses himself in such terms as manifestly shew, that they really imitated him in all those wonders they wrought. For in this case of their rods being turned into serpents he doth not say, that they made them appear to be such by a deceptio visus; but that וישליכו איש מטהו ויהיו לתנינם they flung down every man his rod, and that they became serpents. And in all the other cases wherein they imitated him, he expresses it thus; ויעשו גם הם and ויעשי כן חרטומיהם and the magicians did so likewise; or, and the magicians, even they, did so likewise. If it be asked why GOD did suffer them to borrow this power from the devil to invalidate, if possible, those miracles, which his servant wrought by his divine power, the following reasons may be given for it; namely, first, it was necessary that these magicians should be suffered to exert the utmost of their power against Moses, in order to clear him from the imputation of magic or sorcery; for as the notion of such an extraordinary art was very rife, not only among the Egyptians, but all other nations, if they had not entered into this strenuous competition with him, and been at length overcome by him, both the Hebrews and Egyptians would have been apter to have attributed all his miracles to his skill in magic, than to the divine power. Secondly, it was necessary in order to confirm the faith of the wavering and desponding Israelites, by making them see the difference between Moses's acting by the power of GOD, and the sorcerers by that of Satan. And lastly, in order to preserve them afterwards from being seduced by any false miracles from the true worship of GOD (14).

(14) Rupert. Perrer. Simler, Ferus, Villet. Tremel. & al. in loc.

to kill all the fiſh, and oblige the Egyptians to dig round about the river for freſh water to drink, none of the reſt being fit for that or any other uſe. This miracle was likewiſe imitated by the magicians, but whether upon ſea-water, brought on purpoſe, or ſome freſh water fetched from the land of Goſhen, or ſome of that which they had drawn out of their new-digged wells, is not eaſy to gueſs; though it is more probable, that they ſtaid 'till the waters of the Nile and other places were reſtored to their former colour and taſte. However that be, Pharaoh was not one jot the nearer being convinced [c]; wherefore Moſes was again ſent to him to threaten him, that if he did not let Iſrael go, his whole kingdom ſhould be ſo filled with frogs, that their ovens, their beds, and tables ſhould ſwarm with them; but Pharaoh ſtill deſpiſing their threats, and bidding them defiance, was ſoon made ſenſible of his raſhneſs. His magicians indeed went on to perſuade him that Moſes was only ſuch another miracle-monger as they were, by imitating alſo this miracle and bringing a freſh ſwarm of frogs. They might indeed have ſhewed their ſkill to a better purpoſe, if they had tried to have removed thoſe inſects, of which the Egyptians did not want this freſh ſupply, but it ſeems they had not power enough to do that. Wherefore Pharaoh was reduced to ſend for Moſes, and to promiſe him, that he would let Iſrael go, if he would but deliver him and his country from that plaguy vermin. Whether there was any ſincerity in this promiſe, or whether it was only forced from him by the preſent calamity, Moſes took him at his word, and deſiring him to name the time when he ſhould rid the land of thoſe creatures, did preciſely perform his part; ſo that by the next day, the time appointed by the king, there was not one frog left alive in all the land. But whilſt his ſubjects were gathering them up in heaps, in order to carry them off, their ſtench being like to have bred an infection, Pharaoh was thinking how to elude his promiſe, not conſidering, that he only made way for another plague.

Third miracle, of Frogs.

FOR when Moſes found himſelf baffled, he touched the duſt with his rod, which was immediately turned into lice, or, as ſome think, into gnats, which ſmall inſect, they ſay, is more common, and their ſting more tormenting in Egypt than any where elſe. But our verſion ſeems to us more agreeable to the original, and to the generality of antient and modern translations and expositors [f]. These infected man and beast in such quantities, that one would have imagined, that all the dust of Egypt had been turned into lice. Pharaoh sent for his magicians, and bid them try their skill; but in vain, for either their power proved too short, or was curtailed by a superior hand, so that they were forced to acknowledge, that the finger of GOD did plainly display itself in this miracle (F). However Pharaoh not regarding their words, Moses and Aaron met him the next morning, as he was going down to the river, and told him, that his obstinacy would only bring more and worse plagues upon him, the next of which would be such mixed swarms of flies as would darken the air; that GOD however, would put a difference between his people and the Egyptians, and that there should none be found in all the land of Goshen, though the rest of the kingdom did swarm with them; adding, that the next day should bring this new plague upon him. Accordingly, by the next morning, the air was filled with those insects, whose bite was so venemous and painful, that the mischief which they did to Egypt became intolerable [g], and forced the king to send for Moses and Aaron, and to tell them, that he would give them leave to sacrifice to their GOD, provided it was done within his dominions. To this they answered, they could not comply with his command,

Fourth miracle, of the Lice.

[c] Exod. vii.

Fifth miracle, of swarms of flies.

[f] CHALD. TARG. JOSEPH. Ant. lii. c. xiv. RABBIN. MONTAN. MUNSTER VATABL. JUN. BOCHART. & al. [g] Vid. Psal. lxxviii. 45.

(F) What has been said under this head in the last note, will easily lead us to an answer to the next question, why the magicians could not go thorough stitch with all the miracles of Moses, and in particular in not being able to bring forth lice, when they had been able to bring swarms of frogs and other insects. For without having recourse to the common solution, that this was a new creation of a new kind of vermin, which therefore could not be imitated by the devil, for which we have no warrant from the text, which expressly calls them lice, it will be sufficient to say, that herein Moses shewed his superior power in tying their hands from working a miracle in all respects as easy as any they had done 'till then. For this was more than sufficient to extort this confession from them, that he acted by a superior power, and that the finger of GOD was in it (15). *

(15) Exod. viii. 19. * Vid. Lesley's easy method with the Deists.

without

without imminent danger of their lives, ſeeing they ſhould be obliged to ſacrifice ſuch creatures as the Egyptians worſhipped, who would therefore be ready to ſtone them as guilty of the moſt horrid and abominable ſacrilege. They therefore inſiſted upon going three days journey out of the land, that they might ſafely perform their GOD's command. This anſwer, which gave him juſt reaſon to ſuſpect, that they had a mind to go away for good, put him to a terrible nonplus. On the one hand he was very unwilling to hazard the loſing of the Iſraelites, and on the other the flies did ſuch an incredible deal of harm, that he heard nothing but complaints on all ſides. At length, being become more ſeemingly flexible, he promiſed, that they ſhould go, provided that it was at no great diſtance from Egypt, and they promiſed him faithfully to return again in a little time, and he, to their great ſurpriſe, deſired that they would pray for him. He could not indeed have choſen a more powerful or a more ready interceſſor, had not the tokens of God's clemency, as well as thoſe of his ſeverity, been equally loſt upon him. However, Moſes aſſured him, that he would immediately go out, and intreat the LORD for him, and deſired him to keep his word; but no ſooner had his prayer obtained a reprieve, and delivered the kingdom from the plague of thoſe venemous inſects, than the king drew on another by his obſtinacy and breach of promiſe [h].

Sixth miracle, The cattle of the Egyptians killed by murrain.

THIS next judgment fell, according to Moſes's word, on all the cattle of the Egyptians, the greateſt part of which died by the next day, whilſt that of the Iſraelites remained unhurt. But this not touching the king near enough, the next that followed was more effectually felt by him. It was a violent and painful boil which brake out upon man and beaſt, by Aaron's throwing a handful of the aſhes of the furnace into the air. Pharaoh, according to cuſtom had recourſe to his magicians, who, being themſelves ſmitten with the boils, and being perhaps afraid of ſomething worſe, dared not appear before Moſes. Notwithſtanding this, Pharaoh continued obſtinate, and choſe rather to endure the ſmart of his boils, than the loſs of Iſrael. However it was not long before Moſes was ſent to threaten him with a more terrible one, in which the voice of the God of Iſrael ſhould be heard in thunder, and his vengeance felt in ſuch dreadful ſtorms of hail, as had not been known ſince the foundation of Egypt. He adviſed him likewiſe not to exalt himſelf againſt the Seventh miracle, Boils upon man and beaſt.

Eighth miracle, of Hail-ſtones and thunders.

[h] Exod. viii.

Iſraelites, ſeeing their GOD hath hitherto preſerved him from ruin, only to convince him of his almighty power by all theſe ſigns and wonders, and to perſuade him to confeſs and adore him, and prevent thereby the future effects of his wrath; for added he, if all theſe judgments will not humble thee, know, that GOD hath a great many in ſtore againſt thee, which ſhall force thee at laſt to ſubmit, tho' never ſo much againſt thy will. He, who alone did ſet thee on the throne, might indeed have cut thee off from thy firſt refuſal; but, ſince he hath ſpared thee hitherto, remember, it is either to force thee to glorify him by thy ſubmiſſion, or to be glorified by this and future ages, by the puniſhment which thy pride and obſtinacy do force from him, after ſo many gracious invitations and miraculous warnings (G). He gave him but that one day to conſider of it, aſſuring him, that the next day would prove a diſmal one to the Egyptians, unleſs he reſolved to diſmiſs the Iſraelites before that time, between whom and the Egyptians GOD would put ſuch a difference, that the land of Goſhen ſhould be entirely free from the terrible puniſhment, with which Egypt would be half undone. However, finding the king ſtill too hardened and incredulous to prevent this new judgment, he forewarned him and his court to ſend for ſuch cattle as they had left out in the fields, ſince all that was not under ſome ſtrong ſhelter would certainly be killed by the hail. Moſes was no ſooner gone from him, but thoſe who gave credit to his words ſent to have their ſervants and cattle ſafely lodged, whilſt the reſt, lightly regarding it, left them to periſh in the field. For no ſooner had Moſes lifted up his rod towards heaven on the next morning, but the thunders, lightnings, and hail followed one another ſo thick, that Egypt was half deſtroyed by them. The hail that then fell was of ſuch prodigious bigneſs, that it killed man and beaſt, broke all the trees, and deſtroyed all the barley and flax it chanced to fall upon. The wheat only and the rye eſcaped, becauſe they were not ſufficiently grown, for the barley harveſt in Egypt begins about the middle or latter end of March, whereas that of the wheat and rye doth not begin 'till ſix or ſeven weeks after. As for the land of Goſhen, it was found, upon enquiry, to have been as free from this, as it had been from all the former plagues.

(G) This verſion, wherein we have departed from all others and kept cloſe to the original, the reader may ſee juſtified in a former note †.

† Vid. ſupra, p. 508. Not. D.

THESE

THESE thunders and lightnings, but eſpecially the hail, which was the more extraordinary, becauſe it ſeldom or never rains in that part of Egypt, ſo frighted the proud king, that he ſent for Moſes and Aaron out of hand, and expreſſed himſelf in ſuch terms to them, as might have paſt for ſure tokens of a real converſion: he owned himſelf an obſtinate ſinner, juſtly puniſhed for his diſobedience, and begged, that they would but deliver him from the noiſe of thoſe dreadful thunders, after which he promiſed not to detain them one moment longer. Moſes was too well acquainted with him by this time, to depend upon this promiſe, which, he ſaw, was only extorted from him by his preſent dread. He made no ſcruple to tell him ſo. However, he promiſed him to obtain a ſpeedy ceſſation of them as ſoon as they were gone out, which he accordingly did, and gave the Egyptians an opportunity to examine the miſchief that had been done by the hail, which they found to be much greater than they had imagined. This inſpired many of them with a real fear of the GOD of Iſrael; but this was not the caſe of Pharaoh and his council, who no ſooner perceived that the ſtorm was over, but they returned to their old way[i]. Moſes therefore was ſent to ſignify to them what judgment they were to expect next, which was to be ſuch an infinite number of locuſts, as ſhould cover the face of the earth, and eat up what the hail had left undeſtroyed. There were ſome about the king then, who took the liberty to repreſent to him the inconceivable damage which his kingdom had already received; that Egypt was already deſtroyed, and that it was high time the Hebrews were ſent away to ſerve their God. Pharaoh was almoſt perſuaded to let them go, but having ſent for Moſes and Aaron back to enquire who of them were to go, and who were to ſtay, he was ſo highly provoked at their inſiſting upon taking with them their wives, children, cattle, and all that they had, that he could not forbear upbraiding them with their ill intentions, which, though concealed with ſo much art, and cloaked with the ſpecious pretence of religion and the ſervice of GOD, yet did but too plainly ſhew, that they had no mind ever to return into Egypt again. He warned them of the danger they ran themſelves into, and adviſed them to content themſelves with taking only the men with them, and leaving their wives and children behind; and, having threatened them ſeverely, cauſed them to be turned out of doors.

The great miſchief done by it.

MOSES was no ſooner got out, than he lifted up his rod over the land of Egypt. This was quickly followed by an eaſt Ninth miracle. Locuſts.

[i] Exod. ix.

east wind, which blowed all the night, and brought such a numerous swarm of locusts by the next morning, as had never been seen before; and these, spreading themselves all over the land, did in a little time eat up every blade of grass, and every thing that had escaped the storm of hail. Pharaoh did not fail to send for Moses, to own his fault, and beg for one reprieve more; but having obtained it by means of a west wind, which blew all the locusts into the sea, he continued as inflexible as ever. This new provocation did not go long unpunished, and Egypt was presently after smitten with such horrid darkness, that Moses chooses to express it by a darkness that may be felt. During the three days it lasted the Egyptians did neither see one another, nor dare to stir out of their place, but continued fixed and immoveable, as if they had been thunder-struck, whilst the land of Goshen enjoyed its usual day-light. The horror of this obscurity, which could not be removed by the common methods then used to supply the absence of the sun, caused such dreadful apprehensions in the king and all his subjects, and was so heightened by the dismal outcries of men, women, and children, that their consternation may be much easier imagined than expressed. However, it made so deep an impression upon them, that, as soon as the light was restored to them, Moses and Aaron were immediately sent for, to prevent, if possible, some further and more terrible punishment. The king, according to custom, told them, that he was willing to grant their request, and that they might go with their wives and children, but insisted, that their flocks should be left behind. Moses, after having represented to him the unreasonableness of such a demand, seeing they only knew that they were to offer up a solemn sacrifice to GOD, but were not yet acquainted what kind of beasts he would choose to have sacrificed to him, observing Pharaoh's unwillingness to consent, told him in express terms, that they would take all their cattle with them, and that not a single hoof should remain in Egypt. We need not to wonder, if so proud a king as Pharaoh was could not hear so bold a demand without the highest resentment. He caused him to be thrust from his presence with the utmost indignation, threatening him, that if he dared to come before him any more, it should certainly cost him his life. Such impotent threatenings had nothing in them that could frighten a man like Moses; who therefore contented himself with saying Amen to his never seeing him more [k]. However, it is reasonably supposed, that it was in this last interview, that he foretold the Tenth miracle. Great darkness during three days.

[k] Exod. x.

king

king the finiſhing ſtroke of the divine vengeance, upon all the firſt-born of men and cattle throughout all Egypt, which ſhould cauſe ſuch a conſternation among all his ſubjects, that they ſhould come with bended knees to the Iſraelites, and beg of them in the moſt ſubmiſſive terms to depart out of their country [l]; whilſt GOD would ſtill ſhew ſuch regard to the latter, that they ſhould enjoy their uſual calmneſs and tranquillity, not a dog daring to open his mouth againſt any of them. Moſes had no ſooner finiſhed this laſt prediction, and promiſed him, that, according to his word, he would ſee his face no more, than he retired to his people into the land of Goſhen, where the Iſraelites celebrated the paſſover that very night [m], according to GOD's command. In this night alſo Moſes bid them to borrow what jewels, fine raiment, and other precious things they could, from their Egyptian neighbours, aſſuring them from GOD, that they ſhould find them very willing and forward to accommodate them with the beſt things they had [n] (H). How-

The paſſover celebrated.

[l] Exod. xi. 8. & ſeq. Vid. USSER. Annal. p. 14. ibid. VILLET, & al. [m] Idem [n] Exod. xi, & xii.

(H) Before we enter into the inſtitution of the paſſover, which was attended with the laſt and moſt dreadful plague, the death of all the firſt-born, it will not be amiſs to enquire, how long a time Moſes took in bringing all the plagues upon Egypt, eſpecially, becauſe ſome chronologiſts have ſpun it out to ten (16), and others to twelve months (17); but, beſides that their reaſons are very jejune, and unwarranted by ſcripture, it is more likely, that they happened all within the ſpace of one month; firſt, becauſe their following ſo thick one upon another, would both more viſibly diſplay the power of God, and more effectually work upon Pharaoh to diſmiſs the Iſraelites; and this ſeems to be hinted at by Moſes in a former chapter (18); 2. Theſe plagues were ſo grievous, that, if they had laſted much longer, the Egyptians could never have endured them; but, 3, we read that the Iſraelites continued full forty years in the wilderneſs (19), that Moſes was eighty years old before he appeared the firſt time before Pharaoh (20), and that he was 120 years old when he died, that is, at the end of their forty years travel (21), ſo that there could not be much time ſpent in bringing all theſe plagues. However, archbiſhop Uſher has included them all within the ſpace of one month, from Moſes's own account, as follows (22).

(16) Boorh. ap. Villet. (17) Judæi fere omnes. Vid. Uſſer. An. p. 13. Genebrard, & al. (18) Exod. vi. 1. (19) Joſh. v. 6. (20) Exod. vii. 7. (21) Deut. xxxiv. 7. (22) Annal. p. 14. Vid. etiam Perrer. & Villet. in loc.

About

Its first institution.

HOWEVER, it must be observed, that this ceremony of eating the passover, as well as the method of doing it, had been prescribed by GOD to Moses, and by him communicated to the Israelites, during these transactions that passed between him

About the eighteenth day of the sixth month, which, in the year following, and after, was reckoned the twelfth month, was sent the plague of the waters turned into blood, which ended seven days after (23).

About the twenty fifth day came on the second plague of the frogs, which was removed the day following (24); and about the twenty seventh day came on the third plague of lice (25).

About the twenty eighth day Moses threatened them with a fourth plague of flies and other vermin, which came on the twenty ninth day, and were all taken away on the thirtieth (26).

About the first day of the next month, which was afterwards made the first month of the year, Moses, having foretold them of another plague to come, namely, the murrain upon the cattle, brought it upon them the day following (27).

About the third day the sixth plague of boils brake out upon man, and beast, and upon the magicians (28).

About the fourth day Moses foretold them a seventh plague, which he brought upon them on the fifth; which was of thunder, rain, and grievous hail, mixed with fire, with which their flax and barley were smitten (29), but their wheat and rye were not hurt; not being yet out of the ground. Whence Nic. Fuller, lib. 3. miscel. 1. rightly observes, p. 389, that this plague happened in the month Abib.

About the seventh day Moses threatened them with an eighth plague, and accordingly sent it the day following, that was, of locusts to devour all; which plague he removed about the ninth day (30).

The month Abib, which hitherto was the seventh month, was from this time forward made the first month of the whole year (31), for a memorial of their departure out of Egypt; from the beginning of which month the Epocha of the Jewish calendar is from thence forward deduced (32), though the end of the former account fell on the middle of the month.

Upon the tenth day of this now first day of the month, which was the thirtieth of April according to the Julian calendar upon Thursday, was instituted the feast of the passover and sweet-bread, to wit,

(23) Exod. vii. 25. (24) Ib. viii. 10. (25) Ib. ver. 17. (26) Ib. ver. 24 & 29. (27) Exod. ix. 3, 5, 6. (28) Ib. ver. 8. & seq. (29) Ib. ver. 18 ad 32. (30) Ib. x. 4 ad 19. (31) Ib. xii. 2. & xiii. 4. (32) Num. ix. 1, 2. Coll. c. Exod. xl. 17.

him and the king of Egypt, though they are poſtponed to the twelfth chapter, to prevent the breaking of the ſeries of thoſe wonders which GOD had wrought by him. The account, which he has given us of this inſtitution, is prefaced with a command from GOD, that that month, which was then the ſixth of the year, according to the common or civil computation, ſhould from thenceforth be the firſt month in the year in the ſacred calendar (K); and that all the other feaſts of the year, which were afterwards to be inſtituted, ſhould be regulated by that of the paſſover, the celebration of which was to be as follows. Upon the tenth of the month, which was four days before Moſes's laſt meſſage to Pharaoh, every maſter of a family was to take a lamb or a kid, of the firſt year, a male without blemiſh, and keep it till the fourteenth of the ſame month. And in caſe his family was too ſmall for the lamb, he was to call in one or more families to the eating of it. It was to be killed and roaſted on the fourteenth day at evening, and eat with unleavened bread and bitter herbs; they were to eat with their loins girded, their ſhoes on their feet, and their ſtaff in their hand. They were to eat it in haſte, as people who are ready and impatient to be gone. The head and the feet were not to be ſevered from it, nor a bone of it to be broken: if any of it was left, it was not to wit, the paſchal lamb was choſen, and killed the fourth day after (33).

The order and manner of it.

Moſes now brings upon them the ninth plague of three days darkneſs (34); and upon the 14th day which was May the 4th, upon Monday with us, which was the laſt time he ſpoke with Pharaoh, Moſes foretold him the tenth plague that ſhould come upon him, namely the deſtruction of all the firſt-born, which came to paſs the night following, and then, turning him about in great anger, departed from him (35). At the evening of this day was the paſſover celebrated (36).

(K) This month, which is called in the Hebrew Abib, and had been till then the ſeventh month, and continued ſo to be in the ſecular year, became from that day forward the firſt month of the ſacred year, in memory of this wonderful departure out of the land of Egypt (37); and from the beginning of this month the Epocha of the Jewiſh or ſacred Calendar was from thence-forward deduced, though the end of the former account fell on the middle of the month (38).

(33) Exod xii. 3 ad 21. (34) Ibid. x. 21, & ſeq. (35) Ib. ver. 25 ad 29. & c. xi. 1, 4, 8. (36) Ib. xii. ad ver. 28. (37) Exod xii 2. with xiii. 4. (38) Num ix. 1, 2. with Exod. xl. 17. Vid. Uſſ. Ann. p. 14.

Its first institution.

HOWEVER, it must be observed, that this ceremony of eating the passover, as well as the method of doing it, had been prescribed by GOD to Moses, and by him communicated to the Israelites, during these transactions that passed between him

About the eighteenth day of the sixth month, which, in the year following, and after, was reckoned the twelfth month, was sent the plague of the waters turned into blood, which ended seven days after (23).

About the twenty fifth day came on the second plague of the frogs, which was removed the day following (24); and about the twenty seventh day came on the third plague of lice (25).

About the twenty eighth day Moses threatened them with a fourth plague of flies and other vermin, which came on the twenty ninth day, and were all taken away on the thirtieth (26).

About the first day of the next month, which was afterwards made the first month of the year, Moses, having foretold them of another plague to come, namely, the murrain upon the cattle, brought it upon them the day following (27).

About the third day the sixth plague of boils brake out upon man, and beast, and upon the magicians (28).

About the fourth day Moses foretold them a seventh plague, which he brought upon them on the fifth; which was of thunder, rain, and grievous hail, mixed with fire, with which their flax and barley were smitten (29), but their wheat and rye were not hurt; not being yet out of the ground. Whence Nic. Fuller, lib. 3. miscel. 1. rightly observes, p. 389, that this plague happened in the month Abib.

About the seventh day Moses threatened them with an eighth plague, and accordingly sent it the day following, that was, of locusts to devour all; which plague he removed about the ninth day (30).

The month Abib, which hitherto was the seventh month, was from this time forward made the first month of the whole year (31), for a memorial of their departure out of Egypt; from the beginning of which month the Epocha of the Jewish calendar is from thence forward deduced (32), though the end of the former account fell on the middle of the month.

Upon the tenth day of this now first day of the month, which was the thirtieth of April according to the Julian calendar upon Thursday, was instituted the feast of the passover and sweet-bread, to him and the king of Egypt, though they are poſtponed to the twelfth chapter, to prevent the breaking of the ſeries of thoſe wonders which GOD had wrought by him. The account, which he has given us of this inſtitution, is prefaced with a command from GOD, that that month, which was then the ſixth of the year, according to the common or civil computation, ſhould from thenceforth be the firſt month in the year in the ſacred calendar (K); and that all the other feaſts of the year, which were afterwards to be inſtituted, ſhould be regulated by that of the paſſover, the celebration of which was to be as follows. Upon the tenth of the month, which was four days before Moſes's laſt meſſage to Pharaoh, every maſter of a family was to take a lamb or a kid, of the firſt year, a male without blemiſh, and keep it till the fourteenth of the ſame month. And in caſe his family was too ſmall for the lamb, he was to call in one or more families to the eating of it. It was to be killed and roaſted on the fourteenth day at evening, and eat with unleavened bread and bitter herbs; they were to eat with their loins girded, their ſhoes on their feet, and their ſtaff in their hand. They were to eat it in haſte, as people who are ready and impatient to be gone. The head and the feet were not to be ſevered from it, nor a bone of it to be broken: if any of it was left, it was not to wit, the paſchal lamb was choſen, and killed the fourth day after (33).

(23) Exod. vii. 25. (24) Ib. viii. 10. (25) Ib. ver. 17. (26) Ib. ver. 24 & 29. (27) Exod. ix. 3, 5, 6. (28) Ib. ver. 8. & seq. (29) Ib. ver. 18 ad 32. (30) Ib. x. 4 ad 19. (31) Ib. xii. 2. & xiii. 4. (32) Num. ix. 1, 2. Coll. c. Exod. xl. 17.

The order and manner of it.

Moſes now brings upon them the ninth plague of three days darkneſs (34); and upon the 14th day which was May the 4th, upon Monday with us, which was the laſt time he ſpoke with Pharaoh, Moſes foretold him the tenth plague that ſhould come upon him, namely the deſtruction of all the firſt-born, which came to paſs the night following, and then, turning him about in great anger, departed from him (35). At the evening of this day was the paſſover celebrated (36).

(K) This month, which is called in the Hebrew Abib, and had been till then the ſeventh month, and continued ſo to be in the ſecular year, became from that day forward the firſt month of the ſacred year, in memory of this wonderful departure out of the land of Egypt (37; and from the beginning of this month the Epocha of the Jewiſh or ſacred Calendar was from thence-forward deduced, though the end of the former account fell on the middle of the month (38).

(33) Exod xii. 3 ad 21. (34) Ibid. x. 21, & ſeq. (35) Ib. ver. 25 ad 29. & c. xi. 1, 4, 8. (36) Ib. xii. ad ver. 28. (37) Exod xii 2. with xiii. 4. (38) Num ix. 1, 2. with Exod. xl. 17. Vid. USS Ann. p. 14.

be kept till the next day, but thrown into the fire and burnt to aſhes, though the eating of unleavened bread was to laſt ſeven days. This injunction about the paſſover was to be perpetual, but on this night they were moreover to ſave the blood of the lamb in a baſon, and ſprinkle the two ſide-poſts and croſs-poſt of their doors with it, that the deſtroying angel might leave their houſes untouched, when he paſſed by to deſtroy the firſt-born of Egypt, and execute the divine vengeance on their gods, whether it were their princes, who in the language of ſcripture are often called gods, or thoſe animals which that ſuperſtitious nation did worſhip. This blood upon their door-poſts was to be their ſafe-guard, ſeeing all thoſe which were found unſprinkled with it were to be liable to the common calamity, as well as thoſe who ſhould be caught ſtragling out of their houſes during that whole night.

Unleavened bread. In memory of which great deliverance, they were to keep this feaſt of unleavened bread ſeven days, that is, from the fourteenth day at even until the twenty firſt day at even; during which, whoſoever was found among them eating of leavened bread, whether he was an Iſraelite or a ſtranger, was to be cut off from Iſrael, that is, was either to be put to immediate death, or to be cut off by the hand of providence; or laſtly, be excommunicated, and thereby reſcinded from all the promiſes made to the ſeed of Abraham. The firſt and laſt of theſe ſeven days were to be kept holy and free from all manner of work. Laſtly, no ſtranger was to be admitted to eat of the paſſover, unleſs he conſented to be circumciſed. As for the Iſraelites, they were ſtrictly to remember this great and glorious night, and to inſtruct their children in the meaning of this inſtitution, that they might likewiſe perpetuate the memory of it to future ages.

The Iſraelites obey, and kill the paſſover. THE people, whom ſo many dire judgments on the Egyptians, had rendered more tractable, received Moſes's orders with the utmoſt reſpect; and, having paid their adoration to GOD, went to put themſelves in readineſs to execute them. Theſe commands may be properly reduced to three heads, viz. Firſt, To gather themſelves from all the corners of the kingdom into the land of Goſhen; it being unreaſonable to ſuppoſe, that ſuch a vaſt multitude, amounting to upwards of two millions and an half of ſouls, as we have elſewhere ſhewn *, could be all contained in that little ſpot of ground; ſo that it required no ſmall diſpatch to communicate the orders of their departure to them all. Secondly, To get all the rich things they could from the Egyptians; and this required quired ſecrecy, ſince it is not probable, that the Egyptians would have proved ſo generous, if they had ſuſpected that this journey was any other than a religious one, that was to laſt but a few days. Thirdly, To eat the paſſover at the time, and with all the ceremonies, that had been preſcribed; and this was to take up ſome time, four days at leaſt. However, providence ſo ordered it, that they were all ready on that night. And the Pſalmiſt tells us [n], that, notwithſtanding the great number of their old men, women, and children, there was not one feeble perſon among all their tribes.

* Vid. ſup. p. 463. not. (B).

THE night, which was to prove ſo joyful to them, and ſo fatal to their enemies, being come, and GOD's commands being punctually obeyed, whilſt both ſides were in the extremeſt tranquillity, the Egyptians thinking now all the plagues paſt, and Pharaoh flattering himſelf that Moſes's threatening againſt the firſt-born had proved abortive, becauſe four days were elapſed ſince it was denounced, whereas he uſed to give him but one day's warning in the former plagues; and on the other hand, the Iſraelites keeping themſelves in the profoundeſt ſilence, knowing what horrid ſlaughter was to be made among the Egyptians; in the middle, I ſay, of that very night, GOD ſent his deſtroying miniſters, who ſuddenly diſperſed themſelves all over the kingdom, and ſmote all the firſt-born with immediate death, from the firſt-born who ſat on Pharaoh's throne, to the firſt-born of the impriſoned captive, and even to that of the meaneſt animal in the land. What tongue or pen can deſcribe the horror and amazement, the dreadful outcries, and mournful groans, of that unhappy nation, where every houſe, none excepted, had one or more dead, and, which was ſtill worſe, a firſt-born, the ſtay and hope of the family (L)! How much more diſmal

The firſt-born of the Egyptians ſlain by the deſtroying angel.

[n] Pſal. cv. 37.

(L) This at leaſt ſeems to have been the caſe, as well from Moſes's own words, who tells us, that there was not one houſe in which there was not one dead (39), as from his command to all the families of the Iſraelites to ſprinkle their door-poſts with the blood of the paſchal lamb; but if it be aſked, how it can be ſuppoſed, that every houſe had a firſt-born, we anſwer, that the Hebrew בכור Bechor being often uſed to imply ſome excellency in perſons who were not really firſt-born, as in Ephraim, it will be more reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that where a family had no firſt born, the principal perſon was ſmitten with death (40), than to ſuppoſe with ſome Jews and Chriſtians, that Moſes's words are only applicable

(39) Exod. xii. 30. (40) Cajet. Jun. Villet. & al. in loc.

mal muſt the proud monarch's condition be, who not only ſhared in the common affliction, but ſaw his palace beſieged by crowds of his unhappy ſubjects, who upbraided him with being the cauſe of all theſe dire calamities! The firſt expedient he could think of was, to ſend immediately for Moſes and Aaron, who, being ſettled at Rameſes not far from his capital city, were ſoon brought to him, and found the frighted king, inſtead of his uſual threatening and upbraidings, urgent and preſſing for their departure out of his dominions, with their children, cattle, aud all they had, and to have them go, and ſacrifice to their GOD, and implore his mercy for him in their prayers. The Egyptians likewiſe were no leſs impatient to ſee their backs, fearing leſt every minute of their ſtay ſhould prove their laſt. The Iſraelites found them as ready to lend them the moſt valuable things they had, as themſelves were to borrow them; and Moſes, who was too well acquainted with Pharaoh's changeable temper to ſtay till he relaxed, made all the haſte he could to put it out of his power; and, having ſettled the beſt order he could, among that vaſt multitude and in the general confuſion that then reigned, he gave the ſignal for their departure long before break of day. Leaving therefore the Egyptians to mourn for, and bury their dead, and loaden with their ſpoils, they began their march under the conduct of providence, and of his ſervant Moſes, being to the number of ſix hundred thouſand men able to bear arms, beſides old men, women and children, ſervants, and an innumerable multitude of ſtrangers, who joined themſelves to them, and followed them in their march. They had continued in Egypt from the time of Jacob's firſt coming thither to this very day, which was the ſame day of the ſame month and week, viz. Monday °, the ſpace of two hundred and fifteen years, though Moſes, computing it from the firſt coming of Abraham into Canaan, reckons it four hundred and thirty years, as has been already ſhewn *. There was yet one main thing wanting, viz. the ſecuring of a ſufficient quantity of proviſions for all that multitude, and perhaps they expected to have had time enough to have got it before their march; but the Egyptians drove them away with Moſes and Aaron ſent for and ordered to depart.

The number of the Iſraelites that went out of Egypt.

° USHER's Annal. p. 14. * Vid. ſupra, p. 363. not. K.

cable to every houſe that had a firſt born (41), or with St. Auſtin, that providence did ſo order it at this time, that every houſe had a firſt-born (42).

(41) Aben Ezra, Hug. S. Victor. (42) Queſt. 44 in Exod.

ſuch

ſuch deſperate fury, that the people were forced to carry their paſte with them unleavened, with which they baked themſelves cakes upon the coals; and what other proviſion they could get they took with them undreſſed, and marched from Rameſes, Moſes's dwelling-place, to their firſt encampment at Succoth [p]. Joſephus tells us [q], that their dough and other proviſion, which they carried from Egypt, laſted them a whole month, but it is not likely, that they would load themſelves with ſuch luggage, which in all probability they knew not how to preſerve ſo long from ſtinking, when they had ſo much better things to carry out of the ſpoils of the Egyptians. As ſoon as they were arrived at Succoth, Moſes made them encamp according to their tribes and families, which was likewiſe the order in which they had been directed to march. It is to be obſerved here, that the diſtance from Rameſes to the utmoſt borders of Egypt, on the ſide of the land of Canaan, was not much above threeſcore miles, ſo that Moſes could in a few days march have brought them out of Pharaoh's territories, yet GOD did ſo order it, that they were full forty years before they ſet their foot upon the borders of the promiſed land. Their firſt encampment.

WHILST they continued at Succoth, Moſes was commanded by GOD to conſecrate the firſt-born of men and beaſts to him, to whom they did of right belong; the firſt-born of men were to be redeemed at the price of five ſhekels, that is, of the ſanctuary, which was worth double the common one, that is, about two ſhillings and ſix pence; ſo that the whole ſum amounted to about twelve ſhillings and ſix pence; which money was afterwards to be given to the prieſts. This redemption was founded not only upon the right which GOD has over all his creatures, but more particularly upon the account of his having ſpared the firſt-born of the Iſraelites, when he ſmote thoſe of the Egyptians, which was, as it were the ſeal and finiſhing ſtroke of his wonderful judgments on that proud and cruel nation. This law concerning the firſt-born of men did not at all regard the women; for if the firſt-fruits of a marriage proved a female, no redemption was to be paid for her. Secondly, as to that of beaſts, it extended only to the clean, the unclean ones were to be either redeemed by a clean one, as an aſs by a lamb, or to be killed and flung away. They were ordered to teach the reaſon of this law of redemption to their children and grand- The firſt-born of Iſrael conſecrated. The law concerning it.

[p] USHER's Ann. p. 14. [*] Vid. ſupr. p. 363. Not. K.
[q] Exod. xii. [q] Antiq lib. ii. c. 15.

children,

children, that their posterity might never be at a loss to account for it, nor the wonders which were wrought in favour of them be forgot. Among all the cares which Moses and Aaron had, they did not forget to bring Joseph's coffin and bones with them, pursuant to the oath which that patriarch had exacted from them. The Jews tell us, they placed them in a new sumptuous cart, or open hearse, which they made to march under the guard and conduct of the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh his two children [r]. They likewise affirm, that every tribe did bring the bones of the heads of their family with them; but though they are not always to be credited in matters of this nature (M), and Josephus doth not seem to have dreamed of such an act of filial piety, or else he would in all probability have recorded it; yet St. Stephen seems to allude to some such tradition among them, when he said, that Jacob and the fathers went down into Egypt, and were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre which Abraham bought of the sons of Emmor [s]. However that were, Moses had still another care, which was to settle the order of their march in so regular a method, that there might be no confusion or squabble among that vast and mixed multitude, and that they might be ready to face about and stand in their own

Joseph's bones carried out of Egypt.

[r] Vid. ELLE SHEMOTH RABBAH. Sect. זאת הברכה & Rabbin. mult. [s] Acts vii. 15, 16.

(M) We have already given an account, out of the Elle Shemoth Rabbah, of the extraordinary care which the Egyptians took, by the advice of their magicians, to bury Joseph's coffin, where the Israelites should never be able to come at it ‡. The same comment adds, that whilst these were taken up with spoiling the Egyptians, Moses had been three or four days seeking for it, and that at length, when he began to despair of finding it, an old woman, whom he met by the Nile's side, told him, that it was in the bottom of the river, near the place where they stood; but that the heavy coffin was sunk so deep by that time, that it would be absolutely impossible for him to fish it out. Whereupon Moses having addressed himself to GOD in a short prayer, and then called aloud to the patriarch Joseph, reminding him of his prophesy, and the oath which he had exacted from them about his bones, the coffin swam to the shore, and Moses having tied a rope round the middle of it, and put his staff through it, threw it across his shoulder, and marched away to Ramesses with it.

‡ Vid supra, p. 453. Not. W.

defence,

defence, in caſe of a purſuit (N), or of their meeting with any difficulty or obſtruction, from the nations through whoſe territories they were to paſs. However, to prevent theſe, or any other accidents which might make the people run reſty, and take it into their heads to return to Egypt, GOD was pleaſed to forbid Moſes to take the neareſt way to the land of Canaan, that is through that of the Philiſtines, and ordered him to wheel about along the coaſts of the Red-ſea towards Arabia petræa. He likewiſe made them march, not like run- Order of their march.

(N) The word, which our verſion renders harneſſed in the text, and by five in a rank in the margin, in the original is חמושים Chamuſhim, which cannot well be rendered literally in Engliſh, it ſignifying properly five or fifty, diſpoſed in a fifth order or manner, or in ſome way that has relation to the number five, and has puzzled moſt expoſitors, both Jewiſh and Chriſtians. Some underſtanding it of their going πεμπλάζοντες, or five in a rank (43), which would have made it ſuch a defile in ſuch a numerous army, as would have taken up near an hundred miles in length, according to Oleaſter's computation; others of their being armed with five different ſorts of weapons (44); which is monſtrous, ſince that were enough to have made them ſink under the weight of it. Beſides, it is not at all probable, that the Egyptians would have ſuffered them to carry more arms with them than they took by ſtealth; and therefore the vulgate verſion, which tranſlates it armed, cannot be maintained, much leſs that of the Septuagint, which renders it by πεμπτὴ γενεὰ, the fifth generation, it neither being agreeable to the Hebrew, nor indeed true in fact. Thoſe who render it that they marched in five columns, four of which conſiſted of three tribes, whilſt Moſes and the elders marched in the fifth, and in the middle of all the reſt (45), are ſtill more out of the way, the thing being impracticable in thoſe mountainous parts. As for thoſe who tranſlate it in battle array (46), they muſt confine the word to the ſix hundred thouſand fighting men, for as for the women, children, and mixed multitude that went with them, which was at leaſt three times as numerous, they cannot be ſuppoſed to have marched in that regular military way. The beſt reading therefore ſeems to be that of Kimchi and Pagninus, that they went accincti, girded or truſſed up. The word Chamuſhim being moſt likely derived from Chemeſh, the fifth rib, which is the place of girding, and is often uſed in that ſenſe. But be the meaning of the word what it will, it is certain from Moſes's account, that their march was more like that of a diſciplined army, than that of a band of fugitive ſlaves. Second encampment.

(43) Theodot. A. Montan. & al. (44) Rabbin aliquot ap Munſt. in loc. (45) R. Abr. Sephorad. (46) Jun. Simler, & al.

aways in confuſion and diſorder, but like a regular army in battle-array, in which order they went from Succoth to Etham, towards Arabia-deſerta, which is therefore called in the original the wilderneſs, near the borders of which Etham was ſituate, where they arrived on the ſecond day after their departure out of Egypt. This rout Moſes made them take, deſigning probably to get to mount Sinai by the point of the Red-ſea[t]; but GOD made him take another on the next day, and to turn towards Pi-hahiroth, which lies between the Red-ſea and Migdol and Baal-zephon (O). Herein GOD was

[t] Exod. xiii.

(O) We know but little of the geography of all theſe places. As for the Succoth here mentioned, we muſt not confound it with that which Jacob called by that name, when he came out of Meſopotamia (47); tho' the former may have been ſo called, in imitation of the latter, upon account of the booths or tents which the Iſraelites ſet up there. Joſephus calls it Latopolis; where he ſays Babylon was afterwards built, when Cambyſes invaded Egypt (48: it is thought by many to be that region which was called Troglodytis, by the Red ſea (49). As for Rameſes, tho' there ſeems to be mention made of two, and they differently pointed, yet if they differ, it is only that the one was a province, and the other the chief town of it (50). Etham is ſuppoſed to be Buthee of Herodotus. And Pi hahiroth, the city of Heroum on the extreme part of the Arabic gulph, or the Phagroriopolis placed by Strabo (51) near the ſame place. All that we know of Migdol is only that it ſignifies a tower; Baal-zephon ſeems wholly unknown to the antient geographers. The Jewiſh rabbies, and after them Grotius, believe it to have been an idol ſet up to guard the confines of Egypt. The former add, that it was a brazen dog, and that it diſcovered the flight of the Iſraelites by its barking. The truth is, they are too apt to give into etymologies, though they are known to be the moſt uncertain and fallacious helps; according to which Baal-zephon ſignifies either the hidden Lord, the northern Lord, the centinel Lord, or in a more figurative way, the LORD, or revealer of ſecrets. But who can depend upon ſuch wild fancies? Euſebius takes it, not for a ſtatue, but a town, and places it near (52) Cyſma, though St. Jerom has omitted it in his tranſlation. It ſtands upon the moſt northern point of the Red-ſea, where the antients, eſpecially the Jews, think the Iſraelites paſſed it, and where there ſtands to this day a Chriſtian monaſtery (53).

(47) Gen. xxxiii. 17. (48) Ant. lib ii. 15. (49) Vid Simler, Villet. (50) Id. ibid. (51) Lib. xiv ap. Calm. Diſſert. in loc. & Villet. in loc. (52) Loc. Hebr. (53) Vid. Calm Hiſt. V. T. Comm. in Exod. xiv. & Diſſert. on the paſſage of the Red-ſea.

pleaſed to ſhew his care for them in another miraculous manner; for though he might have notified to them when and whither to march, or where to halt and encamp, as he did his other commands, by the mouth of Moſes and Aaron, yet, conſidering the untractableneſs of their temper, and how apt they would be to murmur againſt them at every ſuppoſed wrong ſtep, he condeſcended to conduct them by a more viſible way, namely by a pillar of light in the night-ſeaſon, and by a column of ſmoke in the day-time. This column of fire, which ſerved to them inſtead of the light of the ſun, as well as that of ſmoke, never forſook them during their forty years wandering in the wilderneſs; on the contrary, it was their conductor throughout their forty two encampments, and directed them when and whither to march, according as they ſaw it move before them, and to halt when they perceived it to ſtop. But whether it was given to them at their firſt, ſecond, or third march, at Succoth or Etham, is not eaſy to gueſs at by the text [u].

The miraculous pillar of fire and ſmoke.

They are led by the miraculous pillar.

IT was natural for them, as we hinted before, to have gone from Etham round the cape of the Red-ſea, and marching a-croſs the wilderneſs, to have gained the eaſt border of Jordan, and ſo to have reached to mount Sinai; and this ſeems to have been what Moſes aimed at, probably with an intention to have offered up ſome ſacrifices there, agreeably to what GOD had formerly told him, when he was ſending him into Egypt; but GOD, who knew what was tranſacting at Pharaoh's court, and what meaſures that monarch and his no leſs infatuated ſubjects were taking to purſue them, and bring them back by main force, commanded them to wheel about, and to march from Etham towards Pi-hahiroth; which is between the ſea and Migdol, over againſt Baal zephon; and to encamp before it. For by this time the Egyptians began to repent of their too great eaſineſs in parting with the Iſraelites, and loſing the benefit of their ſervitude; and thinking that they might eaſily catch them intangled between the mountains, and fatigued with their march, had prepared a conſiderable army, together with ſix hundred of the choiceſt chariots, beſides all the chariots of war that could be found in Egypt, and a vaſt multitude of officers and ſoldiers, who were all in full march after them. Moſes has not given us any further particulars concerning that army; but Joſephus, who ſeldom fails to improve the text, whenever it makes for the honour of his nation, makes it amount to ſix hundred chariots, fifty thouſand horſe, and two hundred

GOD makes them wheel about towards Pihahiroth.

Pharaoh purſues after,

[u] Ibid. ver. ult.

thouſand foot *, and Ezechiel the poet, quoted by Euſebius, hath increaſed it to a million of men. But whatever the army was, Pharaoh put himſelf at the head of it, and lead it with ſuch ſpeed, that he overtook them at Pi-hahiroth, and incamped there in full ſight of the Iſraelites; but whether it were that his army was too much fatigued with their march, or that he thought himſelf ſure of them, there being no viſible way for them to eſcape him, unleſs they flung themſelves into the ſea; or laſtly, that providence prevented his immediate falling upon them; certain it is, that nothing hoſtile was undertaken againſt them that night. However, it is moſt likely that ſeeing them hemmed in, as it were by the ſea on one hand, by impaſſable mountains and his own army on the other, and for want of arms, as well as courage, as incapable of fighting as they were of flying, might think it more adviſeable to force them to yield themſelves priſoners by famine, than to cut them in pieces, as he might eaſily have done, ſince by the one he reduced them to their former ſlavery, but by the other he ran the riſque of loſing a conſiderable part of them.

and overtakes them.

ON the other hand, the puſillanimous Iſraelites inured to bondage, and ſtrangers to the valuable bleſſings of freedom, could not behold the Egyptian army incamped ſo near, without the utmoſt conſternation and dread; and, inſtead of having recourſe to that mighty arm, that had ſo viſibly ſtretched itſelf in their favour, ran in a tumultuous manner to Moſes's tent, and aſked him, whether he thought, that there were not graves enough in Egypt, ſeeing he had brought them to be butchered in the wilderneſs? and whether it would not have been much better for them to have continued under their Egyptian ſlavery, which how cruel ſoever, they had always told him, was preferable to the danger of falling into the hands of their cruel tyrants after their flight, ſince it was plain now that they had nothing to expect but the moſt cruel death, in that diſmal place. However, this ungrateful language, to which Moſes had already been uſed, tho' nothing ſo much as he was afterwards, rather moved his pity than his anger. He conſidered it as the effect of their extreme danger and cowardly temper, and, inſtead of upbraiding them with it, comforted them with the aſſurance, that this would be the laſt time of their ſeeing the Egyptians. He exhorted them to ſtand ſtill, and ſee the hand of GOD fight for them, inſtead of provoking him to withdraw it by their unreaſonable murmurings and deſpair.

Moſes comforts the deſpairing Iſraelites.

* Ant. l. ii. c. 15.

HE

HE had no ſooner diſmiſſed them, than he went and made his application to GOD, who was immediately pleaſed to order the people to begin their march towards the ſea, directing him at the ſame time to ſtretch out his rod over it, and aſſuring him, that the waters of it would forthwith divide themſelves, and make way for them to go through it as on dry land; whilſt Pharaoh and his whole army, venturing to purſue them, ſhould be finally overwhelmed by its waves. Moſes obeyed, and whilſt a ſtrong caſt wind was dividing that arm of the ſea to open a paſſage to them, and the Iſraelites were beginning their march towards it, the angel of the LORD, who conducted them in the pillar of fire, removed from the front to the rear of their army, and ſtood between them and that of the Egyptians, that Pharaoh might not be ſenſible of their moving, and prevent it by falling upon them too ſuddenly. The column of fire produced a double effect, giving light to the Iſraelites in their march, and caſting a darkneſs over Pharaoh's camp, to prevent his perceiving what was doing in that of the Hebrews. Whilſt theſe were paſſing through the ſea, the ſacred hiſtorian tells us, that the waves aroſe in heaps and ſtood as a wall on each ſide of them (P). By this time the Egyptians, perceiving that the Iſ-

The Red-ſea is divided.

raelites

(P) Though it were needleſs, as well as endleſs, to trouble our readers with an enquiry into all the particulars, with which the generality of commentators have amuſed themſelves, with reſpect to this wonderful paſſage, concerning which Moſes has left us wholly in the dark; it will not be amiſs, we hope, to make a ſhort enquiry into the main and moſt material point, namely, whether it was really miraculous or not; that is, whether the ſea was really divided by a ſupernatural power, or whether Moſes and his hoſt did only coaſt ſome part of it, or at beſt croſs only a ſmall nook at low water, and timed it ſo well, that Pharaoh, endeavouring to do the like, did periſh in the attempt. This is ſo far from being a new queſtion, that Artaphanes, an antient writer (54), aſſures us, that both theſe opinions were held by the Egyptian prieſts; that is, the former by thoſe of Heliopolis, and the latter by thoſe of Memphis. The laſt of theſe has been alſo followed by many eminent men, both Jews and Chriſtians (55), who, without denying the main part of this tranſaction to be miraculous, have fallen into the notion of the Iſraelites not paſſing through the ſea, but only coaſting it along, and raclites were marching off, and that the cloud which conducted them was removed towards the ſea, reſolved upon a cloſe making as it were a ſemicircle round the ſea-ſhore at low ebb; or croſſing it only at one narrow point, whilſt the ſea was gone off, only to extricate themſelves from ſome difficulties which appeared to them inſurmountable; but which we ſhall forbear inſerting here becauſe they would lead us too far, and ſwell this note to an unreaſonable bulk. We ſhall therefore content ourſelves with obſerving, that ſuch an opinion cannot be maintained without a manifeſt deviation, 1ſt, from the expreſs words of Moſes, and ſeveral other places of holy writ, where this tranſaction is mentioned: 2 from reaſon and experience, founded upon the knowledge we have of the ebbing and flowing of the Red ſea and the impoſſibility of ſuch a numerous hoſt's performing ſuch a coaſting, or croſſing, in ſo little a time as that admits of: 3. from the known character of Moſes as a bare hiſtorian, and from ſome concurring teſtimonies of antiquity to his account: and laſtly, from the far greater majority of authors of all religions and ages, who have all along maintained, and ſome of them proved, the contrary opinion. As to the firſt, nothing is plainer, than that the whole tenor of Moſes's account is point blank contrary to ſuch a notion. We need mention but ſome few paſſages of it; ſuch as, that upon his ſtretching out his rod, &c. God's command over the waters, a mighty wind aroſe and divided them; that they ſtood up on heaps, and were as a wall on the right and left; that the bottom of the ſea was dried up, and that the Iſraelites marched through it as on dry land, and the like (56). That God divided the red-ſea into parts, or diviſions, and made Iſrael paſs through the midſt of it. That he led them by the right hand of Moſes, dividing the waters before them, to make himſelf an everlaſting name; and that he led them through the deep as an horſe in the wilderneſs. That he did walk, or rather cauſed Iſrael to walk, through the ſea (57); and many more of the like nature, to ſay nothing of the apocryphal books, which abound with the ſame expreſſions. If it be objected, that the laſt quoted paſſages out of the pſalms and prophets are poetical, and conſequently not to be taken in their literal ſenſe, all that can be inferred from thence is, that they convey to us loftier ideas of this wonderful event, than Moſes, whoſe ſtile is far from being ſwoln, has done in his acount of it; but it would be unreaſonable to ſay, that they were only deſigned to expreſs a tranſaction ſo purely natural and eaſy, as the other ſide ſuppoſes it to have been. Upon the whole, the ſcriptures repreſenting this action, with all its circumſtances, as altogether miraculous, men muſt either reject their authority, or elſe allow, that this paſſage was more than a bare coaſting along ſome part of the ſea, or croſſing it at ſome narrow nook, when the waters were retired.

(54) Ap. Euſeb. l. ix. c. 27. (55) Abenez. & al. Rabbin. ap. Fagium Gregor. Turon. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 10. T. Aquin. in 1 Cor. i. Toſtat. qu in Exod. c. xiv. 19. Lud. Brugens. in loc. Genebr. in Chronic ad ann 2239. Grot. in Exod. xiv. ver. 19. Vatabl. in lib. Le Clerc. Diſſert de traject. Mar. Iſaum. & al. mult.

(56) Exod. xiv & xv. paſſ. Num. Deuteron. &c. (57) Pſ. cxxxvi. 13, 14. & alib. Iſa. lxiii. 12. 13. Habak. ii. 15.

Whether

cloſe purſuit after them; not conſidering, or perhaps dreaming, that they were launching into another element; much leſs

Whether Joſephus deſigned to leſſen the miracle, or to make it appear more credible, when he tells us (58), that the Pamphylian ſea did open a way to Alexander in his expedition againſt the Perſians, is not very material; for though we ſhould grant that to be the right meaning of his words, and that he might have met with that account in ſome book then extant; or even that Q. Curtius intimates ſomething like it, when he ſays (59), that that conqueror had opened a new way by the ſea; yet Strabo will ſoon ſet us right, who tells us, 'that there is a hill upon the Pamphylian ſea, called 'Climax, by which there is a paſſage along the ſea-ſhore; the wa-'ters of it ſo abating, when the ſea is calm and ſtill, that the 'ground is left naked, which at the flowing of the waters is cover-'ed again; and that Alexander, coming that way ſet forward be-'fore the waters returned; but that, it happening then to be win-'ter, the waters recoiling before he had paſt it, he was forced to 'wade all that day through the waters up to his middle (60) 'Tis plain therefore, that there is no parity between the paſſage of the Iſraelites, and the coaſting of Alexander, whatever the Jewiſh hiſtorian's deſign might be in mentioning them together.

We come now 2dly, to ſhew, that the notion of Moſes's leading them along the ſea-ſhore, or through a narrow point, is contrary to reaſon and experience. And here we do readily grant, that the Red-ſea doth ebb and flow like other ſeas that have a communication with the ocean; that is, that the waters of it riſe towards the ſhore during ſix hours, and after having continued about one quarter of an hour at high water, they ebb down again during another ſix hours. Thoſe who have examined it with the the greateſt exactneſs, do likewiſe aſſure us, that the greateſt diſtance that it falls from the place of high water, is about three hundred yards, and that during the time of low water one may ſafely travel it (61), as ſome have actually done (62). We purpoſely omit ſeveral other minute circumſtances urged on both ſides of this queſtion, to avoid prolixity. But from what is here premiſed, and allowed on all hands, it is evident, that theſe three hundred paces, which the ſea leaves uncovered, during the time of low water, can continue ſo but during the ſpace of half an hour at moſt; for during the firſt ſix hours the ſea doth only retire by degrees, and in leſs than half an hour it begins again to flow towards the ſhore. The moſt therefore that can be allowed both of time, and ſpace of paſſable ground, in a moderate computation, is about two hundred paces during ſix hours, or one hundred and fifty paces during eight hours. Now

(58) Ant. l. ii. c. 16. (59) Lib. v. (60) Strab. lib. xiv. vid. Villet. in Exod. xiv. qu. 17. (61) Bernier. Morizon. & al. (62) Thevenot. chap. 25.

it

leſs could they ſuppoſe, that it would prove as fatal to them, as it was friendly to thoſe whom they ſo eagerly followed after.

it is plain, that a multitude conſiſting at leaſt of upwards of two millions and a half of men, women, children, and ſlaves, as we have proved before †, encumbered beſides with great quantities of cattle, houſhold-ſtuff, and the ſpoils of the Egyptians, could never perform ſuch a march within ſo ſhort, we may ſay, within even double that ſpace, though we ſhould allow them alſo double the breadth of ground to do it on. This argument will hold equally good againſt thoſe who ſuppoſe that they only coaſted along ſome part of the ſea, and thoſe who maintain that they croſſed that ſmall arm or point of it, which is towards the farther end near the port of Suez, ſeeing that ſix or eight hours could not have ſufficed for the paſſage of ſo immenſe a multitude, allow them what breadth of room you will; much leſs for Pharaoh to have entered it with his whole hoſt.

It will not be amiſs here to obſerve, not only how improbable it is, that none of the Egyptians ſhould know any thing of the ebbing and flowing of the ſea; but how abſurd it is to ſuppoſe, that they ſhould all obſtinately perſiſt in purſuing the Iſraelites through it, when they ſaw it gradually returning upon them, till they were all ſwallowed up by it. Beſides, who can ſuppoſe, that the Iſraelites venturing into the ſea was a premeditated thing? or even that Moſes could entertain the leaſt ſuſpicion, that the Egyptians would be ſo ſoon at their heels, they who had been ſo lately and ſo ſeverely plagued for detaining them, and were ſo urgent for their departure? Sure it is, that, if he had any ſuch thought, he acted moſt impoliticly, in bringing them into a place, where they were hemmed in by the ſea on one hand, and the mountains on the other; ſeeing, had Pharaoh, upon his arrival at Pi hahiroth, immediately fallen upon them, as it was natural to expect, they muſt have been obliged to flounce into the ſea long before the tide had opened a paſſage to them, if not at the very time of high water, in which caſe they muſt have been all either drowned, or cut in pieces.

And this brings us to our third obſervation, that ſuch a notion is repugnant to the known character of Moſes, even as a bare hiſtorian; and that it calls in queſtion, not only his avowed modeſty and veracity, but even his ſenſe, learning and experience. For on the one hand, who can imagine, that the maintainers of it can give any credit to his relation, when he tells them, that GOD alone, who knew what paſt in Egypt, did unexpectedly make them take this new rout? When he deſcribes his own ſurpriſe and the people's conſternation at the ſight of the Egyptian army? When he aſſures them, that GOD did interpoſe his miraculous power on their behalf,

† Vid. ſupr. 463.

and

after. For it doth not appear by the text, that the Egyptians were ſenſible, that they were entering into the ſea, and it is and in a word, that he divided the ſea to make a free paſſage for them, and to overwhelm their enemies? What notion muſt they have of his ſincerity, when he makes all Iſrael reſound the praiſes of GOD, as the author of a deliverance which was entirely owing to his own cunning and policy. On the other hand, what muſt they think of his conduct and experience, that could be guilty of ſuch an overſight, as leading them into the very mouth of the extremeſt danger, and ſo weak as to betray it, though cloaked with the pretence of a miraculous power and direction? We ſhall only add, that he muſt have been the moſt imprudent, and withal the moſt conceited man alive, that could take it into his head, to make ſuch a vaſt, and not over-credulous, multitude believe, that their paſſage was altogether as miraculous as he affirms it to have been, when they could not but be well aſſured of the contrary; much leſs appoint a ſolemn feſtival of ſeven days, and enjoin it to be obſerved by them and their poſterity to all future ages, in memory of their pretended miraculous paſſing through the ſea; when the experience of a much ſhorter time, than they continued along that coaſt, could eaſily have convinced them, that there was nothing in it but what was natural, and what happened every day. Theſe abſurd conſequences, which naturally flow from that opinion, are ſo evident, and the ſyſtem itſelf has been ſo fully confuted long ago by the learned Diodorus Tarſenſis, Chryſoſtom's maſter, that it hath met with few more advocates, than theſe we have mentioned in the margin. And even among theſe, we have already obſerved, that the greateſt part, eſpecially Grotius and Le Clerc, do acknowledge ſtill, that a divine power interpoſed itſelf in raiſing and continuing that mighty wind, and cauſing thereby the waters to retire much farther than uſual, and to recoil with greater force upon the Egyptians.

We obſerved further on this head, that this opinion was contrary to ſeveral concurring teſtimonies of antiquity. We have already mentioned that of Joſephus, and of the Heliopolites, who acknowledge the miraculouſneſs of this tranſaction, and whoſe authority ought to be of greater weight than that of the Memphites, becauſe ſuch an acknowledgment of the divine interpoſing power can be aſcribed to nothing but the force of truth, and notoriety of the fact, whatever motives their brethren of Memphis might have to diſown it. We ſhall content ourſelves with juſt mentioning one more. Diodorus Siculus (63) tells us, that the Ichthyophagi, who inhabited along the coaſts of the Red-ſea, towards the farther end of it, had a conſtant tradition, that that ſea had formerly been divided by a ſtrong wind; and that the waves being parted into two heaps, (63) Lib. iii. c. 3.

the

is more than probable, that they were too eager after their purſuit, and had too little light to perceive the danger they were running into, unleſs we will ſuppoſe with the Jewiſh

the bottom, which was left naked, had appeared full of verdure. This can hardly be applicable to any thing but to this tranſaction we are upon.

Having by this time dwelt ſo long upon theſe three heads, we hope the reader will eaſily excuſe us from enlarging on the laſt, by multiplying authorities on our ſide of the queſtion, ſeeing what has been alledged againſt the other is ſo full and ſtrong, that were the majority as much on their ſide, as it is on ours, yet would it not outweigh the arguments that have been brought to confute it.

We ſhall only add, that among thoſe, who acknowledge a divine power to have interpoſed in this ſignal tranſaction, ſome have endeavoured to reduce the miracle into a very narrow compaſs, whilſt others, ſetting no bounds to their zeal, have multiplied it even beyond all meaſure.

Of the former ſort are thoſe who have attributed the dividing of the ſea, and the ſtanding up of the waves, to a vehement cold wind, which froze them as faſt as it blew them up; after which a warmer one, being ſuffered to riſe, did both thaw and blow them into their former ſtation. Of this ſentiment were, 1. the ſeventy interpreters, who tranſlated the words of Moſes's ſong (64) וַיִּקָּפְאוּ תְהֹמֹת the waters were frozen, or, as our verſion words it, were congealed. 2. The Chaldee paraphraſt. 3. The author of the book of Judith (65). 4 Some of the verſions of the ſeptuagint; and laſtly, amongſt the many moderns, father Martinay, in a ſpecimen he has given us of ſome curious diſcoveries which he had made in the ſacred text, mentions this as one of them, that the waters of the Red-ſea were frozen. A Jewiſh Rabbi has fancied, that the ſea was not divided but frozen hard enough for the Iſraelites to go over it, though it thawed under their purſuers (66). On the other hand, Origen, to magnify this great miracle, has preſerved us an antient tradition among the Jews, which affirms, that God opened the ſea in twelve different columns, that every tribe might paſs ſeparately; in which he has been followed by ſeveral antient and modern writers. This tradition ſeems to have been founded upon that verſe of the pſalm (67), which ſays, that God divided the ſea into parts, or diviſions; but we don't think ſuch wild notions worth confuting, any more than that of Sadulius, who goes ſo far as to think, that God did even overturn the rocks, and root up the plants that grew in the bottom of the ſea leſt they ſhould obſtruct the quick paſſage of the Iſraelites.

(64) Exod. xv. 8. (65) Judith, v. 13. (66) R Sam. Maroc. lib. de Advent. Meſſiæ, c. 15. (67) Pſal. cxxxvi. 13.

hiſtorian

hiſtorian [w], that, becauſe they ſaw the Iſraelites march ſafely through the ſea, they vainly hoped they might do ſo too, and and were not undeceived till it was too late. However that were, 'tis plain, that their inſolent conduct, after ſo many warnings, did juſtly deſerve the puniſhment they were ſhortly to undergo; for by the next morning watch, that is by break of day, which is about four in the morning with us, GOD looking upon them through the pillar of fire, ſoon let them feel, that ſuch a miraculous way was not opened in their favour, but for their deſtruction. They began to find their chariots go more and more heavily, and had ſo many indications of GOD's fighting againſt them, as made them reſolve upon turning about, and fleeing from thoſe whom they ſo eagerly purſued. But all their haſte could not ſave them, GOD commanded Moſes to ſtretch again his rod over the ſea, and he had no ſooner obeyed, but the waves, which had been till then miraculouſly ſuſpended, fell in again by their own weight, and overwhelmed Pharaoh and his hoſt, ſo that not one of them eſcaped from the common ruin; whilſt the Iſraelites beholding, with wonder and amazement, the carcaſſes and the rich ſpoils of their enemies thrown upon the ſea-ſhore, began, at leaſt ſeemingly, to fear the Lord, and to believe his ſervant Moſes [x].

They are all drowned.

WE took notice in a former note, that the exact ſituation of the places, from which the Iſraelites ſet out at their entering into the ſea, and at which they came out are ſo much unknown to us, that it is next to impoſſible to deſcribe their rout with any tolerable certainty *. For ſhould we ſo far depend upon Euſebius, as to believe Baal zephon to have been Clyſma, and that the antient tradition were true, that it was at this latter that they paſſed the ſea; yet the generality of geographers differ ſo much in their placing it, that we are ſtill to ſeek for the ſide on which it ſtood, whether on the north, on the eaſt, or ſouth, or weſt ſhore of the Arabic gulph †. For which reaſon we hope, the reader will excuſe us from giving into uncertain conjectures. Thoſe who can give credit to the report of ſeveral grave travellers *, who affirm from their own knowledge, that the ruts of the chariot-

The place where they croſſed the Red-ſea uncertain.

[w] Jos. Ant. lib. 2. c. 16. [x] Exod. xiv. per tot. * Vid. p. 528, note (O). † Compare EUSEB. loc Hæbr. ATHANAS. Hiſt. Arrianor. Tom. I. p. 385. PHILOSTORG. Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. lib. 3. c. 6. COSMAS, lib. 5. p. 194. Tabul. PUTINGER. Itiner. ANTONIN. THEVENOT's Voyages, part 2. c. 33. and others * PAUL OROS. GELG. TURON. &c. al ap. CALM. Diſſert. in loc.

wheels are ſtill miraculouſly preſerved, not only upon the ſand, but even as far into the ſea as the eye can ſee through it, notwithſtanding all endeavours to deface them, which they attribute to a petrifying quality in the waters of the ſea; theſe, I ſay, need not be at a loſs where to ſet the boundaries of that paſſage. As for us, we are contented, with having proved in the laſt note, that they paſſed it ſomewhere, without troubling ourſelves with what is of leſs moment, and can never be known with any probability. We return to the Iſraelites, whom we left rejoicing and praiſing GOD for their happy eſcape.

HOWEVER, Moſes knew them too well to hope, that this religious fit would laſt longer than every thing went to their liking. He therefore took hold of this happy diſpoſition he obſerved in them, to celebrate this miraculous victory, and to inſpire them with the deepeſt ſentiments of gratitude to their almighty deliverer. To this end he compoſed a hymn, in which he extols the greatneſs of GOD's power diſplayed in this ſignal victory, and his amazing mercy towards his people. And having divided the Iſraelites into two great choirs, he placed himſelf and his brother Aaron at the head of the men, and his ſiſter Miriam at the head of the women, and whilſt the former did ſing the canticle, the women anſwered alternately to each verſe, with repeating the firſt words of it, I will ſing to the Lord, for he has greatly triumphed, and has overthrown the horſe and its rider into the ſea. Their muſic was likewiſe accompanied with dances, and the ſound of ſuch inſtruments as they had brought with them from Egypt. Thus was the ſeven days feſtival, which had been ordained in memory of this ſignal deliverance, joyfully concluded, and the firſt and laſt day of it, which were to be obſerved with more than uſual ſolemnity, ſignalized the one by the death of the Egyptian firſt-born, and the laſt by their miraculous paſſage through the Red-ſea, and the total overthrow of Pharaoh and his hoſt.

Moſes's ſong for this deliverance.

AND now the Iſraelites began to think themſelves freed indeed, and on the eve of their complete happineſs; a few days march would eaſily bring them into the borders of the promiſed land, and the conqueſt of it could not but appear eaſy to them, who had GOD for their protector, and Moſes for their guide. And indeed had the latter had no other difficulties to ſurmount, than the ruggedneſs of the way, and the irreconcileable hatred, and vigorous oppoſition of thoſe warlike nations that inhabited it, Canaan would ſoon have been in their poſſeſſion. But their ſtubborn and ungrateful temper, their continual murmurings and rebellions againſt their heaven-appointed chief, joined to an invincible fondneſs for idolatry and ſuperſtition, proved not only a conſtant obſtacle to their hopes, but an endleſs ſource of misfortunes to them, and of grief and vexation to their leader, though otherwiſe famed above all men for his meek and gentle diſpoſition. It was not long before they began to give freſh marks of their untractableneſs. They had ſcarce travelled three days from the Red-ſea into the wilderneſs of Shur, before their exceſſive thirſt and want of water put them out of all patience; inſomuch, that, when they came to diſcover thoſe of Marah, and found them too bitter to drink, inſtead of having recourſe to GOD by prayer, they filled the air with their complaints againſt him and his ſervant Moſes, who, fearing the ill conſequence of this murmuring, addreſſed himſelf to him in the humbleſt manner, and was directed to a tree, which, whether by any intrinſic virtue, or by a new miracle, did ſweeten the waters as ſoon as he had caſt it in. The people indeed ceaſed to murmur as ſoon as they had quenched their thirſt; but as this was neither a ſatisfaction for their late riot, nor a ſecurity againſt future relapſes, GOD was pleaſed to make a further trial of their future obedience, by giving them here ſome new ſtatutes, and to add a promiſe, that, if they obſerved them with an upright mind, inſtead of thoſe plagues which he had inflicted on the Egyptians, he would ſhower down continual bleſſings upon them. In memory of the bitter waters the place was called Marah, from which they went and encamped at Elim, where they found twelve fountains of water and ſeventy palm-trees, and there continued about three weeks; that is, from the twenty ſecond day of the firſt month, on which they came thither from Marah, to the fourteenth of the ſecond month, on which they decamped from it [y].

and

The Iſraelites murmur for want of water.

FROM Elim the whole camp marched towards the wilderneſs of Sin: by which rout they removed ſtill farther from the frontiers of the promiſed land; but as they were directed by the miraculous pillar, they were forced to follow whither ſoever that went. Here, their proviſions becoming exceeding ſcarce, they began to murmur more violently than ever, repenting from their hearts, that they had ſuffered themſelves to be decoyed from the fleſh-pots and plenty of proviſion, which they enjoyed in the land of Egypt, into a barren wilderneſs, where they could expect nothing but to die with hunger. This tumultuous carriage had ſomething monſtrouſly ungrateful, becauſe it was levelled at GOD himſelf, whoſe directive column they had followed into that desert place. Nevertheless, he was pleased to pass it by, and to give them fresh assurances of his favour, by promising to rain down bread from heaven upon them; and, in order to make a further tryal of their obedience, he commanded them to go and gather a certain rate every morning, and on the sixth, to provide double that quantity, because they were not to expect any to fall on the seventh, which was afterwards to be kept holy. Aaron, in communicating this message to the people, failed not to give them a severe reprimand for their murmurings, which he told them, did cast the greatest reflection upon GOD, seeing it was he, and not Moses, who had brought them out of Egypt. He had scarce made an end of speaking, when the people, looking towards the wilderness, beheld the glory of GOD displayed out of the cloud, from which GOD confirmed again what Aaron had promised to the people, assuring them, that they should that very evening be satisfied with plenty of flesh, and on the next morning they should find that heavenly bread which he had promised to send them.

A new murmur for want of proviſion.

[y] Exod. xv. 27. xvi, 1.

Manna promisid.

Quails promised.

IF this glorious sight gave some weight to Moses's words, much more did the event add to it, when they saw them verified on that very evening by whole clouds of quails, which came pouring down upon them out of Egypt, and alighted in such quantities, that they quite covered their camp (Q); and

And sent in abundance.

(Q) It must be remembered here, that this was about the middle of April, which is the time in which that bird is observed to cross the Red-sea in vast quantities; the same is also observed to this very day by those who frequent those parts, and incredible multitudes are caught there about this time. The miracle therefore consists not so much in the prodigious number that fell into Israel's camp, as in the directing them thither, and on that very evening, according to GOD's promise, and Moses's prediction. The same may be said also if we render the Hebrew שלו, Shelaw, locusts, as the learned Ludolph has done, who in his treatise of locusts, at the end of his appendix to his description of Abyssinia has offered some probable arguments, that these were such, and not quails; and affirms them not only to be in great plenty, both in these parts, and all over Africa, but likewise to be esteemed a delicious food We own indeed, that the word is, even by the confession of all the Jews, of very uncertain signification and may as well signify a locust as a quail; But what inclines us to prefer the latter sense is, that the psalmist, † speaking of them calls them עוף כנף, Hoph canaph, winged, or feathered fowl, which we apprehend, is not so applicable

† Psal. lxxviii. 25. & seq.

and by the manna, which rained down round about them, by the very next morning. This laſt did not indeed fall cloſe to the camp, but at ſome diſtance from it towards the wilderneſs. By break of day therefore, the Iſraelites followed Moſes towards the place, where he ſhewed them a kind of white dew, like unto a ſmall hoary froſt, which covered the face of the earth, and told them, that this was the bread which GOD had promiſed to feed them with during their abode there; commanding them to gather an Homer for every head, which is about five pints, or forty three eggs †. The people no ſooner ſaw this new bread, but they cryed one to another, what is this, and whence cometh it? for they were ſurprized at the ſtrangeneſs of it; and from thence they gave it the name of Man, or Manna (R); they were however ſo eager for it, that they gathered it at random, without ſtinting themſelves to the quantity which Moſes had preſcribed, but when every one came to meaſure what he had gathered, they found Manna falls at ſome diſtance from the camp.

† LE SCENE, Eſſay on a new tranſlat. pag. 170. R. SALOM.

applicable to thoſe inſects, any more than the words שְׁאֵר, Sheer, fleſh, and צֵדָה Tzedah, which ſignifies all ſorts of veniſon, as well of fowl as of beaſts, which he makes uſe of there.

(R) We have ventured to depart from our own and ſeveral other verſions, which make the Iſraelites call this new food Manna, becauſe they knew not what it was; for tho' commentators have taken a great deal of pains to puzzle the text by their various etymologies of that word, yet that of the Septuagint, which renders it τί τοῦτο ἐστι what is this? ſeems to come nearer to the Hebrew, and to be moſt agreeable to the text, and is likewiſe followed by Joſephus, and a great number of others (68) מָן הוּא, Man hu, in the original ſignifying what or whence is this? Not ſo eaſy is it to know the meaning of the word גַּד Gad which we tranſlate coriander-ſeed, though according to the literal ſenſe of the original, it ſhould be rendered, and it was white like the ſeed of Gad, whereas coriander is of a brown colour. Some Jews therefore tranſlate it muſtard-ſeed, becauſe one ſort of it is whitiſh (69), and Abenezra frankly owns, that he knows not what ſeed it is (70); but ſince it is ſaid in another place, that it was of the colour of Bdellium 71), which the learned Bochart and others have ſhewn to ſignify a kind of pearl, we may eaſily ſuppoſe, that the word Gad doth not ſignify coriander, but ſome other ſmall white ſeed, and that the manna, ſhining like unto a hoary froſt, did very much reſemble a ſmall pearl.

(68) Joſ. Rabbin. fere omen. St. Jerom. Fag. Mercer. Piſcat. Grotius, Druſius, Le Scen. & al. (69) Vid. Munſt. in loc. (70) Abenez. ibid. (71) Vid. Munſt. Boch. & al to their no ſmall aſtoniſhment, that they were to carry home but one Homer for every head; whether it were, that they were made to gather it in heaps, and divide it afterwards at an equal rate, or that providence ordered it ſo, that the moſt greedy ſhould have his quantity miraculouſly leſſened, whilſt the more moderate had theirs increaſed; or which is more likely, that Moſes made thoſe that had gathered more than their meaſure, to refund the overplus to thoſe who had gathered leſs; that ſo the ſame proportion might fall to every man's ſhare.

As ſoon as they were got into their tents, they went about grinding it according to Moſes's direction, ſome with mills, others in mortars, and made themſelves a ſort of cakes whoſe taſte reſembled that of wafers made with honey, or with freſh oyl, as it is ſaid in another place [a]; from that they came to other ways of dreſſing it, by frying, ſtewing, boiling, and the like. As for that which remained ungathered upon the ground, the heat of the ſun did immediately diſſolve it. In the mean time Moſes, who had given them expreſs charge not to leave any till the next morning, had the mortification to hear that ſome of the people whether out of curioſity or precaution, had ventured to ſave ſome of it, and had found it ſtinking and crawling with worms. He failed not to reprove them for it, and to adviſe them to be more careful of his directions for the future, ſeeing they did but provoke their heavenly benefactor by their diſobedience; but their ſtubbornneſs was not to be cured by threatnings, and it was not many days before they made him ſenſible of it. The ſixth day being come, they went according to order to gather a double quantity, to ſerve them for that day and the next, on which he had told them there would be none to be found, becauſe it was to be a day of Sabbath, or of reſt unto them. But they, as if they had given themſelves up to miſtruſt every word that came out of his mouth, could not be contented till they had gone into the wilderneſs, and ſatisfied themſelves of the truth of it. This forced a freſh reprimand from him, in which, after ſome expoſtulations, he expreſly forbad them to go out of the camp, during the whole ſeventh day. For a memorial of this miraculous bread (S), Moſes was ordered to pre-

Some is kept till next day and ſtinks.

A double quantity gathered againſt the ſabbath.

[a] Numb. xi. 8.

(S) We have ventured to give it that epithet, not that we believe, with the author of the book of wiſdom (72), that it was prepared

(72) Wiſd. xvi. 20.

without

ſerve an Homer full in a veſſel, to be afterwards depoſited in the ark of the covenant, and to be preſerved in it as a witneſs to future ages, and Aaron went and executed his command [b].

IT is not eaſy to conceive, how a nation, that had ſo long and ſo often experienced the miraculous care and goodneſs of GOD, could ever fall again into freſh murmuring and diſobedience; and yet they had no ſooner left this deſert of Sin, and advanced a few days journey towards mount Horeb; but, when they came to Rephidim, and found the place deſtitute of water, they began to fill the air with their complaints, and A new ſurrounding the tents of Moſes and Aaron, asked them in a murmuring tumultuous and threatening manner, where they muſt have wa- for want ter to quench their thirſt? Moſes ſtrove in vain to quell of water. their fury, and to perſuade them to wait GOD's leiſure; his words did but inflame them the more, till at length obſerving them to be grown deſperate and ready to ſtone him, he had without labour, ſince they were forced to pound and dreſs it; or that it was capable of ſatisfying every ſtomach, by ſuiting itſelf to every particular taſte, ſince, had that been the caſe, the Iſraelites could never have come to loath it, as they afterwards did (73); much leſs do we attribute all thoſe wonderful qualities to it that the Jews do: but we think it was miraculous upon the following accounts; 1ſt, becauſe it fell but ſix days in the week; 2. that it fell in ſuch prodigious quantity as ſufficed near three millions of ſouls; 3. that there fell a double quantity every friday to ſerve them for the next day; 4. what was gathered on the firſt five days ſtank and bred worms, if kept above one day, and that which was gathered on friday laſted two days; laſtly, it continued falling whilſt the Iſraelites continued in the wilderneſs, and ceaſed as ſoon as they came out of it, and had eaten of the corn of the land of Canaan (74). Abenezra indeed ſays, that Man was an Arabic word, and that he had ſeen in the kingdom of אלנציך, whatever kingdom that be, ſomething very like manna, that fell only during two ſummer months of the year; but as he adds, that it is rather fit for phyſic than for food, it is plain, it muſt be that which we know by the name of manna, which is a kind of honey condenſed, and is to be ſeen to this day in the deſerts of Arabia, during the heat of the ſummer, and is gathered in great quantities off the trees, rocks, graſs, and even the ſand: but it is plain, by what we obſerved of the miraculous ſort, that this has nothing common with it but the name.

[b] Exod. xvi, 33.

(73) Numb. xi. 6. (74) Joſh. v. 12.

recourſe

recourſe to GOD, who was ſoon pleaſed to diſſipate his fears, by promiſing to ſignalize this place with as miraculous a water, as he had the laſt with a miraculous food. He commanded him to gather the elders of Iſrael and all the people, and to take them up to mount Horeb, and aſſured him, that upon ſmiting the rock with his miraculous rod, the waters would immediately guſh out of it in ſuch plentiful ſtreams, as would be more than ſufficient to allay their thirſt. Moſes obeyed, and GOD vouchſafed to perform his promiſe, and to ſend them plenty of water (T); and in memory of this new murmuring,

They flow from a miraculous rock.

(T) St. Paul, ſpeaking of this miraculous rock, which he applies to Chriſt, ſays, that it followed them (75); from which ſome will have it, that it accompanied them, and ſerved them upon all neceſſary occaſions, to the very end of their wandring (76); and that either the waters which guſhed out of it, formed themſelves into a kind of river, which followed them through all their encampments (77), or that they carried the rock in a cart wherever they went, and that it continued flowing with water (78). Some even affirm, that it keeps running to this day, and waters all that valley which was dry before (79); but had any of theſe been the caſe, there would have been no need of ſmiting that rock in another place, as Moſes did for the ſame purpoſe (80), for we ſhall ſhew by and by, that this was a quite different action; nor of digging of wells for water ſoon after this laſt miracle, as we find they did (81). There was therefore no neceſſity of fetching a parallel from the king of Perſia, of whom Ælian ſays, that the river Choaſpis did always follow him (82), becauſe he always carried ſome of its water with him; in order to give a more favourable ſenſe to the apoſtle's words, by ſuppoſing that the Iſraelites did the ſame by thoſe of the rock. St. Paul here ſpeaks of a ſpiritual rock, and the two inſtances we have juſt now mentioned, will not permit us to ſuppoſe, that they were always ſupplied by the natural one.

However, ſeeing the two actions of ſmiting the rock have been confounded by ſeveral commentators, it will not be amiſs to ſhew the contrary, now we are upon the ſubject. Now that Moſes ſmote the rock two different times, and in two different places, is plain; 1ſt, becauſe the firſt happened at Rephidim, in their eleventh ſtation, and the ſecond in the deſert of Sin in the thirty third ſtation: 2. the one happened in the firſt year after the Exod, and the other in the fortieth; for in the very next ſtation Aaron died, in the fifth month.

(75) 1 Cor x. 4. (76) Calm. com in loc. Berruy. & al. (77) Ita Rabbin. mult. (78) Cantacuzen in ſap. cap. 11. & Rabbin. aliquot. (79) Toſtat. qu 3 ap. Villet. cap. 17. qu. 10. (80) Numb, xx 11. (81) Ibid. xxi 16. & ſeq. (82) Ælian. Hiſt. var. lib. xii. c. 40. vid. Calm. Hiſt. V. T. in loc.

ing, and of the people's queſtioning whether GOD was really among them or not, the place was called Maſſah, (tempting) and Meribah, (contention).

ABOUT this time, the Iſraelites being attacked by the Amalekites, Moſes was forced to depute his ſervant Joſhua, with a ſufficient force to make head againſt them, whilſt himſelf went up to the mount to intreat GOD for his ſucceſs. Accordingly, on the next morning he went up with his brother Aaron and Hur, to a neighbouring hill, whence they could have a full view of the field of battle, and held up his hands in prayer, whilſt Joſhua was fighting with the Amalekites. He held up likewiſe his own miraculous rod in his hand, and GOD was pleaſed to ſhew a ſingular regard to his interceſſion. For whilſt he held his hands up Joſhua prevailed, but when he let them down to reſt them, Amalek got the advantage. At length, when he found them grow ſo heavy that he could hold them up no longer, Aaron and Hur were forced to ſet him upon a ſtone, and to ſtay them up on each ſide, till the going down of the ſun. The conſequence was, that Iſrael gained the victory, and Amalek was diſcomfited, as we have ſeen in a former chapter †. This Hur is thought to have been of the tribe of Judah, and the ſon of Caleb the ſon of Eſron, different from Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh; and ſo to have been the grandfather of Bezaleel, ſo famed for his fine workmanſhip in the tabernacle, and other utenſils for the ſervice of GOD. Jo- month of the fortieth year (83). In the firſt, the rock was ſmitten with the rod with which Moſes wrought his wonders in Egypt, and in the laſt with the rod of Aaron, that had budded, and had been layed up before the Lord in the ark, from whence Moſes is ſaid to have taken it (84). Laſtly, the firſt happened before the extruction of the tabernacle, and the laſt after it; for it is ſaid, that upon the people's murmuring for want of water, Moſes and Aaron went to the door of the tabernacle, and fell before their faces there at the ſight of the glory of GOD (85). We might add, that the firſt was performed without any diffidence, anger, or indecent words; whereas in the laſt, Moſes ſmote the rock twice, and ſpoke ſome unbecoming words, which ſo diſpleaſed GOD, that he condemned him to die in the wilderneſs, without ſetting his foot into the land of Canaan. From all which it appears, that theſe were two different actions, performed at great diſtance of time and place (86).

Amalek diſcomfited.

† Vid. Supr. p. 153.

(83) Comp. Exod. xvii. 1. ſeq. & Numb. xxxiii. 14, 36, & 38. (84) Numb. xx. 9. & ſeq. (85) Ibid. ver. 4. & ſeq. (86) Ibid. ver. 11, 12. Vid. Simler. Jun. Villet. & al. in loc.

Sephus thinks, that Hur had married Miriam Moses's sister[c], others think, that he was her son; but the generality of antient fathers think, that she died unmarried[d]. As for Joshua, he became famous from this time for his valour and conduct, and for his zeal for GOD and his people; upon all which accounts Moses made choice of him for his successor, to lead the Israelites into the promised land. In the mean time, Moses was ordered to record this signal victory, and to vow a lasting war against the Amalekites, till their very remembrance was quite blotted out. He also reared up an altar unto GOD, and called it Jehovah Nissi, (the Lord is my banner) to intimate, that GOD, who had made them denounce this war against Amalek, would not fail to crown it with success (V)[e].

THE

[c] Ant. lib. iii. c. 2. exhort. ad virgin. & al.

[d] NYSSEN. de virginitat. c. 6. AMBR.

[e] Exod. xvii.

(V) We have seen, in this history of Amalek †, that he was descended from Eliphaz, Esau's first-born; as his descendants therefore were so nearly allyed to the Israelites, it was inhuman in them to fall upon them, when they saw them reduced to so low a condition through the fatigue of their march, the vast heat of the season, and the excessive drought they laboured under, especially since it doth not appear, that they had begun any hostilities against them. But though they did richly deserve the defeat which Joshua gave them for their barbarity, yet as for the anathema, which GOD himself pronounced against them immediately after it, it seems to have been for some other crime, which carried in it a greater degree of guilt, and is supposed to have been an innate hatred against the Israelites, from the remembrance of Jacob's depriving their progenitor both of his birth-right and blessing, and therefore did not scruple to take this advantage of them, when they found them thus harrassed, to hinder thereby their taking possession of the land of Canaan, for the conquest of which they thought them now in full march. Josephus indeed (87) seems to attribute this action of theirs to a fear of being driven out of their country by the Israelites; but besides that it is not likely, they should be ignorant of the land of Canaan being promised to the sons of Jacob, and consequently could have nothing to fear upon that account; it is plain, that if that had been the only motive of falling upon them, there could have been nothing so criminal in it as to entail such a heavy curse, and a perpetual war against them and their posterity: whereas, if they did it with a view of preventing their possessing the promised land, and so of frustrating the designs of providence towards them; as the same motive was like to last as long as they were

† Vid. supr. p. 148.

(87) Ant. lib. iii. c. 2.

THE defeat of Amalek opened a way for the Iſraelites to mount Sinai, where their abode proved not only the longeſt, but the moſt famous of any other by the wonderful promulgation of the law, and the appointment of the principal ceremonies which they were afterwards to obſerve. But in the mean while, GOD, who foreſaw what an addition this would be to Moſes's other cares and fatigues, did in good time conduct his hoſpitable father-in-law, with Zipporah and her two ſons, to the camp of Iſrael, where, after their mutual embraces, and ſacrifices offered to the GOD of Iſrael, Jethro, obſerving with what patience his ſon-in-law ſtood to hear the people's complaints from morning till night, and fearing leſt he ſhould in time ſink under it, gave him that excellent and ſalutary advice of chooſing a competent number of elders, who ſhould help him to bear ſuch a part of the burthen, as would otherwiſe have proved too much for him [f]; an account of which we have already given in the hiſtory of Midian *. Moſes having thus eaſed himſelf of a great load of care, by the appointment he made of thoſe inferior judges, ſome of which he ſet over thouſands, others over hundreds, and others over tens; and referring only the moſt momentous cauſes to come before him; did ſoon after take leave of his father-in-law (W), and give the ſignal for their march from Rephidim, to comes of Moſes.

[f] Ibid. xviii. paſſ. * Vid. ſupr. p. 116. & ſeq.

were a nation, ſo there was a neceſſity of entailing that anathema againſtthem. And this ſeems implied in the laſt words of this chapter, in which Moſes gives as a reaſon for vowing this war againſt them, which though ſomewhat obſcure, ſeem to run thus in their literal ſenſe, becauſe his (that is, Amalek's) hand is againſt the throne of GOD, therefore the Lord will wage war with Amalek from one generation to another, that is, till he ceaſes to be a nation. We ſhall only add, that this place is ſuppoſed by the Jews, to have been called Rephidim, that is, רפאי ידים, from Rapha, to looſen, and jad, a hand, alluding to the weak condition they were in when the Amalekites fell upon them.

(W) We have already given our opinion concerning Jethro's departure, and leaving one of his ſons with Moſes, with ſome other particulars relating to this hiſtory †; but though it ſeems by the text, that he left alſo Zipporah and her two ſons with him; yet, whether it were that Moſes took more care of his people than he did of his children, or that he loved theſe too well to promote them to any pitch of power or grandeur, which himſelf had ſo long felt the load of; ſure it is, that we hear no more of them from this to the wilderneſs of Sinai. This happened about the beginning of the third month after their departure out of Egypt g.

† Vid. ſupr. p. 116, 117. note (I), (K).

They encamp near mount Sinai.

They were no ſooner come within ſight of that celebrated mountain, but his next care was to order their encampment ſo, that there might be a conſiderable ſpace left between it and the camp. He knew that this was to be the ſcene of the moſt glorious wonders that ever mankind beheld, and the place from whence thoſe laws were to be delivered to them, with the utmoſt terror and majeſty, which GOD, who knew the genius of that perverſe people, had calculated for them; and therefore he wiſely fixed their ſituation ſo, as that they might be all eye and ear witneſſes of the divine preſence h; and at the ſame time preſcribed ſuch limits to their curioſity, as ſhould ſtrike them with a ſuitable awe and reverence. Whilſt they were pitching their tents according to his directions, Moſes went up to the mountain, and GOD, who had called him thither, commanded him to remind the Iſraelites of all the wonders he had wrought in their favour, and to aſſure them, that as he had hitherto bore them as an eagle doth her young on her wings, ſo if they proved obedient to his laws he would ſtill look upon them as his peculiar people, a favourite nation, and a royal prieſthood. Moſes was not long before he came and called the elders of Iſrael, to whom he repeated all theſe endearing expreſſions, charging them at the ſame time to go and acquaint the people with the gracious meſſage, who no ſooner heard it, but they promiſed all poſſible obedience to GOD's command. He returned immediately after to the mountain, and was commanded to ſanctify the people, and to prepare them againſt the third day for the glorious ſcene, by making them waſh their cloaths, and abſtain from all nuptial commerce, after which he promiſed to come down, in a conſpicuous manner, and deliver his law in their hearing, with ſuch a glorious and dreadful voice, as ſhould at once convince them both of his divine preſence, and of his being the author of all thoſe laws, which he was afterwards to deliver to them in his name. He likewiſe renewed his charge to him, to ſet ſuch

g Vid. ann. USSER. in loc. RIBERA de Templ. lib. v. c. 7. & al.
h Exod. xix. 9.

time than if they had been no more; neither of them, that we can find, having been promoted to any place of honour or profit; and indeed the ſequel of the hiſtory ſhews, that their father was ſo far from aiming at enriching or aggrandizing his family, that he ſeems to have given himſelf up wholly to the ſervice of God and his people.

bounds

bounds to the people, as ſhould keep them from approaching the mountain under the ſevereſt penalties, and to aſſure them, that if either man or beaſt offered to tranſgreſs them, they ſhould be immediately ſtoned, or ſhot to death. The ſignal, for their coming out to this glorious ſight, was to be when they heard the ſound of the miraculous trumpet: accordingly, on the third day, the people having prepared themſelves acording to the divine injunction, and being in the utmoſt expectation for this wonderful ſight, they ſaw, by break of day, the mountain ſurrounded with the thickeſt cloud, out of which came forth ſuch thunders and lightnings, as filled them with terror and amazement. The ſound of the trumpet being heard, Moſes brought the people out of their camp towards the mount, as far as the barrier which he had ſet to them, and there they obſerved the top of Sinai covered with fire and ſmoke, whilſt the foundations of it ſeemed to ſhake under their feet. In the midſt of this dreadful ſcene, the trumpet being heard ſtill louder and ſtronger, GOD called to Moſes, who immediately went up, and was ſoon buried in the cloud. Here the divine voice commanded him to return and repeat his charge to the people, that none ſhould preſume to tranſgreſs their bounds, no not even the prieſts, who were afterwards to be conſecrated to his ſervice, ſince immediate death was to be the tranſgreſſor's portion, let him be who he would. Moſes anſwered, that he had given them ſuch ſtrict charge, that there was no danger of their tranſgreſſing it; but he was ordered to go down immediately, to ſee that none ventured to diſobey, and commanded to bring his brother Aaron with him when he came up again. He had no ſooner obeyed, and repeated his orders to the people, than the thunders and trumpets ceaſed, and GOD was heard from the midſt of the fire and ſmoke, which continued all the while, to pronounce the ten principal laws, which were to be the foundation of all the reſt, and which Moſes was afterwards ordered to write upon two tables of ſtone. 1 In the mean time the people, aſtoniſhed

The mountain covered with fire and ſmoke.

The decalogue delivered.

[1] Exod. xix. & xx.

(X) Concerning theſe ten commandments, which are ſo well known that we have forbore inſerting them, ſeveral queſtions have been raiſed which we ſhall but juſt touch upon, they being of ſuch a nature that nothing certain can be concluded about them. The firſt is, whom they were delivered by? Whether by an angel deputed by GOD, who conſequently repreſenting the godhead, aſſumes the name of the Lord GOD who brought Iſrael out of bondage? or whether by GOD himſelf? and if the latter, whether by GOD

the

aſtoniſhed at what they ſaw and heard, removed farther off; and the father, or by Chriſt himſelf? Concerning all which we ſhall only refer our readers to what has been ſaid in another place upon the like occaſion †.

The next is, whether in theſe, or any other of the Moſaical laws, Moſes was permitted to imitate thoſe of the Egyptians, as ſome learned men have affirmed (1)? or as the far greater part do think, the Egyptians have borrowed theirs from his? And here we need not repeat what has been ſaid upon this head, when we were upon the ſubject of circumciſion *; as to what relates to the ceremonial injunctions, we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of them by and by. At preſent we ſhall content ourſelves with ſaying, that, admitting them, in ſome caſes, to have borrowed from each other, and in others to have gone point blank counter to one another, out of a ſpirit of contradiction and antipathy, which is the moſt probable ſuppoſition, it will ſtill follow, that ſuch of the Moſaic laws, as are contrary to the idolatry and ſuperſtition of the Egyptians, ſuch as the ſecond commandment, and a vaſt many more, could be enjoined by GOD with no other view, than to cure the Iſraelites of thoſe vicious habits and inclinations which they had contracted in Egypt. As to judicial, or even ceremonial laws, tho' we ſhould allow Moſes to have been permitted to have uſed his diſcretion, and to have adopted ſuch as he approved of, yet it will by no means follow, that all that have any reſemblance were firſt received from the Egyptians, ſeeing very many of them are ſo contrary to the main and conſtant deſign of their law-giver, to keep them from intermixing with other nations, that, if the Egyptians had been the firſt inventors of them, it would certainly have been more adviſeable to have given them ſuch as were quite oppoſite to them.

Waving therefore all theſe fruitleſs diſquiſitions, how far the Egyptians, the Greeks and Romans, did frame their laws from thoſe of the Jews, or how far the twelve tables of the Romans were a copy of the decalogue, we ſhall endeavour to render the remaining part of this note ſomewhat more uſeful and inſtructive, by rectifying the ſenſe of ſome words in the ſecond commandment, which, for want of having been rightly underſtood, have led ſome into monſtrous errors, and have made others chooſe to reject the authority of holy writ, rather than adopt them. The place we mean is, where GOD is ſaid to puniſh the ſins of the fathers upon the children, to the third and fourth generation (2); words, which convey ſuch a ſhocking idea of the deity, that, if the original could poſſibly be capa-

† Vid. ſup. p. 371. note (T). (1) Vid. Spencer de leg. rit. Hebr. l. iii. diſſert. 1. & ſeq. Marſham. Canon Ægypt. S. Secul. 2. Athan. Kircher, Le Clerc, & al. * Vid. ſup. p. 367. note (R). (2) Exod. xx. 5.

blc

and the divine voice had no ſooner ceaſed ſpeaking, but they approached ble of another ſenſe, it ought, by all means, to be preferred to this; which is not only contrary to reaſon, and to the whole tenor of ſcripture, but is ſo fully confuted and condemned by the prophet Ezekiel (3), and by many other expreſs places of ſcripture. We ſhall beg leave to mention but one of them, and that out of the ſame book of Exodus, which being parallel to this, it will follow, that, if this ſenſe we are now confuting be admitted, Moſes muſt have introduced GOD ſpeaking abſurdities and contradictions. The place is, where GOD vouchſafes to favour Moſes with a ſight of his glory in the mountain, by a viſible deſcent in the cloud, and proclaiming the name, or rather the attributes of GOD, in the following terms (4); the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs and truth, keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity and tranſgreſſion and ſin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the childrens children, unto the third and to the fourth generation. For it is manifeſt, that if the latter words be underſtood in that ſenſe, that is, if he puniſhes the ſins of the fathers upon the children, &c. then the former part can never be true; that he is the Lord God, merciful, gracious, juſt, and faithful. How the Jews, therefore, came to underſtand them in a ſenſe ſo abſurd, ſo unreaſonable and antiſcriptural, and ſo fully and expreſly confuted and condemned by GOD himſelf, will be of ſmall moment to enquire, ſince this is far from being the only inſtance, wherein they have done ſo; tho', if we may be allowed to offer a conjecture, it is not unlikely, that the partial regard, which GOD, for reaſons vaſtly diſparate from their fond conceit, was pleaſed to ſhew for their nation, and the terrible puniſhments which he inflicted upon others, tho' ſcarce more wicked than they, might lead them into the notion, that the one was favoured for the merit, and the other puniſhed for the wickedneſs of their progenitors: and this is ſo much the more probable, becauſe, even to this day, they impute all their preſent ſufferings, not to their manifeſt wickedneſs, which they are wholly blind to, but to the idolatries of their forefathers, both in the deſert and in the promiſed land. However, as they extended theſe puniſhments no farther than to this life, the greateſt wonder is, how Chriſtians came ſo early to follow their verſion of theſe places, which has given ſome commentators, both antient and modern, an infinite trouble, and made them run into various diſtinctions and ſubtilities to clear the divine goodneſs, juſtice, and wiſdom, and to give this place in a more favourable ſenſe, whilſt others have made no ſcruple to outdo the Jews, and to extend theſe arbitrary and undeſerved puniſhments even to the next life ; but it is very probable,

(3) Ezek. xviii. paſſ. (4) Exod. xxxiv. 5, 6, & 7.  Vid. ſup. p. 393 note (T).

approached Moſes, and, in the height of their fear and ſurprize, beſought him, that he would for the future ſpeak to them

probable, that, had the primitive Chriſtians underſtood the Hebrew, and been able to have had recourſe to it, inſtead of the Septuagint, they would never have adopted this ſenſe, as long as the original was capable of a much better; which is what we ſhall now endeavour to prove to be beyond diſpute.

In the firſt place then, we beg leave to obſerve, after ſome eminent critics (5), that the prepoſitions, ל lamed and על hal, which are here rendered upon, may alſo ſignify by, and, in favour of; ſo that the words before us may be properly rendered puniſhing the iniquities of the fathers by, or in favour of, the children, &c. In the firſt of theſe ſenſes David's murther and adultery was juſtly puniſhed by his favourite, tho' wicked, ſon Abſalom (6); and the latter doth perfectly anſwer the wiſe methods of providence, with reſpect to the wicked and innocent; the former of which he doth often puniſh for the benefit and determent of the latter. The reader may, if he pleaſes, ſee theſe verſions juſtified by the authors juſt now quoted, and therefore we ſhall inſiſt upon them no longer; but as thoſe, which vindicate the divine juſtice, mercy, and goodneſs of GOD, ought by all means to be preferred to thoſe, which give impreſſions that are injurious to the god-head becauſe the latter are but too viſibly hurtful to religion and civil ſociety, we ſhall beg leave to offer one more, which ſeems to us ſtill more natural and agreeable to the deſign of this ſecond commandment, but which, not having as yet appeared in print, we can quote no author for.

It is manifeſt to every one who has conſidered it, that the main end and deſign of this law was expreſly to forbid all idolatry whatſoever, one kind of which, we find, had been very rife long before, namely, that of teraphims. or houſhold-gods, of which we have already given ſome account †; whoſe ſhapes varied according to the fancy of thoſe that made, or thoſe that beſpoke them, and to whom they uſed to apply for good ſucceſs and preſervation againſt all misfortunes, both for themſelves and families. As theſe, therefore, were looked upon as the chief diſpenſers and preſervers of lands, houſes, and all other inheritances, what makes it more than probable, that this prohibition is more particularly levelled againſt this kind of idolatry, is, firſt, the reaſon that is immediately given, that the Lord is a jealous GOD, who cannot, conſequently, ſuffer the glory of his benefits to be given to a ſenſeleſs idol. Secondly, becauſe the words פקד עון poked havon, as they are pointed,

(5) Launoi de l'impieté du peché. Le Scene, Eſſay on a new verſ. p. 107. Le Clerc in loc. & al.

(6) 2 Sam, xi. paſſ. xii. 10, & ſeq. xv, xvi, xvii, & xviii. paſſ.

† Vid. ſupr. p. 401. note (B).

them in GOD's ſtead, leſt, if they ſhould hear his dreadful voice again, they ſhould die with horror and amazement; aſſuring or poked hon, if read without the points, may be properly rendered diſpoſing, or diſpenſing the habitations, or eſtates, of the fathers, &c. And, laſtly, becauſe idolatry in general, or the worſhip of falſe gods, had been forbid in the firſt commandment; thouſhalt have no other gods but me; and conſequently this ſecond ſeems to have been deſigned againſt that particular ſort we have been ſpeaking of.

It remains to prove, that the original will properly bear this verſion; and here we beg leave to obſerve, firſt, that the verb פקד pakad, which is rendered to viſit, is known to imply, in its proper ſenſe, ſuch a viſitation as that of a monarch, chief magiſtrate, or prelate, who takes his progreſs thro' his territories to rectify abuſes, to adminiſter juſtice, and to diſpenſe rewards and puniſhments, as occaſion requires. And ſecondly, that the word עון hon, (which we venture to read without its points, becauſe, they being now univerſally allowed to be of late and human invention, their authority may be ſafely ſet aſide, whenever we ſee good reaſon for ſo doing) doth likewiſe ſignify an habitation, or dwelling-place, it being an antient, obſolete word, from which its derivative מעון Mahon, by the addition of the letter מ Mem one of the formatives of nouns ſubſtantive, is ſtill uſed, and confined to that particular ſignification throughout the old teſtament. This being granted, the ſenſe will run thus: for I the Lord, thy GOD, am a jealous God, diſpenſing, or diſtributing the habitations, or eſtates, of the fathers to the children, unto the third and fourth generation, even, of thoſe that hate me, but ſhewing mercy to thouſands in them that love me, &c. where we beg leave to obſerve further, that the word generation not being in the original, the words, third and fourth, which are here in the plural, may as well be underſtood of a diſtribution of eſtates into thirds or fourths, or, of their being multiplied to a third or fourth degree, or increaſed to three or four times their bulk, or value. But as for the mercies, which GOD keeps in ſtore for thoſe that love and obey him, they exceed them לאלפים Lealaphim, by thouſands of degrees; which is as much, as if he had ſaid, they are numberleſs and endleſs.

But that our readers may be ſatisfied, that theſe places of ſcripture, which are urged as parallel to this, by thoſe who maintain the unreaſonable doctrine we are now oppoſing, are either miſunderſtood, or miſapplied by them, we ſhall beg leave to ſubjoin an inſtance of each, by which they will be able to judge of the reſt. The firſt they urge is, where Solomon ſays, that GOD made all things for himſelf, and the wicked for the day of evil (7); from which they have inferred this blaſphemous doctrine, that GOD created the assuring him at the same time, that they were ready to receive and obey whatever laws or ordinances God should enjoyn to them by his means, since they were now fully convinced of his divine commission. Here Moses approved of wicked on purpose to damn them. But, whoever will be at the trouble of consulting the original will find that the word לְמַעַנֵהוּ Lemaghanehu, which is here rendered for himself, is not from the particle לְמַעַן Lemaghan, for, with its affix, for then it ought to have been differently pointed; but setting aside the points, it is equally capable of two other meanings, even according to the grammatical construction, and may signify to answer; and so the sense will be truly this; that God doth, or rather rules, all things to answer one another, even the wicked to the day of evil; by which is meant no more than, God has so ordered all things, that punishment shall be as much the natural consequence of wickedness, as rewards are of virtue (8). The same word may also signify a furrow or channel; and so the sense will be, God hath ordered every thing to run into its own channel (9), and to the wicked that of the evil day, or punishment.

(7) Prov. xvi. 4.

The other place, which is rather misapplied, is, where God says, that he will have mercy on whom he will have mercy (10). For, besides that the words are capable of another sense, it is plain from the occasion of them, that they have nothing to do with the point in hand. Moses prays to God, that as a token of his favour, he would shew him his glory, and God answers him, that he will grant him his request; and then adds, that he will be gracious to whom he will be gracious; which therefore can import no more, than that he will shew such singular favours, as that which Moses prayed for, to whom he pleases; but it is no where said, that he will punish whom he will, without any regard to their desert. As for those who think that St. Paul applies them in a quite different sense (11), we rather choose to refer them to those authors who have writ ex professo against that doctrine, than to dwell any longer upon the subject (12).

We shall close this note with observing, that though the Jews reckoned the same number of commandments as we do, and called them by way of excellency the ten words, from which they had afterwards the name of decalogue; yet they join the first and second into one, and divide the last, which is against coveting, into two: as for that against stealing, they understand it of stealing of men, or kid-napping, alledging, that the stealing of another's goods or property is forbid in the last commandment (13).

(8) Vid. Le Scen. Essay on a N. Vers. p. 109. (9) Vid. Psal. cxxix. 3. (10) Exod. xxxiii. 19. (11) Rom. ix. 15. (12) Vid Pelling, Whitby, & al. against predest. (13) Rabbin. ser. cont. Vid. Mund. in loc.

that that awe and regard which they expreſſed, as well for the miraculous preſence of GOD, as for his commandments; and aſſured them, that this wonderful ſcene was not exhibited to them with a deſign to create a ſlaviſh dread, but a filial confidence and ſubmiſſion to ſuch laws as his providence ſhould hereafter enjoyn them, as a particular token of his care and benevolence towards them, above all nations of the earth. He had no ſooner diſpelled their fears by theſe words, than he went up again to the mountain, where for that time, GOD was pleaſed to add a few ceremonial laws, to thoſe moral ones which he had couched in the decalogue; all which, as well as thoſe which he received afterwards from time to time, we ſhall refer to another place in this hiſtory, where, to avoid proſixity and repetition, we ſhall give them all in one body. For the ſame reaſon we ſhall avoid following the divine hiſtorian too cloſe in all the intercourſes which he had with GOD; wherein the obſervance of the ſame laws, both moral and ceremonial, is inculcated over and over, and the ſame aſſurances of the divine favour and aſſiſtance upon their obedience, and ſevere threatnings in caſe of their diſobeying, and the ſame promiſes of their poſſeſſing the lands of the Canaanites, Amorites, Hittites, Hivites, Perizzites, Girgaſhites, and Jebuſites, repeated almoſt upon every freſh occaſion; all which, tho' Moſes has penned them exactly as they happened, need to be mentioned here but once for all. Beſides, the laws themſelves, whether they be conſidered with a moral, religious, ceremonial, or political view, are ſo blended and intermixt together under the names of laws, ſtatutes, ordinances, judgments, teſtimonies, commandments, precepts, and the like; that unleſs they are reduced under their ſeveral heads, a reader would be rather confounded, than informed in the deſign and injunction of them. What might induce providence to deliver them in that ſeemingly irregular method is not eaſy to be gueſſed at, unleſs we ſuppoſe, that a more methodical manner would have favoured too much of human wiſdom. As to the ſo frequent repetition of them, the reader will find ſufficient occaſion for it, ſince it will appear by the ſequel, that neither that, nor the grievous puniſhments that befel them almoſt upon every diſobedience, proved ſufficient to bend their ſtubborn necks, or cure them of their intractable diſpoſition. All that need be ſaid here concerning thoſe laws and ordinances is, that ſome related to the immediate worſhip of GOD; ſuch as were the building of the tabernacle, with all its grand apparatus of utenſils for uſe and ornament, their ſacrifices of all ſorts, the conſecration of their prieſts and Levites, the holy oyl to anoint them, their habit, office, privileges, revenue, and the like; the feſtivals, offerings, tithes, vows, purifications, laws concerning clean and unclean things, diſeaſes, meats, and the like; ſome of which are generally looked upon as typical (Y); others, as topical, or confined to

Some ceremonial laws intituted.

(Y) We could willingly have excuſed ourſelves from entering any farther into this unpleaſant controverſy, and contented ourſelves with what has been ſaid already upon ſome particular parts of this ſubject, there being ſo little likelihood of pleaſing either of the oppoſite ſides, much leſs of reconciling them, whilſt each party is fond of their own extreme, and value themſelves upon being direct antipodes to the other; whereas truth ſeems to lie in the middle between them. The reader may eaſily remember what was hinted in the laſt note, about the probability of the Hebrews and Egyptians borrowing ſomething from each other; it will therefore be ſufficient to add, that thoſe, who pretend, that the former had all their ceremonies, tabernacle, ark of the covenant, altar, &c. from the latter, becauſe they find that theſe did afterwards uſe the ſame kind of religious utenſils, do entirely go counter to the expreſs tenour of the epiſtle to the Hebrews, which mentions all theſe and many more as inſtituted on purpoſe by GOD himſelf, to typify thoſe better things which he reſerved for the times of the goſpel (14). 'Tis even plain from the tenour of the old and new teſtament, that the paſſover, the lifting up of the ſerpent by Moſes, the Iſraelites wandering in the wilderneſs, and their entering into the land of Canaan, and many more of the like nature, were all typical and figurative, and are applied as ſuch by the writers of the latter. But on the other hand, thoſe who abſolutely deny, that they imitated them in any particular, have given ſuch an unreaſonable ſcope to their fancies, in order to find out the relation between theſe types and their pretended antitypes, that they have not left one pin of the tabernacle, one bell in Aaron's garment, neither kettle, fork, or ſpoon, without one or two We ſhall content ourſelves with giving one inſtance of this enthuſiaſtic ſpirit, not ſo much for the ſingularity or brightneſs of it, as to ſhew how far every thing may be moralized, when men have once got into that vein. Two eminent proteſtants, the one a Lutheran, and the other a Calviniſt, had been wrangling a conſiderable time about the precedency of each of their patriarchs without any ſeeming advantage, when one took it into his head to make Luther the antitype of Aaron, ſeeing he was the firſt that had ſet up and lighted the grand candleſtick (of the reformation) in the tabernacle: the other, not being able to diſprove the fact, had recourſe to the ſame typical reaſoning, and affirmed, that if Luther was Aaron's antitype upon that ſcore, Calvin was much more ſo, ſince it was manifeſt, feſt, that if he had not taken the ſnuffers into his hand, and ſnuffed the lamps, the candleſtick would have given ſuch a dim light, that few people would have been the better for it. We can eaſily join with the great critic, from whom we have this ſtory (15), in praying, that, where people can feed their religion with ſuch airy diet, it may do them much good; but we can by no means think with him, that the deſpicable figure which the Jews made is an invincible objection againſt the proud Egyptians, who hated them above all nations, borrowing any of their ceremonies: ſeeing the ſame argument will equally hold againſt either ſide; and the ſuperſtition common to them both, might eaſily get the better of their pride and hatred. What wild notions men had then, and long enough ſince, of the god-head, may eaſily be gathered from that ſaying of the Syrians (16), their gods are gods of the hills, and therefore ſtronger than ours; but if we get them into the plain, ours will get the better of them. It was therefore natural for the Egyptians, as we hinted once before †, to enquire, how ſuch a poor ſlaviſh people, as that of the Hebrews, came to be in ſuch high favour with their GOD, that he ſhould fall thus ſeverely upon their own, and ſo many other brave nations, on their behalf: it is plain, they could not attribute it to any merit or excellency in them, and therefore might eaſily conclude, that they had found out ſome way of gaining his friendſhip by their ſacrifices and manner of worſhipping him; which, if they could but once attain to, they could not fail of much greater ſucceſs. Add to this, that if the prieſts were conſulted about it, as it is moſt likely they were, they could not be againſt embracing ſuch a ſort of worſhip, which, however it proved to the laity, could not but be gainful to them: now if this be granted to be a natural ſuppoſition, the objection falls to the ground, and there is an end of our author's pretended impoſſibility. As for what is added on that ſide of the queſtion, viz. that the Egyptians ſacrificed horſes and hogs to their gods, whilſt the Hebrews offered nothing but ſheep, oxen, &c. this difference, allowing the caſe to be fact, might eaſily proceed from ſome remaining leaven of their old ſuperſtition, which could not ſuffer them to ſacrifice ſuch beaſts as they had been uſed to worſhip. They might likewiſe probably enough attribute the Hebrews not ſacrificing horſes to their ſordidneſs, that creature being of much greater worth than a bullock, and ſo be induced not only to imitate, but to out-do them, by offering a more valuable ſacrifice than they. Upon the whole, the Egyptians being generally allowed to have been the firſt introducers of idolatry, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe them to have been likewiſe the inventers of a great deal of ſuperſtitious traſh, and the Jews, who had been as it were formed in the country, to have contracted ſuch a particular fondneſs for it, as not to be eaſy without having ſomething like it among them. We beg leave to anticipate ſo far upon their hiſtory, as to bring one inſtance of this once for all, and with it to diſmiſs this intricate point. Moſes promiſed the people, that GOD would ſend his angel to them, to guide and protect, and to prepare the way for them. Moſes goes up into the mountain, and continues there forty days, till they gave him over for loſt: uncertain what to do, and fearful leaſt the Amalekites, or ſome other nation ſhould fall upon them, they grew impatient for this promiſed conductor, and being ignorant what kind of one GOD deſigned for them, they take it in an Egyptian ſenſe, and in a tumultuous manner gather about Aaron, and inſiſt that he ſhould make them ſuch a one. Aaron who gueſſed their meaning, caſts a golden calf, no doubt in imitation of the Egyptian Apis; for without the aſſiſtance of their mythology, a calf would be one of the laſt creatures that one would chooſe to make a ſymbol of the deity ‡, and ſets it up in the midſt of the camp; and the people, highly pleaſed with it, begin to pay the uſual worſhip of ſacrifices, dancing, &c. to it: in the mean time Moſes comes down, and ſurpriſes them in the height of their joy, upbraids both his brother and the people with their folly and ingratitude, and deſtroys the Egyptian idol. After this he returns immediately to the top of the mountain, complains of their idolatry and ſtubbornneſs, and intreats GOD to pity and forgive them, and GOD, who ſaw that their minds were bent upon ſome outward ſymbol, in compaſſion to their infirmity, commands him to make an ark, which, though differing in the main from the Egyptian idols, yet ſhould ſtill retain ſomething of a reſemblance in the cherubim that covered it, which had at leaſt the head of a calf, as ſhall be ſhewn in its proper place. Who doth not ſee by all this, that GOD did only comply ſo far with the carnal genius of that untoward people, as to give them a viſible ſymbol, without condeſcending ſo low, at the ſame time, as to permit ſuch a cloſe imitation of what they admired in other nations, as might in any wiſe prove a ſnare to them in proceſs of time? However, if it be aſked, how ſo polite a nation as the Egyptians came to chooſe a cow, or calf, to repreſent the deity? we can only add, to what has been ſaid before *, the conjecture of ſome antient and modern authors, ſuch as Suidas in his Σάραπις, Ruſin in his eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, Peirrerius in his hierogliphics, Hottinger and others, who all ſeem probably enough to think, that it was in honour of Joſeph, and in memory of the ſeven cows, which repreſented the plenty by which he preſerved that country from periſhing; and this ſeems the more probable, becauſe ſeveral of the moſt antient authors, beſides thoſe above quoted, agree, that this ox, or cow, was repreſented carrying a buſhel upon its head which might be deſigned to ſignify the plenty of corn, which that patriarch cauſed to be layed up. But we willingly ſubmit all this to our reader's judgment.

(14) Vid. Habr. paſſ. ch. ix.

(15) Le Clerc's Bibl A. & M. tom. XII. p. 313. (16) 1 Kings xx. 23. † Vid ſup. p. 368. note (R).

‡ Vid. Vol. I. p. 455. note (H), & alib. paſſ. * Ibid. p. 206.

to

to that climate (Z), and others as political; but all of them, to

(Z) It cannot be denied, but ſeveral of the Moſaical ordinances and prohibitions are of this nature, and were very neceſſary and beneficial, not only in Canaan, but in all hot countries. Such were thoſe that related to all kind of cleanlineſs, that forbad the nuptial commerce at certain periods and all intercourſe with perſons that had the leproſy, or any other infectious diſeaſe, and the like. But ſome learned men have gone farther, and have fancied, that all forbidden meats, ſuch as ſwine, hares, rabbets, ducks, &c. were, if not wholly, yet for the greateſt part, prohibited upon the ſame account, namely, as being unwholeſome and detrimental to health in thoſe hot climates: to prove this, ſome have taken no ſmall pains to ſhew, that we have not a right underſtanding of all thoſe creatures that are thus forbid, they inſtance out of Bochart (17), that the שָׁפָן, Shaphan, which we tranſlate a rabbet, is a kind of rat that lives upon the rocks, and conſequently, that the work ſhould be tranſlated a rock-rat, which animal he obſerves is of the bigneſs of a ſquirrel, and that Paleſtine and Arabia abound with it. We ſhall not trouble ourſelves with enquiring how far we do miſunderſtand the names of thoſe creatures, the eating of whoſe fleſh Moſes forbids, nor how far ſome, or any of them be really unwholſome to eat. It is certain we are not miſtaken in that of the ſwine, which whatever be pretended to the contrary, is both commonly and ſafely eat in all hot countries, except by the Turks, whoſe law has copied this, among a great many things from the Jewiſh. The rabbies indeed will have it, that it was forbid by reaſon of its extreme naſtineſs, both in its eating and wallowing in all manner of filth (18); but yet it is plain, that it never was accounted unwholſome upon that account in any country that we know of. We ſhall therefore venture to offer what we think is a more probable reaſon, why ſwine, hares, geeſe, &c. were forbid by Moſes; namely, to prevent thereby as much as poſſible the Jews having any intercourſe with other nations, either by being preſent at their feaſts or common feſtivals, or contracting affinities with them, by inſpiring them with an abhorrence againſt their moſt common meats by this expreſs prohibition, and allowing them at the ſame time the uſe of a ſufficient quantity of others to live comfortably by. It is alſo worth obſerving, that of all the meats forbidden by the Moſaic law, the Jews had the ſwine in greateſt deteſtation, inſomuch that they rather choſe the moſt cruel deaths, than to ſave their lives by eating it. How therefore they came to contract ſuch an extreme averſion to it, more than to any other, can hardly be accounted for by any other way, than by imputing it to their ſeeing it more commonly

(17) Le Scene, Eſſ. on a N. Tranſlation p. 124. (18) Middraſh Tanhuma. Middraſh Tehillim. ſupr. verb. Pſal. cxlvi. 7 Vid. & Maimonid. More Nevoch part iii. cap. 48. Meyer, de tempor. ſacr. Hæbr. cap. xi. § 15 & 16.

eat

to all appearance, calculated with a wise design of preserving them, both in their obedience to GOD, and from all intermixture with other nations, and from adopting any part of their idolatrous worship into their own. Besides these Moses received a great number of political laws properly so called, which related to the welfare and preservation of their common-wealth: of this nature were those which ascertained every man's property, and appointed proportionate punishments to the invaders of it. Such were also those of the Jubile, which restored every man once in fifty years to his paternal estate, however alienated during that time: the cities of refuge to secure the life of a man, who had innocently slain another: such were also the great court of judicature, known afterwards by the name of Sanhedrim; their other courts of judicature, choice of magistrates, and others to the same end; all which were delivered at several times, and upon divers exigencies, by GOD to Moses, and by him committed to writing in the same order in which he received them [k]. Neither were all these laws given to him in the mount, though the main part of them was; for after the setting up of the tabernacle GOD was pleased to appear, and to deliver his oracles to him from thence. One thing however is remarkable in that last intercourse we have been mentioning, namely the promise which GOD made to Israel [l], that he would send his angel to facilitate their way, and to bring them to the promised land; and that, if they proved obedient to his voice, and kept themselves from the pollutions of those nations which they went to conquer, he would inject a panic fear upon them, so that they should not be able to resist them; adding, that they should not make a complete conquest of them at once, lest the wild beasts should prove too strong for them; but that they should carry it on gradually, till they had extended it from the Red-sea unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the river [m].

The covenant between GOD and the people ratified.

IMMEDIATELY after this Moses reared an altar to GOD, and offered burnt-sacrifices and peace-offerings upon it, and having caused the contents of this new covenant to be read to all the people, and exacted a solemn promise from them that they would keep it faithfully, he ratified it by sprinkling eat by other nations, than any of the rest, it being looked upon as the most friendly and nourishing to our bodies of any other flesh. And this did exactly answer their law-giver's design.

[k] Exod. xxiv. 4. [l] Ibid xxiii. 20. & seq. [m] Ibid. ver. 31.

the

the altar, the book, and the people, with the blood of the victims, and then ordered twelve pillars to be erected, one for each tribe, as a ſtanding monument of this alliance between GOD and them. Moſes had no ſooner made an end of this ceremony, than he took with him Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and ſeventy of the elders of Iſrael, ſome part of the way towards the mountain, where they beheld the GOD of Iſrael in a kind of viſion, with a pavement of ſaphire-ſtone under him, exceeding the very ſky in brightneſs; and after he had committed the care of the people unto them, he took Joſhua up into the mountain with him, and ſtayed there full forty days. It was during this interval, that GOD gave him the two tables of ſtone, whereon were written the ten commandments by the finger, that is, as the generality of expoſitors underſtand it, and indeed the original doth properly imply, by the immediate command and direction of GOD himſelf (A); the plan of the Jewiſh religion, of the tabernacle, Moſes takes 70 of the elders up towards the mountain.

Goes himſelf into the cloud.

(A) What character theſe tables were written in, whether in that which we now call the Samaritan, or in the Aſſyrian, ſhall be conſidered, when we come to ſpeak of their writing; and therefore all we ſhall obſerve at preſent concerning them, is, that Moſes tells us, that they were writ, or engraved, מזה ומזה, Mize umize, on this and on that ſide (19). From which their Talmud tells us (20), that the letters were cut through and through, ſo as to be ſeen and read on either ſide. And when the queſtion is put, how it was poſſible for the middle part of the ם final mem and ם ſamech to ſupport itſelf? the Talmudiſt anſwers, that it was kept ſuſpended by a miraculous power: we are far enough from crediting ſuch fables againſt the plain meaning of the text, which at moſt imports no more, than that they were written on both ſides, that is, front and back-ſide, though it may ſignify only, that they were ſo on each ſide, like the two pages of an open book, in which ſenſe Moſes's words are generally taken; but what we would infer from it, is, that the compilers of that book never could dream of the Samaritan being the antient Hebrew character, becauſe thoſe two letters are of a quite different ſhape, and needed not ſuch a miracle to ſupport the middle, more than any other letter, and yet it is plain, that thoſe who have embraced this notion, have quoted the Talmud for it (21); and ſuch has been their poſſeſſion in favour of this character, that they have miſtaken an objection for a poſitive text, and overlooked two or three expreſs anſwers which immediately follow it. But of this we ſhall have a more proper occaſion to ſpeak in the ſequel. As to other particu-

(19) Exod. xxxii. 15. (20) Tractat. Megillath. (21) Morin. Differt. in pentat. Samarit. Walton. prolegom. Whiſton. & al.

nacle, and all the utenſils belonging to it, and ſeveral other laws concerning the prieſts, Levites, and laity, and, in particular, an order for exacting a free-will-offering from all the children of Iſrael, according to their abilities, of gold, ſilver, braſs, ſcarlet, ſilk, wool, oil, ſpices, and all other neceſſary materials for the tabernacle, ark of the covenant, prieſtly lars relating to theſe tables, ſuch as their number, which ſome eaſtern authors have multiplied to ten, and others to ſeventeen (22); though the Talmud and all the Jewiſh rabbies do conſtantly call them the two tables of the covenant (23): their ſhape, bigneſs, what material they were made of? which ſome rabbies take to have been ſome precious wood, others, ſome precious ſtone, as a ruby or carbuncle: in what order the ten commandments were writ? whether all the ten upon each table, or half, or ſome part upon one, and the reſt upon the other? theſe, and other ſuch nice enquiries we purpoſely forbear, becauſe the ſcriptures leave us wholly in the dark about them. However, we beg leave here to vindicate our ſenſe of thoſe expreſſions of Moſes, that theſe tables were written by the finger of GOD, that they were the work of GOD, and that the writing was the writing of GOD, and the like. For though a great many expoſitors underſtand them literally, as writ by GOD himſelf, others by an angel, and others by the ſpirit of GOD, which is ſometimes called the finger of GOD (24); yet we think it plain, by comparing the words with what Moſes ſays in another place (25), that GOD commanded him to write the words of the covenant upon the ſecond tables, as they had been written in the firſt which he had broken, and that he did ſo accordingly; and what he repeats, or rather recapitulates, in Deuteronomy (26), that he (GOD) wrote on the ſecond tables, according to the writing of the firſt, the ten commandments; it is plain, we ſay, that the words can imply no more, than that they were writ by the command and direction of GOD, and that Moſes was the perſon that wrote the firſt, as well as the laſt; though the common opinion of antient and modern expoſitors is, that GOD wrote the firſt, and he the laſt (27).

The Mohammedans tell us, that GOD commanded the angel Gabriel to take the heavenly pen, which is the naming of the name of GOD, and to dip it into the river of light, and to write the ten laws upon the tables. And that after Moſes had broke them, the angels carried the fragments up into heaven again, except one piece about half a yard long, which was afterwards depoſited in the ark (28).

(22) Vid. Herbelot's Bibliot. Orient. in loc. (23) Talm. paſſ. vid. etiam. הגדה הפסח Cantic. אחר מי יזרע. (24) Vid. Exod. viii. 19. Luke xi. 20. & alib. (25) Exod. xxxiv. 27, 28. (26) Cap x. 4. (27) Cypr. lib. de S. Spirit. Auguſt. quæſt. in Exod. 186. Jun. Villet. Rabbin. vid. Munſt. & al. in loc. (28) Vid. Bibliot. Orient. p. 649.

rabbies.

robes, and all other things that were to be appointed for the public worſhip [n]. The care of making all theſe things was to be committed to Bezaleel, of the tribe of Judah, and Aholiab of the tribe of Dan, two perſons whom GOD had endowed with an extraordinary ſkill and wiſdom to contrive and execute all theſe grand deſigns, according to his directions [o].

In the mean time, the people, who had ſeen Moſes go up and enter into the cloud, whilſt the top of the mountain was all in flames [p], after they had waited above a month for him, began to give him over for loſt. In this uncertain condition they aſſembled themſelves, in a riotous manner, about Aaron's tent, and told him, that, as they wholly deſpaired of Moſes's return, they expected that he ſhould make them ſome gods to go before them; and ſuch was his extreme weakneſs and cowardice, that he doth not ſeem to have heſitated one moment, whether he ſhould refuſe or comply with their requeſt, but to have directed them immediately to bring him a ſufficient quantity of their gold ornaments, to make them a golden calf. A learned Romiſh writer has indeed taken a deal of pains to vindicate this mean action of the Jewiſh high-prieſt, in compliment to his own, to whom he dedicates the work [q], which was however univerſally condemned, even by thoſe of his own church. And indeed the moſt that can be ſaid in Aaron's defence is, that he did not perhaps think the people would be ſo ready to part with their golden ornaments, eſpecially the women, from whom he bids them to tear or ſnatch them; but when he found how quickly his orders were obeyed, he made no ſcruple to be as quick as they in anſwering their requeſt, ſo that by the next day the calf was ſet up. The greateſt part of the Jews ſeem to throw the fault of this whole tranſaction upon the Egyptians that were come out with them, who firſt put it into the people's head to aſk for theſe gods: they add, that Aaron had no hand in the caſting of it in that form, but that it was done by ſome Egyptian conjuror by dint of magic, which they prove from the ſhort time he took in making it, and from Aaron's words to Moſes: they gave me (their gold) and I caſt it into the fire, and there came out this calf. But we may juſtly affirm, that they who undertake to vindicate Aaron's weakneſs, whether Jews or Chriſtians *, do act with leſs modeſty than Joſephus,

Is given over by the people.

The golden calf ſet up.

[n] Exod. a cap. xxv. ad cap. xxx. [o] Ibid. xxxi. paſſ.
[p] Vid. Exod. xxiv. 16, 17. [q] MONCRUS de Vitul. Aur. ap. Oper. Critic. Vol. II. p. 4415. vid etiam BAYL. Dict. ſub. voc. Aaron. * BERRUYER's Hiſt. du peup. de Dieu in loc. CALM. & al.

who saw too plainly, that it were in vain to offer any thing by way of excuse, seeing Moses doth so severely reprove and condemn him for it [r], and therefore hath rather chosen to suppress it wholly, than to record a deed so little to his predecessor's credit, however glossed or palliated. Had not Moses had a greater regard to truth, than to the honour of his brother, we should have lost this among many other pregnant testimonies of his faithfulness and sincerity. However, the people were so eager for this new god, that they willingly parted with their gold ear-rings to Aaron, who lost no time to have it cast according to his promise (B); and, having set it

[r] Exod. xxxii. 21.

(B) Our version and several others, have given us a very uncouth account of the casting of this golden calf, by making Aaron fashion it with a graving tool, after he had cast it in a mould (29): that of Geneva is still more ridiculous, which makes him engrave it first, and cast it afterwards. For to say nothing of the improbability of engraving having been known so soon, when we meet with nothing like it in all the fine work of Solomon's temple so long after, which was wrought with more art and greater deliberation, it is plain, that Aaron could not have time enough to get the mould ready, the metal melted, and the idol cast, and engraven into the bargain, because he set it up on the very morrow after they had brought him the metal. The mistake is owing to their not attending to the various sense of the verb צוּר, Tzur, which signifies, to tie up, and bind, as well as to shape, and form, nor to that of the word חֶרֶט, Cheret, which though it may properly enough be rendered a graving-tool in one or two places where it is used; yet in others it signifies a bag: accordingly, Naaman, the Syrian, is said to have tied up two talents of silver in two bags (30), in which place these two words צוּר, Tzur, and חֶרֶט, are used. We think therefore those in the right, who have rendered the verse now in question, and Aaron received them (the gold ear-rings) and tied them in a bag, and got them cast into a molten calf (31).

As for the calf itself, some antient fathers have been of opinion, that it had only the face of one, and the form of a man from the neck downwards (32), in imitation of the Egyptian Isis (33); others have thought it to have had the head of an ox, and no body joined to it: But, however, the most general opinion is, that it was a whole calf in imitation of the Egyptian Apis. But whatever the shape of it was, it is plain from some of the prophets

(29) Exod. xxxii. 4. Scen. Essay on a N. Vers. ment. in Exod. in loc.

(30) 2 Kings v. 23.

(31) Le

(32) Vid. Le Clerc & Calmet's Com-

(33) Vid. Herodot. lib. ii. cap. 41.

(34),

it upon a pedeſtal, in full ſight of all the camp, and reared up an altar before it, told them in their own dialect, that theſe were the gods which brought them out of Egypt, and appointed the next day as a ſolemn feſtival to their new made deity; which they began with offering burnt-ſacrifices and peace-offerings to it, and concluded with feaſting and dancing.

IN the mean time GOD, who ſaw what paſſed in their camp, and that the ungrateful Iſraelites were rendering themſelves more unworthy than ever of his care and protection, informed Moſes of it, who had ſpent by this time full forty days in faſting and prayer; but with ſuch threatening expreſſions againſt thoſe idolaters, as made him fear that ſome heavy puniſhment, if not total deſtruction, was going to fall upon them; but though GOD did comfort him at the ſame time with promiſes of making him the father of as numerous a nation, as that of the Iſraelites then was, yet he rather choſe to intercede for them, and ceaſed not to ſue for their pardon, till he had obtained a kind of promiſe of it from him. After this. taking the two tables and his ſervant Joſhua with him, he came down from the mountain, and was ſcarce got to the foot of it, when he was ſurprized with their ſtrange ſhoutings, which, as he thought, were neither like thoſe of a flying or a purſuing army, but it was not long before he beheld the ſad cauſe of it, the calf which his brother had ſet up, and the people dancing round it. His concern was ſo great, that the firſt way he expreſſed it by, was by breaking the two tables, after which he went and upbraided his puſillanimous brother in the ſtrongeſt terms, for having ſo eaſily yielded to the people's ſhameful deſire, aſſuring him, that he had brought a horrid ſin upon them, and had now made them naked to their ſhame in the midſt of their enemies, meaning thereby, that he had publickly expoſed their idolatrous and ſtubborn diſpoſition to all the world, and layed them open, naked and defenceleſs to all their enemies, by forfeiting the divine protection, which alone could bring them ſafe into the promiſed land.

Moſes comes down from the mount. Breaks the two tables.

AARON failed not to lay the blame on the tumultuous people, which forced him to comply with their requeſt; but (34) Iſai. Ezek. Amos & al. paſſ. (35) Acts vii. 39. & ſeq.

Aaron's

Moſes, inſtead of liſtening to his excuſes, ſet himſelf immediately about the deſtruction of the idol, and the puniſhment of ſuch of the delinquents, whom his preſence had not driven away from the place where it was ſet up. He cauſed the calf to be taken down, in order to have it burnt, and ground into powder, and caſt into the water, of which he afterwards made all the people to drink (C). Whilſt this was doing,

(C) This action of Moſes, of melting, grinding, and powdering, the golden idol, in order to make the people drink it with the water into which he threw it, is ſo contrary to our preſent philoſophy, and the account which the Alchymiſts give us of the nature of gold, that it has been ſtrangely canvaſſed by the incredulous, and very aukwardly defended by others. However it is plain, that gold may be reduced to a fine and almoſt impalpable powder, and it is no more than all our gold-beaters know how to do. It is true, Moſes might have ſome particular ſecret for doing it, which we know nothing of; neither is it improbable, that the Egyptians and other nations might know ſome things concerning that metal, which have been ſince loſt. Nothing has been more commonly received, than the notion that gold cannot be deſtroyed, by people's running into favourite hypotheſes, perhaps upon ſome experiments not rightly underſtood, or not ſufficiently bottomed And yet the royal academy at Paris have a burning glaſs that will vitrify it in an inſtant, by evaporating all the ſulphur of it, which crackles and flies up in a thick ſmoke, whilſt the glaſs that remains can never be reduced into any other form. And Borrichius aſſures us, that he has, by a conſtant trituration of that metal in ſome ſimple diſtilled water, during the ſpace of thirty days, raiſed this ſulphur up to the ſurface of the water, upon which it appeared like a fine red oil, whilſt all the reſt that ſubſided was only a greyiſh powder, which could never be reduced into any thing afterwards, but appeared in all reſpects the ſame with that which he had got out of baſer metals by the ſame method of trituration; though none of the latter, not even ſilver, ever afforded any thing like that beautiful oil which gold did (36).

The Rabbies, according to cuſtom, tell us, that the reaſon of Moſes's making the people drink this gold-powder, was in order to know the idolaters from the reſt, and that as ſoon as they had drank it, the beards of the former turned red; and the cabaliſts add, that the idol weighed 125 quintals, or hundreds, which they gather from the Hebrew word מסכה, Maſſekah, whoſe numerical doing, he cried aloud, who is on the LORD's ſide? and finding, that the ſons of Levi did immediately join themſelves to him, he commanded them to gird on their ſwords, and to go and ſlay all indifferently whom they found ſtill at that idolatrous feaſt, without regard to age, or quality, kindred, friendſhip, or acquaintance. Theſe went forthwith from Moſes's preſence, and puniſhed with immediate death about three thouſand of the delinquents, whom they found ſtill ſtraggling about in the midſt of their mirth. Some copies of the ſeptuagint and the vulgate ſay twenty three, and others thirty three thouſand; but beſides, that the original mentions no more than three thouſand, and thoſe verſions are acknowledged by ſeveral eminent men of the church of Rome to be corrupt in this place †, it is hardly probable, that they could make a greater ſlaughter in ſo ſhort a time. This timely zeal of the tribe of Levi, againſt thoſe idolaters, did not go long unrewarded: for it did not only wipe off that blemiſh which their progenitor had entailed upon them, for the bloody maſſacre of the Shechemites, but in a very ſhort time procured them the Levitical prieſthood; which, though ſubordinate to that of Aaron and his poſterity, did entitle them to the tenths of all kinds of beaſts, fruits, and grain in Iſrael; to the inferior miniſtry of the tabernacle, and afterwards of the temple; to a place in the judicial courts of every city and town; to the property of thirty five cities with all their lands, ſome of which were appointed cities of refuge; and to ſeveral other privileges and immunities, of which further account ſhall be given in its proper place. In the mean time the people who were witneſſes of this dreadful example on the delinquents, and heard with what ſeverity Moſes had reproved his brother, were under the greateſt conſternation; but whether it were that his anger was by this time ſomewhat diſarmed, he contented himſelf with upbraiding them with their ingratitude and extreme folly, promiſing them however, that he would go up to the mountain again, and try how far his prayers could prevail with the divine mercy, and avert the puniſhment which they had deſerved. He went up accordingly, and interceded ſo powerfully for them, that he at

(36) Vid. B. Sigogn. N. Meth.

2

The Levites kill 3000 delinquents.

Their Zeal is rewarded.

Moſes returns to the mount.

† CAJET. VATABL. LIPPOMAN. A. MONTAN. & al. vid. 1 Cor. x. 8.

rical letters make 125. But why quintals, rather than pounds, ounces, or talents, they give no reaſon for (37).

(37) R. Tauchum in Elle Shem. Rab. ſect. 42.

length

length obtained, not only their pardon, but a renewing of GOD's former promiſe of bringing them into the promiſed land under the conduct of his angel. However, both the pardon and promiſe were ſo far conditional, that the people were to make ſome attonement for their rebellion, by a ſolemn and public act of humiliation, and a promiſe to be more obedient for the future; for in caſe they ſhould, by a further relapſe, bring down a freſh puniſhment upon themſelves, this idolatry was likewiſe to be puniſhed along with it (D) [f]. One of theſe conditions the people immediately embraced, and a ſolemn faſt was kept throughout the whole camp, during which they diveſted themſelves of all their gaudy apparel and coſtly ornaments: and, in memory of this ſin, and of the breaking of the two tables, the Jews obſerve that faſt yearly even to this day. At the ſame time GOD, to adminiſter ſome comfort to Moſes, whom he ſaw labouring under ſuch a heavy load of grief and care, and as a further mark of his particular favour, was pleaſed, at his requeſt, to grant him a ſight of his glory, that is, as the context explains it [t], a ſight of that angel, or rather divine conductor, under whoſe direction and care they were to go and conquer the promiſed land (E).

MOSES

[f] Exod. xxxv. [t] Ibid. c xxxiii. ver. 12. & ſeq.

(D) The Jews have underſtood theſe words in ſo unlimited a ſenſe, that they tell us upon the authority of one of their greateſt rabbies, quoted by the Talmud (38), that GOD doth not inflict any puniſhment upon the world for any crying fault, in which there is not one twenty fourth part of this ſin of the golden calf put into the ſcale with it: but another (39), afraid leſt that proportion ſhould have been long ago exhauſted hath confined it to the Iſraelites, and allows but about one ounce of the gold calf to go into the doſe of every ſuch puniſhment; ſo that it can hardly fail of laſting a conſiderable while, eſpecially if the calf weighed ſo many hundred weights as they tell us it did. However it is plain by the text, that GOD did only deſign to deter them from relapſing into the like crime, by threatening, that in ſuch a caſe he would inflict a double puniſhment upon them.

(E) It muſt be owned, that the account which Moſes gives us of this divine viſion, is none of the cleareſt, and that ſome of the expreſſions he uſes, ſuch as that he ſhould not ſee GOD's face, but only his back, &c. have induced ſome free thinkers to tax him and all the Jews after him with being Anthropomorphites, 'till they learned a more refined divinity from the Babylonians during their captivity. But it muſt be remembered, that Moſes ſpoke to a groſs and carnal people, in a languaage far from copious, eſpecially in words or idioms ſuitable either to the deity, or to the dignity of the preſent glorious tranſaction; and that it is therefore no wonder, if he borrows his expreſſions from outward and ſenſible objects and actions. It is plain, that thoſe who wrote in Greek, which is vaſtly more rich than the Hebrew, even the very writers of the new teſtament, and the primitive fathers, who were the fartheſt from having any ſuch abſurd ideas of the godhead, have been forced to make uſe of the ſame figurative expreſſions in many places of their writings, for want of more proper and intelligible ones, which were equally wanting in that as in the other tongue. Neither doth it appear that the Jews themſelves underſtood Moſes's words in that groſs ſenſe, becauſe it is plain that they had a notion, that this angel, or apparition, which directed them through the wilderneſs, was the Meſſiah, who did then take a viſible appearance, which they called the Shekinah, from שכן Shakan, to dwell, under which he delivered his oracles and commands to them. Which Shekinah, though ſome underſtand of all the appearances which GOD took from the beginning, and others, either of the Shekinah of fire and water, or of the fiery and cloudy pillar; yet all agree that it was the כסא הכבוד, Kiſſe bakabod, the throne of glory, which was one of the ſeven things which they affirm to have been created before the world (40).

(38) R. Iſaac in Talmud. Tract. Sanhedr. (39) Moſ. Gerundenſ. vid. Munſt. in loc.

learned

MOSES ſtayed in the mount another forty days and nights, during which, he tells us, he neither eat nor drank (F), but ſpent

However, to diſculpate at once the Jewiſh lawgiver from ſuch an imputation, we need but call to mind the glorious deſcriptions he gives almoſt every where, eſpecially in Deuteronomy, of the godhead; what pains he takes to deter the Jews from making any repreſentation of it under any form whatſoever, by reminding them, that when GOD was ſo pleaſed to diſplay his glory upon mount Sinai at the delivering of the ten commands, they ſaw no ſhape nor likeneſs, but only they heard his dreadful voice. Theſe ſo frequent inculcations may therefore be reaſonably looked upon as a key to them, how to underſtand all thoſe other expreſſions which he had been forced to accommodate to their capacity, that is, not in a literal ſenſe, but in ſuch a one as was worthy of the deity, and the dignity of the ſubject.

(F) Buxtorf quotes a Jewiſh proverb out of the large comment on Exodus, with reſpect to this miraculous faſting of Moſes, which is to this purpoſe: 'that above, where there is neither eating or 'drinking, Moſes ſtaid 80 days, and became like the angels, and 'below, where men do eat and drink, miniſtring angels came ſpent his whole time in praying and making two other tables, like unto thoſe which he had broken, and in receiving ſome further inſtructions from GOD; after which he came down again to the people, who were not a little ſurprized to obſerve, that his face had contracted ſuch a glorious luſtre during his receſs, that they could not intenſely behold it. This obliged him to cover it with a vail whenever he was to ſpeak to them, but he took it off whenever he went to receive GOD's commands [u]. By this time the people were become a little more tractable, and he had no ſooner acquainted them, among other things, that they ſhould every one bring a free-will-offering of all ſorts of materials for the tabernacle, ark, utenſils, prieſtly garments, and the like, but both men and women ſhewed the greateſt eagerneſs and readineſs to contribute their richeſt jewels, metals, and other precious things which they had got out of the ſpoils of the Egyptians and Amalekites; ſo that in one day he beheld them laying at his feet a more than ſufficient quantity of precious ſtones, gold, ſilver, braſs, ſhittim and cedar-wood, ſilk, cotton, linen, and the fineſt wool of purple, ſcarlet and other colours, of the ſkins of rams, badgers and goats richly died, and laſtly of the richeſt oils, ſpices, ointments and perfumes; all which he diſtributed to proper perſons to be wrought, and made Bezaleel and Aholiab overſeers of all the work [w]. Theſe ſhewed ſuch

(40) Vid. Chald. Parash in loc. & in Geneſ. i 1. Rayin. Mart. pug. fid. Duplels. cont. Jud Munſt & al.

A general offering of all the people.

[u] Exod. xxxiv. [w] Ibid. xxxv. 20, 21. & ſeq.

'down, and eat and drank like them (41), by which one would 'be apt to think they attributed both the one and the other, ra-'ther to a change of climate, than to a miracle.' However, without enquiring whether Moſes, and afterwards Chriſt, were miraculouſly ſupported without any kind of ſuſtenance or not, we beg leave to obſerve, that the words which Chriſt quotes from Moſes, that man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of GOD †, contains an hebraiſm, which cannot be retained in a verſion, without conveying a wrong idea. Word, in the original doth often ſignify thing, and is often uſed in that ſenſe in the new teſtament, as where it is ſaid, and we are witneſſes of theſe words, that is, of theſe things or tranſactions. The text ought therefore to have been rendered, Man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every thing that GOD has appointed or ordained for his nouriſhment *; ſince it is plain that Moſes ſpeaks in the place quoted not of his faſting, but of the manna which GOD gave the Iſraelites inſtead of bread.

(41) Vid. Buxtorf. Lexic. ſub. rad. נמם. † Matth. iv. 4. out of Deut. viii. 3. * Le Seen. Eſſay on a N. Verſ.

diligence

diligence, and employed ſo many hands in the work, that the tabernacle, and all its rich furniture and coſtly apparatus, were finiſhed, and ſet up at the foot of mount Sinai, in leſs than ſix months. Aaron and his ſons, being ſolemnly conſecrated Aaron con- prieſts, began to offer up all kinds of ſacrifices upon the new ſecrated altar according to the law of Moſes. Soon after this, the high-prieſt.
heads of each tribe came and appeared before Moſes and Aaron, and preſented a very conſiderable offering to GOD, in ſix waggons drawn each by two oxen, all which were received by Moſes, and ſet aſide for the ſervice of the taber-nacle †. Thus was this pompous worſhip begun, in the framing and inſtituting of which GOD was pleaſed to com-ply with their groſs and carnal minds, which he ſaw was incapable of being affected with a purer and more ſpiritual one *.

† Numb. vii. 1. & ſeq. * Exod. from Ch. xxxvi. to the end.

Directions to the Bookbinder for placing the Cuts.

1. Map of antient Egypt. Page 67
2. Map of the divisions and situations of the Tribes of the Canaanites, Moabites, &c. 230
3. The Temple of Balbek. 244
4. Palmyra. 251
5. The Syriac Alphabet. 267
6. Towers or Sepulchral Monuments. 303
7. A Map of Syria and Phœnice. 352

AN INDEX

TO THE SECOND VOLUME.

The Numbers direct to the Page, and the great Letters to the Notes.

A.

Aron, Moſes's brother, married to Eliſheba the ſiſter of Naaſhon, and daughter of Amminadab, ſon of Ezron, 500. Commanded by God, to go and meet his brother, ibid. The ſtate of his family at that time, ibid. Joins Moſes at mount Horeb, 505. Preſents himſelf with Moſes before the Egyptian king, to demand the diſmiſſion of the Iſraelites, 506. He and his ſons ſolemnly conſecrated prieſts, 571. By his throwing a handful of aſhes of the furnace into the air, boils break out upon men and beaſts, 515. In Moſes's abſence caſts a golden calf, which he ſets up, with an altar, in the ſight of all the camp, 563. His weakneſs in complying with the idolatrous requeſt of the Jews, Jews, ibid. Some endeavour to extenuate his fault, ibid. Upbraided by Moſes, ibid. His excuſe, 565.

Abana and Pharpar, ſtreams of the Chryſorrhoas, or Barrady, that waters Damaſcus, 235 (C).
Abdaſtartus, king of Tyre, murdered by his nurſe's ſons, 341.
Abdemonus, a Tyrian, employed by Hiram, king of Tyre, to explain the riddles of Solomon, 340.
Abdolominus, ſee Ballonymus.
Abel Mizraim, or the mourning of the Egyptians, a place in Canaan ſo called, becauſe Jacob's family, in carrying his body to be interred in the cave of Machpelah, made a halt here to perform a funeral ceremony, 451.
Abihu, the ſon of Aaron, by Eliſheba, 500. Solemnly conſecrated prieſts with his brother Nadab, 571.
Abimelech, king of the Philiſtines, a holy and juſt perſon, 202. His obliging behaviour towards Abraham, ibid. Abraham binds his poſterity by oath to live in amity with that of Abimelech, 204.
Abimelech II. a juſt and pious prince, his obliging behaviour towards Iſaac and Rebekah, 205, &c. Repreſented by Joſephus as a bad and corrupt prince, 206. (P). Renews with Iſaac the covenant made by his father with Abraham, 207.
Abraham, the ſon of Terah, the 10th in a lineal deſcent from Shem, the ſon of Noah, 355. Born in Ur of the Chaldees, from whence he comes with his father into Haran, ibid. Commanded by God to depart from Haran into a land which he ſhould ſhew him, 356. Aſſured that in his ſeed all the nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, ibid. Goes into the land of Canaan, ibid. God appears to him and promiſes that land to his poſterity, 357. Forced by a famine to remove into Egypt, ibid. King of Egypt taken with Sarah's beauty, ſhews extraordinary favours to Abraham, 358. Returns to Bethel, 359. Separates from Lot, ibid. Reſcues him from Chedarlaomer, 361. Removes to Hebron, ibid. Abram's name changed to Abraham, 366. Etymology of both, ibid. (O). Commanded to circumciſe all the males of his family, ibid. Aſſured that his wife ſhould bear him a ſon, ibid. Circumciſed with his family, 367. Entertains three angels, 368. A ſon promiſed to his wife Sarah, 371. Pleads for Sodom, 372. Iſaac born, 373. Sends away Hagar and Iſhmael, 374. Makes a covenant with Abimelech, ibid. Commanded to ſacrifice his ſon Iſaac, 375. But countermanded by an angel, 376. Sarah dies, 377. He buys the cave of Machpelah, 379. Sends his ſervant to get a wife for Iſaac, 380. Being 141 years old marries Keturah, and has ſix ſons by her, 382, 383. Dies and is buried in the cave of Machpelah, 383. Traditions or fictions of the Jews, Arabians, and Indians, relating to the hiſtory of Abraham, 383, (Q).

of

Athæmenes, brother to Xerxes, governor of Egypt, 61. Is killed in a battle, 62.

Achiſh, king of the Philiſtines, 222. Receives David and his wife, and treats them with great hoſpitality, 223. Marches againſt the Iſraelites and drives them before him with great ſlaughter, 225. Kills Saul and his three ſons, and hangs up their bodies upon the walls of Bethſhan, ibid.

Achſhaph king of, joins Jabin, king of Hazor, againſt the Iſraelites, and is defeated by Joſhua, 178.

Achoris, king of Egypt, joins Evagoras, king of Cyprus, &c. againſt the Perſians, 65. Dies, ibid.

Actiſanes, the Ethiopian, drives Amoſis from the throne of Egypt, 29. Unites Egypt and Æthiopia, 31. Sends all the Egyptian thieves and robbers to Rhinocorura, ibid.

Adad, or Ader, a chief deity of the Syrians, 255. How repreſented, ibid. (E).

Adah, firſt wife of Eſau, ſee Judith.

Adonai, the meaning of this word, 488 (T).

Adonis, river of Phœnice, at certain ſeaſons and upon certain occaſions appears bloody, 300. Whence the ſuperſtitions in memory of Thammuz or Adonis yearly wounded, ibid. Cauſe of that appearance in the river, ibid. Adonis of the Phœnicians, Thammuz, and Oſiris were one, 312, 313, (S). One of the Phœnician deities, ibid. His father one Cinyras, an Aſſyrian, founder of Paphos in Cyprus, 316, 317. The origin of the rites performed in honour of him by the Phœnicians, ibid. & ſeq.

Adonibezek, king of Bezek, infamous for his cruelty and inſolence, 180. His city taken by the Iſraelites, himſelf made priſoner, and carried to Jeruſalem, where he died, ibid.

Adonizedek king of Jeruſalem, beſieges Gibeon, 177. He and his army cut off by Joſhua in a moſt miraculous manner, ibid.

Agag, the firſt, or among the firſt kings, of the Amalekites, 152. Their laſt king bore the ſame name, ibid. Taken and ſpared by Saul, but put to death by Samuel, 154. All their other kings ſuppoſed to have bore the ſame appellation, 152.

Agenor, firſt king of Phœnice, mentioned by the Greeks, 328. Account of his family, ibid. & ſeq.
Ahab, king of Iſrael, defeats, with a ſmall body of Iſraelites, the vaſt hoſt of the Syrians before Samaria, 276. And in the plain of Aphek again with great ſlaughter, 277. His generous behaviour to Ben-hadad imploring his mercy, 278.
Ahaz, king of Judah, invaded by the Philiſtines, who reduce ſeveral cities and add them to their dominions, 230.
Ahiman, one of the three ſons of Anak, expelled by Caleb from Hebron, 181 (B).
Aholiab and Bezaleel ſet over the workmen employed in the making of the tabernacle, 370.
Aholibamah, ſecond wife of Iſaac, ſee Baſhemah.
Athyrte, daughter of Seſoſtris, 22.
Ai king of, repulſes the Iſraelites, 175. His town taken, and all in it cut off by a ſtratagem of Joſhua, ibid. Himſelf hanged, ibid.
Alectryo, a ſacred perſon ſo called among the Syrians, 262.
Alexander the great beſieges Tyre, 348. His cruelty towards the Tyrians, 351.
Alexandria upon the Sinus Iſſicus, a town in Seleucis, 233.
Allon-bachuth, or the oak of mourning, why ſo called, 412.
Alonymus, ſee Ballonymus.
Amalek, the ſon of Eſau's firſt-born, Eliphaz, by his concubine Timnah, and father of the Amalekites, 148. Is reckoned among the dukes in the land of Edom, ibid. His genealogy according to the Arabians, ibid. (A) See Amalekites.
Amalekites, deſcended from Eſau's firſt-born, 148. How this family came to ſeparate from the others of Eſau's line, 149. The ſpot they firſt pitched upon was not probably at any great diſtance from Edom, 150. Originally uſed circumciſion, 151. Their arts, ſciences, &c. ibid. Their government monarchical, 152. Their king ſpoken of by Balaam as far above all others, and they ſtiled the firſt of nations, ibid. Said by the Arabian hiſtorians to have conquered Egypt, and poſſeſſed that kingdom for ſeveral generations, ibid. The only nation mentioned to have fallen upon the Iſraelites after their croſſing the Red-ſea, 153. But after a bloody battle put to flight by Joſhua, with the heavy doom, that for this outrage their name ſhould be put out from under heaven, ibid. Miſs no opportunity of vexing the Iſraelites, but fall by their own ſwords, 154. Invaded by Saul at the head of 200,000 men, and all cut off except ſome few who fled their country; their kingdom laid waſte, and their king taken priſoner and hewn to pieces by Samuel, 154, & ſeq. The few that eſcaped poſſeſs themſelves ſelves again of their deſolate country, but are again butchered and diſperſed by David, 155. They renew the war againſt David, ſeize and burn Ziklag, but ſave the lives of the inhabitants, 155. Take David's two wives, ibid. But in their return are all cut off, except 400 who ſaved themſelves by flight, 156. Utterly deſtroyed and diſperſed by the Simeonites, 156. Moſes ordered to vow a laſting war againſt them, till their very remembrance was quite blotted out, 546. What induced them to fall upon the Iſraelites, on their march to Canaan, ibid (U). Seem to be the ſame people who are by the Greeks ſtiled ſhepherds, 72. Opinions of the Arabian hiſtorians concerning their deſcent and country, 317 (A) What the Arabians ſay of them, bears an affinity to what the Egyptian records report of the Phœnician hiſtory, 152 (F). Suppoſed to have fled into Afric, ibid.

Amaſis betrays Apries king of Egypt, 50. And drives him from the throne, 52. How he induced the Egyptians, deſpiſing him on account of his mean extraction, to pay him the reſpect due to his ſtation, ibid. Builds a very magnificent portico to the temple of Minerva at Saïs, 53. His other public works, ibid. & ſeq. The happy ſtate of Egypt under him, and his laws, 54. Favours the Greeks, and is viſited by Solon, 54. Marries a Greek, 55. A miracle on this occaſion, ibid. His conſecrated donations to Greece, ibid. & 56. The firſt that ſubdued Cyprus, 56. his latter days unhappy, and why, ibid. Betrayed by Phanes of Halicarnaſſus, 58. Makes Polycrates the tyrant of Samos his enemy, 58 & 59. Dies, 59. His dead body taken out of the tomb and burnt, 61.

Amaſis, or Ammoſis, another king of Egypt, 29. His ſubjects join with the Ethiopians to drive him from the throne, on account of his violence and injuſtice, ibid.

Amenophis, the ſon of Rameſes, thought by ſome to be the ſame whom the Greeks call Belus, and to have reigned in Egypt when the Iſraelites went out of it, 505 (B).

Amminadab, the ſon of Ezron, and father of Naaſſon and Eliſheba, wife to Aaron, 500.

Ammihud, king of Geſhur, 292.

Ammonites, the poſterity of Ammon, or Ben Ammi, the off-ſpring of Lot and his younger daughter, 97. Poſſeſs themſelves of the country called after their name Ammonitis, after driving out the Zamzummims, ibid. Deſcription of Ammonitis, ibid. They had kings, and were circumciſed, and principally addicted to huſbandry, 98. Their religion 99. Diſpoſſeſſed of great part of their country by Sihon the Amorite, 101. Recover their country, and poſſeſs themſelves of Gilead, which they hold twenty eight years, but are at laſt driven out by Jephtha, 102, 103. Renew the war with the Iſraelites, but are routed and intirely diſperſed by Saul, 103. Occaſion of the war between them and David, 104 & ſeq. Account of this war, 107. Their country plundered, cities demoliſhed, and moſt of the inhabitants put to death, in a cruel manner, by the officers of David, ibid. Join the Moabites againſt Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, ibid. Overthrown by, and made tributaries to, Uzziah king of Judah, 108. Rebel in the reign of Jotham, but are overthrown and forced to pay a heavy tribute, ibid. Are attacked by Nebuzaradan the Babylonian general, their country put to fire and ſword, their king Baalis, and moſt of the nobles carried into captivity, according to the propheſy of Amos, 108. Give all the diſturbance they are able to the rebuilding of the temple of Jeruſalem, 109. Fight againſt Judas Maccabous, but are routed, their cities taken, and their wives and children carried into captivity, 109. At the beginning of the ſecond century of the Chriſtian æra were ſtill a numerous nation, ibid. Now blended with the Arabians, ibid. Joined to hire Balaam to curſe the Iſraelites, 85 & 99.

Amorites, or Emorites, inhabitants of Canaan, 159. Deſcription of their country, ibid. Confine the children of Dan to their mountains, 182. Reduced by the houſe of Joſeph and Dan, ibid. Some left to prove Iſrael, 183. With whom they live in common, ibid. Reduced to a ſtate of ſlavery by Solomon, 188.

Amyrtæus holds the fens of Egypt, after his country was reduced by the Perſians, 64. Sallies out, drives the Perſians from Egypt, and becomes king of the whole country, ibid. Is afterwards overthrown by the Perſians, ibid. His death, ibid.

Anak, one of the ſeven dukes over the poſſeſſion of the deſcendants of Seir, 138. What meant thereby, ibid. (O). From him the Anakims derived their name, 179, (Z). His three ſons driven from Hebron by Caleb, 181.

Anakims, inhabitants of the mountains of Canaan, invaded by the Iſraelites, and cut off, 179. Derived from one Arba, who ſeized on the city of Hebron, from whom it was called Kirjath-Arba, the city of Arba, ibid. (Z).

Anna, daughter of Mettinus, king of Tyre, 342.

Antioch, upon the Orontes, a famous city of the Mediterranean Seleucis, 234.
Antiochene, the two Seleucides, so called by Mela and Pliny, 234.
Antiochia ad Taurum, a chief city of Commagene, 233.
Anysis, king of Egypt, 40. Is driven from the throne by Sabacco, king of Æthiopia, ibid. Reassumes the government, 41.
Apamea, chief city of Apamene in Syria, 234.
Aphek, a city of the Syrians, 277. Ben-hadad, in the plain of Aphek, worsted by the Israelites, ibid. Walls of Aphek falling on the Syrians crushed to death 27000 of them, ibid.
Apollo of the Phœnicians, or Pythius, why in great repute among them, 310 & seq.
Apries, king of Egypt, the Pharaoh Hophra of scripture, 48. Enters into a league with Zedekiah king of Judah against the Babylonians, ibid. But leaves the Jews to the rage of their enemies, and thereby deserves the curse denounced upon the Egyptians by Ezekiel, ibid. & 49. Takes the city of Sidon by storm, 49. Vanquishes the Phœnicians and Cypriots in a sea-fight, 49. The curse of Ezekiel how fulfilled, ibid. Sends a powerful army to the assistance of Andicran, king of the Libyans, against the Cyrenæans, 50. The Egyptians defeated, rebel against Apries, 50. Engages Amasis head of the rebels, 52. Is routed and taken prisoner, ibid. Is strangled, ibid.
Ar, called also Rabbah, or the Great, and by the Greeks Areopolis, the chief city of Moab, 81.
Arad, king in the south-east of Canaan, attacks the Israelites, takes several of them prisoners, but is at last vanquished by them, 173. Series of the kings of Arad, 328. Their reigns, 352, & seq. One of Canaan's sons so called, 175, (W). Arad, or Aradus, not properly a city of Phœnice, 298. Believed by some to have been the seat of the Canaanitish tribe called Arvadites, ibid. (P). Its situation, ibid. Some remains of it extant, 299. Called by the Turks Ru-ad, ibid. (Q).
Aram, the country named so from him, 232.
Aramæan language, a dialect of the Syriac, 266.
Aramites. See Syrians.
Arba, the progenitor of the Anakims, inhabitants of the mountains of Canaan, 179, (Z).
Arbah. See Hebron.
Arbah, king of Arad, 353.

Ark of the Old Teſtament, what betided it, and how ſent back, 215, &c.

Armaïs, brother to Seſoſtris, 22. Said to have been the Danaus of the Greeks, 26. Rebels againſt his brother, 25.

Aſcalon, antient city of Paleſtine, 193. Birth-place of Semiramis, 194. The place which originally produced that kind of onion called Shalot, ibid. Famous for its wines, cypreſſes, &c. ibid.

Aſenath, wife of Joſeph, bears him two ſons, Manaſſeh and Ephraim, 422.

Aſhdod, or Azotus, a city of Paleſtine, famed among the antients, 194. Said by miſtake to have been built by one who fled from the Red-ſea, whoſe name was Aza, or Capra, ibid. Its ſituation, 195.

Aſher, Jacob's ſecond ſon by Zilpah, 398. Jacob's propheſy to him, 445. How verified, ibid. (M).

Aſhtaroth, called alſo Aſhtaroth-Karnaim, the reſidence of Og king of Baſhan, 174. Aſhtaroth, or Aſtarte, worſhipped by the Philiſtines, 200.

Aſhyaf, or Shiſhâk, king of Egypt, and contemporary with Solomon, and after his death, according to the oriental hiſtorians, took Jeruſalem, 74.

Aſtarimus, or Atharymus, king of Tyre, murdered by his brother Phelles, who ſeized on the crown, 341.

Aſtarte, one of the Phœnician deities, 305. Sometimes termed a god, and ſometimes a goddeſs, 307. According to the Phœnician mythology only a goddeſs, ibid. Particularly called the goddeſs of the Sidonians, ibid. Why called by the Hebrews Aſhtaroth, 308, (G). Opinions of the learned concerning her, ibid. (G). Repreſented as Iſis with cow's horns on her head, and for the ſame reaſon, 308. Adored under the ſtile of Queen of Heaven; and alſo called the Phœnician Aphrodite, or Venus, 309. Several Aſtartes, and variouſly repreſented, 310. Said to have conſecrated Tyre, by depoſiting there a fallen ſtar, ibid. & ſeq. Had her prophets and prieſts in great numbers, 315. Worſhipped in groves, 315. Ceremonies in her honour, ibid. & ſeq. Worſhipped in a particular manner, at Byblus, as the Venus of Adonis, ibid. & ſeq. And the rites uſed there in her honour, 316. Her temple at Aphac, a ſink of lewdneſs, 316. Called the goddeſs of the Sidonians, but her principal temple was at Tyre, built by Hiram, ibid.

Aſtartus, recovers the throne of Tyre to his family, 341.

Aſychis, king of Egypt, 39. Builds the eaſtern portico to the temple temple of Vulcan, 40. Builds a pyramid with brick, with a very vaunting inſcription, ibid. The ſame in all probability with Bocchoris, ibid. Contemporary with Anyſis and Nechus, the father of Pſammitichus, ibid.

Auzates, in Afric, built by Ithobal king of Tyre, 342.
Azelmic, king of Tyre, 348. In his reign happened the memorable ſiege of Tyre by Alexander, ibid. By Alexander ſpared and reſtored to the throne, 352.
Azotus, taken by Aſar-haddon king of Babylon, and retaken by Pſammitichus, after a ſiege of 29 years, 45.

B.

BAAL, one of the Phœnician deities, 305. Had his prophets and prieſts in great numbers, 314. Baal Thalaſſius worſhipped at Sidon, 306. Several deities of this name among the Phœnicians, 305 (B), 306 (D). Sometimes termed a god, and ſometimes a goddeſs, 307.
Baal appointed king of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, 345, & ſeq.
Baal-peor, or Peor, or Phegor, idol of the Moabites, 82. Etymology of the word, ibid. (E). Suppoſed by ſome to be Bacchus, by others Menes, Mizraïm, and Oſiris, 83, (F).
Baal-zephon, wholly unknown to the antient geographers, 528 (O). Several conjectures concerning it, ibid.
Baalis, the laſt king of Ammon, 108. Receives all the Jews, that fly from the Babylonians, into his dominions, ibid. Adviſes Iſhmael to aſſaſſinate Gedaliah, ibid. Is taken by Nebuzaradan, general of the Babylonians, and carried into captivity, ibid. & 109.
Baal-zebub, or Beelzebub, one of the Philiſtine idols, worſhipped at Ekron, 199 & ſeq. Under what form repreſented, 200. Why called Baal-zebub, or lord of flies, ibid.
Babia, one of the Syrian deities, from whom children were called Babias, 255, (D).
Badezor, or Bazor, king of Tyre, 342.
Baiſer, king of Egypt, according to the oriental hiſtorians, 71. Built the city of Meſer, ibid.
Balaam, divers opinions relating to him, 85 (G). Is ſent for to curſe the Iſraelites, 85. An angel withſtands him on his journey to Balak king of Moab, 86 & ſeq. Whether his aſs truly ſpoke, 87 (I). Is met on the borders by Balak, 88. Bleſſes the Iſraelites, and curſes thoſe who ſhould utter any imprecation againſt them, 88, 89. His propheſics as to Moab, 89. His wicked counſel to Balak, 90.

90. Slain with five kings of Midian by the Iſraelites, ibid.
Balak, king of Moab, 85. Sends for Balaam to curſe the Iſraelites, ibid.
Balator, king of Tyre, 346.
Balbek, the wonder of Syria, 239. Account of its rotunda, and great temple, 240. And the palace, 244. Thought by ſome travellers to have been the work of Solomon, 145, (M).
Balcazar, Balcaſtartus, or Bazor, ſon of Hiram king of Tyre, 341.
Ballonymus, called alſo Alonymus, Abdolominus, and Abdolonius, how created king of Sidon, 336.
Bambyce, Hierapolis, or Magog, a city of Cyrrheſtica in Syria, 234.
Barca, the ſon of Mettinus king of Tyre, 342. Accompanies his ſiſter Dido in her flight, 343. From him ſprang the family of the Barcæ in Afric, 344.
Barrady, antiently Chryſorrhoas, a river of Syria, 235.
Baſhan, hill of, gave its name to the kingdom of Og, 174. Since called Batanæa, ibid. A plentiful and populous territory, ibid. Conquered by Moſes, ibid.
Baſhemath, Eſau's ſecond wife, called by Moſes, ſpeaking of Eſau's poſterity by her, Aholibamah, daughter of Anah, the daughter of Zibeon the Hivite, 396 (X).
Bathſhemath. Vid. Mahalath.
Battus, the happy, third king of the Cyrenæans, 50.
Bazrah, Bozrah, or Boſor, a city of Edom, 132.
Beelſamen, the chief of the Phœnician deities, 305. By him meant the ſun, ibid.
Beer-ſheba, or the well of the oath, the adjoining city ſo called, 374 (A). Whence the proverb from Dan to Beer-ſheba, ibid.
Bela, the ſon of Beor, king of the Horites, 136.
Bela, or Zoar, in the vale of Siddim, 167. The king of this place defeated by Chedorlaomer, ibid. & ſeq.
Belus, and Agenor, the ſons of Neptune by Libya, reigned in Egypt, where he married the daughter of Nilus, 328, & ſeq.
Ben-hadad I. ſon to Tabrimon king of Damaſcus, tempted with large gifts by Aſa king of Judah, to make war upon Baaſha king of Iſrael, 275. His army takes all Cineroth, and the land of Naphtali; and in the end he extends his power to the city of Samaria, ibid.
Ben-hadad II. king of Damaſcus marches with a mighty parade, fade and a powerful army againſt Iſrael 275, & ſeq. His haughty behaviour towards Ahab, ibid. His proud meſſage to him variouſly interpreted, 276, (D). His army routed, and himſelf put to a ſhameful flight, 276. Flies to the city of Aphek, where 27000 of his men are cruſhed to death by the wall of the city, which fell on them, 277. How this extraordinary caſualty came to paſs, ibid (G). Throws himſelf upon Ahab's mercy, by whom he is kindly treated, and immediately reſtored to his liberty, 278. Keeps poſſeſſion of Ramoth-gilead, which was the ſubject of a freſh war. 279. Comes to an engagement with Ahab, and Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, whereof the victory was doubtful, 279. Detaches a ſtrong party to Dothan to ſeize Eliſha, 283. They are ſmitten with ſuch a deception of ſight by the prophet, that they ſuffer him to lead them into the city of Samaria, where they are hoſpitably entertained, which put a ſtop to this war, ibid. Ben-hadad marches again againſt Samaria, but, while he was on the point of taking the city, is ſeized with a panic fear, and raiſes the ſiege, ibid. & ſeq. Sends Hazael to conſult Eliſha about his indiſpoſition, who receives anſwer that he might recover, but would not, 284. Stifled by Hazael with a thick cloth dipt in water, 285. Worſhipped as a god by the Aſſyrians, under the name of Adad, or Ader, 255.

Ben-hadad III. Thrice defeated by Jehoaſh, the ſon of Jehoahaz king of Iſrael, loſes all his father wreſted from the Jews, 288. Probably ſubdued by, or made tributary to Jeroboam, ibid.

Ben-hadad, or Hadad, affected by all the kings of Syria, from Hadadezer, of Zobah, downwards, 288 (B). Ben-hadad ſignifies the ſon of Hadad, ibid.

Benjamin born, 412. Called firſt Benoni, or the ſon of my affliction, ibid. Kept with Jacob, while the others went into Egypt to buy corn, 423. Sent to Egypt to redeem Simeon, 424. Honoured by Joſeph above the reſt, 428. Joſeph's cup found in his ſack, ibid. And brought back to Joſeph, ibid. Jacob's bleſſing to him and his tribe, 448. How verified, ibid (S).

Bera, king of Sodom, routed by Chedorlaomer, 147.

Berachah the vale of, ſo called from the miraculous overthrow of the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites, 95, 107, 143.

Berothai and Betah, two cities of the kingdom of Zobah in Syria, plundered by David, 274.

Berytus, an antient city of Phœnice, ſaid to have been ſtanding in the days of Cronus, 299. Now called Barût, or Beroot, ibid. Deſcription of its ſituation, ibid (T).
Beth-el-Shechem, city in the land of Canaan, 161. The inhabitants ſubject to the king of Ai, join him againſt Joſhua, but are all cut off, 175. Fall afterwards by fraud, and their city is ſeized by the houſe of Joſeph, 181. Bethel, that is, the houſe of GOD, called formerly Luz, 395.
Bethſhean city, in the land of Canaan, 161.
Bethuel, the father of Rebekah according to ſome, 376 (D). More probably her brother, 381 (M).
Bezek, city of Canaan, the reſidence of Adonibezek, taken by the Iſraelites, and all who were within the walls put to the ſword, 180.
Bilhah, Leah's maid, bears to Jacob Dan and Naphtali, 398.
Birſha, king of Gomorrah, routed by Chedorlaomer, 167.
Bocchoris, king of Egypt, ſurnamed the wiſe, 39. The fourth Egyptian law-giver, ibid. Said to be taken by Sabbaco the Ethiopian, and burnt alive, ibid.
Boils upon men and beaſts, one of the Egyptian plagues, 515. Break out by Aaron's throwing a handful of the aſhes of the furnace into the air, ibid.
Botrys, in Phœnice, built by Ithobal, 342.
Bozrah, Boſor, Bazrah, names of a city of Edom, 132.
Burning, a puniſhment uſed among the Jews before Moſes, 418 (R).
Buſiris, king of Egypt, the ſecond and laſt of this name and line, founds the city of Thebes, 5.

C.

Cadmus, ſon of Agenor, 329. Sent by his father in queſt of Europa, his ſiſter, lands in Thrace, 329. Diſcovers there a gold mine in mount Pangæus, ibid. Adviſed by the oracle to leave Thrace, and paſs into Bœotia, ibid. Drives from thence the Hyantes, and founds a new kingdom, ibid. Builds a city, called from his own name Cadmea, ibid.
Calf, the golden, made by Aaron, probably a whole calf, in imitation of the Egyptian Apis, 645 (B).
Canaanites, deſcended from Canaan the ſon of Ham, 157. The ſeven primary nations of the Canaanites, ibid. Their country, 158, & ſeq. Canaanites, peculiarly ſo called, divided divided into two distinct bodies, 159. Inhabited two distinct divisions, the sea-side to the west, and the river-side to the east, 160. Those on the sea-side merchants, and known to the Greeks by the name of Phœnicians, ibid. Those who had an inland situation employed partly in pasturage, and partly in the exercise of arms, 159. Retained the true religion to the days of Abraham, 163. Fall into idolatry, ibid. They used human sacrifices, 164. Guilty of all manner of wickedness, ibid (I). They lived in subjection to limited princes or kings, 165. Probably their country peopled by Canaan and his descendants, upon the first dispersion after the flood, ibid. According to an antient tradition, their country originally belonged to the children of Shem, ibid. (K). Some of them said to have penetrated into Egypt, and possessed themselves of the Arabian side of the country, from whence they were driven by the Egyptians, which some will have to be the expulsion of the shepherds, 165, 166. Their whole land oppressed by a famine soon after the arrival of Abraham, 167. Joined with the Amalekites, repulse the Israelites attempting to enter their territories, 173. Employ Joshua six years, 179. Supposed in the end to have left their country in great numbers, and in their way to Afric to have seized on the lower Egypt, where they erected a monarchy, but were driven out, after having lorded it long over Egypt, 179. Little molested by the Israelites for nineteen or twenty years, ibid. Invaded again by the tribes of Israel, ibid. Those in Bezek all put to the sword, 180. Those of Bethel fall by fraud, and their city is seized by the house of Joseph, 181. Those of Beth-shean, Taanach, Dor, Ibleam, and Megiddo, preserve their several jurisdictions entire against the children of Manasseh, ibid. Those of Gezer cannot be expelled by the Ephraimites, ibid. Those of Kitron and Nahalol stand their ground, but submit to a tribute, ibid. Those of Accho, Zidon, Ahlab, Achzib, Helbah, Aphik, and Rehob, instead of being driven out by the tribe of Asher, impose what conditions on them they think proper, ibid. Those who held Beth-shemesh and Beth-anath are in the end made tributaries to the tribe of Naphtali, ibid. Some, left to prove Israel, maintain their ground against the Israelites to the time of David, 186. Reduced with the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites, to a state of slavery by Solomon, and employed in the heavy labour of carrying on his sumptuous works, which slavery was entailed upon them and their posterity, though admitted into the Jewish religion, 188. Whether ever blended with the Jews is uncertain, ibid. & (O). The Canaanites, properly ſo called, remained independent on the ſea-coaſt, and ſprang to a great height of fame, being comprehended under the famous appellation of Phœnicians, 188.

Caphtorim, the progenitors of the Philiſtines, 189.
Carpaſia, in the iſland of Cyprus, ſaid to have been built by Pygmalion, king of Tyre, 344.
Carthage the foundations of, laid by Dido, 342.
Caſiotis, part of Seleucis in Syria, 233. Likewiſe the name of a town in the ſaid country, ibid.
Caſluhim, the progenitors of the Philiſtines, 189. Whether the ſame with the Colchi, 189 (A), 201 (K).
Cathim, the laſt king of Egypt, of the race of the Amalekites, 73. Some oriental hiſtorians aſcribe to him the pyramids, ibid.
Cedars of Libanus, an account of them, 236, & ſeq.
Cephren, Cephrenes, or Chabryis, king of Egypt, 37. A tyrant, ibid. Erected the ſecond of the three moſt remarkable pyramids, 37.
Ceremonial Laws inſtituted, 555. Whether ſome of them were borrowed of the Egyptians, ibid. (Y). Some of them typical, others political, 556, (Y), & 559, (Z).
Cherethites, the name by which the Philiſtines were known in Egypt, 198, (G).
Chabryis. See Cephren.
Chalcidine, an inland province of Syria, 234.
Chalcis, the capital city of Chalcidine, 234.
Chaeldan language, the ſame with the Syriac, 268.
Chalybon, chief city of Chalybonitis in Syria, 234.
Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, invades the Zamzummims, 101. Takes and pillages Sodom and Gomorrah, 168.
Chemmis, or Chembes. See Cheops.
Chemoſh and Baal-peor, idols of the Moabites, 82. Whether the ſame idol, 84. Etymology of Chemoſh, 82, (E).
Cheops, Chemmis, or Chembes, king of Egypt, 36. Shuts up the temples, and forbids all public ſacrifices, ibid. Reduces his ſubjects to a ſtate of ſlavery, ibid. Said to have have been reduced ſo low as to have proſtituted his daughter, 36. His daughter ſaid to have built a ſmall pyramid, by obliging each of her gallants to contribute a ſtone towards the work, ib. & 37.
Cherinus. See Mycerinus.
Chrencris, thought by ſome to have been the Pharaoh that reigned when the Iſraelites went out of Egypt, 506 (B) Chryſorrhoas, now Barrady, a river of Syria, 235.
Cilix, ſon of Agenor, ſaid to have ſettled in Cilicia, and given his name to that country, 330.

Circum-

Circumciſion, whether firſt introduced into the world by the Egyptians, or the Hebrews, 367. Form of words uſed on that occaſion, 501, (A) Cœle-Syria, and Syria Cava, the ſame; a province of Syria, 234.
Colchi, whether the Caſluhim of Moſes, 201, (K).
Colchis, an Egyptian colony, 24.
Colpitis, Phœnice ſo called, 293. Etymology of the word, ibid. (A).
Combabus, the founder of the Galli, or eunuch-prieſts of the great Syrian goddeſs, his ſtory, 260.
Commagene, part of Syria, deſcribed, 233.
Commandments. See Decalogue. Tables.
Cozbi, daughter of Zur, prince of Midian, 119. Sent by her father, among the reſt, to debauch the Iſraelites, ibid. Is killed, ibid.
Cronus, or Baal, likely the Baal-beryth antiently worſhipped at Berytus, 305.
Cyprus, conquered firſt by Amaſis, king of Egypt, 56.
Cyrenæans, a colony of the Greeks, 49, &c. Drive out the Libyans, ibid. Gain a ſignal victory over the Egyptians, 50.
Cyrrheſtica, a province of Syria upon the Euphrates, 234.
Cyrrhus, or Cyrus, the capital city of Cyrrheſtica, 234.

D

DAGON or Siton, ſon of Uranus, worſhipped at Azotus as the moſt favourite god of the country, 199. The import of his name, ibid. The form he was worſhipped under, ibid. Opinions of the learned relating to him, ibid. (H).
Daluka, ſurnamed al Ajûz, or the old woman, queen of Egypt, ſaid by the oriental hiſtorians to have ſucceeded the Pharaoh who periſhed in the Red-ſea, and to have been the moſt expert woman of her time in magic, 73.
Damaſcus, now Sham, a city of Syria, 234. Seems to have been a republic in David's time, 254, & ſeq. Roſe upon the ruins of the kingdom of Zobah, 255. A famous altar to be ſeen there in former times, 266. Chronology of the kings of Damaſcus, 269, & ſeq. The kingdom founded by Rezon, in the latter part of Solomon's reign, 271. The inhabitants tranſplanted to Kir, and Damaſcus taken away from being a city, according to the prophecy, 290.

Dan, Jacob's firſt ſon by Bilhah, born, 398. Jacob's propheſy to him and his tribe, 444. How verified, ib. (L). Why compared by Jacob to a viper, 444, 445.
Darkneſs during three days, one of the plagues of Egypt, 518.
David king, routs, in ſeveral battles, Hadadezer king of Zobah in Syria, poſſeſſes himſelf of a great part of Syria, and makes moſt of their kings his tributaries, 273, &c. Invaded by the Philiſtines, routs them in four ſucceſſive battles, 225, &c. Is very near being killed by Iſhbibenob, 227. Makes the Philiſtines his tributaries, 228.
Debir, king of Eglon, joins Adonizedek, king of Jeruſalem, againſt the Gibeonites, 177. Is cut off by Joſhua in a miraculous manner, ibid. The city of Debir retaken by the Canaanites, 181.
Deborah, fourth judge of Iſrael, defeats Jabin king of Canaan, 185.
Decalogue, by whom delivered, 549, (X) The ſenſe of the commandment, where God is ſaid to puniſh the ſins of the fathers upon the children, &c. rectified, ibid. Jews join the firſt and ſecond commandment into one, and divide the laſt into two, ibid.
Dedan, a city of this name in Edom, of great dealings with Tyre, ſituate oppoſite to Teman, 132.
Delilah, Samſon in love with her, 211. She betrays him to the Philiſtines, ibid.
Denebah, or Dinhabah, the city in which Job is ſaid to have reigned, where ſituate, 483.
Derceto, goddeſs of the Philiſtines, 199, &c.
Dhalka, or Zalka, queen of Egypt, 72. In her reign, according to ſome writers, the Amalekites ſeize the kingdom, ibid.
Dido. See Eliſa.
Dinah, Jacob's daughter by Leah, born, 399. Raviſhed by Schechem the ſon of Hamor the Hivite, 410. This affront revenged by her brothers, Simeon and Levi, who treacherouſly put to the ſword all the males of Shechem, ibid.

E

EASTER. See Paſſover.
Edom, ſo called from the children of Edom, or Eſau, 130. Originally inhabited by a people called Horites, or Horim, 129. Called alſo the land of Seir, from one Seir an Horite, ibid. And Gablah, Gobal, and Gobolitis, ibid.

Etymology of the word, 130. Deſcription of the country, ibid. The antient kingdom of Edom loſes its name, which is transferred to that part of the land of Judæa, which a part of the Edomites had pitched upon, 146.
Edomites, ſo called from Edom, or Eſau, their progenitor, 123. Etymology of the word Edom, ibid. & ſeq. Deſcription of their country, 129, &c. The cities and remarkable places of Edom, 132. Their form of government, and character, 134. Several arts, ſciences, &c. cultivated, if not invented, among them, 135, & ſeq. At firſt right in their belief, but by degrees fall into idolatry, ibid. Are, with much ado, prevailed upon by Moſes, to grant the Iſraelites a paſſage through their territories, 140, & ſeq. Extended their territories, applied themſelves to trade and navigation, and made themſelves maſters of the Arabian gulph, 141. Defeated by David in the Valley of Salt, 142. Maſſacred by Joab for ſix months together, wherever they could be found, ibid. Are diſperſed, and eſcape, ſome to the Philiſtines, where they fortified Azoth, or Azotus; others to the Perſian gulph, ibid. & ſeq. Continue under the houſe of David, governed by deputies, till the days of Jehoſhaphat, 144. In the reign of Jehoram riſe up in arms, aſſaſſinate their viceroy, and make to themſelves a king, 145. Never afterwards annexed to the houſe of David, ibid. Suffer a ſignal overthrow from Amaziah king of Judah, 145. Their war with the Moabites, 145, &c. Become ſubject to the king of Babylon, ibid. Revenge the ſlaughter of their fore-fathers, by cutting off ſuch of the Jews as endeavoured to eſcape the captivity of Babylon, 146. Forced by inteſtine commotions to leave their own country, 146. Some ſettled in the empty land of Judæa. and thoſe, who ſtaid in Edom, joined the children of Nebajoth, and ever afterwards were called Nabatæans, ibid. A decree iſſued out againſt thoſe that had ſettled in Judæa, commanding them to deliver up to the Jews, all they had belonging to them, 147. After Alexander's days, under the power of the Seleucidæ, ibid. They war againſt Judas Maccabeus, under the conduct of Gorgias, their governor, but are worſted with great ſlaughter; their city Hebron is taken, with their other ſtrong holds, ibid. Conquered by John Hyrcanus, by whom they are forced to embrace the Jewiſh religion, and incorporated with that people, ibid.
Edrei, the reſidence of Og king of Baſhan, 174.
Eglon, king of Moab, ſtabbed by Ehud, ſecond judge of Iſrael, 92.

Egypt, divided into twelve kingdoms, and twelve of the chief Egyptian lords appointed over them, 42, & ſeq. Pſammitichus puts an end to the duodecemvirate, 44. Becomes a province of the Perſian empire, 61, 69. Submits to Alexander, ibid.

Egyptians, cauſe of their enmity to the Jews, 464, & ſeq. During a great famine ſell their lands and themſelves for corn, 435. And are tranſplanted from one end of the kingdom to the other, ibid. The fifth part of the product of their lands aſſigned by Joſeph to the crown, 435. Are reduced by the Perſians to the loweſt degree of ſubmiſſion, 60, & ſeq. Revolt, but are again ſubdued, 61. Revolt a ſecond time, and chuſe Inarus for their king, 62. Their king taken priſoner, and their country reduced to a ſtate of ſlavery, 63. Succeſſion of the Egyptian kings, according to the oriental hiſtorians, 69. Antediluvian kings, according to the ſame, 70. Egyptian plagues, 511, & ſeq. Their firſt-born ſlain by the deſtroying angel, 523.

Ehud, ſecond judge of Iſrael, ſtabs Eglon, king of Moab, and frees the Iſraelites from the yoke of that nation, 92. Whether that action juſtifiable, ibid. (R).

Ekron, corruptedly Accaron, a city of Paleſtine, 195. The famous idol of Baal-zebub worſhipped there. ibid.

Elah, king of Iſrael, lays ſiege to Gibbethon, a city of the Philiſtines, 229.

Elath, a ſeaport on the ſhore of the Arabian gulph, called alſo Eloth, Aela, Ailat, Elat, Elana, and now, by the Arabians, Ailah, 133. Taken from the Edomites by David, and re-taken by the Edomites, from the houſe of David, 134. Conquered to Syria by Hazael, 289, (D) Reſtored to the kingdom of Judah by Azariah, ibid. Conquered again by Rezin king of Syria, who planted there a colony, 288, (C).

Elbo iſland, how formed, 41.

Elbaſus, king of Berytus, 322. To him Sanchoniatho dedicated his hiſtory, ibid.

Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron, by Eliſheba, 500.

Eliſa, or Dido, her huſband Sichæus being murdered by her brother Pygmalion, king of Tyre, flies with all the treaſure of her deceaſed huſband to Afric, 342, & ſeq. Lays the foundations of Carthage, 343.

Eliſha the prophet, his interview with Naaman the Syrian, 280. Cures him of the leproſy, 281. Perſecuted by Ben-hadad, 283. Smites thoſe who are ſent to ſeize him with a deception of ſight, ibid. Conſulted by Ben-hadad concerning cerning his indiſpoſition, foretells that he would not live, and that Hazael would be king of Syria, 284, & ſeq.

Eliſheba, the ſiſter of Naaſſon, and wife of Aaron, 500.
Elon, in the Hebrew, not a plain, as it is commonly rendered, but an oak, 360, (G).
Elulæus, king of Tyre, reduces Gath, 344. Defends Tyre againſt Shalmaneſer, king of Aſſyria, ibid. His fleet diſperſes that of the Aſſyrians, ibid.
Emims, a great and powerful people, deſcendants of Ham, why ſo called by the Moabites, 85. Driven out by the Moabites, ibid.
Ennon, the ſuppoſed ſon of Job, 482.
Ephraim born, 422. Preſented with Manaſſeh to Jacob, who makes them two tribes of Iſrael, 437. Preferred by Jacob to his elder brother Manaſſeh, 439.
Ephron the Hittite, his generous behaviour towards Abraham, 171.
Er, Judah's ſon by his Canaanitiſh wife, 416. Cut off for his wickedneſs, ibid.
Erylus, king of Byblus, 332.
Eſau, called alſo Edom, progenitor of the Edomites, 123. Son of Iſaac by Rebekah, ibid. His early ſtrife with his twin-brother Jacob, ibid. & ſeq. Born with red hair all over him, ibid. (B). Sells his birth-right to Jacob for a meſs of pottage, 124. On this occaſion called Edom, which ſignifies red, the colour of the pottage which Jacob ſold him, ibid. In what his birth-right did conſiſt, 124. Marries among the daughters of Heth, ibid. Robbed of his father's bleſſing by Jacob, ibid. Goes over to Iſhmael, and takes to wife his daughter Mahalath, the ſiſter of Nebajoth, 127. Removes with his family to mount Seir, ib. The ſpot he occupied called from him the field of Edom, ib. His generous behaviour to his brother Jacob, on his return from Padan-aram, 127, 128. Goes to Mamre, and aſſiſts Jacob at the funeral of their deceaſed father, takes poſſeſſion of his inheritance, parts with his brother, and returns to Seir, 129. Marries Aholibamah, ibid. His character, 128, (H). His deſcendants dukes of Edom, etymology of his name, 390, (R).
Eſion-geber, a ſea-port in Edom, 133.
Etham, ſecond encampment of the Iſraelites, in departing out of Egypt, ſituate near the borders of Arabia deſerta, 528. Suppoſed to be the Buthee of Herodotus, ib. (O).
Eth-baal, ſee Ithobal.
Evi, king or duke of Midian, 118.

Europa, daughter of Agenor, (according to ſome of Phœnix) ſtolen by Jupiter, transformed into a bull, that is, in a ſhip named the Bull, and carried into Crete, 328, & ſeq.

F

FIRST-BORN of men, why to be conſecrated to God, and in what manner redeemed, 525. Firſt-born of the Egyptians killed by the deſtroying angel, 523.
Flies, one of the plagues of Egypt, 514.
Frogs ſwarms of, brought in by Moſes and the magicians, 513.

G

GAD, Jacob's firſt-born by Zilpah, 398. Jacob's prophecy to him, 445. How verified, ibid. (M).
Galeed, or Jegar-ſahadutha, etymology of the word, 404. A monument erected by Jacob and Laban, in memory of their covenant, ibid.
Galli, or eunuch-prieſts of the great Syrian goddeſs, 260. How the unnatural cuſtom of emaſculating themſelves was introduced, ibid. & ſeq. Ceremonies uſed at their funeral, 264, & ſeq. They uſed a woman's attire, and were wholly addicted to a feminine life, ibid.
Gath, a city of principal fame in Paleſtine, and the royal ſeat of the Philiſtines for ſome time, 195. Famous for Giants, or Anakims, who there fixed their abode, ibid. The inhabitants fall on the children of Ephraim, 207, & ſeq.
Gaus, an Egyptian admiral of the Perſian fleet, revolts from the Perſians, and joins Achoris, king of Egypt, 65. Is treacherouſly ſlain, ibid.
Gehazi, ſervant to Eliſha, takes the preſents of Naaman, whereupon the leproſy is entailed upon him and his poſterity, 282.
Geneſis and Job, ſuppoſed to have been writ by Moſes, during his retirement in Midian, 486, (R).
Genubath, ſon to Hadad, the fugitive king of Edom, by Tahpenes, the queen of Egypt's ſiſter, 144.
Geography, the firſt riſe of, 25.
Gerar, an antient city of the Philiſtines, and once the ſeat of their kings, 195.
Gergaſites, in what part of Canaan ſituated, 157. Gergaſites of Canaan probably fly into Afric, 182 (D).
Germanicia, a chief city of Comagene, 233.

Geroſtratus, king of Arad, 353. Served Darius againſt Alexander, but ſubmits to the conqueror, ibid.
Geſhur, a kingdom of Syria, more antient than that of Damaſcus, 271. Series of its kings, 270. Abraham ſaid by ſome to have reigned there, 271 (B). Their kings but petty princes, 292. Not allowed by Joſephus to have been kings, but only a family of note, ibid. (L). Allied to David, who married Maacah, daughter to Talmai, king of Geſhur, ibid. Tranſplanted by the Syrians, ibid.
Geſhurites, and Gezerites unite with the Amalekites againſt the Iſraelites, 155. What people meant by Geſhurites, ibid. (I).
Gezer, city of the Canaanites, taken by Pharaoh king of Egypt, and burnt, and the inhabitants put to the ſword, 187. Afterwards rebuilt by Solomon, 188.
Gezerites, allies of the Amalekites againſt the Iſraelites, 155. Some account of them, ibid. (I).
Gibbethon, a city of the Philiſtines, beſieged by Nadab, and after by Elah, kings of Iſrael, 229.
Gibeon, a city of the Hivites; the inhabitants cunningly perſuade Joſhua to make a league with them, 176. But are condemned to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, ibid. & ſeq. Beſieged by Adonizedek, king of Jeruſalem, and relieved by Joſhua, 177.
Glaſs, the firſt and beſt, ſaid to have been made with the ſand of Tyre, 300.
Gnephactus, king of Egypt, 39. Forbids all luxury, curſes Menes who firſt introduced it, and cauſes his curſe to be engraved on a pillar in the temple of Thebes, 39.
Goliath the Philiſtine, twelve foot and eight inches high, 220, (N) His armour, ibid. Challenges to a ſingle combat any one of the hoſt of Iſrael, 221, & ſeq. Killed by David. ibid.
Goliath's brother and ſons ſlain in ſingle combat by the Jewiſh chiefs, one having ſix fingers on each hand, and ſix toes on each foot, killed by Jonathan, David's brother, 227, & ſeq.
Goſhen, where Jacob and his family ſettled, after their going down into Egypt, 431. Its ſituation, ibid. (A).
Greeks ſettle in Egypt in the reign of Pſammitichus, 44. The firſt foreigners that were permitted to dwell in Egypt, ibid. Preſented with land near the city of Bubaſtis, in the Peluſian mouth of the Nile, ibid. Begin to be a conſiderable body in Egypt, in the reign of king Amaſis, 55.

H.

HADAD, the Horite, defeates the Midianites in the field of Moab, 113, 114, 137.
Hadad, king of the Edomites, his country being laid waſte by David, flies with many of his ſubjects to Pharaoh king of Egypt, where he marries the queen's ſiſter, 142. Proves a troubleſome neighbour to Solomon. 144. Eſtabliſhed himſelf probably in Syria, where the royal family bore the name of Hadad, ibid.
Hadadezer, or Haderezer, ſon of Rehob, the firſt king of Zobah in Syria, 273. Wars with advantage againſt the king of Hamath, ibid. But his good fortune leaves him in his wars againſt David, ibid. Reinforced by the Syrians of Damaſcus, ibid. Beaten out of the field, and David poſſeſſes himſelf of Damaſcene, ibid. Loſes his golden ſhields, ibid. His two cities Betah and Berothai plundered, ibid. Furniſhes Hanun king of Ammon with 20,000 men againſt David, ibid. & ſeq. Raiſes a powerful army againſt him, but is worſted with great ſlaughter, and his general killed, 274. Becomes tributary to David, ibid.
Hadar, king of the Horites, 138.
Hagar, forced to fly from Sarah. 365. Perſuaded by an angel to return and ſubmit, ibid. Brings forth a ſon called Iſhmael, ibid. Sent away with Iſhmael, 374.
Hail-ſtorms, and thunder, one of the Egyptian plagues, 515, & ſeq. The great miſchief done by them, 516.
Haman, called an Agagite, or Amalekite, 156.
Hamath, the kingdom denominated from Hamathi, one of the eleven ſons of Canaan, 253. Chronology of its kings, 270. Hamath, or Hamath the Great, placed by Joſephus to the north of the land of Canaan, but by Abûlfeda, who reigned there, upon the Orontes between Hems and Apamea, 291, (H). The account of their kings ſhort and uncertain, 290. Their kings, ibid. & ſeq.. This kingdom afterwards ſubject to the kings of Damaſcus, 292. And at laſt to the kings of Aſſyria, ibid.
Hamathites, conquered and tranſplanted by Sennacherib and Eſarhaddon, 293.
Hamor, king of Shechem, his ſubmiſſion to Jacob for the affront offered by his ſon to Jacob's daughter, 172.
Hanun, king of the Ammonites, 194. Treates the ambaſſadors of David like ſpies, ibid. Draws together a conſiderable army againſt David, 105. Is routed by Abiſhai, 106. Beſieged by Joab, in the capital of his kingdom, which which after two years ſiege is ſtormed by David in perſon, 107. Hanun is ſlain in the aſſault, ibid.

Hazael, ſent by Ben-hadad II. to conſult the prophet Eliſha, concerning his indiſpoſition, is told by the prophet, that he was to ſucceed Ben-hadad in the kingdom of Syria, and would prove a cruel and mercileſs perſecutor of the children of Iſrael, 284. Stifles his maſter Ben-hadad with a thick cloth dipped in water, and aſcends the throne, 285. Provoked by Joram king of Iſrael, and Ahaziah king of Judah, who poſſeſs themſelves of Ramoth-gilead, invades the kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael, 286. Subdues all that belonged to the kingdom of Iſrael, on the other ſide Jordan, putting all to the ſword, ibid. (Y). Wages war upon Jehoahaz, the ſon of Jehu, with great ſlaughter of the Iſraelites, ibid. Turns his arms againſt the kingdom of Judah, and makes himſelf maſter of Gath. ibid. Is diverted from attempting Jeruſalem by king Jehoaſh, who ſends him all the treaſures and rich moveables that had been dedicated by his father to ſacred uſes, ibid. & ſeq. Not long after detatches a party to beſiege Jeruſalem, which city they took and ſacked, ſlaying all the princes of the people, and ſending their ſpoils to Hazael, 287. Makes himſelf maſter of Elath on the Red-ſea, ibid. Dies and is deified, ibid. His ſtatue, and that of Ben-hadad, carried about in the days of Joſephus, ibid. (A) Hazor, city of Canaan, taken by the Iſraelites and burnt, 179. Rebuilt by Jabin II. Becomes again the royal ſeat, 181.

Hebron, the chief city of the Edomites, who ſettled in Judæa, 147. Taken and ſacked by Judas Maccabæus, ibid. From whence it took its name, 360, (G). Its antiquity, ibid. Why called Arbah, or Kirjath-Arbah, ibid. Retaken from the Canaanites, 181.

Heliopolis, now Balbek, a chief city of Cœle-Syria, 234.

Hercules, antiently repreſented no in form, 311, & ſeq. His temple had no images in it, ibid. Egyptians reckoned their Hercules to be 17,000 years older than their king Amaſis, 312 (R). He was the chief god of the Tyrians, under the name of Melcartus, 311. Why ſo called, ibid. (P). A great navigator, and the firſt who brought lead from the Caſſiterides, or iſlands of Britain, 312. (P). Said to have invented the ſhell-purple, by an accidental remark of a dog's mouth ſtained therewith, ibid. All the Phœnicians paid him great honours, 316. Ceremonies uſed in the worſhip of the Tyrian Hercules, ibid.

Hezekiah, king of Judah, over-runs the country of the Philiſtines, and forces ample contributions from them, 230.
Hezion, the ſecond king of Damaſcus, ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Rezon, 274. Lives at peace and amity with the kings of Judah and Iſrael, ibid.
Hierapolis, or the Holy City, or Magog, a city of Cyrrheſtica in Syria, 234. Famous for the temple of the great Syrian goddeſs, 257. A deſcription of the temple, ibid. Of idols, ſtatues, &c. in and about it, ibid. & ſeq. Its ſacred lake, oracle, riches of the temple, prieſts, ſacrifices, feſtivals, religious cuſtoms, laws, and traditions of the place, 258, & ſeq. Ceremonies uſed by ſuch as undertook pilgrimages to that city, 264.
Hiram, king of Tyre, called alſo Hieromus, Hieromenus, Irom, &c. Concludes an alliance with David, preſents him with cedar-trees, and ſends him workmen to build him a palace, 338. Congratulates Solomon on his acceſſion to the crown, ibid. Copy of Solomon's letter to him, and his anſwer, ibid. Proves very ſerviceable to Solomon, in the building of the temple and fitting out his fleet, 339. Improves Tyre, builds temples, and enriches them with donations to a very great value, 340. Said to have given his daughter in marriage to Solomon, by whom Solomon was induced to adore Aſhtaroth, the goddeſs of the Sidonians, 341. Dies, ibid.
Hittites, deſcendants of Ham, 157. One of the primary nations of the Canaanites, ibid. Dwelt about Hebron, 159 & ſeq. Their generous behaviour towards Abraham, 171. Some of them left to prove the Iſraelites, who dwelt in the land of Canaan in common with them, 182 & ſeq. But were reduced to a ſtate of ſlavery by Solomon, 188.
Hivites, inhabitants of Canaan, 159. Left to prove Iſrael, and lived in common with the Iſraelites, 182. But reduced to a ſtate of ſlavery by Solomon, 188.
Hobab, ſon of Jethro, ſerves the Iſraelites as a guide through the wilderneſs, 117.
Horam, king of Hebron, joins Adonizedek, king of Jeruſalem, againſt the Gibeonites, 177. Is cut off by Joſhua in a miraculous manner, ibid.
Homer, a Jewiſh meaſure, about five pints, 541.
Hor, mount in Edom, where Aaron died, 134.
Horites, the antient inhabitants of Edom, 129. Their forms of government, 134. Their kings, 137. Their monarchy broken into ſeveral little independent principalities, and governed by the poſterity of Eſau, and that of Seir, Seir, 138. Driven from the land of Seir by the posterity of Esau, 139.

Horeb mount, 543.
Horonaim, city of Moab, 81.
Hur, king or prince of Midian, 118.
Hur retires, with Moses and Aaron, to a hill, while the Israelites under the command of Joshua engage the Amalekites, 545. Holds up Moses's hands with Aaron, by which means the Israelites gain a complete victory, ibid. Thought to have been of the tribe of Judah, grandson of Esron, and grandfather of Bezaleel, ibid.
Husham, of the land of Temani, king of the Horites, 137.
Huz, the eldest son of Nahor by Milcah, supposed to have peopled and given name to the land of Huz, 376 (D).
Hycsos, or King-shepherds in Egypt. See Shepherds.

I.

JABESH besieged by Nahash, king of the Ammonites, 103. Relieved by Saul, ibid.
Jabin, king of Hazor, joins several princes against the Israelites, 178. Is routed by Joshua, ibid. Perishes with his city, ibid.
Jabin II. king of Canaan, rebuilds Hazor, and re-establishes the royal seat there, 183. Reduces the Israelites to a state of slavery, 184, & seq. His army under the command of Sisera routed, and his dominions forced from him by the children of Israel, 185. Himself slain, ibid. & 186, (K).
Jacob born, 388. Etymology of his name, 390, (R). His mother's favourite, ibid. Buys his brother's birth-right, 390. His ungenerous behaviour to his brother, 124, & 126. Sent to Padan-aram, 395. His vision near Luz, ibid. Serves seven years for Rachel, 396. Is cheated by Laban, ibid. Marries Rachel, ibid. Reuben born to him by Leah, 397. Simeon, Levi, and Judah, ibid. Dan and Naphtali born to him by Bilhah, 398. Gad and Asher by Zilpah, ibid. His stratagem of the speckled sheep, 400. Ill used by Laban, steals away from him, 401. Overtaken by Laban, 403. Enters into a covenant with him, 404. His vision of an host of angels, ibid. In memory of the vision, calls the place Mahanaim, ibid. Sends presents to Esau, 405. His wrestling with an angel, ibid. whether to be understood in a spiritual sense only, ibid. (D). Changes his name from Jacob to Israel, ibid. Meets his brother Esau, their interview, 407. Stops some time at Succoth, 408. Buys a piece of ground near near Shechem, 409. The treachery of his ſons, Simeon and Levi, towards the Shechemites, 410. Is bid to go and dwell at Bethel, 411. Orders all his family to bury all the idols they had brought from Padan-aram, and taken from the Shechemites, ibid. Benjamin born to him by Rachel, 412. Grieved for the inceſt of his ſon Reuben, ibid. Goes to Mamre to ſee his old father Iſaac, continues with him till his death, and buries him in the cave of Machpelah, ibid. Continues at Mamre, ibid. Joſeph his darling, ibid. Suppoſes his ſon Joſeph killed by a wild beaſt, his affliction, 414. Sends ten of his ſons to Egypt, to buy corn, 423. Keeps Benjamin with him, ibid. But is prevailed upon, the proviſion which the others had brought being ſpent, to part with him, 424, & ſeq. Sends preſents to Joſeph in Egypt, 425. What preſents, ibid. (Y). Is ſent for by Joſeph, 429. Goes down into Egypt, 430. Is preſented by Joſeph to Pharaoh, 431. A liſt of his children and grand children who went down with him into Egypt, 432. Difficulties in adjuſting the account of them, and reconciling it with ſome other places of ſcripture, 431, (B). His requeſt before his death, to Joſeph, 436. Makes Ephraim and Manaſſeh two tribes in Iſrael, 437. Prefers Ephraim, the younger, to Manaſſeh, in bleſſing them, 438. His laſt bleſſing to his twelve ſons, 439. What portion beſtowed on his ſon Joſeph, and how he is ſaid to have conquered it with his ſword and bow, 438, (D). Dies, being 147 years old, 449. Works aſcribed to him by the Jews, ibid. (V).

Jacob's well, well known by that name in our Saviour's time, 448, (T). Jacob's ford, ibid. An account of his funeral, 451.

Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, invites Siſera into her tent, and while he is aſleep, drives one of the tent nails into his temples, 185.

Jambres, mentioned by the apoſtle ; See Jannes.

James of Edeſſat invented ſeven new characters in the Syriac for all the Greek vowels, 267. Reſtores the Syriac to its antient purity, 267. The firſt that wrote a grammar in Syriac, ibid.

Jannes and Jambres, mentioned by the apoſtle, thought by ſome to have been the two quarrelling Jews, whoſe difference Moſes endeavoured to compoſe in Egypt, 479, (P). Jannes and Jambres, called by Pliny Jamne and Jotapha, were the magicians of Egypt who withſtood Moſes, 509, (E). Called by Pliny the heads and founders of magic, ibid. Celebrated in the Talmud under the names of Jochani chani and Mamri, ibid. Said in the Targum of Jonathan to have been the ſons of Balaam, ibid. Jannes and Jambres, an apocryphal book ſo entitled, 509, (E).

Japhia, king of Lachiſh, joins Adonizedek, king of Jeruſalem, againſt the Gibeonites, 177. Is cut off by Joſhua in a miraculous manner, ibid. & ſeq.
Jaſer, or Jazar, a city of the Ammonites, plundered and burnt by the Jews, 109.
Idumæa, mentioned by Pliny, Ptolemy, and Strabo, formerly the lot of the tribes of Simeon and Judah, 146.
Idumæans, the Edomites who ſettled in Judæa, ibid. Incorporated with the Jews, 147. In the firſt century of Chriſt the name of Idumæan loſt and diſuſed, ibid. But ſtill uſed among the Jews, 147, (Y).
Jebus city, in the land of Canaan, 160. Afterwards called Jeruſalem, ibid.
Jebuſites, inhabitants of Canaan, 159. Where their habitation was; aſſaulted by the Benjamites, but cannot be diſlodged, 181. Left to prove Iſrael, and live in common with the Iſraelites, 183. Hold their city or fortreſs of Zion till the time of David, 186. Beſieged by him, ibid. & ſeq. Who the lame and blind were whom they poſted for a defence, ibid. (L). Their fortreſs carried by ſtorm, 187. And the remnants of them reduced by Solomon to a ſtate of ſlavery, 188.
Jehoahaz, king of Iſrael, reduced to a low condition by Hazael, king of Syria, 287.
Jehoaſh, king of Judah, ſends Hazael all the treaſure and rich moveables, dedicated by his father to ſacred uſes, to divert him from the ſiege of Jeruſalem, 286, & ſeq. In his reign Jeruſalem taken and ſacked by the Syrians, ibid. & ſeq.
Jehoaſh, the ſon of Jehoahaz king of Iſrael, defeats in three ſucceſſive battles, Ben-hadad III. king of Syria, and recovers whatever Hazael had wreſted from Iſrael, 288.
Jehoram, king of Judah, in his reign the Philiſtines break into his kingdom, rifle his houſe, put to death all his family, except Athaliah and her ſon Ahaziah, 229.
Jehoſhaphat, king of Judah, the Philiſtines pay him a voluntary tribute, 229.
Jehovah, the ineffable name of God, never pronounced by the Jews, 488, (T). Only by their high-prieſt once a year, ibid. &c. A moſt horrid curſe in the Talmud againſt ſuch as ſhall dare to utter it, ibid. The pronunciation of it uncertain, ibid. The exceſſive and ſuperſtitious reſpect ſpect of the Jews for that word, ibid. The ſignification of it, ibid. Not unknown to the wiſer ſort of the Heathens, ibid. Why the word Jehovah is thought by ſome ineffable, ibid.

Jehovah Niſſi, (the Lord is my banner) an altar erected by Moſes, 546.

Jehu, invaded by Hazael king of Syria, loſes all that belonged to Iſrael on the other ſide Jordan, 286.

Jericho, a city of the land of Canaan, 161. Diſmantled by the ſhouts of the Iſraelites, taken and laid in aſhes, no ſoul being ſpared but the harlot Rahab, 174.

Jeruſalem, according to the Arabians, built by 12 neighbouring kings in honour of Melchizedek, or for his convenience, 169, (Q). When built, 30. Taken and ſacked by Hazael, king of Syria, in the reign of Jehoaſh, 286.

Jethro, prieſt or prince of the ſouthern Midianites, 114. Receives Moſes into his family, gives him his daughter, and entertains him in his family 18 years, 115. Conſents to part with Moſes and his daughter, and grand children, hearing that his ſon-in-law was commiſſioned by God, to lead the children of Iſrael out of bondage, ibid. Diſpute between his daughter and Moſes, ibid. Sets out to congratulate Moſes off his delivering the Iſraelites, and is received very officiouſly by him, 116. His prudent advice to Moſes, in the due regulation of government, 116. His ſon Hobab ſerves the Iſraelites as a guide in the wilderneſs, 117. His deſcendants, called Kenites, joined the children of Judah, and marched with them from Jericho into the wilderneſs of Judah, 118. Rewarded with a large piece of ground, upon the taking of Hebron, ibid. Spared by Saul, in the deſtruction of the Amalekites, ibid. Carried into captivity by the Aſſyrians, with the ten tribes of Iſrael, ibid.

Jews, not ſo called till after the Babyloniſh captivity, when the tribe of Judah became the moſt conſiderable, 355, (A). Their firſt name Hebrews, ibid. The etymology of this name, ibid. How long they dwelt in Egypt, 363, (K). The manner of living, religion, and other virtues of their forefathers impartially conſidered, 456, & ſeq. Their great increaſe in Egypt, 463. Their cruel bondage began under a king that knew not Joſeph, 465. What prompted him to ſuch violent meaſures againſt them, 468, (E). Divers opinions of the learned touching the king, who began to treat them ſo inhumanly, 466, (D). Commanded to drown all their male children, 472. Their burthens burthens increaſed after Moſes's ſoliciting for their departure, 506. Celebrate the paſſover the firſt time, 519. Depart out of Egypt under the conduct of Moſes, being to the number of 600,000 men able to bear arms, 524. March from Rameſes, Moſes's dwelling-place; to their firſt encampment at Succoth, 525. Their firſt-born conſecrated, and the law concerning it, ibid. They carry Joſeph's bones out of Egypt, ibid. Order of their march, 527. Arrive the ſecond day at Etham, near the borders of Arabia Deſerta, 428. Conducted by a pillar of light, in the night time, and by a column of ſmoke, in the day-time, 529. Commanded to wheel about from Etham towards Pi-hahiroth, between the Red-ſea and Migdol, ibid. And overtaken by the Egyptians, 530. Their conſternation, ibid. Moſes comforts them, ibid. The Red-ſea is divided, and they paſs through ſafe, while Pharaoh with his army is drowned, 531, & ſeq. Whether their paſſing was really miraculous or not, 531, (P). The place where they croſſed the Red-ſea uncertain, 537. Murmur for want of water, 539. A new murmur for want of proviſion, ibid. Manna promiſed and quails ſent in abundance, 540. Manna falls at ſome diſtance from the camp, 541. A new murmuring for want of water, 543. Which flows from a miraculous rock, 545. Whether this rock accompanied them, 544, (T). Attacked by the Amalekites, whom, under the command of Joſhua, they put to flight, while Moſes held up his hands to heaven, 545. March from Rephidim to the wilderneſs of Sinai, 548, & ſeq. They encamp near mount Sinai, ibid. Which appears covered with fire and ſmoke, 549. The decalogue delivered to Moſes, ibid. Some of their ceremonial laws inſtituted, 555. Whether they borrowed any of their ceremonies from the Egyptians, 556, (Y). Ratify the covenant with God, 560. Give him over, during his 40 days abode on mount Sinai, for loſt, 563. Set up a golden calf, and fall to worſhip it with burnt-ſacrifices, &c. ibid. Moſes returning from the mountain, commands the ſons of Levi to put 3000 of the delinquents to death, 567. They make a free-will offering of all their moſt precious things, for the making of the tabernacle, 570. The heads of each tribe appear before Moſes and Aaron, and preſent offerings to God, 571.

Inarus, king of Libya, choſen by the Egyptians for their king, 62. Defeats the Perſians, ibid. Is himſelf defeated and taken, 63. Is forced to raiſe the ſiege, 62. Carried priſoner to Suſa, and there crucified, 64.

Job, divers opinions of the learned relating to him, his book, and country, 137. According to the antient monuments of his genealogy received by Ariſteus, Philo, Polybiſtor, and ſeveral antient fathers, was the ſon of Zerah, and the fifth in deſcent from Abraham by Eſau, 482. His firſt name Jobab, ibid. Married an Arabian, by whom he had a ſon named Emnon, ibid. Reigned in Idumæa, ibid. The order of the kings that reigned before and after him, 483. Contemporary with Moſes, being both but three generations from Iſaac, ibid. Reigned in the city of Denebah, or Dinhabah, ibid. Lived before the miraculous deliverance of the Iſraelites, ibid. & ſeq. His book, 485. The three or four laſt verſes of it probably added afterwards, in order to make the hiſtory complete, ibid. In what language firſt writ, ibid. What gave birth to the notion of its being originally writ in Syriac, or Arabic, ibid. Cleared from the imputation of a modern critic, ibid. Several particulars added to his hiſtory by the Jews, ibid.

Jobab, the ſon of Zerah, or Bozrah king of the Horites, by ſome taken for the patient Job, 137. Whether this was Job's firſt name, 482.

Jobab, king of Madon, joins Jabin, king of Hazor, againſt the Iſraelites, 178. Is defeated, ibid.

Jochebed, daughter of Levi, aunt and wife of Amram, was the mother of Moſes, 472. Conceals Moſes for three months, but after expoſes him to the common fate, 474. Her ſon is ſaved, and delivered to her by Pharaoh's daughter to be educated, 475.

Joktheel, formerly Selah, ſo called by Amaziah, after having taken it from the Edomites, 145.

Jonathan, the ſon of Saul, accompanied by his armour-bearer, falls upon the Philiſtines, makes a conſiderable ſlaughter of them, and puts them in confuſion, 218. His death, 225.

Jonathan, the brother of David, kills a ſon of Goliath, who had ſix fingers upon each hand, and ſix toes upon each foot, 228.

Joram, king of Iſrael, confederates with Ahaziah, king of Judah, to take Ramoth-gilead from Hazael king of Syria, 286. Dangerouſly wounded in this expedition, ibid.

Joram, ſon of Toi king of Hamath, ſent by his father with coſtly preſents to David, 291.

Joſeph born, 339. The darling of his father Jacob, in regard of the excellencies both of his body and mind, 412. Hated by his brethren, 413. His two dreams, ibid. Sold, and carried down into Egypt, 414. Sold to Potiphar, 415. Solicited Solicited to an amour by his miſtreſs, ibid. His refuſal makes her accuſe him, ibid. Sent to priſon, 416. Dreams of two priſoners explained by him, 419. Interprets Pharaoh's two dreams, 420. Made maſter and over-ſeer of Pharaoh's houſe, and other honours heaped upon him, 421. The title of Zaphnath-paaneah given him, and the meaning of theſe words, ibid, (T). Marries the daughter of Potipherah, prieſt or prince of On, ibid. Has two children, Manaſſeh and Ephraim, by his wife Aſenath, 422. During the famine, his brothers come to him for corn, 423. His rough behaviour to them, ibid. Commands Simeon to be bound, ibid. Commands their money to be returned in the mouth of their ſacks, 424. His behaviour towards his brethren conſidered, 426. Orders his drinking-cup to be put into Benjamin's ſack, 428. And the pretended thief to be brought back to him, ibid. Diſcovers himſelf to his brethren, ibid. Sends for his father, 429. Receives and preſents him to Pharaoh, 431. During the great famine in Egypt, buys all the lands and perſons of the Egyptians for the king's uſe, 435. Settles, that the fifth part of all the product of their lands ſhould go to the king, ibid. Brings his two ſons Manaſſeh and Ephraim to Jacob, who makes them two tribes, in Iſrael, 437. Jacob's bleſſing to him, 447. Buries his father with great funeral pomp, 451. Treats his brethren with the ſame affection as in his father's life-time, 452. Finding his death approach, ſends for his brethren, aſſures them, that God, according to his promiſe, would bring their poſterity out of Egypt, into the land of Canaan, ibid. Charges them to lay his body in a coffin, to carry it away with them, and bury it in the ſpot of ground, which Jacob had given him by his laſt will, ibid. Dies about 60 years after his father, being 110 years old, ibid. Many particulars added by the Jewiſh rabbies to his life and death, 452, (W). Mohammed's hiſtory of him, 453, (X). His bones carried out of Egypt, 526.

Joſhua deputed by Moſes to make head againſt the Amalekites 545. Gains a ſignal victory by the prayers of Moſes, ibid. Ddefeats Jabin king of Hazor, and other confederate kings of Canaan, 178.

Irom, king of Tyre, 346.

Iſaac born, 373. Etymology of the word, 367, (Q). Mocked by Iſhmael, 374. How old when Abraham was ordered to offer him, 375 (B). Marries Rebekah, 381. Has two ſons, Eſau and Jacob, 388. Goes to Gerar, 391. Is envied by the people, ibid. Enters into a covenant with the people, ibid. Jacob gets his brother's bleſſing from him, 392.

392. & ſeq. Bleſſes alſo Eſau, 394. Dies and is buried by his two ſons in the cave of Machpelah, 412.
Iſhbi-benob, ſon of Goliath, very near killing David, 227.
Iſhmael born, 365. Etymology of his name, ibid. (L). The propheſy of his deſcendants verified in the ſeveral tribes of the Arabs, ibid. (M) Mocks Iſaac, 473. Is by Abraham ſent away with his mother Hagar, 474.
Iſraelites. See Jews.
Iſſachar, Jacob's fifth ſon by Leah born, 399. Jacob's bleſſing to him, and propheſy, 443. How verified, ibid. (K).
Ithobal, ſon of the chief-prieſt of the goddeſs Aſtarte, murders Phelles king of Tyre, and ſeizes on the throne, 341. Called Eth-baal in ſcripture, and ſtiled king of the Sidonians, ibid. Builds Botrys in Phœnice, and Auzates in Afric, ibid. Marries his daughter Jezebel to Ahab, 342.
Ithobal II. king of Tyre, 345. In his time Tyre taken and razed by Nebuchadnezzar, ibid. Slain in this war, ibid.
Judah, Jacob's fourth ſon by Leah born, 397. Perſuades his brethren to ſell Joſeph to the Iſhmaelites, 414. Marries the daughter of a Canaanite, by whom he has three ſons, 416. Deceived by a ſtratagem of Tamar, has two children by her, Pharez and Zarah, 418, & ſeq. Orders her to be burnt, but afterwards pardons her, ibid. Jacob's laſt bleſſing to him, The ſceptre ſhall not depart from Judah, &c. explained, 441, (G).
Judith, the daughter of Beeri, Eſau's firſt wife, called by Moſes, Adah, the daughter of Elon the Hittite, when he ſpeaks of the poſterity Eſau had by her, 396, (X).

K.

KABUS, king of Egypt, ſuppoſed by ſome oriental hiſtorians to be the Pharaoh of Moſes, 73.
Kadeſh and Shur, the names of two deſerts, 572, (U).
Kadmonites, why called children of the eaſt, 161, (E).
Kelkeli, king of Egypt, ſaid to have been the firſt who introduced the uſe of magic, 71.
Kenites, the deſcendants of Jethro, 118. March with the children of Judah, ibid. Rewarded by the Iſraelites with a large portion of ground, upon the taking of Hebron, ibid. Spared by Saul in the extirpation of the Amalekites, ibid. Carried away into captivity, with the ten tribes of Iſrael, by the Aſſyrians, ibid. Kenites, mentioned as a tribe of the Canaanites, ſeem to be a different people from the Kenites of of Jethro's family, 161, (E). Called by the Chaldee interpreters Schalmites, ibid. & 71.

Kenizzites, 161, (E).
Kibt, or Kût, probably Phût, one of the ſons of Ham, founds a monarchy in Egypt, according to the oriental hiſtorians, 77. Great part of that nation being, according to them, his deſcendants, ibid. & 71.
Kir-haraſeth, one of the principal cities of Moab, 96.

L.

LABAN, father to Rachel, 396. Cheats Jacob, and gives him Leah inſtead of Rachel, ibid. At laſt gives him Rachel, ibid. Obliges him, with his hard treatment, to ſteal away, 401. Purſues and overtakes him, 493. Searches for his gods, ibid. Makes a covenant with Jacob, 404. Returns, ibid.
Laodice, a Greek wife to Amaſis, king of Egypt, 55. A miracle on occaſion of her marriage, ibid.
Laodicea, a town of Seleucis on the Mediterranean, 233. Laodicea Cabioſa, or ad Libanum, the chief city of Laodicene in Syria, 234.
Laodicene, a province of Syria, 234.
Leah, daughter of Laban, given to Jacob inſtead of Rachel, 396. Bears to Jacob Reuben, 397. Simeon, Levi, and Judah, ibid. And Iſſachar, 399. And Zebulun, and a daughter called Dinah, ibid.
Levi, Jacob's third ſon by Leah, born, 397. Jacob's propheſy againſt the tribes of Levi and Simeon, 440. How fulfilled, ibid. (F). The ſons of Levi join Moſes, and kill 3000 of the Iſraelites, while they were worſhipping the golden calf, 567. This zeal procures them the Levitical prieſthood, entitling them to the tenths of all kinds of beaſts, fruits, and grain in Iſrael, ibid.
Libanus, an account of its cedars, 236.
Lice duſt turned into, by the rod of Moſes, 513. Thought by ſome to have been gnats, ibid. The magicians not able to imitate this miracle, ibid.
Locuſts, one of the plagues of Egypt, 517.
Lot, ſon of Haran, brother of Abraham, after his father's death is brought by his grandfather Terah from Ur of the Chaldees to Haran, in Meſopotamia, 75. Is adopted by Abraham, and carried into Canaan, ibid. Abraham and Lot part, ibid. Lot chooſes the plain of Jordan and dwells in Sodom, 76. Aſſiſts the Sodomites againſt Chedorlaomer, but is taken by the enemy and reſcued by Abraham, ibid.

Warned by two angels to abandon Sodom, ibid. Retires to Bela or Zoar, 78. His wife changed into a pillar of ſalt, ibid. What her crime was, ibid, (C). Various opinions relating to it, ibid. Lot retires with his daughters to the eaſt-ſide of the Dead-ſea, and dwells in a cave, 79. His inceſtuous commerce with his daughters, 80. The eldeſt daughter's ſon named Moab, that is, of a father, and was the progenitor of the Moabites, ibid. The youngeſt daughter's ſon named Ammon, or Ben-ammi, that is, the ſon of my people, the progenitor of the Ammonites, 97.
Luthith, city of Moab, 81.
Luz. See Bethel.

M.

MACHPELAH the cave of, purchaſed by Abraham, 379. Etymology of the word, ibid. (G). Sarah buried there, ibid. And Abraham, 383. And Iſaac, 412.
Magic, Moſes, Jamne and Jotapha, ſaid by Pliny to have been the heads and founders of it, 510, (E).
Magicians of Egypt imitate the greateſt part of Moſes's miracles, 509, & ſeq. Who theſe magicians were, by what power they performed theſe wonders, and why they came ſhort of ſome of thoſe of Moſes, 510, (E).
Magog, a city of Cyrrheſtica in Syria, 234.
Mahalath, daughter of Iſhmael, one of Eſau's wives, 127, Called Bathſhemath by Moſes, when he ſpeaks of the poſterity of Eſau by her 396, (X).
Mahanaim, or two camps, the place where Jacob ſaw, in his dream, an hoſt of angels, 404.
Majuma, the port of Gaza, called by Conſtantine Conſtantia, in honour of his ſon Conſtantius, and by Julian, in hatred of the name, the port of Gaza, 192.
Mamre communicates his name to the whole country, 361. Oak of Mamre, 360, (G).
Manaſſeh born, 422. He and Ephraim preſented to Jacob, who makes them two tribes in Iſrael, 437.
Mandrakes, brought home by Reuben, what meant by, 398, & (Y).
Manna promiſed the Iſraelites, 540. Falls at ſome diſtance from the camp, 541. Why called Man or Manna, ibid. & (R). The quantity that was to be gathered preſcribed by Moſes, ibid. That which was gathered on Friday laſted two days, 542. Had nothing common with what we now call manna, and is to be ſeen in great plenty in the deſerts of Arabia, 543, (S). Proofs of its being miraculous, 542.

542. Moſes ordered to preſerve a homer full of it in a veſſel, to be afterwards depoſited in the ark of the covenant, 542, & 543.
Marah, ſo called in memory of the bitter waters, 539. The Jews encamped there on their march to Canaan, ibid.
Marna, Marnas, or Marnaſh, an idol of the Philiſtines, worſhipped at Gaza, and ſaid to have migrated into Crete, 198.
Marus. See Mendes.
Maſſah, (tempting) the place where Moſes ſmote the rock to ſupply the murmuring Iſraelites with water, 544.
Melcartus. See Hercules.
Melchizedek, king of Salem, 168. By ſome thought to have been Shem, ibid. (P). Preſents Abraham with bread and wine, and receives from him tithes of all, 169, & 170. Divers opinions relating to him, 168, (P).
Melicarthus, or Melcartus, or Hercules, a Phœnician deity. See Hercules.
Mendes, or Marus, king of Egypt, 31. Builds a labyrinth, ibid.
Menes, ſaid to have been the firſt man who reigned in Egypt, 1. Diverted the courſe of the Nile, built the city of Memphis, and its famous temple of Vulcan, 2, & 3. The firſt that inſtructed the Egyptians in religious matters, 3. Introduced luxury, ibid.
Mentor, the Rhodian commander of the Greek mercenaries in Egypt, goes over to the king of Perſia, 68. Betrays Sidon to the Perſians, 334.
Meon, whether the name of an idol, 83, (F).
Merbal, king of Tyre, 346.
Meribah, (contention) the place where Moſes ſmote the rock to ſupply the murmuring Iſraelites with water, 544.
Meſha, king of Moab, tributary to the Iſraelites, 93. Rebels, but is forced to ſhut himſelf up in the city of Kir-haraſeth 94. Offers his eldeſt ſon for a burnt-ſacrifice, ibid.
Meſr, king of Egypt, builds many cities, 71. Divides the kingdom among his ſons, ibid.
Metheg-ammah, the city of Gath, why ſo called 226, & (U).
Mettinus, king of Tyre, father to Pygmalion, Barca, Eliſa, and Anna, 342.
Midian, the fourth ſon of Abraham by Keturah, the progenitor of the Midianites, 110.
Midiann, or Madian two cities of the ſame name in the country of the Midianites, 111.
Midianites, confounded in the moſt early times with the Iſhmaelites, 110. Their religion, ibid. Their country a part of Arabia Petræa, ibid. Described, ibid. Their manner of life, 111. Had the use of writing very early, and, according to some, instructed Moses therein, 112. Those of the south part of Midian enlightened by a rational and sublime system of religion, 113. They war with Hadad the Horite, and are smitten by him in the field of Moab, 114. They purchase Joseph of his brethren, and sell him to Potiphar, ibid. Signalized themselves above all others in endeavouring to turn the children of Israel from God, 119. Are defeated by Phineas, their castles laid in ashes, and all of them, together with Balaam, put to the sword, 120. The loss of this branch supplied by another, who wage a cruel war against the Israelites, under the kings Zebah and Zalmunna, ibid. But are utterly routed by Gideon, with no other weapons for his men, than a ram's horn in one hand, and a light concealed in a pitcher in the other, 121, & seq. This downfal so great, that it is termed in scripture the day of Midian, 122. They were a famous nation many ages afterwards, but in the first century were blended with the Arabians, ibid.

Migdol, signifies a tower, 528, (O).

Milcah, wife to Nahor, 376, (D).

Minnith, a considerable city of the Ammonites, 98.

Miriam, Moses's sister, whether one of the two Jewish midwives mentioned in scripture, 473, (K). Offers to fetch Pharaoh's daughter an Hebrew nurse for Moses, 475. Calls her mother Jocabedh, ibid.

Moabites descended from Moab, the son of Lot by his eldest daughter, 75. Description of the country which they possest, 81. Governed by kings, used circumcision and imployed themselves mostly in pasturage and breeding of cattle, 82. The Israelites expressly forbidden to disturb them, ibid. Had once the knowledge of the true God. ibid. Their idol, ibid. They drive out the Emims but lose part of their acquisitions by the Amorites, 85; &c. Send their most beautiful women to the Israelitish camp to seduce the Israelites to idolatry, 90. Not admitted to intermarry with the Israelites for having hired Baalam to curse them, ibid. Invade Israel, seize the eastern parts of the country and exercise great tyranny over them for 18 years, 91. Defeated with great slaughter by Ehud, 92. Treat the parents flying to them with great hospitality, ibid. They enter into a confederacy against David when he came to the crown, who puts to the sword two thirds of them, and makes the rest his vassals and tributaries, ibid. Rebel against Ahaziah, but are routed with great slaughter by Jehoram

Jehoram, 93, & ſeq. Attempt to revenge their loſs on Jehoſhaphat in conjunction with other nations, but deſtroy one another, 94, & ſeq. Invade the Edomites and put to a cruel death their king, 95. A ſevere judgment denounced againſt them by the prophet Amos, ibid. Iſaiah foretells their deſtruction and his propheſy problaby fulfilled by Salmaneſer, king of Aſſyria, ibid. Entirely ſubdued by Nebuchadnezzar into whoſe hands their king was given, ibid.

Mæris, or Myris, king of Egypt, dug the famous lake which bore his name, 9.

Molech, or Moloch, the chief deity of the Ammonites, 99. Etymology of the word, ibid. Deſcription of his image, ibid. Some accounts of the learned concerning this idol, 100 (B). Superſtitions paid to him, ibid. Divers opipinions of the learned relating thereunto, ibid. (C). The meaning of the phraſe, that they made their ſons and daughters paſs through the fire, ibid.

Moriah mount, etymology of the word, 376, & (C). The ſame on which the temple was afterwards built by Solomon, ibid.

Moſes is born, 473. Concealed three months, but after expoſed to be drowned, according to the king's edict, 473, 474. But taken up by Pharaoh's daughter, who educated him as her own ſon, 475. Gives him the name of Moſes, ibid. Is delivered to his own mother, Jochebed, to be educated by her, ibid. Brought in due time to Pharaoh's daughter, who adopts him for her ſon, and has him brought up in all kinds of learning, 476. Prefers the reproachful name of Iſraelite to all the pomp and glory of Pharaoh's court, ibid. 477. Kills an Egyptian, ibid. Forty years of his abode in Egypt, how employed, ibid. (O). Reproached with the murder of the Egyptian by an Hebrew, is forced to fly into the land of Midian, 479. Received by Jethro, in whoſe family he continues forty years, 481. Suppoſed by ſome to have wrote the book of Job, during this interval, ibid. God appears to him at the end of forty years, in a burning buſh, 486. And commands him to return into Egypt, ibid. Why God was pleaſed to appear to him in that manner, ibid. (B). Who it was that appeared to him, ibid. (R). God pleaſed to anſwer his queſtion, a queſtion which he had formerly refuſed to anſwer Jacob, 489. Bids him tell the Iſraelites that I AM, &c. ſent him to them, 494. Commanded to bring his people out of bondage, 496. His doubts cleared by two miracles wrought in his preſence,

497. Nevertheleſs begs to be excuſed, 498. Obeys at laſt and leaves Midian, 499. God appears to him again, charging him to perform all the wonders he had ſhewn him, before the king of Egypt, and to demand the diſmiſſion of the people of Iſrael, 500. Smitten by an angel in the inn, 501. What the cauſe was of God's anger againſt him, ibid (A). Why he deferred ſo long the circumciſion of his ſon, 502 (A). Zipporah circumciſes the child, and Moſes is reſtored, 504. Joins his brother Aaron at mount Horeb, 505. Declares his commiſſion to the Iſraelites in Goſhen, and eſtabliſhes his credit among them with miracles, ibid. Delivers his meſſage to the king of Egypt, 506. Who, inſtead of complying with his demand, increaſes the burthens of the Iſraelites, ibid. Bid to go again to Pharaoh, 507. His firſt miracle before him; His rod turned into a ſerpent, 509. Second miracle; The waters turned into blood, 511. Third miracle; Of frogs, 513. Fourth miracle; Lice, ibid. Fifth miracle; Swarms of flies, 514. Sixth miracle; The cattle of the Egyptians killed by murrain, 515. Seventh miracle; Boils upon man and beaſt, ibid. Eighth miracle; Hail-ſtorms and thunder, 515. The great miſchief done by them, 517. Ninth miracle; Locuſts, ibid. Tenth miracle; Great darkneſs during three days, 518. Fables with which the Mohammedans have ſtuffed this part of Moſes's hiſtory; 511, (E). How long a time Moſes took in bringing all the plagues upon Egypt, 519, (H). Commands the Iſraelites to celebrate the paſſover, ibid. And to borrow what jewels, fine raiment and other precious things they could of the Egyptians, ibid. The laſt plague ſent on the Egyptians; Their firſt-born ſlain by the deſtroying angel, 523. Sent for by Pharaoh, and ordered to depart, 524. His firſt encampment at Succoth, 525. Conſecrates the firſt-born of men and beaſts, ibid. Second encampment at Etham, near the borders of Arabia Deſerta, 528. Commanded to direct his march towards Pi-hahiroth, where he encamps, 529. Purſued by Pharaoh, ibid. And overtaken. 530. Comforts the deſpairing Iſraelites, ibid. Divides the Red-ſea by ſtretching out his rod, 531. Which makes way for the Iſraelites to go through it as on dry land, ibid. Whether this was really miraculous or not, ibid. (P). His ſong for this their deliverance, 538. Commanded to preſerve an homer full of manna, to be depoſited in the ark of the covenant, as a witneſs to future ages, 542. Smites a rock with his rod, and water immediately guſhes out in plentiful ſtreams,

544. Smote the rock two different times, and in two different places, ibid, (T). Obtains a ſignal victory over the Amalekites, by holding up his hands in prayer, 545, & ſeq. Ordered to vow a laſting war againſt the Amalekites, till their very remembrance was quite blotted out, 546. By the advice of Jethro, appoints inferior judges, ſome over thouſands, ſome over hundreds, and ſome over tens, 547 Marches from Rephidim to the wilderneſs of Sinai, 547. Encamps near mount Sinai, 548. Goes up to mount Sinai, ibid. Which appeared covered with fire and ſmoke, 549. Commanded to go down again, give a ſtrict charge to the Iſraelites not to approach the mountain, and bring up his brother Aaron with him, ibid. The decalogue delivered, ibid. Commanded to write the commandments on two tables of ſtone, ibid. Goes up into the mountain again, where ſome ceremonial laws were added to the moral ones, 556. Ratifies the covenant between God and the people, 560. Takes ſeventy of the elders up towards the mountain, and ſtays forty days, 561. Goes himſelf into the cloud, ibid. Receives the two tables of ſtone, ibid. Given over by the people for loſt, 563. Comes down from the mount, 565. His great concern in finding the Iſraelites worſhipping the golden calf, ibid. Breaks the two tables, and upbraids his puſillanimous brother in the ſtrongeſt terms, ibid. Deſtroys the idol, cauſes it to be ground into powder, and caſt into water, of which he made afterwards the people to drink, 566. Orders the ſons of Levi to puniſh with immediate death 3000 of the delinquents, 567. Returns to the mount, and obtains not only pardon for his people, but a renewal of God's former promiſes, ibid. & ſeq. Stays on the mountain forty days and nights, during which he neither eat nor drank, 569. Comes down with ſuch a luſtre in his face, that the people could not intenſely behold it, 570. Commands the people to bring a free-will-offering of all ſorts of materials for the tabernacle, ibid. The tabernacle made and ſet up at the foot of mount Sinai, 571.

Murrain, one of the plagues of Egypt, 515.

Mycerinus, the ſon of Cheops, and king of Egypt, 37. His character, ibid. Buries his daughter in an extraordinary manner, ibid. The oracle declares him to be ſhort-lived, 38. Endeavours to convict the oracle of falſhood. ibid.

N.

NAAMAN, general of Ben-hadad, king of the Syrians, cured of a leproſy by the prophet Eliſha, 280. Renounces idolatry, 281. Entreats the prophet to grant him two mule-loads of earth, probably to raiſe an altar, ibid. Said to have founded an hoſpital for Gehazi, which is ſtill extant at Damaſcus, ibid. (M).

Nahor, Abraham's brother, 376. His iſſue, ibid. (D).

Nadab, the ſon of Aaron, by Eliſheba the daughter of Amminadab, 500. Solemnly conſecrated prieſt with his brother Abihu, 571.

Nadab, king of Iſrael, lays ſiege to Gibbethon, a city of the Philiſtines, 229.

Nahaſh, king of the Ammonites, 103. Wages war with the Iſraelites at firſt with good ſucceſs, ibid. But his army is entirely routed and diſperſed by Saul, ibid. Proved kind to David 104.

Nakraïs, or Bakraïs, the firſt antediluvian king of Egypt, according to the oriental hiſtorians, 70.

Naphtali, Jacob's ſecond ſon by Bilhah, born, 398. Jacob's propheſy to him, 446. How verified, ibid. (O).

Narbal, king of Arad, 353.

Nebo, an idol of the Babylonians, 84. A town of the ſame name in the dominions of Moab, ibid. Alſo a part of mount Abarim, in the ſame tract ſo called, ibid.

Nebuchadnezzar, king of Aſſyria, takes Tyre, after a ſiege of 13 years, razes it to the ground, and puts all the inhabitants to the ſword, 345, & ſeq.

Nebuzaradan, puts all Ammon to fire and ſword, and carries away king Baalis, and moſt of the nobles into captivity, 109.

Nechus, king of Egypt, ſon and ſucceſſor to Pſammitichus, 46. The Pharaoh Necho of ſcripture, ibid. Attempts to cut a canal from the Nile to the Red-ſea, but is warned by an oracle to deſiſt, ibid. His expeditions by ſea, ibid. Fits out two fleets, ibid. Marches againſt the king of Aſſyria, ibid. Defeats Joſiah king of Judah, who oppoſed him in his march, 47. Routs the Aſſyrians, and takes the city of Carchemiſh, ibid. Sends Jehoahaz king of Judah in chains to Egypt, ibid. Makes Eliakim king over Judah, impoſing on him a tribute, ibid. Is defeated by Nebuchadnezzar, and loſes all Syria and Judæa, 48. Dies, ibid.

Nectanebes, king of Egypt, the firſt of the Sebennytic race, 65. Defends Egypt againſt the Perſians, 66. Dies, ibid.

Nectanebus, king of Egypt, 67: His ſubjects rebel againſt him, ibid. But are vanquiſhed, ibid. He is joined by the Sidonians, Phœnicians, and Cypriots, againſt the Perſians, ibid. Is invaded by the Perſians, 68. Abandons the kingdom to them, and flies into Æthiopia, 69. He was the laſt Egyptian that ever governed Egypt, ibid.

Nephereus, king of Egypt, 64.

Nepherotes, king of Egypt, and the laſt of the Mendeſian race, 65.

Nile, firſt called Ægyptus, but afterwards took its name from king Nilus, who made it univerſally ſerviceable, 36.

Nilus, king of Egygt, 36.

Nitetis, daughter of Apries king of Egypt, 57.

Nitocris, queen of Memphis, ſucceeds her brother, 8: To revenge his death, puts many of the Egyptians to death, ibid. She was by birth an Ethiopian, 4.

O:

OCHUS, king of Perſia, brings all Phœnice under the the Perſian yoke, 334, & ſeq. His cruelty to the Sidonians, ibid.

Og, king of Baſhan, reckoned a king of the Amorites, 174: The laſt king of the race of the giants of Rephaim, 342. (E), & 161 (E), & 174. Eſpouſes the cauſe of Sihon the Amorite, and attempts to ſtop the progreſs of Moſes and his people. ibid. Falls in battle, and his kingdom is transferred to the Iſraelites, ibid.

On, Heliopolis once ſo called, and by Ptolemy Onium, 421, (U).

Onan, Judah's ſon by the Canaanitiſh wife, 416. Marries Tamar, his brother's wife, ibid. His ſin and death, ibid. & ſeq.

Oreb, prince of Midian, 121. Defeated by Gideon, ibid. & ſeq. Killed by the Ephraimites, ibid.

Orontes, a river of Syria, 235. A fabulous tradition concerning its origin, ibid. (B).

Oſymandyas, king of Egypt, according to ſome, the ſame as Amenophis and Memnon, 5. (D). Reduced the rebellious Bactrians with an army of 400,000 foot, and 20,000 horſe, 6. His tomb, the moſt magnificent in Egypt, deſcribed, 6. His ſtatue with an inſcription, ibid.

P.

PALMYRA, the metropolis of Palmyrene in Syria, 234. Its name and ſituation, 246. Deſcription of its great court and temple, 247. Of its promiſcuous ruins, obeliſk, and two pillars, 249. The great piazza, 250. Banquetting houſe, ibid. Porphyry pillars, and palace, ibid. Marble pillars, and little temple, 251. The ſepulchres, 251, & ſeq.

Palmyrene, a province of Syria, 234.

Paris and Helen, their arrival in Egypt, 32.

Partamis, king of Egypt, 52.

Paſſover, or Eaſter, its firſt inſtitution, 520. The order and manner of it, 521. Unleavened bread, ibid.

Paſtors Egyptian. See Shepherds.

Patæci, the tutelar gods of ſea-faring men among the Phœnicians, 313. Carried about in the prows of their ſhips, ibid. & (T).

Pauſiris, reigns over the Egyptians, with the conſent of the Perſians, 64.

Pekah, king of Iſrael, enters into a league with Rezin king of Syria, againſt Ahaz king of Judah, 288. Beſieges Jeruſalem to no effect, ibid.

Peluſium, probably firſt founded by the Philiſtines, 202, (L).

Peniel, or the face of God, the place where Jacob wreſtled with the angel, 406.

Pentapolis, once the moſt beautiful part of the land of Canaan, 159.

Perizzites, inhabitants of Canaan, 160. Their habitation, ibid. The original ſignification of the word, ibid. (D). Invaded by the tribes of Simeon and Judah, and cut off, 180. Some left to prove Iſrael, and live in common with them, 183. But reduced by Solomon to a ſtate of ſlavery, 188.

Petra, a city of Edom, 132. See Selah. Placed by Joſephus under the juriſdiction of the Amalekites, 151, (D).

Phalis, king of Sidon, flouriſhed in the time of the Trojan war, 331. Honoured by Homer with the title of moſt illuſtrious, 332.

Phanes of Halicarnaſſus, betrays Amaſis king of Egypt, 58.

Pharez and Zarah born to Judah by Tamar, 419. Their ſtrange birth, ibid.

Pharaoh, in the Coptic tongue, ſignifies king, 72. An appellation pellation common to all the kings of Egypt, 359. Several etymologies of it, 359. Walid the firſt king who took that ſurname, 72. Pharaoh, ſurnamed al Araj, or the lame, king of Egypt, 74. Refuſes to deliver up to Nebuchadnezzar the Jews who had fled into Egypt, ibid. Is taken by him and hanged, ibid. Pharaoh's two dreams interpreted by Joſeph, 420. Raiſes him to the higheſt poſt in the kingdom, 421. Gives him the daughter of Potipherah to wife, ibid. & ſeq. Pharaoh's cruel orders to the Hebrew midwives, 468, &c. Several things that may in ſome meaſure authorize the cruel meaſures he took againſt the Iſraelites, 467. His cruel uſage of the Jews, 465. Several conjectures about his true crime, 466, (D). Commands the Iſraelites to drown all their male children, 472. His heart not hardned by GOD, 508, (D). The words of the ſcripture ought to have been tranſlated, that God ſuffered the heart of Pharaoh to be hardened, ibid. Diſmiſſes at laſt the Iſraelites, 524. Repents and purſues them, and is drowned in the Red-ſea, 537.

Pharpar and Abana, only ſtreams of the Chryſorrhoas, or Barrady, which waters Damaſcus, 236.

Phelles, or Helles, kills his brother Aſtarimus king of Tyre, and uſurps the throne, 341. Is murdered in the eighth month of his reign by Ithobal, ibid.

Pheron, alſo ſtiled Seſooſis, [Seſoſtris] II. ſucceeds his faher, 29. Is ſtruck blind, ibid. Recovers his ſight, and raiſes two obeliſks, ibid.

Phicol, the chief captain of Abimelech king of the Philiſtines, 204. Name probably peculiar to their chief miniſter, 207, (Q).

Philadelphia, antiently the metropolis of the Ammonites, 98.

Philiſtines, deſcended partly from the Caſluhim, and partly from the Caphtorim, 189. Egypt their firſt ſeat, 190. Migrate from Egypt, and ſeize the land which was afterwards called by their name, and known to the antient Greeks and Romans under the name of Paleſtine, ibid. Etymology of the word, ibid. & (B). Deſcription of the country, ibid. Gaza their chief city, 191. Its ſituation, ibid. Called Azza in Hebrew, and Aza by the Syrians, ibid. Why called Gaza, ibid. Called alſo Ione, and Minoa in later times, ibid. Deſcription of its preſent ruins, ibid. (C). Their other chief cities, 191, & ſeq. Their government monarchical, but limited, 195. All their kings honoured with the appellation of Abimelech, ibid.

ibid. An ariſtocracy introduced among them, and after that again kings called by the appellation of Achiſh, ibid. & 196. But of very ſmall power, ibid. A very warlike, ingenious, and induſtrious people, 196. Famous for their inveterate enmity againſt the Iſraelites, 197. The bow and arrow their invention, 198. Under their firſt kings of one religion with the Hebrews, ibid. In aftertimes erred into endleſs idolatries, ibid. Their idols, ibid. & ſeq. Came directly out of Egypt, and expelling the Avims, ſeized on their country, 201. From whence they borrowed their name, 202, (L). The obliging behaviour of their king Abimelech towards Abraham, 202, & ſeq. Abraham obliges himſelf by oath, that he and his poſterity ſhould live in love with his poſterity, ibid. Abimelech II. his kind behaviour towards Iſaac and Rebekah, 205. He renews with Iſaac the covenant made by his father with Abraham, 207. Gaza, Aſkelon and Ekron taken from them by the united tribes of Simeon and Judah, 208. But they get poſſeſſion again of the ſaid cities, ibid. Hold the Iſraelites under their yoke, till they are delivered by Shamgar, who kills 600 of them with an ox-goad, ibid. & ſeq. Suffer in common with the Iſraelites, by the incurſions, of Zebah and Zalmunna, kings of Midian, 208, & ſeq. Oppreſs the Iſraelites a ſecond time in conjunction with the Ammonites, in the days of Jephtha, ibid. A third time reduce the Iſraelites, and keep them under for 40 years, ibid. Suſtain great loſſes by Samſon, 209. Recover their loſs, make war upon the Iſraelites, kill 4000 of them, and put them to a precipitate flight, 212. Diſheartened at the arrival of the ark, but being by their chiefs inſpired with freſh courage, fall upon the Iſraelites, kill 30,000 of their foot, and take the ark, 213. Smitten with a ſudden plague, remove the ark from Aſhdod to Gath, from Gath to Ekron, but their affliction gathering ſtrength, ſend the ark back with a treſpaſs-offering, 214, & ſeq. The plague they were afflicted with, ibid. (D). Twenty years afterwards march out againſt the Iſraelites, but are frightened by a ſtorm of thunder and lightning, and ſlaughtered by the Hebrews, 217. In a few years return more formidable than ever, ravage the country of the Iſraelites, but are firſt put in diſorder by Jonathan, and after entirely routed by Saul, 218, & ſeq. Overthrown in a batle by David, 222. Oblige their king Achiſh to diſmiſs David from the army, 224. March againſt Saul, who is routed and killed with his three ſons, 225.

225. Make war upon David, ibid. By whom they are routed in four ſucceſſive battles, and made tributaries to him, 226, & ſeq. Many of their giants killed by the Iſraelites, 227. Being increaſed by the fugitive Edomites, apply themſelves to trade, 228, (B). Harraſſed by Nadab, king of Iſrael, 229. Pay a voluntary tribute to Jehoſhaphat king of Iſrael, ibid. Rebel againſt Jeboram, break into his kingdom, rifle his houſe, and put to death, all his family, except Athaliah and her ſon Abaziah, ibid. & ſeq. Invaded by Uzziah king of Judah, who diſmantles Gath, Jabneh, and Aſhdod, 230. War againſt Ahaz, reduce ſeveral of his cities, and ſettle themſelves in them, ibid. Their whole country over-run by Hezekiah, ibid. Subdued by the Aſſyrians, and their country become the ſeat of a long and obſtinate war between the Egyptians and the Aſſyrians, ibid. & ſeq. Tributaries to the great monarchies as they ſucceeded each other, ibid. They are ſaid to have planted the iſland of Crete, 199, (G). The foundation of this notion, ibid. Called in ſeveral places of ſcripture Cherethites, ibid. Two hundred of them killed by David for their fore-ſkins, 222.

Phineas, the ſon of Nadab, and grandſon of Aaron, 500.

Phœnice, from whence it borrowed its name, 293. Called alſo Chna, being a contraction of Canaan, ibid. Called alſo Rhabbothin and Colpitis, etymology of this name, ibid. Its ſituation, diviſion, and cities, 294, &c. Its ſoil and climate, 299. Natural curioſities, ibid. Artificial curioſities, 301.

Phœnicians, Canaanites by deſcent, 304. Their territory included ſeveral kingdoms, and they were governed by kings, ibid. &c. Had once a knowledge of the true God, whom they call Baal or Lord, ibid. But became blind idolaters, ibid. Their deities, 306. Their religion hardly different from that of the Egyptians, ibid. Their religious ceremonies, 314. Said by Herodotus to have uſed circumciſion, which is contradicted by Joſephus, 319. Abſtained from the fleſh of ſwine, ibid. Arithmetic and aſtronomy either took riſe among them, or were brought by them to a great perfection, 320. Moſt of the ſciences flowed from them into Greece, together with their letters, ibid. Their characters probably the ſame with the Samaritan, ibid. Their manufactures, ibid. Their trade and navigation, 321. Their ſhipping, 323. Series of the kings of the different kingdoms of Phœnice, 326, &c. Their kings from the antient fabulous hiſtory of the Greeks, 327. Enter into a confederacy to ſhake off the Perſian yoke, 333. Betrayed by Mentor the Rhodian, and Tennes king of Sidon, 334. And are again ſubdued by Ochus king of Perſia, 335.

Phœnicia, See Phœnice.

Phœnix, ſon of Agenor, ſuppoſed by the Greeks to have ſucceeded his father in the kingdom of Phœnice, and given his name to the country, 331. Said to have been the firſt that found out the ſcarlet colour, called therefore at firſt Phœnicius, ibid.

Puah, one of the chief Hebrew midwives in Egypt, See Shiprah.

Pieria, part of Seleucis, 233.

Pi-habiroth, the city of Heroum on the extreme part of the Arabic gulph, or the Phagroriopolis, placed by Strabo near ſame place, 528, (O).

Pillars, miraculous pillars of fire and ſmoke, which conducted the Iſraelites in their march, 529.

Piram, king of Jarmuth, joins Adonizedek, king of Jeruſalem, againſt the Gibeonites, 157. Is cut off by Joſhua in a miraculous manner, ibid. & ſeq.

Plagues of Egypt, 513, & ſeq. How long a time Moſes took in bringing all the plagues on Egypt, 519. (H).

Potiphar, Joſeph ſold to him, 415. His wife ſolicits Joſeph to an amour, ibid. His refuſal makes her accuſe him to Potiphar, who ſends him into the king's priſon, 416.

Potipherah, prince, or prieſt of On, his daughter married to Joſeph, 421.

Priaps, or Phalli, columns, or pillars, of an extraordinary height, in the porch of the great goddeſs of Syria at Hierapolis, 257. Twice a year a man went up to the top of them and remained there ſeven days, 263.

Proteus, or Cetes, king of Egypt, 31. The fable of Proteus whence derived, 32. In his reign Paris, and Helen arrive in Egypt, ibid. Has a ſumptuous temple erected to him at Memphis, ibid. Believed by ſome to be the Sethos of Manetho, the Typhon of the poets, Homer's Proteus, &c. 31, (K).

Pſammenitus, ſon of Amaſis, king of Egypt, 59. Is overthrown by Cambyſes, 60. Taken priſoner, loſes his kingdom, ibid. The particulars of his captivity, ibid. His death, 61.

Pſammis, king of Egypt, dies in an expedition againſt the Ethiopians, 48.

Pſammitichus, at firſt king of one of the 12 kingdoms into which Egypt was divided, 43. Occaſion of his falling out with with his collegues, ibid. Hires an army of Ionians, Carians, and Arabians, and reduces all Egypt, 44. He was of the tribe of Saïs, and ſon of Nechus, ibid. Gives great encouragement to the Greeks, ibid. His public buildings, ibid. Keeps an army of foreigners in pay, 45. For which the Egyptians, upwards of 200,000, deſert him, ibid. Opens the ports of Egypt to ſtrangers, ibid. Beſieges and takes Azotus in Syria, after a ſiege of 29 years, ibid. Prevails upon the Scythians ready to pour themſelves into Egypt, with preſents and entreaties, to march back, ibid. Dies, 45, &c.

Pſammitichus II. king of Egypt, 64. A barbarous and inhuman prince, ibid.

Pſammuthis king of Egypt, 65.

Pygmalion, king of Tyre, murders his uncle Sichæus, in hopes of ſeizing on his treaſures, but is diſappointed by his ſiſter Eliſa, the wife of Sichæus, 342. Said to have built the city of Carpaſia in the iſland of Cyprus, 344. Sends a rich donative to the temple of Hercules at Gades, ibid.

Q

QUAILS ſent to the Iſraelites, thought by ſome to have been locuſts, 540 (Q).

R

RAAMAH, or Rhegma, beſieged by Joab, and, after two years ſiege, ſtormed, plundered, and laid level with the ground, 107.

Rachel, daughter to Laban, Jacob ſerves Laban fourteen years for her, 396. Marries her, ibid. Being long barren, is at laſt brought to bed of a ſon, whom ſhe calls Joſeph, 399. Steals her father's gods, 401. See Teraphim. What induced her to it, ibid. (B). Brought to bed of Benjamin, 412. Dies and is buried in the way to Ephrath, ibid.

Raguel, the ſame as Jethro, 114, (F).

Rahab, ſpared in the deſtruction of Jericho, 174.

Rameſes, Moſes's dwelling-place in Egypt, 525. Not above threeſcore miles diſtant from the land of Canaan, ibid.

Rebah, king or prince of Midian, 118.

Rebekah, daughter of Bethuel the ſon of Nahor by Milcah, 376, (D). Given to Iſaac, 381. After having continued barren above nineteen years brings forth two ſons, Eſau and Jacob, 384, & ſeq. Favours Jacob, ibid. Procures Iſaac's bleſſing for him, 392, & ſeq. Sends him to Padan-Aram, 395.

Red-ſea, more properly called the Arabian gulph, 130, (I). Called by the Hebrews, Yam Suf, the weedy or flaggy ſea; by the Arabians, Bahr Alkolzum, or the ſea of Kolzum, a ſmall town at the northermoſt end of it, ibid. Why called the Erythrean or Red-ſea, ibid. The Erythrean or Red-ſea of the antients is the Indian ocean of our days, ibid.

Rehob, the firſt ſole king of Zobah, 270.

Rekem, king of Midian, 118.

Rephaim, men of a gigantic ſtature, placed in Baſhan, where Og, the laſt of their race, reigned, 161, (E). Thought by ſome to have been the Gephyræi, who followed Cadmus into Greece, ibid.

Rephidim, the place where Moſes, by ſmiting the rock, made waters guſh out, 543.

Reuben, Jacob's firſt ſon by Leah, born, 397. What meant by the mandrakes he brought home, 398, (Y). His inceſt, 412. Diſſuades his brethren from killing Joſeph, 414. Deſigns to ſave him out of the pit, and ſend him home to his father, ibid.

Reuel and Jethro the ſame perſon, 117, (K).

Rezin, laſt king of Syria, 288. Enters into a league with Pekah king of Iſrael, againſt Ahaz king of Judah, ibid. & ſeq. Beſieges Ahaz in Jeruſalem without effect, ibid. Marches into Edom, and makes himſelf maſter of Elath, ibid. Where he plants a colony, which ſubſiſted many years after the ſubverſion of the kingdom of Syria, 289, & ſeq. Invades the kingdom of Judah, and returns to Damaſcus loaded with ſpoils, 290. Ahaz ſtirs up Tiglath-pileſar, king of Aſſyria, againſt him, who kills him, and carries the inhabitants of Damaſcus away to Kir, ibid.

Rezon, firſt king of Damaſcus, revolts from Hadadezer, whoſe forces he commanded, 273. Seizes on Damaſcus, and founds that kingdom, 274.

Rhabbothin, Phœnice ſo called, 293. Etymology of the word, ibid. (A).

Rhampſinitus. See Rhemphis.

Rhemphis, or Rhampſinitus, king of Egypt, 33. Builds the weſtern portico to the temple of Vulcan, ibid. And a treaſure-houſe, which is plundered by the architect's two ſons, ibid. Said to have gone down to hell, 36.

Rhinocolura, a town built by Aſtiſanes king of Egypt, in the deſert between Syria and Egypt, 31. Why ſo called, ibid.
Rimmon, an idol of the Syrians, 255. Etymology of the word, ibid. (D).
Riyan, king of Egypt, 72. In his reign, according to the oriental writers, Joſeph was ſold into Egypt, ibid.
Rod Moſes's. See Moſes. Stories of the Jews concerning it, 499. Turned into a ſerpent, ſwallows thoſe of the Egyptians, 509.

S

SABBACO, the Ethiopian, breaks into Egypt with a powerful army, and forces king Anyſis to fly for ſhelter to the fens, 40. Thought to have been the So of ſcripture, ibid. Excited to the invaſion of Egypt by a dream, 41. Gives high proofs of his wiſdom and piety, ibid. His policy, ibid. Retires of his own accord into his own country, ibid.
Salatis, the firſt king ſet up in Egypt by the Shepherds, 4.
Salem, by Joſephus called Solyma, and, according to him, founded by Melchizedek, and called Jeruſalem, 169, (Q).
Salem, a place near the city of Shechem, in the land of Canaan, where Jacob bought a piece of land from Hamor, 408. Jacob builds an altar there, which he calls El Elohe Iſrael, or the mighty God of Iſrael, 409. Very likely the ſame place where Abraham had built one, after his firſt coming into the land of Canaan, ibid.
Salt the valley of, famed for the overthrow of the Edomites there, 134.
Samaria city of, beſieged by Ben-hadad king of Syria, and relieved by Ahab, 275. Again beſieged by the ſame, but miraculouſly delivered when upon the point of being taken, 283.
Samlah of Maſrekah, king of the Horites, 137. In his reign it is probably thought, that Eſau came into the country, called afterwards from him Edom, ibid.
Samoſata, a chief city of Commagene, 233.
Samſon, ſmitten with a damſel that dwelt at Timnath, 209. Propoſes a riddle to thirty young men appointed to wait on him, and kills thirty men of Aſkelon, whoſe garments he gives to the expoſitors of it, to make good his engagement, ibid. To revenge the affront of his father-in-law, ſends out three hundred foxes with firebrands at their tails, and and conſumes all the ſtanding corn, 210. Delivered up bound to the Philiſtines by the men of Judah, ib. Breaks his cords, and kills a thouſand of the Philiſtines with the jaw-bone of an aſs, ibid. Is ſhut up in Gaza, but takes the city gates and carries them to Hebron, ibid. Betrayed by Delilah, his hair cut off, his eyes put out, and condemned to grind in the priſon-houſe, 211. Kills himſelf and many thouſands of the Philiſtines by pulling down the houſe, 211, (X), & 212.

Sana, or Sa, king of Egypt, ſuppoſed to have built the city Sais, 71.

Saph, ſon of Goliath, ſlain by Sibbechai, 227.

Sarah, paſſes for Abraham's ſiſter, 357. The king of Egypt ſmitten with her, ſhews an extraordinary kindneſs to Abraham, ibid. Taken from Abraham by Abimelech, king of the Philiſtines, but upon a viſion from heaven reſtored to him, 202. A ſon promiſed her, 371. Prevails upon Abraham to ſend away Hagar and Iſhmael, 374. Firſt called Sarai, but that name changed into Sarah, 366, (P). Etymology of both, ibid. Her death, 377. Is buried in the cave of Machpelah, 379.

Sartamas, the Perſian governor of Egypt, 63.

Saſychis, king of Egypt, and the ſecond Egyptian legiſlator, 8.

Saul, the ſon of Kiſh, defeats the Philiſtines at Michmaſh, 219. Defeated by the Philiſtines, and killed, with his three ſons, 225.

Seir mount, the ſettlement of Eſau, 127.

Seir, a Horite, from him the mount and land of Seir had its name, 129. His deſcendants dukes in the land of Seir, while the deſcendants of Eſau governed, as dukes, the land of Edom, 137.

Selah, or Petra, city of Edom, called by ſome the chief place of the Nabatæans, the capital of Arabia, &c. 132. Taken by Amaziah and called Joktheel, 145.

Seleucia, a town in Seleucis, 133.

Seſoſtris, king of Egypt, 9. Whether the Seſac or Shiſhak of ſcripture, ibid. (H). Whether the Pharaoh who periſhed in the Red-ſea, ibid. His father gathers in all the boys in Egypt that were born on the ſame day with him, 21. Subdues the Arabians, and the greateſt part of Aſric, 22. Undertakes to conquer the whole world, ibid. Divides Egypt into 36 nomes, ibid. Inſtitutes a military order, 23. Conquers Æthiopia, ibid. Inſtitutes the maritime time clafs, or order, ibid. Over-runs Afia, and fome part of Europe, 24. Invades the Scythians, ibid. Suppofed to have planted a colony in Colchis, ibid. His pillars and ftatues, 25. Returns to Egypt, ibid. Is miraculoufly delivered from the murderous defigns of his brother, 26. His religious, civil, and military works, ibid. & feq. His infolence, 28. Lays violent hands on himfelf, ibid.

Seth, who intended by the children of Seth, in the prophefy of Balaam, 89, (N).

Sethon, prieft and king of Egypt, 41. Obtains a fignal and miraculous victory over the Affyrians, 42. A ftatue erected to him with a rat in one of his hands, in memory of the victory he obtained by their affiftance, ibid.

Shalmanefer, king of Affyria, keeps Tyre befieged for the fpace of five years, but not able to reduce it, 344.

Shamgar delivers the Ifraelites from the yoke of the Philiftines, 208. Kills 600 of them with an Ox-goad, ibid. This event not mentioned by Jofephus, ibid. (S).

Shaul of Rehoboth, king of the Horites, 137.

Shechem, fon of Hamor, deflowers Dinah the daughter of Jacob, 171. He and all his tribe confent to be circumcifed to pacify Jacob, 172. But the third day are all cut off by Simeon and Levi, ibid.

Shechem, the name of a city in the land of Canaan, 408.

Shemeber, king of Zeboim in the vale of Siddim, routed by Chedorlaomer, 167.

Shepherds the irruption of into Egypt, 4, &c. Believed to have been the Canaanites, 5, (B). Do their utmoft to root out the native Egyptians, 4. Called Hycfos, the etymology of the word, ibid. & feq. Held Egypt 511 years, ibid. Of what country, ibid. & (B). The time of their invafion, ibid. Driven out of Egypt, 30. Build the city of Jeruſalem, 30. Some miftake them for the Ifraelites, ibid. (I).

Sheſhai, one of the three fons of Anak, driven from Hebron by Caleb, 181.

Shiloh what meant by, in Jacob's famous prophecy to Judah, the ſceptre ſhall not depart from Judah, &c. 441, (G).

Shimron king of, joins Jabin king of Hazor againft the Ifraelites, and is defeated, 178.

Shiphrah and Puah, the two chief Hebrew midwives, ftrictly charged by Pharaoh to deftroy all the males, 469. Reproved by Pharaoh for their difobedience, and rewarded by God for their piety, 470.

Shoaib's cave, one of the ſtations in the pilgrimage from Egypt to Mecca, why ſo called, 122, (R). Formerly named Madyan, ibid.

Shobach general of the Aſſyrian forces againſt David, is routed and killed, 274.

Shur and Kadeſh, the names of two deſerts, 372, & (V).

Sichæus, a prieſt of Hercules, murdered by his nephew Pygmalion king of Tyre, 342.

Siddim vale of, its inhabitants invaded by Chedorlaomer king of Elam, and reduced to pay tribute, 166. The five kings of Siddim rebel againſt Chedorlaomer, but their armies are routed, their people either killed, carried away captives, or obliged to fly to the mountains, 167. The wickedneſs of the inhabitants of this vale puniſhed with fire and brimſtone, 170. How this deſtruction was effected, ibid. (T). See Pentapolis.

Sidon the metropolis of Phœnice, ſo called from Sidon the eldeſt ſon of Canaan, 295. Various opinions about the derivation of its name, ibid. (E). Its harbour deſcribed, ibid. Now called Seyde, 296. Antiquities to be ſeen there, 301. Series of its kings, 326. Hiſtory of its kings, 332. Betrayed by Tennes king of the country, and by Mentor the Rhodian, to Ochus king of Perſia, 334. Set on fire by the Sidonians, who conſume themſelves to the number of 40,000, and their city, 335. Ochus ſells the aſhes of the burnt city for a great ſum of money, ibid. Rebuilt by ſuch of the citizens as had been abſent, ibid. The citizens readily ſubmit to Alexander, ibid.

Sihon, the Amorite, drives the Ammonites from their antient habitation, 101. Invades the children of Moab, and diſpoſſeſſes them of their country on the other ſide Jordan and the Dead-ſea, 173. Refuſes Moſes a free paſſage through his country on his way to Canaan, but is defeated with a fatal overthrow, ibid.

Simeon, Jacob's ſecond ſon by Leah, born, 397. Kept by Joſeph in Egypt, 423. Jacob's propheſy againſt the tribes of Simeon and Levi, 440. How fulfilled, ibid. (F).

Simeonites utterly deſtroy and diſperſe the Amalekites, 156.

Siſera, general of the armies of Jabin king of Canaan, 184. Routed by Deborah and Barak, 185. And killed by Jael, ibid.

So, in ſcripture thought to be the ſame with Sabbaco, the Ethiopian king of Egypt, 40.

Sodom and Gomorrah taken and pillaged by Chedorlaomer king of Elam, 167.

Sophene. See Zobah.
Strato king of Sidon, 335. Deprived of his crown by Alexander, 336. A lewd prince, ibid.
Strato king of Tyre, 347. How he was aſſumed to the throne, ibid.
Stratonice built the famous temple of the great Syrian goddeſs at Hierapolis, 260. Her ſtory with relation to Combabus, ibid. & ſeq.
Succoth, or booths, the place where Jacob ſtopped, after his interview with Eſau, 408. Afterwards a city, its ſituation, ibid. The firſt encampment of the Iſraelites, on their departure from Egypt, 525. This different from that which Jacob called Succoth, when he came out of Meſopotamia, 528, (O). Called by Joſephus Latopolis, ibid. Thought by many to be the country called Troglodytis by the Red-ſea, ibid.
Suffetes, judges who governed Tyre for ſome years, 346. Etymology of the word, ibid. (C).
Syria, in Hebrew Aram, ſo named from Aram the youngeſt ſon of Shem, 232. Various opinions relating to the name of Syria, ibid. Its ſituation, 233. Its various diviſions, ibid. How divided under the Romans, 235. Its climate and fertility, ibid. Its rivers, ibid. Natural rarities, 236. And artificial, 239.
Syriac, became a diſtinct tongue ſo early as the days of Jacob, 266. Common to Meſopotamia, Chaldæa, and Aſſyria, ibid. The Syriac character ſuppoſed to have been in uſe above 300 years before the birth of Chriſt, ibid. Two ſorts of characters, the Eſtrangelo and Eſhito, ibid. Syriac alphabet, 267. Was deſtitute of vowels till the end of the eighth century, ibid. Reſtored to its antient purity by James of Edeſſa, the firſt who wrote a Syriac grammar, ibid. The Syriac tranſlations of the Old and New Teſtament equal to any other whatſoever, ibid.
Syrians, the firſt who inhabited Syria, deſcended partly from Shem, and partly from Ham, 253. Governed by heads of families, called kings, to the days of Saul, 254. And divided into ſeveral ſmall kingdoms, ibid. Were idolaters, but often changed their religion, 256, & ſeq. Their religious cuſtoms and traditions, 255, & ſeq. Their temper, learning, arts, language, 265. Their trade, 267. The chronology of the antient Syrians, 269, &c. The reigns of the antient king of Syria, 273, & ſeq. The kingdom of Syria abolished, according to the prophets, by Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, 290.

Syrian goddess, her temple at Hierapolis, 257. Description of this temple, the statues, sacred lake, oracle, &c. ibid. & seq. Her different sorts of priests, 260. Sacrifices, festivals, &c. performed in her temple at Hierapolis, 261, & seq.
Syrophœnicians, who, 294, (B).

T.

TABERNACLE, made and set up at the foot of mount Sinai, 571.
Tabir. See Nomes.
Tables of the decalogue, Jewish fables relating to them, 561, (A). The stone, where the commandments were written, given to Moses, ibid. How many they were, ibid. (A). Their shape, bigness, the matter they were made of, ibid. In what sense written by the finger of GOD, ibid. Fables of the Mohammedans touching this subject, 562, (A).
Tabrimon, the son of Hezion, king of Damascus, lives in peace and amity with the kings of Judah, and Israel, 275. Thought by some to have been subject to the Egyptians, ibid. (B).
Tachos, king of Egypt, 66. His impolitic conduct towards Agesilaus king of Sparta, ibid. Marches out of Egypt to attack the Persians in Phœnice, ibid. In his absence his subjects revolt, and oblige him to fly into Persia, 67.
Talmai, one of the three sons of Anak, driven from Hebron by Caleb, 181, (B).
Talmai, king of Geshur, 292. David marries Maacah his daughter, 282.
Tamar, Er's wife, is married to Onan. 416. Deceives Judah, and proves with child by him, 417. Condemned to be burnt, 418. But absolved, 419. Brings forth twins, Pharez and Zarah, ibid.
Tanus treacherously murdered by Psammitichus II. king of Egypt, 64.
Tahpenes, queen of Egypt, her sister, given in marriage to the fugitive Hadad king of Edom, 142.
Tartan, general of the Assyrians, takes Ashdod from the Philistines, whom he reduces, 230.

Teman,

Teman, a city of Edom, mentioned for the wiſdom, and counſel of its inhabitants, 132. The country round it called Temani, of which was Eliphaz one of Job's friends, ibid.

Tennes king of Sidon, 333. In his reign the Sidonians and Phœnicians enter into a conſpiracy with Nectanebes king of Egypt, and ſhake off the Perſian yoke, ibid. Joins Ochus king of Perſia againſt his own countrymen, and delivers Sidon into his hands, 334. Is put to death by Ochus, 335.

Terah, father of Abraham, dies in Haran, 355. Difficulties in the account of his age, ibid. (B).

Teraphim what meant by in Hebrew, 402, (B).

Tetragrammaton. See Jehovah.

Tetramneſtus, king of Sidon. 333. Aſſiſts Xerxes in his expedition againſt Greece with 300 gallies, ibid. Was one of the chief commanders of the Perſian navy, ibid.

Thammuz, or Adonis, ceremonies practiſed in his honour by the Phœnicians, and their origin, 316, & ſeq.

Thebes in Bœotia founded by Cadmus, and from him called Cadmea, 329. Enlarged by Amphion and Zethus, and by them called Thebes, in honour of Thebe their aunt, ibid.

Theophilus of Edeſſa, chief aſtrologer to Khalif al Mohdi, ſuppoſed to have introduced the uſe of vowels into the Syriac language, 267.

Timotheus, governor of the Ammonites, is often worſted by Judas Maccabæus, 109.

Tobiah, called the ſervant, at the head of the Arabians, Moabites and Samaritans, endeavours to prevent the rebuilding the temple of Jeruſalem, 109.

Toi, called by Joſephus Thœnus, king of Hamath in Syria, 291, & (K). Delivered by David from being ſubdued by Hadadezer king of Zobah, ſends his ſon Joram with a coſtly preſent to him. ibid.

Tripoli, city of Phœnice, derived its origin from the joint contribution of Sidon, Tyre, and Aradus, 299. At firſt three diſtinct cities, at a furlong diſtance from each other, and inhabited by three diſtinct colonies, ibid.

Tulis, king of Egypt, 72. In his reign Abraham, according to the orientals, came into Egypt, ibid.

Tyre, a city of Phœnice, its ſituation, 296. Ought to be diſtinguiſhed into three different cities in order of time, viz. Palæ-Tyrus, or Old Tyre, on the continent, Tyre on the iſland, and Tyre on the Peninſula, 296. Called alſo

Sor, and Sarra by the Latins, ibid. The etymology of its name, ibid. & (I). Four different places in Phœnice bearing the ſame name, ibid. (K). Tyre on the iſland, and old Tyre on the main, conſidered but as one city, 297, (M). Its walls 150 foot high, 298. Beſieged by Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria, 344. The ſiege raiſed, 345. Beſieged, taken after a 13 years ſiege, and razed by Nebuchadnezzar, ibid. The inhabitants retreat to the iſland, and build a new city 346. The royal dignity changed into that of temporary magiſtrates, called Suffetes, or judges, ibid. The royal dignity reſtored, ibid. The memorable ſiege and reduction of that city by Alexander the Great, 348. The city burnt down to the ground, and the inhabitants either put to the ſword, or enſlaved by the conqueror, 352. The city repeopled by Alexander, and Azelmic reſtored to the throne, ibid. Now called Sûr, 298. Its preſent abandoned ſituation, ibid. (O). Deſcription of the city and its parts, 296, & 297, (N). Antiquities to be ſeen there, 301, & ſeq. Particularly the wells, or ciſterns, called by the Turks Roſelayne, commonly Solomon's ciſterns, or wells, ibid. Series of the kings and judges of Tyre, 327. Hiſtory of its kings, 337, & ſeq.

Tyrians diſperſe, with 12 veſſels, the mighty fleet of the Aſſyrians, 344. Hold out a five years ſiege againſt Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria, 345. Tributary to the Aſſyrians for ſeventy years, 346. All murdered in one night by their ſlaves, except Strato, who was aſſumed to the crown, 347.

U.

UCHOREUS, king of Egypt, 8. Some aſcribe to him the building of Memphis, ibid. Tranſlates the imperial ſeat from Thebes to Memphis, ibid. Thought by Sir Iſaac Newton to be Mœris, ibid. (E).

Uz, the country of Job, lying towards Edom, 132. Uz, the land of, or the place where Job dwelt, thought to have been the city of Aſtaroth Kernaim, on the other ſide Jordan, 483.

Uzziah, king of Judah, diſmantles Gath, Jabneh, and Aſhdod, cities of the Philiſtines, and builds ſtrong towns among them, to keep them in ſubjection, 230.

W.

W.

WALID, the firſt king of Egypt, of the race of Amalek, 72. Takes the ſurname of Pharaoh, which, in the Coptic, ſignifies king, ibid.
Walid the ſecond, ſuppoſed to be the Pharaoh of Moſes, 73.
Wall built by Seſoſtris to prevent the incurſions of the Syrians and Arabians into Egypt, 27.
Waters turned into blood by Moſes, 511.

Z.

ZALMUNNA wages a cruel war againſt the Jews, at the head of the Midianites, Amalekites, and Arabians, 120. Defeated by Gideon, and killed, 121 & 122.
Zamzummims, people of a gigantic race, the antient inhabitants of Ammonitis, driven out by the Ammonites, 97.
Zaphir, Moſes's rod, ſo called by the Jews, 499, (Z). Their ſtories concerning it, ibid.
Zebah heads the Midianites, Amalekites, and Arabians againſt the Jews, and wages a cruel war, 120. Defeated by Gideon, and killed, 121 & 122.
Zebulun, Jacob's ſixth ſon by Leah born, 399. Jacob's bleſſing to him, 443. His lot anſwered exactly to Jacob's propheſy, ibid. (I).
Zeeb, prince of Midian, killed by the Ephraimites, 121.
Zerah, ſuppoſed to be the father of Job, 482.
Zeus Belus, or Baal, one of the Phœnician deities, 305.
Zidon. See Sidon.
Ziklag, the abode of David, taken and burnt by the Amalekites, 155.
Zilpah, Leah's maid, bears Jacob two ſons, Gad and Aſher, 398.
Zipporah, Jethro's daughter, and wife of Moſes, 115. Falls out with her huſband about circumciſing their child, and is by him ſent home to her relations, ibid. Moſes is reconciled to her, 116. Why called by Miriam and Aaron a Cuſhite or Ethiopian, 498, (Y). The cauſe of her falling out with Miriam, Moſes's ſiſter, ibid. Circumciſes circumciſes her child, 504. Comes to Moſes with her two children, and her father Jethro, 547.

Zoar king of, defeated by Chedorlaomer, 167.
Zobah, kingdom of, in Syria, 254. The kingdom of Damaſcus roſe upon its ruins, 255. The chronology of its kings, 270. Called alſo Sophene, ibid.
Zur, king of Midian, 118. Sends his own daughter among the reſt to debauch the Iſraelites, 119.

The End of the Second Volume.

A N

Univerſal HISTORY,

FROM THE

Earlieſt Account of Time to the Preſent:

COMPILED from

ORIGINAL AUTHORS;

And ILLUSTRATED with Maps, Cuts, Notes, Chronological and Other Tables.

VOL. III.

Ἱστορίας ἀρχαίας ἐξέρχεσθαι μὴ καταιδοῦ, ἐν ἀυταῖς γὰρ ἐυρήσεις ἀκόπως ἅπερ ἕτεροι συνῆξαν ἐγκόπως. Baſil. Imp. ad Leon. fil.

DUBLIN:

Printed by EDWARD BATE, for the EDITORS:

M, DCC, XLIV.

CONTENTS

OF

VOLUME III.

CHAP. VII.

SECT. II.

CONTINUATION of the History of the Jews, from their Egyptian Bondage, to their Entrance into the Land of Canaan, page 1

SECT. III.

The History of the Jews under Joshua, 59

SECT. IV.

A Description of the Land of Promise, 90

SECT. V.

The Religion, Government, Laws, Customs, Learning, Arts, and Commerce of the Jews, 149

SECT. VI.

The Jewish Chronology, from Abraham's Vocation to the Babylonish Captivity, 434

SECT.

CONTENTS.

SECT. VII.

The History of the Judges that governed Israel from the death of Joshua to Saul their first King, 443

SECT. VIII.

The History of the Jews under their Monarchical Government, 484

The Description at large of Solomon's Temple, according to the Sacred Historians, 560

A Description of Jerusalem, 589

AN

AN

Univerſal Hiſtory.

FROM THE

Earlieſt Account of Time to the Preſent.

CHAP. VII.

Continuation of the Hiſtory of the Jews to the Babyloniſh Captivity.

SECT. II.

Continuation of the Hiſtory of the Jews from the Egyptian Bondage, to their Entrance into the land of Canaan.

Aaron's ſons killed by fire from heaven.

AARON had not been long inſtalled in his office of high-prieſt, before he had the mortification of ſeeing his two ſons, Nadab and Abihu, ſtruck dead by fire from heaven, for preſuming to burn incenſe in the tabernacle with ſtrange fire, contrary to Moſes's command[y]; who ordered them to be carried forthwith out of the camp, and buried without any mourning or funeral pomp. Preſently after this he expreſly forbad Aaron, and all his ſucceſſors, to drink either wine or any intoxicating liquor, whenever they went into the tabernacle, leſt they ſhould incur the ſame fate with his two ſons; from which the Jews conclude reaſonably enough, that theſe two, being drunk when they went to burn incenſe, took ſome fire along with them [z], not conſidering, that there was an holy fire preſerved in the tabernacle for that purpoſe, from that which was miraculouſly fallen a little before, and had conſumed the victims upon the altar in the preſence of all the people [a].

[y] Levit. x. 1. 2, & ſeq.

The rebellion at Taberah.

IN the mean time Moſes (who obſerved how ſhort-lived their tractable diſpoſition was, whenever it ſhewed itſelf upon any extraordinary occaſion, and that they were juſt ready for another rebellion, becauſe he had made them take too long a march at their departure from the wilderneſs of Sinai) made all the haſte he could to intercede for them, and to appeaſe the divine anger which was already kindled, and had already ſhewed its effects in an extraordinary fire, which began to conſume the extremities of the camp. His prayer was heard, and the fire ceaſed, upon which account the place was called Taberah, or burning [*]. However, Moſes began to find, by this freſh inſtance of their ſtubbornneſs, that the burthen of government was like to prove ſtill too heavy for him, notwithſtanding his having thrown off a great part of it upon thoſe magiſtrates, which he had choſen at Jethro's advice. He was forced to preſent his complaint to GOD, who was now pleaſed to ſpeak to him from the mercy-ſeat; and

The great council of ſeventy appointed.

GOD, to eaſe him of this load of care, commanded him to make choice of ſeventy of the moſt conſiderable of the elders of Iſrael both for wiſdom and integrity, to whom he ſhould impart a portion of his ſpirit (G), and to erect them into [z] Vid. Chald. paraph. Vajiera. Rab. & al. [a] Levit. ix. ver. ult. [*] Num. xi. 1. & ſeq.

(G) This the Jews, judiciouſly enough, compare to a candle lighting a great number of others, without loſing any of its light. For Moſes had ſuch a rebellious crew to deal with, as would not permit him to part with the leaſt portion of his ſpirit, which he found all too little to govern them (42).

The Talmudiſts tell us moreover (43), that Moſes was greatly puzzled how to chooſe theſe ſeventy out of the twelve tribes. If he choſe ſix out of each, there would be two too many; if but five, there would be ten too few; and if he choſe ſix out of ſome, and five out of other tribes, he was ſure of cauſing a freſh murmuring, if not a rebellion. At length he bethought himſelf of the following expedient; he choſe ſix out of every tribe,

(42) Bammidbar. Rabbab. & Targ. Jonath. in loc. (43) Talm. Tract. Sanbedr. fol. 17. col. 1.

into a ſupreme court, that they might bear their ſhare of the burthen with him. Moſes made no delay to obey GOD's command, and it was not long before he found the advantage of it; for they were no ſooner removed from Taberah, but their very next encampment was ſignalized with a freſh inſurrection. A mixt multitude of the dregs of Egypt and other nations, who had followed the Iſraelites hitherto, began to murmur at the manna, and to regret their forſaking the garlic, onions, and fleſh-pots of Egypt for it, and ſoon infected the whole camp with a longing after ſome better food. Moſes's tent was beſet on all ſides with crouds, who came, and, in a tumultuous manner, demanded, that he ſhould provide them fleſh to eat inſtead of the manna, which their ſouls did begin to loath. In this extremity Moſes had recourſe to GOD, complained of the unreaſonableneſs of their demand, and that his tender care for them had only made them more ſtubborn and inflexible; adding, that death in any ſhape was leſs terrible to him, than the perſecutions to which he was continually expoſed.

A new murmuring for want of fleſh.

THIS expoſtulation had indeed ſomething that looked like deſpair in him, but yet GOD who ſaw and weighed the many provocations which extorted it from him, inſtead of a rebuke, did immediately promiſe a ſpeedy remedy. He commanded him to call together the ſeventy elders to the door of the tabernacle, and whilſt his glory drew the eyes of the whole camp, he was pleaſed to promiſe them, that he would ſend them ſuch a preſent ſupply of fleſh, as ſhould ſerve them, not for a day or two, but for a whole month, till it became as loathſome to them as the manna was. At the ſame time he inſpired the ſeventy elders with ſuch a ſhare of his ſpirit, that they all began to propheſy (H); and the ſame gift continued tribe, then wrote upon ſeventy tickets the word Elder, the other two he left blank, after which he made them draw lots, aſſuring them, that thoſe that drew the latter were ſet aſide by the Lord. However, concerning theſe two ſupernumerary ones, ſee the following note.

(H) Moſes acquaints us in the ſame chapter (44), that there remained two in the camp, viz. Eldad and Medad, who were of the number of thoſe that were written, but went not to the tabernacle, but propheſied in the camp; and that when word was brought of it to him, Joſhua would have had them ſilenced, but Moſes blamed him for his envying them the gift of propheſy, and wiſhed that GOD would rather impart it to all the people.

(44) Numb. xi. 26. & ſeq.

tinued with them as long as they lived. As for Moſes, though his faith had hitherto been unſhaken, yet the promiſe of ſuch a ſurprizing

From which words St. Jerom, and others after him, have thought them to have been two of the ſeventy, who had forbore going to the tabernacle out of modeſty (45): but had that been the caſe, there would have been no cauſe to wonder at their prophecying, nor for Joſhua to have forbad them; ſo that it is more likely, that theſe were the two that were ſet aſide by the lots, to whom nevertheleſs GOD imparted the ſpirit of prophecy, though they were not to have a ſeat in the great court of the ſeventy.

Some Jews affirm theſe two to have been brothers to Moſes by the mother's ſide; others, that Amram, Moſes's father, having repudiated her, took another wife, by whom he had theſe two ſons (46). There is a fragment of a ſpurious book quoted in Hermas (47) entitled the prophecies of Eldad and Medad, or Eldam and Medal. As for the Rabbies, they are divided about the purport of their prophecies, ſome thinking, that they foretold the deſtruction of Gog and Magog; others, the prodigious flight of the quails; and laſtly, others, Moſes's death in the wilderneſs, and Joſhua's ſucceeding him.

As to this aſſembly of the ſeventy elders, the Jews, and after them Grotius, and ſome other Chriſtians (48), have affirmed, that it was the ſame that became afterwards ſo famous under the name of Sanhedrin, to which even their kings and high-prieſts were ſubject. The Rabbies have left no ſtone unturned to prove that this Sanhedrin had conſtantly ſubſiſted ever ſince its firſt inſtitution by Moſes; and that the members of it always aſſembled themſelves before the tabernacle, wherever that was ſet up, either in the wilderneſs, or in the promiſed land, till the building of the temple by Solomon, who, they ſay, built a ſtately room or hall in the form of an amphitheatre, one half of which being within the temple, they were not permitted to ſit down in it, but only in the other, which was without it: they add further, that this ſupreme court was continued in Babylon during their captivity there, and that at their return it had the ſame place rebuilt in the ſecond temple, and ſo continued till its total extinction under the Romans. However, as they bring no authority for all theſe and many other particularities relating to that aſſembly, beſides their traditions, they are juſtly rejected by the far greater part of Chriſtians. Certain it is, that we do not find one word of ſuch an high court, either in (45) Ep. 127. Manſion 13. (46) Vid. Tradit. Hebr. in 1 Chronic. iv. 17. (47) Herm. lib. i. Viſion 2. c. 5. (48) Grot. Comm. paſſ. & de Jur. Bell. & Pac. c. 3. art. 20. Vid. Seld. de ſynedr. vet. Hebreor. lib. ii. c. 13. Lightfoot Hor. Hebr. & al.

the

a ſurprizing ſupply of fleſh appeared to him incredible, till he beheld the completion of it. The camp was at that time in Arabia Petræa, at a ſmall diſtance from the Red-ſea; from the other ſide of which a ſtrong wind brought ſuch infinite flocks of quails, that they not only covered the whole camp, but all the ground round about it for ſeveral miles. Theſe birds being tired with their long flight, and not able to ſoar more than two cubits above the ground, were eaſily caught by the people, and in ſuch quantities, that the leaſt that any one of them gathered was ten Homers (I). Their firſt care was to glut themſelves with them, after which they began to think how to preſerve the reſt from corrupting. But the times of Joſhua, of the Judges, or of their Kings; nor indeed even after the Babyloniſh captivity, till the time of the Maccabees. And therefore we ſhall forbear giving any further account of the Sanhedrin, till we come to the time in which it is generally ſuppoſed to have been ſet up. As for theſe ſeventy elders, it is likely, that they aſſiſted Moſes during their abode in the wilderneſs, and that there was an end of their aſſembly, as ſoon as they entered into the land of Canaan. Their other courts of judicature ſhall be mentioned in their proper place.

A ſupply of quails ſent, which laſted 30 days.

(I) Homer, or rather Chomer, is a meaſure which contains ten Baths, or five buſhels; the Jews think חומר, Chomer, to be the ſame with חמור, Chamor, an aſs, becauſe the letters are the ſame, and conſequently, that Chomer is an aſs's load (49). This prodigious quantity of quails has appeared ſo incredible to ſome learned interpreters, that they have choſen to render the word Chomer, an heap; but even this verſion of ten heaps to each perſon, or even to each family, in a camp that conſiſted of near three millions of ſouls, will appear ſtill too extraordinary, unleſs it be looked upon as altogether miraculous. However, becauſe we would not enlarge the miracle more than was needful, we have ventured to depart a little from our own and moſt other verſions; which render the words of Moſes as if the quails had lain two cubits, that is, above a yard thick upon the ground, which would be ſtill more prodigious: whereas the original may properly enough be rendered, that they flew no higher than two cubits from it; and this quantity was more than ſufficient to ſerve them a month, conſidering, that not only the camp, but all the ground for a days journey round it, was covered with it; and that fleſh was not then eaten in ſuch quantities, as it is now, eſpecially ſuch as that of quails, which is too delicious and ſurfeiting to be eaten at any ſuch rate.

(49) Vid. Munſt. in loc.

in

A freſh plague deſtroys a great number of the rebels.

in the midſt of their feaſting, GOD was pleaſed to ſmite a great number of them with a ſore diſeaſe, which carried them off with the meat, as it were, in their mouths: in memory of this ſevere puniſhment, for their unreaſonable luſt, the place was called Kibroth-hataavah, or the ſepulchres of concupiſcence; from whence they removed to Kadeſh-barneah, and thence to Hazeroth [b]. In this encampment Miriam, Moſes's ſiſter, having been ſmitten with leproſy, for ſome reflections which ſhe had caſt upon him, upon the account of his wife Zipporah, of which we have given ſome account in a former note †, Moſes, at her's and Aaron's requeſt, obtained a cure for her; yet ſo, that ſhe was to remain without the camp, as a polluted perſon, ſeven days [c], after which they removed again towards Kadeſh-barneah, in the wilderneſs of Paran. Here Moſes was commanded to chooſe twelve proper men, one out of each tribe, and to ſend them to ſearch the land of Canaan, among which were Joſhua and Caleb. Theſe twelve having received Moſes's directions to view the whole land, to examine the ſtrength of its cities and inhabitants, the nature and fertility of its ſoil, and the like, ſet out upon their progreſs, which they performed in forty days.

Miriam ſtruck with leproſy.

Twelve ſpies ſent to view the land.

AT their return from Rehob, which is at the foot of mount Libanus, they paſt through the valley of Eſhcol, ſo called from the great quantity of the largeſt grapes with which it abounded, and is ſtill to this day famed for, where they gathered a branch of a vine with a bunch of grapes of a prodigious ſize, which they threw over one of their ſtaves, and brought between two upon their ſhoulders by turns, to prevent the grapes being bruiſed.

BEING at length happily arrived at their camp, they went and made their report to Moſes and Aaron, in the preſence of the elders and of all the people. They begun indeed with extolling the richneſs of the land, and ſhewed them a ſpecimen of it in the bunch of grapes which they had brought with them, together with ſome of their fineſt pomegranates, figs, and other fruits; but as ſoon as they obſerved, that this account had inſpired them with a deſire of becoming the happy poſſeſſors of it by a ſpeedy conqueſt; ten of them immediately altered their note, and began to repreſent it as a thing impoſſible, by reaſon of the ſtrength of their fortified towns, and the bravery and gigantic ſtature of its inhabitants [d]. Joſhua and Caleb alone remained firm in their report; and the latter, who obſerved a kind of deſpair in the people's looks,

Ten of them bring an ill report.

[b] Numb. xi. † Vid. Vol. II. p. 498. note (Y).
[c] Numb. xii. [d] Ibid. xiii.

endeavoured

endeavoured in vain to encourage them, by aſſuring them, that ſuch a glorious enterprize was nothing leſs than poſſible. The people gave ſuch credit to the cowardly account of the other ten, that they cried out one and all, that they could never hope to overcome ſuch powerful and gigantic nations, in compariſon of whom they looked upon themſelves as mere graſs-hoppers and reptiles. Their murmuring grew to ſuch a height before the next morning, that a return into Egypt was again looked upon as vaſtly preferable to ſuch an undertaking, wherein they could expect nothing but to periſh by the ſwords of the ſons of Anak, and their wives and children to become their ſlaves. In this extremity they were already conſulting how to chooſe themſelves a leader, who ſhould bring them back to the land of their former thraldom, and this in the preſence of Moſes and Aaron, and of Caleb and Joſhua. But whilſt theſe were endeavouring to divert them from ſuch a baſe deſign, by repreſenting to them how eaſy and cheap the conqueſt of that fertile land might be to them, whilſt they had God on their ſide, they were like to have been ſtoned by the tumultuous populace, had not their fury been in ſome meaſure ſuppreſſed by the appearance of the Glory of GOD in the cloud, which then covered the tabernacle, from which God was heard to ſpeak to Moſes in ſuch threatening terms, as gave them cauſe to fear, that ſome ſpeedy and terrible judgment would be the reward of their rebellion and ingratitude *.

And cauſe an inſurrection.

HERE Moſes was forced again to become their interceſſor, and made uſe of ſuch powerful arguments and expoſtulations, that he did in ſome meaſure avert the divine vengeance. However, the ingratitude and infidelity of thoſe miſcreants, who had beheld his glorious appearance upon mount Sinai, who had been eye-witneſſes of thoſe wonders which he wrought both in Egypt and in the deſert, and of the puniſhments which he had inflicted upon other rebels, was of too crying a nature, not to exact ſome conſpicuous mark of the divine diſpleaſure, which might at leaſt ſerve as a warning to the reſt. Wherefore God did then ſwear, that none of thoſe that were above twenty years of age, except Joſhua and Caleb, ſhould ever enter into the promiſed land; but that they ſhould wander from place to place during the ſpace of forty years (K), till all their carcaſſes were rotted in the wilderneſs.

All above 20 years of age excluded from entering into the promiſed land.

* Ibid. xiv.

(K) Moſes here makes uſe of a round number, alluding to the forty days of the ſpies ſearching the land, though it is plain, that their nefs. As for the ten wretches, whofe falfe report occafioned this rebellion, they were all deftroyed by a fudden death, and became the firft inftances of the punifhment denounced againft the whole nation[e]: in memory of which, the Jews do to this day keep a faft upon the feventh day of the fixth month called Elul[f].

THIS fevere punifhment, joined to the fentence of exclufion from entering into the promifed land, did caufe an univerfal mourning among the people; however, as this lingering death, to which they heard themfelves condemned, was nothing fo terrible as an immediate one, fuch as they had reafon to expect, they took it into their heads, that their fault was not fo great, but it might be attoned for in fome meafure, by expreffing as great a degree of eagernefs for the conqueft as they had againft it, and by fhewing as brave a contempt of their enemies, and refolution to attack them out of hand, as they had before their fear and defpair of fucceeding in it. Fired with this hope, they prefented themfelves early in the morning before Mofes ready armed, and, having acknowledged their bafe cowardife in the humbleft terms, they told him, that they were now ready to retrieve their credit by fome noble exploit, either againft the Amalekites, or againft fome of the Canaanitifh nations. Mofes ftrove in vain to divert them from fuch a rafh enterprize, by repreſenting to them, that it was contrary to GOD's expreſs command, who would have them go back into the defert towards the Red-fea, and by aſſuring them, that they would certainly periſh in the attempt, becauſe they had now forfeited the divine aſſiſtance and protection, without which it was impoſſible for them to ſucceed; his ſpeech did but whet their muſhroom valour the more; ever indocile and deaf to good counſel, they reſolve to try their fortune, and to gain the paſſes of the neightheir children did enter it thirty nine years after this ſentence was pronounced againſt their fathers (50). It is further to be obſerved, that though this excluſion excepts none but Caleb, and in other places where it is repeated, it mentions only Joſhua along with him; yet there were certainly ſome others that were not included in it, ſuch were Moſes and Aaron, who had no part in the mutiny, but were excluded afterwards upon another account; together with Eleazar and a few more, eſpecially of the tribe of Levi.

Their raſh and ill-timed exploit againſt the Amalekites puniſhed.

[e] Num. xiv. 36, 37. [f] מגלת תענית. Seu liber de Jejun. part. ult. § 14.

(50) Compare Numb. xxxii. 13. with Deut. ii. 14. Vide Uſher's Ann. p. 19.

bouring

bouring hills; but they found them too well kept to their coſt, and the Amalekites and Canaanites falling upon them, made a great ſlaughter of them there, and purſued the reſt as far as Hormah, and diſcomfited them [g]. All this while Moſes, who foreſaw what would be the conſequence of this raſh enterprize, did wiſely keep himſelf and the ark of the covenant in the camp. In memory of this ſad diſaſter, and of the dropping of the people during the remainder of the forty years, he is ſuppoſed to have compoſed the ninetieth pſalm, in which he gives us a moſt lively image of the ſhortneſs and frailty of life. After ſome longer ſtay in this camp they continued moving from place to place, but ſtill in the ſame wilderneſs of Seir; during which time Moſes received many other laws, the time and occaſion of which not being mentioned by him, we ſhall give an account of the moſt remarkable ones in its proper place. However, it is to be obſerved, that their encampments from this time were much longer than they had formerly been, ſeeing that we read but of ſeventeen of them, during the remaining thirty ſeven years, whereas this removal from Kadeſh-barnea was the fifteenth encampment from their coming out of Egypt. We ſhall not trouble our readers with a further detail of them at preſent; thoſe who are deſirous to have a more particular account of them may find it in the annals of the learned archbiſhop Uſher [h].

DURING this long interval, the divine providence diſplayed itſelf in the moſt conſpicuous manner, in the forming and poliſhing this new-ſpringing generation, for whom the conqueſt of Canaan was reſerved. The miraculous pillar continued ſtill to direct them, and the manna to nouriſh them. Moſes continued ſtill his intercourſes with God; and, as if this had been too little to aſſure them of his paternal care, the people's raiment, particularly their ſhoes, whether of men, women, or children, continued ſound and whole, and their feet unhurt, notwithſtanding their long and frequent marches (L). If at any time the people relapſed into their uſual murmurs God's wonderful care of this new generation.

[g] Numb. xiv. 40. to the end. [h] Ann. USSER. p. 19, 20.

(L) A certain bold critic of a neighbouring church † has taken a great deal of pains to prove, that there was nothing miraculous in all theſe and many other things, which are looked upon as ſuch, by all that are not endowed with the ſame perſpicuity with himſelf. According to him, the meaning of theſe places, where the divine murs and rebellions, as they often did, their puniſhment followed ſo cloſe, ſo ſeverely, and ſo univerſally, that their diſobedience could neither be countenanced by the number of delinquents, not flatter itſelf with hopes of impunity. However, it is plain by the ſequel, that the ſucceſs was far from being anſwerable to that exceſs of care and tenderneſs which God ſhewed to them; for which reaſon the divine hiſtorian has thought fit to leave us but an imperfect account of the tranſactions of theſe remaining years, if we except ſome few rebellions and chaſtiſements, which he committed to writing without order of time and place. And indeed they are ſo little to the honour of his nation, that he ſeemeth to mention them with regret, and to have been much more willing to have ſuppreſſed them, had not the glory of their great deliverer, and the intereſt of the people, obliged him to record them [i].

† Peirer. Appen. de Exercit. de præadamit. paſſ.

The next tranſaction, indeed, we read of, would make one hope, that ſome extraordinary change had been wrought in them, and that they had begun to fear God in good earneſt, by the zeal which they ſhewed againſt a poor delinquent, whom they caught gathering a few ſticks on the ſabbath. Their fear, leſt his breach of a precept ſo eſteemed, ſo ſolemnly inculcated, ſhould bring ſome new judgment upon them, if they let him go unpuniſhed, made them bring him before Moſes, who ordered him to be put into cuſtody, until he knew what was the puniſhment deſigned againſt ſabbath-hiſtorian tells the Iſraelites, that their cloaths and ſhoes did not wear out during thoſe forty years, is only this, that they were not drove to the neceſſity of going naked or barefoot, becauſe they had the wool of their cattle to ſupply the former, and the skins of thoſe beaſts that were either killed or died a natural death to make ſhoes of; ſo that it was no wonder, that their feet never ſwelled by ſo many marches, when they could be ſo well ſhod. He is not the only one by many, that has thus burleſqued the ſacred ſcriptures, under pretence of vindicating them; for were Moſes's words capable of this ſenſe, as they are not, it would be plain, either that he triſled with his people and his readers, or that he purpoſely couched theſe tranſactions in ſuch terms, as would make them appear miraculous to all but ſuch ſagacious heads as our critic's; in which caſe we ſhall be at a loſs to whom to aſcribe the largeſt ſhare of modeſty, to the hiſtorian, or to his interpreter, who has been ſufficiently cenſured for his boldneſs, and more fully confuted than we think he deſerved *.

[i] Deut. viii. 4. xxix. 5.

* Vid. Calm. Com. in Geneſ.

breakers;

breakers; and on the next day, when he acquainted them, that ſuch a tranſgreſſion ſhould be puniſhed with death, they immediately led him out of the camp, and there ſtoned and buried him [k]. The ſabbath-breaker accuſed, and put to death.

THOUGH Moſes's ſweet and tender diſpoſition might perhaps make him look upon this as a very ſevere puniſhment for ſo inconſiderable a crime, yet could he not chooſe but be pleaſed with this new inſtance of their religious zeal, and to eſteem it as an earneſt of their future obedience; but this ſhort-lived joy was ſoon imbittered, by one of the moſt audacious conſpiracies that was ever formed againſt him (M). It was not, like the former, occaſioned through want of fleſh or water, or the ſally of a giddy and ungovernable mob, that thought themſelves bereaved of their leader, or at the point of falling into the hands of their enemies; but this was a treaſon hatched with the utmoſt deliberation and ſecrecy in the breaſt of one of the chiefs of the tribe of Levi, and countenanced by ſome of the moſt conſiderable men in the whole camp, eſpecially of the tribe of Reuben [l].

KORAH, the great grandſon of Levi by his father Izhar, as Aaron alſo was by his father Amram, and conſequently one of the heads of that tribe, unable to behold Aaron and his family raiſed to the high prieſthood, to which he thought he had an equal title, ceaſed not to cabal againſt him, until he had drawn a conſiderable number of eminent perſons into his intereſt. Among theſe were Dathan, Abiram, and Hon, who were heads of the houſe of Reuben (N). Whether he thought, Korah's rebellion and accomplices.

[k] Numb. xv. 32. [l] Numb. xvi. paſſ.

(M) It is not eaſy to gueſs in what year and place this ſedition happened (51). Some think it was in the deſert of Sin, others at Kadeſh-barnea, and others at Jotbath (52). This laſt ſeems the moſt probable, becauſe, where that encampment is mentioned, Moſes tells us, that the Lord ſeparated the tribe of Levi to be prieſts to adminiſter unto him, and to bleſs the people in his name (53); but, wherever it happened, it is plain, that the conſpirators were far from giving any credit to Moſes, or to his miracles, elſe they could never have been ſo infatuated, as to run into the very jaws of that deſtruction, which he had ſo publickly threatened them with, in caſe they perſiſted in their rebellion.

(N) It is plain from Moſes's words, if rightly tranſlated, that Korah was the firſt fomenter, as well as ring-leader of this conſpiracy.

(51) Uſſer. Ann. p. 20. (52) Vid. Calm. Comment. in loc.
(53) Deuter. x. 8. & ſeq.

thought, that he ſhould never gain his point againſt his rival, whilſt Moſes enjoyed the ſupreme legiſlative power, and conſequently, that it was neceſſary to inſpire them with an ambitious deſire of ſupplanting him, or whether he had obſerved already ſome ſuch deſign in thoſe three chiefs, he played his part ſo well, that he drew them and two hundred and fifty more into his party; and as ſoon as he found things ripe for an open rupture, he reſolved to appear at their head, and to bear the brunt of the firſt onſet againſt Moſes and Aaron. He began with upbraiding them with their unjuſt ambition, in ingroſſing all the power into their hands, and excluding the reſt of the congregation, whom he affirmed to be holy as they. Moſes was ſo ſurpriſed at the boldneſs of this ſpeech, racy. They run thus in the original, And Korah took Dathan, and Abiram, and On, and they roſe up with two hundred and fifty of the children of Iſrael, &c. (54). What has miſled moſt tranſlators is the conjunction ו vau, and, before Dathan, from whence they have taken the verb ויקח vajikach, took, though in the ſingular, to relate to all the four, though they have been forced to make up the ſenſe by the addition of an accuſative: thus ſome read it, And Korah, Dathan, &c. took men, others, took cenſers, others, took 250 men: whereas the verb, being in the ſingular, can only relate to the firſt, namely, Korah; and he it was who took, or, as the word may bear it, ſtirred up both Dathan, and Abiram, and On, &c. As for the ו vau, and, it is plain, that it is often joined to the firſt as well as the other words that follow in order, in the ſame manner as the Greeks do their καὶ, or the Latins their & and que, as in hominesque, deosque, & cœlum, & mare, & tellus, and the like; of which we ſhall give an inſtance or two out of the Pſalms: וכבוד והדר תעטרהו, coronabis eum, & honore, & gloria (55). ועני ואביון מגזלו, inopemque miſerumque, liberabis, à diripiente eum (56). ואון ועמל בקרבה, ſunt & iniquitas, & perverſitas in medio ejus (57).

We had not dwelt ſo long upon this critical note, had not ſome authors ſuppoſed this rebellion to have been at firſt excited by the Reubenites, in order to preſerve the prieſthood in the old channel of the firſt-born, which they ſaw Moſes was now going to transfer to the tribe of Levi; for, beſides that this ſuppoſition is quite contrary to the whole tenor of Moſes's account, it is hardly credible, that if the Levites had only been drawn into it by Dathan and Abiram, and upon ſuch an account, he would have made uſe of ſuch terms, as threw the far greateſt part of blame againſt the former, of whoſe tribe he himſelf was, or placed Korah as the very head of the faction.

(54) Numb. xvi. 1, 2, & ſeq. (55) Pſ. viii. 5. (56) Pſ. xxxv. 10. (57) Iſ lv. 11.

that

that he fell proſtrate with his face to the ground; and, after a ſhort prayer, as is ſuppoſed, he aroſe; and, after having rebuked them for their preſumption, deſired them to put off all further debate till next morning; at which time they ſhould all appear at the door of the tabernacle, with each his cenſer in his hand, at which time he promiſed, that the Lord ſhould declare himſelf openly in favour of thoſe whom he deſigned for that high office. After this, addreſſing himſelf to Korah and his Levites, he upbraided them for their ingratitude and arrogance, in not being contented with the dignity and privileges which God had annexed to their tribe, but aſpiring to the high prieſthood, which God had reſerved for Aaron and his poſterity.

SOON after this he ſent privately for Dathan and Abiram, whom he ſuppoſed to have been drawn by Korah into this conſpiracy, with a deſign to have argued the caſe more calmly with them; but they not only refuſed to come, but ſent his meſſenger back with an inſolent anſwer, in which they upbraided him with having decoyed the whole nation out of the rich and fertile land of Egypt, under pretence of bringing them into a better, inſtead of which he only detained them in that barren wilderneſs to make them greater ſlaves to him; and that he had now nothing more to do, but to put their eyes out, ſince they ſaw farther into his ambitious deſigns than he would have them, and grieved to behold the author of all their misfortunes become their greateſt tyrant [m].

As meek and gentle as Moſes naturally was, his patience was not proof againſt ſuch a reproachful meſſage; he appealed to the divine preſence againſt the injuſtice of it, ſince they could not but be ſenſible, that he had been ſo far from uſing his power to the invading of the leaſt portion of any man's property, that he had reaped hitherto nothing by it but care and ſorrow; begging at the ſame time of GOD not to regard the prayers and offerings of ſuch ungrateful wretches. Early the next morning Moſes and Aaron marched towards the tabernacle, whither Korah failed not to repair ſoon after, at the head of his two hundred and fifty men, each having a copper cenſer in his hand. Theſe were followed by a vaſt multitude of the people, who were come either to be ſpectators of this famous conteſt, or to back the ſeditious in caſe of an oppoſition. The firſt thing that did draw their eyes, was the glory which appeared in the cloud over the tabernacle, from which GOD commanded Moſes and Aaron to withdraw themſelves from the rebellious crew, leſt they ſhould periſh with them in the ruin which was going to fall upon them. Here Moſes was forced again to turn interceſſor, and to beg of GOD, that he would not puniſh the innocent with the guilty; and the croud had no ſooner ſeparated themſelves from Korah and his company, and followed him to the quarters of the Reubenites, where Dathan and Abiram, with their families, ſtood at their tent doors as it were in defiance; but Moſes ſpake to the aſſembly to this purpoſe, that, if thoſe rebels died a common death, he would give them leave to call in queſtion his being ſent from GOD; but that if the earth did immediately open itſelf in a miraculous manner, and ſwallow them up alive, he then hoped, that they would look upon him only as an inſtrument in GOD's hand, and ſufficiently authorized for all he did. The words were ſcarce out of his mouth, and the people retired at a ſufficient diſtance from the tents of the conſpirators, when the earth clove aſunder under their feet, and buried them alive, with all their families and ſubſtance. At the ſame time Korah and his whole company, who ſtood with their cenſers before the court of the tabernacle, were all deſtroyed by a ſupernatural fire, though their children were ſpared, becauſe, in all likelihood, they had no ſhare in their fathers guilt [n]. In memory of this dreadful judgment, and to deter, for the future, any but the ſons of Aaron, from preſuming to burn incenſe before the Lord, Eleazar was commanded to take the cenſers of Korah and his men, and to beat them into broad plates for a covering of the altar; which he accordingly did.

[m] Ibid. ver. 12. & ſeq.

in

Their dreadful puniſhment

Cauſes a new inſurrection againſt Moſes.

IN the mean time the people, who ran away terrified at the ſight of ſo dreadful a ſpectacle, were ſcarce recovered from their fright, before they began to murmur afreſh, and to accuſe Moſes and Aaron of having murdered the people of the Lord, as they called that ſeditious crew. Theſe two ran immediately into the tabernacle, from whence the glory appearing again in the cloud, did ſuſpend for ſome time the fury of the inſurrection. Here Moſes, who foreſaw that ſome terrible judgment was juſt ready to fall on the rioters, did immediately command his brother to take his cenſer, and to go and make an attonement for the people: but, though Aaron made all poſſible haſte to obey him, the plague was already begun, and had raged ſo furiouſly, that it had already deſtroyed fourteen thouſand and ſeven hundred men, beſides thoſe who had periſhed in Korah's rebellion; all that he could do was, to put a ſtop to its further progreſs, by ſtanding with his cenſer between the living and the dead [o].

[n] Vid. Num. xxvi. 11. [o] Ibid. xvi.

THERE

THERE was certainly ſomething ſurpriſing and unaccountable in the ſtubborn behaviour of theſe men, whatever they thought of their law-giver; for whether they looked upon his works as miraculous, and thoſe heavy puniſhments that befel them as the effect of his too ſevere prayers, as Joſephus thinks †, or whether they attributed the whole to his extraordinary ſkill in Egyptian magic, which is moſt likely, one would think, that ſo many ſevere examples of his ſuperior power might have deterred them long before, from making ſuch dangerous attempts againſt him. However, to prevent Aaron's authority being any more called in queſtion, GOD was pleaſed to confirm it by one miracle more. Aaron on the one ſide, and the head of every tribe on the other, were ordered to bring an almond rod with their names written upon it, and theſe were to be depoſited in the tabernacle until the next morning, by which time the Lord would decide in favour of that family, on whoſe rod ſome viſible and miraculous change was found. Accordingly, when they came to examine them on the morrow, Aaron's rod alone was found to have budded, and brought forth leaves and ripe almonds; and Moſes was ordered to lay it up in the ark, as a ſtanding monument of their rebellion and unbelief. The people had nothing to object either againſt that, or againſt the miracle, but yet could they not forbear making ſome grievous complaints againſt the ſeverity of GOD's puniſhments [p]. However, from that day there was an expreſs prohibition made againſt any, but the ſons of Aaron, to preſume to come into the tabernacle under pain of death; and at the ſame time ſome further ordinances were renewed concerning the office of the Levites, who were only to miniſter to the prieſts; but were interdicted approaching either the altar, or any of the conſecrated utenſils, under the ſame penalties. The portion and perquiſites of both prieſts and Levites were likewiſe appointed, together with ſome other regulations relating to their miniſtry, in particular, that of making the waters of ſeparation, and the uſe of them to purify all unclean perſons from any contracted impurities [q].

Aaron's prieſthood confirmed by the budding of his rod.

BY this time they had wandered near thirty years in the deſert of Arabia Petræa, and had been thirty nine years out of Egypt, ſtill moving from one place to another about the mountains of Idumæa; during which time, they were guilty of many more murmurings and idolatries than Moſes has thought fit to record, but which have been preſerved by other inſpired

Several Idolatries not recorded by Moſes.

† Ant. lib. iv. c. 4. [p] Num. xvii. [q] Num. xviii. & xix. paſſ.

inſpired writers [r], who have ſeverely upbraided them with ſetting up and carrying about the idols of Remphan, Malkom, and many others (O) of the like nature. However, the time

[r] Amos v. 26. Ezek. & Pſal. paſſ. Acts vii. 43. & alib.

(O) It would ſcarce be credible, that the Iſraelites could ever be guilty of ſo many horrid idolatries under Moſes's noſe, and in ſpite of all GOD's wonderful works and ſevere puniſhments, were we not well aſſured of it from the mouth of ſo many inſpired writers, who all agree in this, that they had contracted ſuch an invincible propenſity towards it in Egypt, that they not only perſiſted in the worſhip of the Egyptian deities, but adopted moreover every new one which came in their way, as they became acquainted with other nations (58). But as to the deities themſelves, we have nothing certain but their names; all that has been writ concerning their extraction, their figure, and the way of worſhiping them, being nothing but mere conjecture, as has been obſerved more than once already †††. Their names, as we find them mentioned in ſome of the authors above quoted (are Moloch, Chiun, and Remphan); to which they added a vaſt number of others in proceſs of time. One thing however appears more than probable, with reſpect to one part of the worſhip of theſe idols, from the places above quoted and ſome others (59), namely, that they uſed to carry them about in tabernacles, or under canopies in carts, or upon prieſts ſhoulders, not only as they removed from place to place, but likewiſe at certain times, and upon certain occaſions, in a kind of proceſſion (60). To this the pſalmiſt ſeems to allude in the 16th pſalm above quoted where he expreſſes himſelf thus, ורבו עצבותם אחר מהרו &c, which ours, after moſt other verſions, renders, their ſorrows ſhall be multiplied that run, or haſten after other gods; whereas the word עצב hetzeb ſignifying alſo idols, the verſe may more properly be rendered thus: though their idols be multiplied; or, according to the Hebrew idiom, let them multiply their idols; let them run or haſten after them; or let others multiply their idols, &c. as for me, I will be ſo far from making them any drink or blood-offerings, that I will not ſo much as mention their names with my lips. According to which verſion, the ſenſe is perfect and clear without thoſe ſuppletives, without which the other cannot be underſtood. Thoſe, who are deſirous to be more particularly informed about all theſe falſe deities, time drawing near for their entering into the promiſed land, they went from Ezion-geber, towards Kadeſh in the wilderneſs of Zin, deſigning probably to have entered Canaan by the narrow paſſes called the way of the ſpies, but they were diſcomfited in their firſt attempt by Arad, one of the kings of the Canaanites §, who killed a great number of them, and took ſome conſiderable ſpoil from them. Upon this they vowed all the cities of Arad to deſtruction; ſoon after which they made a ſecond puſh, wherein they had much better ſucceſs, and having defeated the king, and deſtroyed ſome of his towns, they called the field of victory Hormah, or rather Chormah, that is, Anathema, or utter deſtruction [r], though the total one of that country did not happen till the time of Joſhua [s] (P).

(58) Exod. xxxii. 4. Levit. xvii. 7. Num. xxv. 3, & ſeq. Deut. paſſ. Joſh. xxiv. 14. Pſalm lxxviii. cvi. 36. Jer. vii 30. & ſeq. Ezek. xiv. & 16. paſſ. Amos v. 25. 26. Acts vii. 43. & alib. ††† Vid. Vol. I. p. 307. & ſeq. (59) Pſ. xvi. 4. Iſai. xlvi. 7. & Baruc. vi. 3, 25. (60) Vid. Herodot l. iv. Clem. Alex. Strom. l. v. Macrob. Satur. l. 1. Philo Bibl. ap. Euſeb. præp. l. 1. N. 10. & al. mult.

ABOUT

§ Vid. Vol. II. p. 173. & ſub not. (W) & (X). [r] Num. xxi. 1, 2, & ſeq. [s] Joſh xii. 14.

deities, may, at their leiſure, conſult thoſe who have treated of them in a more ample manner, eſpecially thoſe quoted in the margin (61)

(P) The Jews have a tradition, founded on an expreſs text in Deuteronomy (62, and ſome places in Joſhua, that the Iſraelites were obliged to ſend a herald to offer peace in their name to every city and people, before they attempted to conquer it by the ſword; and that in caſe they accepted it, they became only tributaries to them, but if they refuſed their offer, they were then to be vowed to deſtruction; and that this command of GOD extended even to the ſeven nations of the Canaanites, contrary to the current opinion, that theſe had been long before under an anathema for their wickedneſs. However, Maimonides has taken a great deal of pains to confute this common notion, and to prove, that all thoſe nations that were cut off by the Iſraelites, owed their deſtruction to their chooſing to try the fortune of war, rather than to accept of peace upon ſuch terms. There is indeed one main objection againſt him, namely, the ſtratagem which the Gibeonites made uſe of to obtain peace from Iſrael, which would have been needleſs, had the latter been forced to offer it before all things; but to this our learned Jew above mentioned anſwers, that the reaſon of the Gibeonites policy was, that they had, in common with their neighbours, refuſed the firſt offers of peace, and were conſequently doomed to the ſame fate with them; to prevent which, their ambaſſadors feigned themſelves to come from a country vaſtly diſtant from any

(61) Vid. Grot. in loc. Voſſ. de Idololat. Le Clerc. Com. in loc. Saurin's Diſcourſe, and Calmet's Diſſertation on that ſubject. (62) Deut. xx. 10. & ſeq. Joſh. xi. paſſ.

ABOUT this time also it was, that the king of Edom, having refused a free passage through his country to the Israelites, though on the most peaceable and friendly terms, they were in all likelihood going to take some kind of revenge for the affront; but GOD, who would not suffer them to commit any hostilities against them, because they were their brethren, caused them to take a turn round their country, and to march peaceably away towards mount Hor †, where Miriam Moses's sister died soon after (Q), in the hundred and thirtieth year of her age, being about eight or ten years older than Aaron *, who died in the hundred and twenty third of his, in the very year following.

A new murmuring for want of water.

WHILST they continued at Kadesh, a little before Aaron's death, a new murmuring arose for want of water, and Moses was again commanded by GOD to bring them a fresh supply out of the rock; but he did it in such a manner as was highly displeasing to him: for GOD had commanded him to call for the water by only speaking to the rock; but he, whether out of impatience at their loud murmurs, or out of diffidence of the promised supply, smote it twice with his rod, and used some indecent expression, either to the rock or to the people , for which he was excluded from setting his foot into the promised land, and condemned to die in the wilderness. Aaron was likewise included in the same sentence, as having, doubtless, shared in the fault. In memory of this new rebellion the place was called Meribah, Moses smites the rock twice.

† Num. xx. 22. Deut. ii. 8, 9. Vid. Vol. II. p. 140. & seq. * Vid. Vol. II p. 473. note (K).  Vid. Ps. cv. 32, 33.

of those seven, and as such obtained the desired peace(63). However, it is plain from this tradition, and the Rabbi above mentioned, that this peace was to be offered to those nations upon certain conditions, the two principal of which were, that they should own a subjection and pay tribute to the Israelites; and that they should observe the seven precepts given to Noah, in case they refused to be circumcised.

(Q) Eusebius (64) tells us, that Miriam's sepulchre was still extant in his time at Kadesh, at a small distance from the city of Petra, the metropolis of Arabia Petræa †. Some antient fathers think that she died a virgin (65), and that she was the legislatrix and governess of the Israelitish women, as her brother Moses was of the men (66).

(63) Maimon. ap. Cunæum. & Basnag. Rep. Hebr. tom. i. lib. 2. cap. 20. (64) Loc. Hebr. † Vid Vol. II. p. 480. note (Q). (65) Greg. Nyssen. & Ambros. de Virginitat. & al. (66) Theod. in Micah vi. 4.

strife,

ſtrife, from which they went and encamped at the foot of mount Hor, on the frontier of the land of Edom. Here Moſes was commanded to take Aaron and Eleazar his ſon, to the top of the mountain in the ſight of all the people, and to ſtrip the father of his prieſtly robes, and to array the ſon with them; which was no ſooner done than Aaron died, and was buried there: but whether by Moſes, or Eleazar, or by ſome other perſon, certain it is, that the place was kept ſo private, that none of the ſepulchre-mongers of thoſe countries could ever find it out, or dared ſubſtitute another in lieu of it. The children of Iſrael mourned thirty days for him, and Eleazar ſucceeded him in the high prieſthood [w] (R). Aaron's death.

SOON after the days of mourning were over, they went and encamped at Zalmonah; which place took that name from the image or figure of the brazen ſerpent which Moſes cauſed to be ſet up there [x]; for the Iſraelites, being tired with the length of their journey, and labouring under a ſcarcity of proviſion, began to murmur afreſh againſt Moſes, in ſo grievous a manner, that GOD was provoked to ſend large flights of fiery ſerpents among them, which deſtroyed ſuch multitudes of that rebellious people, that the reſt came, and in the humbleſt terms, acknowledged their fault to Moſes, begging of him to deliver them from that deſtroying vermin (S). Moſes

[w] Num. xx. 23. & ſeq. [x] Ibid. xxi. 9.

(R) Aaron's death happened upon tueſday the firſt day of the fifth month (which is our Auguſt) in the fortieth year after the Exod, and in the hundred and twenty third year of his age (67).

(S) A certain author (68) has endeavoured to prove, that thoſe inſects were only little worms which bred in the ſkin, but of ſuch venemous nature, that they immediately poiſoned thoſe that were infected with them; but it is plain, not only that the original words נחשים שרפים Nechaſhim Seraphim ſignify a burning or winged ſerpent; but likewiſe, that thoſe creatures are very common both in Egypt and Arabia; inſomuch that thoſe countries would become uninhabitable, if thoſe ſerpents had not been debarred by a kind of providence from multiplying as other ſerpents do; but the Arabians tell us, that after they have coupled together, the female never fails to kill the male, and that her young ones kill her as ſoon as they are hatched. The learned Bochart, from whom we have this account of them, tells us further (69), that they are

(67) Vid. Annal. Uſſer, p. 22.

(68) Fortun. Licet lib. de ſpontan. vivent. ort. vid. Uſſer ubi ſup.

(69) De Animal. Sac. p. 2. l. iii. c. 13.

The brazen serpent set up.

Moses, applying himself to GOD, was commanded to cast a brazen serpent of the same figure with those that infested them, and to set it upon a pole upon some eminent ground, that as many as were bitten by the serpents might be healed by looking upon it [y]. As soon as they were delivered by this means from the plague, they marched towards Phunon [z], since known by the name of Metalla Phunon, by reason of the copper mines with which it abounded [a]; and might perhaps have its first name from Phinon, one of the dukes or princes of Edom [b], from thence they removed to Oboth, called by Pliny, Eboda. This was their thirty seventh encampment; their next was at Ije-abarim (T), upon the borders of Moab, that is, in that part of the desert which lieth over against the land of Moab eastward [c], and is therefore called the desert of Moab [d]. Soon after this, as they were removing to pass the brook or valley of Zared, GOD forbad them to commit any hostilities against the Moabites and Ammonites [e], because he had given them the land they dwelt in, and obli-

[y] Numb. xxi. 4. & seq. loc. Hebr. sub. Phenon. 11.
[z] Ibid. xxxiii. 42.
[a] Vid EUSEB.
[b] Gen. xxxvi. 41.
[c] Num. xxi. 11.
[d] Deut. ii. 8.
[e] Ibid. ver. 9, 18, 19.

short, and spotted with divers colours, and that their wings resemble those of a bat. He quotes a great number of antient and modern authors to prove, that they are the same with the Hydra of the Greeks and Latins. Herodotus, who went on purpose to the city of Butos to see them, says, that they are not unlike the Hydra; and that he had seen a vast quantity of their skeletons, whose flesh had been devoured by the Ibis (70), which bird is peculiar to Egypt, and a continual destroyer of those serpents, as we have shewed elsewhere †. There was no need therefore of any other miracle, the Israelites being then in Arabia Petræa, than a strong wind to blow them into their camp, it being then about the spring-time of the year, in which season they commonly fly in great swarms, from Libya and Arabia towards Egypt and other countries in that neighbourhood (71).

(T) It must be remembered however, that when Moses tells us, that they encamped at Oboth, Ij-eabarim, and other cities belonging to the Edomites and Moabites, he must not be understood, as if they came near these places, but only that they encamped at such convenient distance from them, that they might easily send to buy provisions of them, without giving them any umbrage of their having any hostile design against them.

(70) Herod. l. ii. c. 75, 76. † Vid. Vol. I. p. 399, & seq.
(71) Vid. Bochart. ubi sup. & author. ab eo citat.

ged

ged them to take a large turn round their country to come at that of Canaan. They arrived at length at Bameth, or Bameth-arnon, that is, the high places of Arnon, under which is a fine valley belonging to the Moabites, along which the brook or torrent of Arnon runs (V); and pitched at the foot of mount Piſgah. From thence they removed to Beer, ſo called from the well which the heads of Iſrael digged there by GOD's direction; and this gave birth to that ſong of Moſes which was ſung by the Iſraelites, the burthen of which begins with the words, Spring up, O well, ſing ye unto it f, f Num. xxi. 17. & ſeq.

(V) The brook or torrent of Arnon runs along between the countries of the Ammonites and Moabites, and diſcharges itſelf into the Black-ſea (72). The book of the wars of the Lord, mentioned by Moſes (73), ſeems to intimate ſome ſuch miraculous tranſaction at this brook, as had been at the Red-ſea; and we find ſome paſſages in the pſalms, and in the prophet Habakkuk (74), which the Chaldee paraphraſt doth underſtand as if the brook Arnon had been dried up, or miraculouſly divided, to make a paſſage for GOD's people. However, it muſt be owned, that the words of Moſes are ſomewhat obſcure, and variouſly underſtood both by Jews and Chriſtians; and that the words וְהֵב סוּפָה Vaheb Supha may be the proper names of places, as we find it in the margin of our bibles, and as Dav. Kimchi and ſome Chriſtians underſtand them (75): but we rather chooſe the expoſition of R. Salomon, who thinks the ו Vau in וְהֵב to be put for the Jod, which often happens, and that it ought to be read יְהֵב Jabeb, and then theſenſe will be, what the lord brought upon Suphah, or the Red-ſea, and on the brook Arnon.

As to the book of the wars of the Lord, the generality of Chriſtians think, that it is one of thoſe that were loſt, either at the captivity or the burning of the temple (76), if not during Manaſſeh's wicked reign. The generality of the Jews, unwilling to admit that one jot, much leſs a whole book of holy writ ſhould be loſt, have fancied, that the book of Judges is prophetically meant by it, and underſtand the verb יֵאָמֵר, Jeamer in the future tenſe, it ſhall be ſaid, or recorded in time, in the book of, &c. becauſe in Judges there are ſeveral wars mentioned between the Jews and their neighbours, in which GOD did viſibly appear in favour of the former, However, the moſt received opinion is that this and ſome other books mentioned in the old teſtament were actually loſt.

(72) Vid Num. xxi. 13. (73) Ibid. ver. 14. (74) Vid. Pſ. lxxiv. 15. Habakkuk iii. 13. & ſeq. (75) Kimch. in rad. vid. Jun. in loc. (76) Vid. Packhurſt's Maxorah, p. 185. Muſt. in loc.

AFTER

AFTER several marches, in which they paſſed as it were between the countries of Moab and Ammon, without committing the leaſt hoſtilities on either ſide, they came at length to the land of the Amorites. Here they ſent again to beg a peaceable paſſage through the territories of Sihon king of Heſhbon. But that prince, having refuſed to let them paſs upon any terms, and made himſelf ready to attack them, was overthrown by them in a ſet battle †, and the Iſraelites, having ſeized upon his kingdom, from the torrent of Arnon to that of Jabbok, put men, women, and children to the ſword, and ſaved nothing but the cattle (W). [z] Soon after this, Og king of Baſhan, attempting in like manner to obſtruct their paſſage, underwent the ſame fate as we have already ſhewn the hiſtory of the Canaanites (X) ‡.

Sihon and Og diſcomfited.

† Vid. Vol. II. p. 118, & 173. [z] Vid. Judg. xi. 13. & ſeq.
‡ Vid. ſup: loc citat.

(W) This land formerly belonged to the Moabites and Ammonites (77), out of which either Sihon or ſome of his predeceſſors had drove them. When therefore the Iſraelites conquered it from him, they made no difficulty of keeping poſſeſſion of it; and when it was afterwards claimed again by the Ammonites, Jephthah roundly told them, that they had loſt all their right to that tract, ſince it had been taken from them by the Amorites, and from them given by GOD himſelf to the children of Iſrael (78) †.

(X) We have already taken notice of the gigantic ſtructure of this Canaanitiſh prince ‡, and of his large iron bedſted preſerved at Rabbah †††, the capital city of the Ammonites; but the Jewiſh rabbies, not contented with ſuch pigmy wonders, have improved it to their liking. They tell us, that this nine cubit bed could be only his cradle, ſeeing himſelf was ſix ſcore cubits high when full grown. They add, that he had lived before the flood; and that the waters of it, when at the higheſt, reached only up to his knees. Several other wonderful things they write of him, which cannot be read without laughter. We ſhall only mention one among the reſt, which is, that he took up ſuch a monſtrous rock with a deſign to throw it into the Iſraelitiſh camp, as would have cruſhed them all under it, but that a lapwing, or ſome ſuch bird, picked a miraculous hole in it, big enough for his head to go through, which nevertheleſs, he would eaſily have diſengaged, had not his teeth immediately grown to an exceſſive length, and given Moſes an opportunity of killing him, whilſt he was ſtruggling to get the ſtone off his neck (79).

(77) Vid. Judg. xi. 13. & ſeq. (78) Ibid paſſ. † Vid. Vol. II. p 103. ‡ Vid Vol II. 174. ††† Ibid. Vol. II p 98 (79) Vid. Calm. Hiſt V. T. in loc. & Munſt. in Deut. iii. ſub. note d. & al.

THIS

THIS land of Baſhan, one of the moſt fertile cantons of Canaan, which reached on the eaſt to the river Jordan, to the mountains of Gilead on the weſt, to the brook Jabbok on the ſouth, and to the land of Geſhur on the north, was divided, though not equally between the tribes of Manaſſeh and Gad: and the land of Sihon was aſſigned partly to Gad, and partly to Reuben [h], as we ſhall ſhew more fully in the ſequel of this hiſtory; but upon this condition however, that they ſhould aſſiſt the reſt of the tribes, in the conqueſt of the land of Canaan till that was perfected.

BY this time Balak king of Moab, near whoſe territories the Iſraelites were encamped, with a deſign to croſs the river Jordon, in order to enter into the land of Canaan, began now to look upon them with a jealous eye. However, their late conqueſt having given him but too ſure a proof of their ſtrength, he did not think it ſufficient to make a ſtrong alliance with the Midianites and Ammonites his neighbours, in order to ſtop their progreſs; but reſolved, before he began any hoſtilities againſt them, to try how far Balaam's enchantments might go towards turning the fortune of the war to his ſide. We need not repeat what has been ſaid in the hiſtory of Moab *, concerning the ill ſucceſs of Balak's project (Y), and the too ſure one of Balaam's advice of debauching

Balak ſends for Balaam

[h] Num. xxxii, 33. & ſeq. & Deut. iii. 1. & ſeq. * Vid. Vol. II. p. 85, & ſeq.

(Y) We have already ſaid ſomething concerning Balaam's prophecies , and endeavoured to clear ſome obſcure paſſages of it; we now beg leave to add an explication or two more of ſome other places equally dark and puzzling. The firſt is where Balaam prefaces his prophecy with theſe words, the man whoſe eyes are open has ſaid, or, as our margin has it, who had his eyes ſhut, but now open (80): and in the next verſe, who heard the words of GOD, and ſaw the Almighty, falling (into a trance, but) having his eyes opened. Here it is plain ours, as well as other verſions, have been forced to add ſeveral words to ſupply the ſenſe, for want of conſidering what Balaam alludes to by theſe expreſſions, and for want of attending to the words שתום Satum, and עלוי Halui, when joined to the word עינים Henaim, eyes, as here, or to any other member; for though the words do ſometimes ſignify, open and ſhut, hidden and revealed, yet when thus tacked to any thing elſe, do more properly ſignify, witholden, and then looſened again. We need then but ſuppoſe, that he alludes to the angel meeting him thrice in the way,

 Vid. Vol. II. p. 85. & ſeq. (80) Num. xxiv. 3, 4.

bauching the Israelites, by the help of some of their most beautiful way, and his eyes being holden from seeing him at the first and second meeting, and opened at the third, when the ass fell down under him, and Balaam, not in a trance, but upon his face to the ground, either through fear, or out of reverence.

The next is where he says, that his (Israel's) kingdom shall be higher than Agag (81); for though that were as certain which a learned rabbi observes, † that Agag was the common name of the kings of Amalek, as what he subjoins immediately after, that the first king of Israel gave the most signal defeat to that of the Amalekites; yet as the Samaritan, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic read Gog instead of Agag, and Gog doth generally signify the Scythians and northern nations (82), several interpreters have preferred this latter reading to the first, and not without good grounds (83).

The last expression we shall take notice of is where Balaam says, that GOD had not beheld iniquity in Jacob, nor seen perverseness in Israel (84); which cannot be true in a literal sense, since he could scarce behold any thing else. Nor can we think, with some predestinarians, that they were such favourites of the Almighty, as they were his chosen, that he could see no fault in them. Neither have those, who by perverseness and iniquity understand idolatry, succeeded better, since it is plain, they had so often made themselves abominable by, and been severely punished for it; and consequently neither can it be true in the sense that others have taken it, namely, that he did not behold any iniquity in them, because he had already forgiven it; seeing the contrary is plain from those heavy punishment which he inflicted upon them. The best sense therefore seems to be that of Gataker, namely, that GOD did not behold iniquity, &c. in them with approbation, as he is said to behold, that is, to approve the contrite, humble, &c. and that he is of purer eyes than to behold, that is, to approve evil. To this we may add further, that the particle ב Beth, doth often signify against, and is accordingly so rendered, not only by ours, but by most translations in the places quoted in the margin (85), and many more of the like nature; according to which, the words will run more naturally thus, he doth not approve of any wicked practices against Jacob, &c. This sense is still further confirmed by the words און Aven and עמל Hamal, which though we render iniquity and perverseness, do oftner signify outrage, oppression, deceit, beautiful women. All that needs be added is, that it fully anſwered their hopes, and that the Iſraelites failed not to give into the ſnare, and to make work for repentance; for Balak ordered his ſubjects to celebrate a grand feaſt to Baal-peor, which is generally thought to be the ſame with Priapus, or Adonis [1], in which as we obſerved before , the moſt ſhameful kinds of lewdneſs uſed to be perpetrated, and to invite the Iſraelites to them. Theſe, being too eaſily prevailed upon, were ſoon enticed from one crime to another, by the fair women that were ſent among them for that purpoſe; that is, they fell from drunkenneſs to lewdneſs, and from lewdneſs to idolatry, and became ſo enamoured with thoſe fair deluders, that, obſerving in them a more than ordinary forwardneſs to follow them, they made no ſcruple to bring a great number of them into their camp; ſo that it was not long before the infection was become univerſal, and puniſhed by a plague, which carried off about twenty four thouſand of the offenders.

(81) Ibid. ver. 7. † R. Mos. Gerund ap. Munst. in loc. vid. Vol II p. 152. (82) See Jos. Mede's Discourse on Gog and Magog. (83) Id. Vid Calm. Hist. Vet. Test & Le Clerc's Comm. in loc. & al (84) Num. xxiii. 21. (85) Exod. xiv. 25. xx. 16. Num. xii. 1. & xxiii. 23. & alib.

The Iſraelites debauched by the women to idolatry.

Their ſevere puniſhment.

IN the mean-time GOD, ſtill highly provoked at their diſobedience, which this ſevere puniſhment had not yet put an effectual ſtop to, commanded Moſes to erect a court of judicature, conſiſting of the heads of all the families, and to try and hang all that had been guilty of this rebellion and idolatry, without reſpect to friendſhip or kindred (Z); which was accordingly deceit, machination, affliction, and the like; which therefore GOD ſeems here to declare, he would not ſuffer to be attempted or practiſed againſt his people (86).

[1] ISID. Orig. lib. viii. HIERON. in Hoſ. ix. vid. GOODWIN'S, Moſes and Aaron, lib. iv. c. 3. CALM. Diſſert. LE CLERC'S Com. in loc.  Vid. Vol. II. p. 82.

(Z) Though we have given this place a different ſenſe from our own, and moſt verſions, which make GOD to command Moſes to take all the heads of the people, and to hang them up in the face of the ſun (87), whether guilty or not, we hope, thoſe who underſtand the Hebrew will readily own, not only that the words are capable of our interpretation; but likewiſe, that the context, as well as the reaſon of the thing, doth naturally lead one to it. For, whatever ſhifts commentators have made uſe of to juſtify the other verſion, ſuch as that thoſe heads were, either all as deep in the guilt, as thoſe that were under them, which is not probable; or that they were guilty of a ſhameful neglect, in not oppoſing the growing miſchief, and puniſhing the offenders (88), both which cordingly done, and about one thouſand more were put to death. By this time the greateſt part of the people, being come a little to themſelves, were bewailing their folly at the door of the tabernacle, when they were ſurpriſed with an inſtance of the moſt unparallelled boldneſs, in one of the chiefs of the tribe of Simeon named Zimri, who had brought a young Midianitiſh princeſs into the camp, and in ſight of Moſes and of the whole congregation, was leading her into his tent. However, their impudence did not go long unpuniſhed, for Phinehas, the ſon of Eleazar the high-prieſt, being moved with a juſt indignation, and fired with a godly zeal, followed them cloſe with a ſpear in his hand, and at one ſtroke joined their bodies in death, where they were joined in their ſin. This action was highly pleaſing to God as well as to Moſes, and the high-prieſthood was confirmed to him and his ſeed as a reward for his zeal. However, it is plain from the words of the Pſalmiſt [k], that he averted the divine vengeance more by his prayers to God, than by the puniſhment of theſe two offenders [l]. As for the authors and accomplices of this rebellion, they did not go unrewarded, Balaam was ſoon after killed in a ſet battle which Iſrael fought againſt five kings of Midian, who likewiſe fell on that day, whilſt the conquerors made a terrible ſlaughter of their ſubjects, putting them all to the ſword, women and children excepted; plundered and burned their cities, and Zimri and Cozbi.

(86) Vid. Le Scen. & Eſſay on a new verſ. p. 118. (87) Num. xxv. 4. (88) Ita Abrabanel in phiraſh hatborah.

Are ſeverely puniſhed.

Balaam with 5 kings of Midian ſlain.

[k] Pſal. cvi. 30. [l] Numb. xxv. 7, 8.

might, probably enough, be out of their power, ſince even Moſes himſelf found them ſo often too headſtrong for him; yet it is plain from the directions which he gives thoſe judges in the very next verſe, viz. to puniſh all that they found guilty indifferently, that this command had nothing ſo unjuſt in it, as thoſe verſions intimate; and Joſephus, who followed the common verſion, was ſo well convinced, that it could not be palliated by any futile arguments, that he has choſen to ſuppreſs it wholly; and this is one main argument to us, that he underſtood neither the Hebrew nor the Chaldee, elſe he might as eaſily have fallen into our ſenſe of that command, as the Targum of Onkelos, rabbi Salomon, and other Jews after them have done, as well as the learned Fagius in his comment on the place, and others among the Chriſtians. How Joſephus has mutilated this place, and what account he has given of this defection, and the conſequences of it, the reader may, if he pleaſes, ſee in his antiquities (89).

(89) Lib. iv. c. 6.

carried carried off a conſiderable booty † with them, which they brought to Moſes and Eleazar; and theſe ordered one fiftieth part of it to be diſtributed among the prieſts, and another fiftieth to the Levites. But though Moſes could not but be pleaſed with their victory and valour, yet the ſight of ſuch a number of Midianitiſh women, whom they had brought captive with them, and the remembrance of what the people had ſuffered upon their account, made him think it unſafe to ſpare their lives; he therefore ordered all thoſe that had ever known man, as well as the male children, to be immediately diſpatched, and that none but virgins ſhould be preſerved alive [m] (A).

Soon

† Vid. Vol. II. p. 90. [m] Numb. xxxi. 17, 18.

(A) We ſhall not need wonder at Moſes's ſeverity againſt theſe women, when we conſider how zealous they had been to proſtitute themſelves, to debauch the Iſraelites into the moſt obſcene and beaſtly ceremonies. The antient Jews give us a very ſtrange account of the worſhip of this filthy idol, and affirm in particular, that it conſiſted in making a common jakes of his temple, from which, according to them, he was called Baal-peor; of which the reader may ſee more in Munſter's bible (90). They add, that Balaam's counſel was, to proclaim a kind of large fair, in which ſhould be expoſed great quantities of fine linen, which, he told Balak, the Iſraelites delighted much to wear, and that every booth where they were expoſed to ſale, ſhould have an old woman in the outward, and a young one in the inward apartment, beſides a conſiderable number of other places for eating and drinking: that the youths of Iſrael were eaſily drawn to the fair, where having refreſhed themſelves at the common booths, their curioſity did naturally lead to viſit the other ſhops alſo. Here the buſineſs of the old women without was to aſk a moderate price for their linen, and of the young ones within, to make a conſiderable abatement, or even to offer it at their own price; after which, that they might not make a dry bargain, ſhe offered the youth a bumper of Ammonitiſh wine, which at once ſet him on fire, and upon his aſking her the favour, ſhe anſwered, with all my heart, provided you'll pay your reſpect to this idol, and if he made any difficulty upon the account of his being an Iſraelite, ſhe anſwered, that he had nothing to do, but to break wind backwards, or eaſe himſelf before it, which he readily complied with, not knowing that that was the kind of worſhip that was paid to that idol (91). Something like ſuch a filthy ceremony ſeems hinted by the prophet (92), if rightly underſtood, where he ſays, that the Iſraelites did withdraw themſelves, (90 Vid. Munſter in Numb. xxv. ſub note a. (91) Goodwin's Moſes & Aaron, lib. iv. c. 3. (92) Hoſ. ix. 10.

The Israelites numbered.

Soon after this defection to Baal-peor, Moses was ordered to take an account of all the children of Israel that were able to bear arms, that is, from twenty years old and upwards. Josephus says from twenty to fifty †*, but it is more likely to have been to sixty, and these were found to amount to six hundred and one thousand seven hundred and thirty, besides the Levites, who were numbered from one month and upwards, and amounted to twenty three thousand: this account was taken in the plain of Moab, near the river Jordan, overagainst Jericho; and it is supposed, that the last punishment that befel the 24,000 adherers to the Midianitish deity, made a final end of the old murmuring generation, which had been excluded from entering into the land of Canaan; because upon examination, there was not one of them found in this new list which Moses took of the people, except Joshua and Caleb, according to the sentence pronounced against them [n] by God himself. The numbering of the people was no sooner over, than Moses received orders to direct the distribution of the promised land between the tribes to be made by lot, not into equal parts, but in proportion to the number of men in each tribe. As for that of Levi, it was not to have any inheritance with the rest but was otherwise provided for [o].

Zelophehad's daughters portioned.

When this order was published, there came five of the daughters of Zelophehad, of the tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph, to petition Moses and Eleazar for an inheritance with their father's brethren, that his name might not be lost in Israel, seeing he had left no sons, but was dead in the wilderness, not for any sedition, but had shared in the common fate with the rest. Their request was approved by God, and readily granted by Moses, who allotted them a or go aside to blush, or as the word may be rendered, to stink when they came to Baal-peor. However, it is plain, from the account of Moses, and some of the prophets, that there was something else more abominable in the worship of that idol; for the Psalmist says that when they joined themselves to Baal-peor, they eat the sacrifices of the dead (93): but whether that false deity was surnamed Peor from the mount of that name where he was worshipped, as Isidorus and St. Jerom think (94), or whether the mountain had its name from the idol, and this last from the filty ceremonies used in its worship, is neither very plain, nor very material.

†* Ant. lib. iii. cap. 12. [n] Numb. xxvi. 64, 65. [o] Numb, xxvi. 62.

(93) Psal. cvi. 28. (94) Isid. Orig. lib. viii. Hieron. in ix. Hos.

portion

portion in their kindred's inheritance accordingly. After which GOD was pleaſed to make a law, that for the future the eſtates of thoſe who died without iſſue male, ſhould be inherited by their daughters, and if they had no daughters, that then it ſhould go to the next of the male, and in defect of that, of the female line[p]. But there being ſtill ſome doubt remaining, namely, whether the latter might marry out of their tribe; that of Manaſſeh came ſoon after to Moſes, and repreſented to him the inconveniency of ſuch marriages, ſeeing thoſe heireſſes would carry their inheritance into other tribes, which might in proceſs of time, cauſe a great deal of confuſion, and probably leſſen one tribe and enrich another. This remonſtrance was likewiſe approved by GOD, who immediately declared, that neither of theſe daughters of Zelophehad, nor any heireſſes for the future ſhould marry out of their tribes, nor even out of their own family. As for the other females who had no inheritance, they were permitted to marry into what tribe they pleaſed[q].

Some regulations about the marriage of heireſſes.

IMMEDIATELY after this, GOD commanded Moſes to get up upon Mount Nebo, which is one of the mountains that make that long ridge which is called Abarim (B), and to take a view of the promiſed land, ſince his rebellion in the deſert of Zin had debarred him from entering into it, and he was ſhortly to die in that very mountain, from whence he beheld it. Moſes was nothing ſurpriſed at the news of his approaching death, which he only looked upon as a haven of repoſe, after a life of the greateſt trouble and fatigue. Neither was he ſolicitous to have his commiſſion tranſmitted to his children, or in the leaſt diſpleaſed to ſee his own ſervant appointed his ſucceſſor before them; but, finding his end ſo near, he made it his chief buſineſs, during thoſe few remaining days, to ſettle things in the beſt order he could. The firſt care he took was to have Joſhua confirmed his ſucceſſor, in the moſt public and authentic manner, Moſes commanded to take a view of Canaan from Nebo.

Cauſes Joſhua to be proclaimed his ſucceſſor.

[p] Ibid xxvii. 1, 2, & ſeq. [q] Ibid. xxxvi. 1. ad fin.

(B) Abarim was a long ridge of mountains, that reached from the tribe of Reuben into the land of Moab, on each ſide the river Arnon; but the extent of which is not eaſy to fix. Euſebius and St. Jerom do mention them more than once: the former places it about ſix miles weſtward of Heſhbon, and ſeven eaſtward of Livias (95). The mounts Piſgah, Peor, and Nebo, where Moſes died, were part of the ridge Abarim, or as the original has it, עברים, Habarim, which ſignifies either paſſes, or paſſengers.

(95) Sub voc. Nebo & Bel-phegor.

ner, to prevent any oppoſition from his own family after he was dead. To this end he brought him forth in ſight of all Iſrael, layed his hands upon him, and having preſented him to Eleazar the high-prieſt, and given him all neceſſary directions, and in particular, that of conſulting GOD upon all emergencies by the Urim and Thummim (C), he

(C) What the faſhion of the Urim and Thummim was, as far as can be known, ſhall be taken notice of when we come to ſpeak of the high-prieſt's garments, of which they were an appendage. In the mean time we beg leave to obſerve, that Joſhua could not be that prophet like Moſes whom GOD promiſed to raiſe, and commanded under ſevere penalties to obey (96), as our modern Jews affirm, and ſome Chriſtians, whom we forbear to name, have too eaſily granted. Joſhua was in many particulars inferior not only to Moſes, but likewiſe to the generality of the prophets, ſince he was to have recourſe to the Urim and Thummim upon all emergencies; whereas the former ſpoke to GOD face to face, and the latter were always ready to declare the mind of GOD to thoſe that came to conſult them. How could he therefore be the head, prophet, and director of ſuch a numerous nation, who wanted a director himſelf? Or, how could the people be charged to hear and obey him, who was himſelf to receive his orders from the high-prieſt? As for this divine oracle of Urim and Thummim, which in the original ſignifies light and perfection; and the Septuagint and Philo (97) render by the words δηλωσιν and ἀληθειαν manifeſtation and truth, as having thoſe two diſtinct virtues; it was not to be conſulted by private perſons, but only by the judges whilſt Iſrael was governed by them, and afterwards by the kings, or ſuch as were ſent by them, or, according to the Talmudiſts, by the אב בית דין, Ab-beth-din, or the head of the Sanhedrin (98), and even by the general in time of war, as in the caſe of Joſhua (99). Spencer indeed thinks, that the head of the nation alone, and he in his own perſon, was allowed to conſult the Urim (100); but the contrary ſeems more probable from David's conſulting the Lord by Abiathar, before he was ſettled upon the throne (1). However that be, this ceremony of conſulting by Urim, &c. was not performed without great ceremony. The high-prieſt alone was the perſon to apply to, he was to be dreſſed in his pontifical robes, particularly his breaſt-plate, and to go into the holy place, though not into the holy of holies, towards

(96) Deut. xviii. 15. Vid. John i. 45. Acts iii. 22. vii. 37. (97) In vit. Moſ. & lib. de monarchia, c, 2. (98) Talm. Tract. in יומא Joma, cap. 7 & § 5. Vid. Fag. in Exod. xxviii. Moſes & Aaron lib. iv. cap. 7. § 8. vid. & Judg. i. 1. (99) De Legib. ritual. Hebr. lib. iii. Diſſert. 7. c. 1. 8. & alib. (100) Vid. Meyer de feſt dieb. Hebr. cap. 4. § 43. & 51. (1) 1 Sam. xxiii. 4. xxx. 7. 8.

which he cauſed him to be proclaimed head and general of all Iſrael[r].

[r] Ibid. xxvii. 16. ad fin.

As which he was only to turn his face, when he enquired of the Lord. Again, he was not to be conſulted upon trivial matters, but upon thoſe of the greateſt moment, ſuch as concerned the public good, and upon any ſudden and unexpected emergency, as the Jews do prove from thoſe places of ſcripture where ſuch counſel was aſked (2). Laſtly things relating to faith or practice were not to be enquired by the Urim, becauſe they had the old precepts quoted by Iſaias (3), to the law and to the prophets.

But how this divine oracle gave its anſwer, whether by the unuſual luſtre of the ſtones in the breaſt plate, when the anſwer was favourable; and by their dimneſs in the contrary caſe, as Joſephus (4), and others after him, have imagined; or, as others think, by virtue of the name יהוה, written, or engraven, in, or between, the double breaſt-plate (5); or, 3dly, by the prominency of the letters engraved upon the twelve ſtones of it, which the high-prieſt being then inſpired knew how to range ſo as to give a true anſwer; which opinion is almoſt univerſally received by the Jewiſh Rabbies (6); (as for inſtance, they ſay, that when David enquired whether he ſhould go up into any of the cities of Judah, and the Lord anſwered עלה, go up (7), thoſe three letters became prominent above the reſt;) or laſtly, whether GOD anſwered the high-prieſt vivâ voce, by an articulate voice, from the mercy-ſeat, where the cherubims covered the ark of the teſtimony, called therefore the oracle (8); from whence GOD promiſed, that he would meet and commune with Moſes, or, as the original has it, inſtruct and talk with him; which notion is embraced, by the majority of Chriſtians, as being indeed the moſt probable and conſonant to ſome inſtances in the text relating to this matter, and eſpecially to that where the children of Iſrael are blamed for making a peace with the Gibeonites, without conſulting פי יהוה, the mouth of the Lord (9): all theſe opinions, we ſay, are liable to many objections, which we ſhall not trouble our readers with, but conclude with the ſaying of a wiſe Jewiſh Rabbi (10), that he is on the ſafeſt ſide, who roundly owns his ignorance in this point.

(2) Abarban. R. Levi. Ben. Gerſ. ap. Buxt. Hiſt. Urim & Thum. (3) Ch. viii. 20. Vid. Maimonid. Kele Hammikdaſh, cap. 10. (4) Ant. lib. 3. c. 9. (5) Rab. Salom. ap. D. Kimch. in Rad. vid. Exod. xxviii. 15. (6) Vid. Zohar. in Exod. ex lib. Jalkuth Sipbre R. Bechai in Deut. xxxiii. Maimon. ubi ſupr. & al. mult. (7) 2 Sam. ii. 1. (8) Exod. xxv. 22. & alib. (9) Joſh. ix. 14. Hoſ. iii. 4. (10) Kimch. in Rad.

How

As there elapsed somewhat above a month, between Moses's receiving the news of his death, and the day in which he

How long the Urim and Thummim continued is not so difficult to decide: the Jews in general agree, that it lasted no longer than the tabernacle. It is a maxim with them, that God delivered his oracles during the standing of it by Urim and Thummim; by the mouth of his prophets, during the first temple; and by the Bath-col from the Babylonish captivity to the destruction of the second. Spencer, who has espoused their opinion, has backed it with several arguments de congruo †; but what weighs more with us than all his reasoning, is, that we do not meet with one single instance of the Urim being consulted from the building of Solomon's temple; on the contrary, we read, that when Hilkiah the high-priest found the book of the law in Josiah's reign, and that good king was not a little perplexed at the terrible threatnings pronounced against the transgressors of it, he sent to consult the prophetess Huldah about it (11), which he needed not to have done had the Urim still subsisted. All that can be objected against it, is, that Moses, in blessing the tribe of Levi, prays, that the Urim and Thummim may continue with GOD's holy one (12): but this doth not imply, that it should do so whilst Levi continued a tribe. Some have urged that passage where the prophet threatens the Israelites, that they should abide without king, prince, image, ephod, or teraphim (13): but it doth not appear to us, that any of the three last have any relation to the Urim and Thummim. As for what Josephus says, that the stones of the Urim had lost their lustre but about two hundred years before he wrote (14); that is, about 112 years before Christ; we think it not worth confuting, since it is allowed on all hands, that it ceased at the Babylonish captivity, if not before, and that it was one of those things in which the second temple came short of the first (15), as Ezra and Nehemiah intimate plainly enough (16).

We shall dismiss this note with reminding our readers, that the Egyptians had an oracle, or teraphim, which they called truth. This is plain from the testimony of several antient writers (17); but as to the question, whether they had it from the Hebrews, or these from them, we shall refer them to what has been said before in cases of the like nature †. Those who are desirous to know more of the subject, may consult at their leisure the authors quoted in the margin (18).

† De Urim & Thum. c. 2 § 2. (11) 2 Kings xxiii. pass. (12) Deuter. xxxiii. 8. (13) Hos. iii. 4. (14) Jos. ubi supr. (15) Vid. Prideaux's Connect. part. i. lib. 3. (16) Ezra ii. 63. Nehem. vii. 65. (17) Vid. Ælian. var. Hist. lib. xiv. cap. 34. Diod. Sicul. lib. x. & al. † Vol. II. p. 367. note (R), & p. 556. note (Y), & p. 559. (Z). (18). Prideaux ubi supr. Curiæus, Basnag. Rep. Jud. tom. 1. lib. ii. c. 2. Le Clerc's Comm. in Exod. Saurin's Discourses on the Pentat. Calmet's Dict. sub. voc. Urim. Id. Comm. in Exod. & al.

expired,

expired, he ſpent the beſt part of that time in making ſome further regulations. Amongſt other things, he had the pleaſure to ſee the twelve thouſand men whom he had choſen, that is, a thouſand out of every tribe, return from the total overthrow of the Midianites, we mentioned a little before, loaden with the richeſt ſpoil, and to order the diſtribution of it: one half of which he allotted to the conquerors, and the other to thoſe who had not gone to the war, reſerving, as we ſaid before, one fiftieth part of each for the prieſts and Levites; which diſtribution ſeems to have paſt afterwards into a law [r]. What added ſtill more to his joy was, that the chief captains, upon a ſtrict enquiry, had not found one man miſſing of all that went upon this expedition, and expreſſed ſuch thankfulneſs for it, that they preſented to the Lord an offering of the gold-rings, bracelets, and ornaments which they had taken, amounting to the weight of ſixteen thouſand ſeven hundred and fifty ſhekels, all which was depoſited by Eleazer in the tabernacle as a monument of their gratitude [t]. It is likewiſe ſuppoſed, that it was during this interval, that he diſtributed the land of Sihon and Og to the two tribes and half [u].

Part of the Midianitiſh ſpoils offered to GOD.

AND now, as the Iſraelites were on the eve of entering into the promiſed land, no time could be more proper to remind them of his former commands, of driving out the Canaanites, and deſtroying their idols, temples, groves, and all the monuments of their idolatry; forewarning them at the ſame time, that in caſe they neglected to drive the inhabitants out of the land, they would prove as thorns in their ſides, and an inexhauſtible ſource of vexation and trouble, and of the ſevereſt puniſhments from GOD [w]. At the ſame time he appointed the limits of the land which they were to conquer, and the diſtribution of it by lot (D) according to GOD's Idols of Canaan to be deſtroyed.

The limits of the land appointed.

[r] Vid. Numb. xxxi. 28. 2 Maccab. viii. 28. [t] Numb. xxxi. 50. & ſeq. [u] USSER. Ann. p. 24. [w] Numb. xxxiii. 51. & ſeq.

(D) Nothing could be more prudently forecaſt than this partition of the land by lot, and making Joſhua and the high-prieſt the ſuperintendents of it, ſince it was the only one that could, and did, effectually prevent all murmurings and quarrels among that ſtubborn people. However, as the lots were to bear a proportion to the bigneſs of each tribe and family, it is ſuppoſed from what followed, that every tribe drew its lot for its own canton, after which there were proper perſons to meaſure out a quantity of land to each family, according to their bigneſs. But whether this laſt was

God's command, and committed the whole care of it to Joſhua and Eleazar the high-prieſt, at the head of the chiefs of every tribe [x], and they ſaw it punctually executed, as ſhall be ſhewn in its proper place. But though theſe limits did not reach beyond the land of Canaan, ſtrictly ſo called [y], yet he had added thereto all the land of the Amorites on the other ſide Jordan, with all the tract of ground which reached from the wilderneſs, the mountains of Lebanon, and the river Euphrates, unto the Mediterranean-ſea as far as the Nile. Some further directions were alſo given concerning the forty eight cities and their ſuburbs, or rather diſtricts, which were to be allotted to the tribe of Levi [z]; ſix of theſe were to be cities of refuge for the man-ſlayer to fly to, three of which were to be on the one ſide, and three on the other of Jordan; to which he added a permiſſion to appoint three more, whenever the enlargement of their borders ſhould make it neceſſary [a].

The nearer Moſes drew to his end, the more ſolicitous he was to compleat his arduous taſk. Accordingly on the firſt day of the eleventh month, anſwering to our ſaturday, February 20, of the fortieth year of the Exod [b], the Iſraelites being ſtill encamped in the plain of Moab, he aſſembled the people about him, and in a long and pathetic ſpeech recapitulated to them all that had happened ſince their departure out of Egypt till that time [c]. He adds indeed one circumſtance not taken notice of before, namely, his earneſt requeſt to God, that he might be admitted to go into the promiſed land, and his prayer being abſolutely denied [d]. All the reſt is what has been already ſaid in this ſection, except what relates to the laws he made, which we reſerve for another place. He concludes with exhorting them to continue faithful to God, and with the ſevereſt threatnings in caſe of diſobedience.

Moſes's ſpeech to the Iſraelites.

This ſpeech was ſoon followed by another of a much greater length [e], in which more particular mention is made of all God's mercies and judgments, promiſes and threatnings;

A ſecond ſpeech of Moſes.

[x] Numb. xxxiii 54. [y] Joſh. i. 4. & ſeq. [z] Numb. xxxv. paſſ.
[a] Numb xxxv. 13. [b] Vid. Usser. Ann. p. 24. [c] Deut.
i. ii, iii, & iv. ad ver. 4. [d] Ibid. ch. iii. 23. & ſeq. [e] Ibid.
from ch. iv, to xxvii.

done by this, or by any other method, whether the ſubdiviſions between the families were likewiſe carried on by lot or otherwiſe, ſure it is, that we do not read, that it occaſioned any broils or jealouſies among them (19).

(19) Vid. Joſh. xiv. xv. & ſeq.

and

and wherein the bleſſings and curſes, which were to be the fruit of their obedience, or diſobedience, are expreſſed in the ſtrongeſt and moſt lively terms; after which he reminded them of the continual murmurings and rebellions of their fathers, and the ſevere judgments that followed them. Thoſe he interſperſed with a ſummary of all the laws which the divine providence had calculated for their welfare, in which thoſe of the decalogue are repeated almoſt word for word (E); which he concludes with a moſt elegant deſcription of the ſolemn and dreadful manner in which they were delivered from mount Sinai. He cloſes the whole with a moſt pathetic exhortation to obedience, and a ſubmiſſive reliance on that amazing goodneſs, that had ſo graciouſly choſen them

(E) All the difference betwixt thoſe two places is in the fourth commandment: in this Moſes expreſſes the injunction thus; keep the ſabbath-day in order to ſanctify it, as, or, in the manner, in which the Lord has commanded; unto which he ſubjoins theſe two reaſons, namely, firſt, that the ſervants might enjoy the benefit of reſt as well as their maſters; and ſecondly, that GOD had appointed that day of reſt, to put them in mind that they had been ſervants in Egypt, out of which the Lord had brought them, with a mighty hand and ſtretched-out arm, for that is the plain meaning of the text here; whereas in Exodus, theſe two reaſons were omitted, and another given which is not mentioned here, namely, that GOD ſanctified the ſeventh day, becauſe in it he had reſted or ceaſed from his work of creation. From this ſeeming difference and ſome other arguments foreign to our preſent purpoſe, ſome divines have inferred, with ſome probability at leaſt, that not the ſeventh, but a ſeventh day, or one in ſeven, had been inſtituted at, and obſerved from, the creation till the Exod, and if ſo, moſt likely the firſt day of the ſeven; but that in memory of this great deliverance, it was ſuperſeded and changed into the ſeventh day, on which it was to continue till a much nobler redemption, namely, that which Chriſt wrought for us, made the leſſer give place to it; at which time it was to return to its firſt inſtitution (20). We ſhall not take upon us to affirm any thing in ſo delicate a point; only this, we beg leave to obſerve, that nothing can ſo well account for appointing the obſervation of the Moſaic ſabbath in ſo indolent and inactive a manner, as the reaſon here given, that when they found the ſweetneſs of reſt, and enjoyed it even beyond what nature required, they might be the more ſenſible of the goodneſs of GOD, in delivering them from that thraldom in which their labours, though beyond meaſure exceſſive, had been without the leaſt intermiſſion †.

(20) Vid. Bedford's Chronol. p. 298. § 13. 378, & ſeq. † Vid. Vol. II. p. 465. (C).

before any other nation of the world, not for any merit of theirs, but that he might display his almighty power in favour of them, in order to be glorified by them and future ages, as well for the great mercies he had shewed to them, as for the heavy punishments he had inflicted upon the neighbouring nations for their wickedness and idolatry [f]. And lest their prosperity should in time make them forget their divine benefactor, he prescribed unto them a form of confession, which they were to make every year, when they came to offer the first fruits of their land; in which they were to acknowledge their having received it from GOD. It was prefaced with these remarkable words, A Syrian, ready to perish, was my father, and went down into Egypt; then follows a short account of the Egyptian bondage, their deliverance from it, and induction into a land flowing with milk and honey; and concludes with begging, that GOD would accept of this offering as a thankful acknowledgment for it [g].

A form of acknowledgment prescribed.

After this he directed Joshua and the elders how to erect a copious altar upon mount Ebal, of unhewn stones covered over with plaister, upon which they should write a fair transcript of all these laws, copies of which he delivered to the Levites to keep (F) [h]; and how to set up the blessings and curses

Blessings and curses to be set up on mount Ebal and Gerizim.

[f] Deut. ix. pass. xxxii. pass. & al.
[g] Ibid. xxvi. pass.
[h] Ibid. xxvii. 5. & seq. xxxi. 9.

(F) The words which our version renders, to write very plain, and we, by a fair transcript, are in the original באר היטב Baer-hetebb, in the infinitive mood, that is, in order to be distinctly and easily read. What the contents of this law were, which was to be thus written or engraven upon the altar, or more probably along the sides of it, is not agreed. For whilst some will have it to be the whole Pentateuch, which the Jews call by way of excellency התורה, Hathorah, the law (21), and Josephus mentions only the blessings and curses (22), others as absurdly confine it to the bare decalogue; but the most probable opinion is, that it was that summary of all the laws which is contained in the book of Deuteronomy. Accordingly, when it is said there (23), that the kings of Israel shall be obliged to write a copy of this law with their own hand, it is more likely to have meant those that are contained in Deuteronomy, than either the whole Pentateuch or the bare decalogue, not only because the former contains

(21) Ma'imon Halak Melak. Jos. Karo. Keseph Mishn. Vid. R. Simeon in Talkul. & al mult. S. August. in Deut. xvii. 18. Grot. ibid Danhawer. Schikard. & al. in loc. (22) Ant. lib. iv. c. 8. (23) Deut. xvii. 18.

curſes upon mount Ebal and Gerizim, in full ſight of all Iſrael, ſix tribes of which, namely Reuben, Gad, Aſher, Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali, ſhould ſtand upon the former, and thoſe of Simeon, Levi, Judah, Iſſachar, Joſeph, and Benjamin on the latter, and ſhould alternately anſwer amen to all the bleſſings and curſes when they proclaimed and ſet them up there, which was accordingly done in Joſhua's time [i], as we ſhall ſee in the ſequel. And that there might be nothing wanting in theſe his laſt inſtructions, he preſcribed a kind of exhortation, which was to be ſpoken aloud at the head of the army, by a prieſt appointed for that purpoſe (G), whenever they were going to engage their enemies, in order to inſpire the people with an unſhaken truſt in GOD, and aſſurance of victory. He ordered likewiſe, that a proclamation ſhould be made at the ſame time by proper officers, to permit not only all that had left a wife, houſe, or vineyard unenjoyed, but even all thoſe whoſe fear or puſillanimity might diſcourage the reſt, to return home. And laſtly, how they ſhould behave themſelves towards thoſe cities that accepted of their profer-red peace, and thoſe which rejected it [k].

[i] Joſh. viii. 33. & ſeq. [k] Deut. xx.

contains the ſum and ſubſtance of all the laws in the other four books of Moſes, but likewiſe becauſe they are here enforced by the moſt powerful motives (24).

(G) This prieſt was either then, or in proceſs of time called אמרכל Amercol, from Amar, to ſpeak, and Col, all, becauſe he was to direct his ſpeech to the whole army. And though the Jewiſh nation hath had no need of ſuch an orator of a very long ſeaſon, yet they ſtill retain the name and notion of it in their game of cheſs, which, with regard to the analogy it bears to a fighting army, differs only from ours in their diviſion of each opponent's ſide into church and ſtate, and calling the former by eccleſiaſtic names, as follows: the queen is with them the כוהן גדול Cohen-gadol, or high-prieſt. Her biſhop is the סגן Sagan, or the next in dignity to the high-prieſt. The knight they ſtyle כוהן משוח Cohen Maſhuach, by which is meant that prieſt that was anointed by the high one for the war, in order to ſupply his place, whenever GOD was to be conſulted by Urim; and the laſt, or the rook, is the Amercol above-mentioned. As for thoſe on the king's ſide, they name the firſt his vicegerent, or the ſecond perſon to him, the ſecond his יועץ Jobatz, his counſellor, and the laſt is his generaliſſimo (25).

(24) Vid Le Scen. Eſſay on a N. Verſ. p. 92. Abarb. Luther. & al. (25) Vid. Dr. Hyde's Shahilud.

He

The old covenant ratified by the whole nation.

HE ſoon after aſſembled the whole nation, men, women, and children, in order to make them renew the covenant which their fathers had made with GOD in Horeb; and as he enforced the obſervance of it by the moſt engaging motives, ſo did he at the ſame time endeavour to deter them from the breach of it by ſuch threatnings, as proved no leſs than prophetical of thoſe miſerable ſlaveries which they underwent afterwards for their diſobedience [1], not only during the time of the judges and the Babyloniſh captivity, but much more ſince their rejection of the Meſſiah. There was one remarkable thing in this prophetic warning which ought not to be paſſed by, which was, that under whatever captivity and diſperſion they happened to groan, if they applied themſelves to GOD by prayer and an humble acknowledgment of their ſins, they ſhould ſtill be delivered from it. This was exactly verified by the event, for they no ſooner turned to GOD, but he either ſent them a deliverer ſoon after, as in the time of the judges, or ſome prophets to comfort them during their captivity, and to fix the time of its duration; as in that of Babylon. This needs not to be wondered at; the crimes, for which they ſuffered in theſe, Idolatry, murders, rapine, extortion, and the like, were of too glaring a nature, not to force the deepeſt remorſe and acknowledgment, whenever they ſmarted for them. It was far otherwiſe in their laſt ſin, their rejection of the Meſſiah; his mean birth and appearance, his ſufferings and death, and many other diſadvantageous circumſtances, were ſo oppoſite to thoſe glorious notions they had imbibed of him, and his religion ſo pure and ſpiritual, that their prejudices made them eaſily overlook all the viſible proofs he gave of his divine miſſion. And after they had once condemned him, they had too great a notion of their own ſagacity and uprightneſs, ever to feel, or at leaſt own, the injuſtice of the deed. We may add, that their poſterity has followed their ſteps and has been ſo far from ſuppoſing, that the Sanhedrin could have been guilty of ſo fatal a miſtake, and ſo horrid a crime, as the rejecting and murthering the Meſſiah, that they are ſtill fully perſuaded, that it would have been the very firſt that would have acknowledged him. This is the ſource of their unbelief, and ſince they have ever ſince rather gloried in that deed, than acknowledged and repented of it, we need ſeek no farther for the cauſe, why their captivity and diſperſion has proved ſo ſevere, of ſo long a duration, and without the leaſt comfortable prophecy, or even [1] Ibid. xxix. paſſ.

proſpect

proſpect of GOD's putting an end to it. But to return; Moſes having cauſed this covenant to be ratified by the whole aſſembly, no doubt with a ſuitable ſolemnity, he commanded the Levites to depoſite a copy of it, which he delivered to them, in the ark, and concluded with calling heaven and earth to witneſs for the truth of what they had heard from him, for the reaſonableneſs of thoſe laws which GOD had given them, and for the certainty of thoſe bleſſings or curſes, which would infallibly follow the keeping or the breach of them [m]. However, in order to fix theſe important truths more ſtrongly in their minds, he compoſed a pſalm or canticle, in which they are expreſſed in the moſt elegant and lively language, and having cauſed it to be read before all the people, he delivered it to Joſhua, to be hereafter learned by heart by them and their poſterity. This inimitable piece of antient poetry, as far as our language can reach to the beauty of the original, is thus prefaced [n]: Moſes's ſong.

Attend ye heavens, whilſt I ſpeak, give ear O earth to the words of my mouth. The preface of it engliſhed.

Let my doctrine deſcend like drops of rain, and my ſpeech diſtil as the dew.

Let them fall as a gentle ſhower upon the tender herb, and as the rain that falls upon the graſs.

And, whilſt I invoke the name JEHOVAH, reſound the greatneſs of our GOD.

His works, even the works of this our ſtrong rock, are perfect, and all his ways are equity.

He is a faithful GOD, without deceit, for he is juſt and righteous. And ſo on (H).

THE

[m] Deut. xxx. and xxxi. [n] Ibid. xxxii. ad ver. 45.

(H) We beg leave to aſſure our readers, who do not underſtand the Hebrew tongue, that we have not departed from our verſion in the ſketch we have given of this incomparable ſong, with any other deſign than to come up ſomewhat nearer to the genius and beauties of the original than that doth, though we own it impoſſible to come up wholly to it; for which reaſon we willingly excuſe ourſelves from going farther in the verſion. The Jews do juſtly eſteem it a moſt elegant epitome of the whole Pentateuch, becauſe it makes mention of the greatneſs and magnificence of GOD, of the creation of the world, of the deluge, of the confuſion of tongues, and diſperſion of the nations, of the call of Abraham, and of his poſterity, and of all that the divine goodneſs had done for them; of their murmurings, rebellions, idolatries, and of their inheriting the promiſed land; of the worſhip of the one only true GOD, of the reſurrection

THE lecture of this divine ſong being ended, Moſes went on with acquainting the people, that, ſince it was not the will of GOD that he ſhould go with them into the promiſed land, they muſt now look upon Joſhua as their leader, aſſuring them, that they could not fail of ſucceſs in their conqueſt of it, provided they faithfully obſerved the covenant which they had ſo lately renewed with GOD. He then delivered a written inſtrument of it, and a duplicate of the laws to be preſerved in the ark, with an order, that this latter ſhould be publickly read before the whole aſſembly at the feaſt of the tabernacles, every ſabbatic or ſeventh year °. He added ſome few laws, one againſt falſe prophets, another againſt magic, and a third for the expiation of murder, when the author of it could not be diſcovered.

His laſt bleſſing to the twelve tribes.

And now his talk being at an end, and GOD having commanded him to go up to mount Nebo, and to reſign his commiſſion with his ſoul there, as ſoon as he had taken a view of the promiſed land; he had now nothing left to do but to gather the tribes about him, and to pronounce his prophetic bleſſing upon them. The text tells us, that he was a hundred and twenty years old, and that neither his ſight nor his natural ſtrength were in the leaſt impaired; and we may add, that, if one may judge of that of his mind by the ſtyle of this his laſt ſpeech, and by the beauty and energy of the expreſſions, it ſeems to have received an addition at the ſight of his departure, and of his people's approaching happineſs. The preface and concluſion of it are couched in as ſtrong and elegant terms, as the moſt divine enthuſiaſm could inſpire a prophet with. However, as we have already ſpoken of it in another place, and ſhewed how it agreed with that of Jacob †, which we there endeavoured to explain throughout, we ſhall not dwell any longer upon it at preſent. And here it will not be amiſs to obſerve, that our Engliſh verſion was certainly right to inſert the word not in the latter part of the 6th verſe of this chapter, *, let Reuben live and not die, and let not ſurrection of the dead, and of the future life. But we much queſtion whether theſe two laſt will be ſo univerſally granted unto them, as all the reſt may and actually is, becauſe the words from which they prove them, the Lord killeth and maketh alive (26), may eaſily admit of another ſenſe, it being commonly uſed for preſerving alive, and even for forbearing to kill.

° Ibid. xxxi. 10. & ſeq. † Vid. Vol. II. 439 & ſeq. * xxxiii.

(26) Deut. xxxii. 39.

his

his men be few; which is certainly the true ſenſe according to the genius of the original, which often omits that negative in the ſecond hemiſtic, though any verſion that did not ſupply it would make it ſpeak contrary to its plain meaning [p]. This is what the Septuagint and Vulgate have done, in order to render this latter part of the verſe applicable to the tribe of Simeon, of which Moſes had made no mention throughout this prophecy; but herein 'tis plain they miſtook the ſenſe of the text, not only from what we have juſt now hinted, but alſo becauſe being few in number would have been a curſe rather than a bleſſing, and was more particularly eſteemed ſuch by the Iſraelites; in which caſe that tribe alone would have been curſed, whilſt all the reſt were highly bleſſed, whereas they are ſaid to be all bleſſed in the very firſt verſe; beſides it is certain, that Simeon had his bleſſing, ſince he had an inheritance allotted to him as well as the reſt [q]. We need not therefore look for any other myſtery or reaſon for this omiſſion of Moſes, than that this tribe was wholly intermixed with that of Judah, according to their father's prophecy [r], and conſequently ſhared in all its bleſſings, thoſe only excepted which Jacob had confined to the latter; and hence it came to paſs, that theſe two tribes did generally go hand in hand in all their expeditions [s].

Why Simeon is omitted in this bleſſing.

THE Jewiſh lawgiver had no ſooner ended this prophetic ſpeech, than he obeyed the divine call, and in the ſight of all Iſrael went up to mount Nebo, from the ſummit of which he beheld all the land which GOD had promiſed to Abraham's poſterity. Joſephus adds [t], that he was accompanied by Joſhua, Eleazar and the ſeventy, to the mount, and that, whilſt the two firſt were taking their ſorrowful farewel of him, a cloud conveyed him away into a certain valley; but the text ſeems rather to intimate that he went up alone. Be that how it will, the author of this laſt chapter, whoever he was, aſſures us, that he died immediately after, and that the Lord conveyed him into a valley in the land of Moab, over againſt Beth-peor (I), and there buried him in ſo private a place, Moſes goes up to mount Nebo.

His death, burial and character.

[p] Compare Pſ. vi. 1: and xxxviii. 1, See alſo Pſ. ix. 18. as theyare in our bibles. [q] Joſh. xix. 1. 1 Cron. iv. 24. & ſeq. [r] Gen. xlix. 7. Vid Vol. II. p. 440. note (F). [s] Judg. i. 3. & ſeq. Vid. JUN. in Deut. xxxiii. 6. [t] Ant. lib. iv. c. 8.

(I) Though the text ſays, in the land of Moab (27), yet, it is plain, as the learned primate of Ireland obſerves, by comparing

(27) Deut. xxxiv. 5, 6. & alib. compared with Num. xxi. 26. Deut. iv. 46. Joſh. xiii. 20.

a place, that his ſepulchre was not known at the time of his writing [u]; to which we may add, that it never was diſcovered ſince [w]. Several inſpired penmen, and apocryphal writers, have ſince given us the character of this truly great lawgiver, beſides the above-mentioned Joſephus; but none has expreſſed it in fewer and ſtronger terms, than the author of theſe additions in the three laſt verſes of this chapter (K). His death happened theſe with other places of ſcripture, that this valley was in the land of Sihon king of the Amorites, which the Iſraelites took from him, and aſſigned to the tribe of Reuben; and therefore, when it is here, and elſewhere, called the land of Moab, it can mean no more than the land which Sihon had conquered from them, and the Iſraelites from him (28).

[u] Deut. xxxiv. 6. [w] Vid. HORN. Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. BASNAG. Continuat. JOSEPH. tom. IV. lib. vi. c. 17. art. 13. BARTOLOC. Bibliot. Rabbin. tom. III. p. 928. & ſeq. CALM. Diſſert. on the death and burial of Moſes, at the head of his Epit. Canoniq. & al.

(K) Nothing is plainer from the text, than that Moſes did really die and was buried; and Joſephus tells us (29), according to our copies of him, that the ſcripture affirms him to be dead, leſt people ſhould think, becauſe of the excellency of his perſon, that he was ſtill alive and with GOD; notwithſtanding which, the ſuperſtitious Jews have fallen into various notions about it; ſome abſolutely denying his death, and others, without taking notice of that circumſtance; affirming him to have been tranſlated into heaven (30). Thoſe of the Chriſtians who have embraced this wild notion, do ground it upon his appearing with Elias, at the transfiguration upon mount Tabor (31), and upon that conteſt which Michael and the devil had about his body, which we find mentioned by St. Jude (32); though the moſt probable inference that can be made from ſuch a diſpute, if any ſuch there was, is, that the devil wanted to bring Moſes's body to light, that he might thereby enſnare the people to idolatry, or rather to λάτρειαν, the worſhip of relics, which therefore Michael oppoſed with a zeal worthy of an archangel (33). However, this circumſtance ſeems, in all probability, to be quoted by the apoſtle from an apocryphal book, intitled περὶ Ἀναλήψεως Μωύσεως, or the aſſumption of Moſes; ſomething like which we find in ſome Jewiſh writings (34). Other rabbies, though they believe that he was ſo far dead, as that there was a ſeparation of ſoul and body, yet deny his dying a common death, becauſe he is ſaid to have died על פי יהוה, that is, as we rightly tranſlate it,

(28) Vid. Uſſer. Ann. p. 25. (29) Ant. loc. citat. (30) Vid. Maimon. procem. ad Talmud. (31) Mat. xvii. 1. & ſeq. (32) Jud. ver. 9. Vid. Fabric. Apoc. Vet. Teſt. (33) Uſſer. Ann. ubi ſup. & auct. ab eo citat. (34) Vid. R. Nathan. פרקי אבות

according happened on the firſt day (according to Joſephus and archbiſhop Uſher ‡, or on the ſeventh according to the generality of the ‡ Ant. & Ann. ubi ſup.

according to the word of the Lord; but according to their literal ſenſe of it, upon the mouth of the Lord; from which they affirm, that Moſes having begged of GOD not to deliver up his ſoul to the angel of death, breathed it out in a kiſs, which the Lord was pleaſed to give him (35).

As to his writings, beſides the Pentateuch, which is univerſally received by Jews and Chriſtians, as penned by him, if we except Abenezra and Spinoza, among the former, and ſome late writers among the latter, if their avowed principles can permit us to call them Chriſtians, who denied him to be the author of it, and have been learnedly confuted by a late author (36); beſides the books, I ſay commonly called the five books of Moſes, there have been ſome other works attributed to him, though without any certainty, ſuch as the book of Job, of which we have already ſpoken in another place †. eleven pſalms, viz. 90, 91, 92, and ſo on to the 100th. Origen believes him to have tranſlated the book of Job from the Syriac into Hebrew (37); though he is ſcarce followed by either Jew or Chriſtian. A few fragments of other books are likewiſe quoted by ſome of the antients, as wrote by him; ſuch as, 1. His Apocalypſe, out of which St. Paul is by them ſuppoſed to have taken thoſe words (38), for in Chriſt Jeſus neither circumciſion availeth any thing, &c. 2. His leſſer Geneſis. 3. His aſcenſion. 4. Aſſumption, mentioned a little above. 5. His teſtament, and ſome other myſterious books (39).

Some Rabbies attribute to him likewiſe a treatiſe entitled באר, משה Beer Moſheh, or באר חכמה Beer Chokmah, the fountain of wiſdom (40). As for the leſſer Geneſis, St. Jerom, who quotes a paſſage or two out of it, tells us, that they had it in Hebrew in his time (41). The Sethites, an ancient ſect of heretics, quoted likewiſe two of the aforementioned books, namely his teſtament, and his myſterious books or diſcourſes, but all theſe were ſo far from bearing any authority in the church, that they fell into contempt and oblivion, as faſt as chriſtianity prevailed.

The wonders of his life have been no leſs multiplied by the Rabbies than his writings; we ſhall juſt hint ſome of them. They (35) Vid. Gaulmin's פטירת-משה. (36) Abbadie Verit. de la Relig. Chretienne pt. 1. † Vid. Vol. II. p. 481. (37) Orig. in Job. (38) Galat. v. 6. vi. 15. (39) Syncell. ex parv. Gen. Pet. Crimit. De honeſt. Diſcipl. lib. xvii. c. 1. Clem. Alexand. ex Eupolem. Stromat. lib. i. Iſidor. Hiſpal. lib. i. Orig. c. iii. Cedren. Glycaſ. & al. vid. etiam Fabric. de Apoc. V. T. (40) R. Shabtai Strim. vid. & Wolf. Bib. Rabbin. Numb. 1582. (41) Epiſt. 127. ad Fabiol. Manſ. 18. & 24. Vid. Calm. Hiſt. V. Teſt. t. i. p. penult.

the latter Jews) * of the twelfth month, which is called Adar, and in the hundred and twentieth of his age; the laſt forty of which tell us, that he was born circumciſed: that Pharaoh's daughter, whom they call Bathia, being all over leprous, was cured by the touching of the little ark in which he was expoſed: that at three years of age ſhe brought him to her father, from whoſe head he took the crown to put it upon his own, for which Balaam, who was then at that court, adviſed Pharaoh to put him to death, but the other magicians choſe rather to try firſt whether this action was deſignedly done by him, or through childiſhneſs; upon which they ſet before him ſome diamonds and burning coals, and the angel Gabriel forced his hands towards the coals, one of which he put to his mouth, and burnt himſelf, which was the occaſion of his ſtuttering, and that he ſaved his life by it. That he was afterwards condemned to loſe his head for the murder of the Egyptian, but that his neck became ſo hard, that the ſword, inſtead of hurting him, recoiled with ſuch force, that it killed the executioner; and that the king becoming dumb on a ſudden, and the reſt of the ſpectators being ſtruck blind or deaf, gave Moſes an opportunity of running away without oppoſition.

* Vid. Sedar holam Rab. cap. 10. MAIMON. Præf. ad. Miſnaioth, &c.

Being retired to the king of Æthiopia, who was then in Armenia, and Balaam having cauſed an inſurrection in Æthiopia, Moſes put himſelf at the head of the king's army, and beſieged Balaam in the metropolis, who endeavoured by his magic to obſtruct his approach, by an innumerable multitude of ſerpents, which he cauſed to ſurround the city; but Moſes having charmed them, took the town, married the queen whoſe conſort had been killed at the war, and reigned in Æthiopia forty years, till his queen complaining of his coldneſs towards her, cauſed a rebellion, which obliged him to retire to Jethro, where he got the miraculous rod, of which we gave an account in a former note ‡, and married his daughter Zipporah: that her father having ſtipulated that her firſt-born ſon ſhould not be circumciſed, two angels were ſent by GOD, who ſwallowed him up to the place of circumciſion, which made Zipporah retrieve the fault, and ſave her huſband by the circumciſion of her ſon.

As for the manner in which they ſay that Moſes received the divine law, it is ſo abſurd that we ſhould not trouble our readers with it, were it not to point out to them the ſpring from which Mohammed did pump out all the rhapſodies of his Kôran. Theſe grave gentlemen thought it not enough for their lawgiver to have gone up and received it upon mount Sinai, but they make him take a journey to heaven in a cloud; and add, that he met in his

‡ Vid. Vol. II. p. 499. note (Z)

way

which, the laſt month excepted, he had ſpent in the government of the Iſraelites. The people mourned for him one whole way Kemuel the chief of a legion of angels, who endeavoured to come up to him, but that he was repulſed ſome thouſands of miles back, by his pronouncing the name of GOD, conſiſting of twelve letters. Soon after this he was terribly frighted by the angel Adarniel's voice, which was ſo dreadful, that it was echoed from no leſs than two hundred thouſand ſpheres, all ſurrounded with a white fire. Moſes was juſt ready to run away, when GOD heartened him up again, and bid him put the ſpirit to flight by pronouncing the name of GOD written with ſeventy two letters, which made him cry out as he fled; how happy art thou Moſes to know thoſe things which the very angels are ignorant of. They add that the two tables which Moſes brought down from heaven being made of the fineſt ſaphire-ſtone, he enriched himſelf exceedingly by the chips that fell off in the carving and poliſhing of them; which is no great wonder, if they were ten or twelve cubits high, as ſome of them pretend (42).

The Mohammedans have not only embraced all theſe rabbinical dreams, but have very much improved them. The reader may remember what they ſay concerning this laſt circumſtance of the two tables being brought from heaven and carried thither again †. We ſhall not trouble the reader with any more of their reveries, thoſe who are fond of ſuch things, may find them at large in Monſieur Herbelot's Bibliotheca Orientalis, under the article Mouſſe (43). In the mean time as the character of this lawgiver has been univerſally known by the antients, ſo has it been as much leſſened and blackened by ſome, as it has been exaggerated by others beyond all modeſty and truth, according to their different prejudices and intereſts. Joſephus in his book againſt Apion (44), has not only recorded, but fully anſwered all that Manetho had ſaid to leſſen the glory of it; and what that learned Jew has ſaid there, will equally confute what Juſtin out of Trogus has ſaid of him (45). On the other hand ſome late authors, by comparing what we read of Moſes with what the fables tell us of Bacchus, Mercury, &c. have found ſo near a reſemblance in the characters, that they have not ſcrupled to affirm, that the heathens had applied what they had read of the former to the latter, concerning which the reader may, if he pleaſes, conſult the learned Huetius's Demonſtratio Evangelica, a work which could hardly have met with ſuch a ſtrenuous and bitter oppoſition from the Carteſian philoſophers, had it bore any other title than that of demonſtration.

(42) Vid. Elleſham rab. in Exod. xxxiv. Reb. Saf. in loc. Pirke Aboth. Phetirath Moſhe. Six. Sienn. & al. ap. Calm. dict. ſub voc. Moiſe. † Vid Vol. II. 561. at the end of note (A). (43) P. 647. & ſeq. (44) Lib. i. (45) Lib. xxxvi.

month.

month, according to the cuſtom of the nation for the death of any eminent perſon, after which Joſhua entered into his office, and ſoon after that into the land of Canaan, as ſhall be ſhewn in the next ſection.

IN the mean time it will be proper to obſerve here, that the ceremony of circumciſion was diſcontinued during the whole time of their abode in the wilderniſs [y]; for which no proper reaſon can be well aſſigned, unleſs it be either becauſe their frequent moving from place to place would have made it dangerous for thoſe children who were circumciſed before a march, or that, the deſign of circumciſion being to keep the people in from intermingling with other nations, it became leſs neceſſary in the wilderneſs, where they were in leſs danger of ſuch a mixture [z]. But neither of theſe reaſons is ſatisfactory; for as to the firſt, beſides that their marches happened but ſeldom during the laſt thirty eight years, as we obſerved before †, it would have been more ſafe to have diſpenſed with the time, and, inſtead of the eighth day, to have performed it on the next encampment, than to have wholly omitted it, ſeeing there were ſome particular bleſſings belonging to it, which they were deprived of that died without it. For which reaſon therefore it did not become leſs neceſſary, though the preventing a mixture were allowed to have been the main deſign of its inſtitution. For that could not authoriſe them to diſpenſe with a poſitive precept, though none of thoſe neighbouring nations had been circumciſed, which was not the caſe, ſeeing the Edomites, and perhaps alſo the Midianites, were. But whatever be the reaſon of this omiſſion, one may conclude from it, that that ceremony was not ſo neceſſary to ſalvation as ſome, both Chriſtians and Jews, have imagined; among the latter of which, ſome have run to ſuch an extreme of ſuperſtition, as to cauſe thoſe children of theirs, that happened to die before they were circumciſed, to receive it before they buried them.

BEFORE we diſmiſs this ſection, it will be expected, no doubt, that we ſhould give ſome account of the order and manner of encamping and marching uſed by the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, becauſe it is not only curious, but uſeful, in order to underſtand ſeveral places of holy writ that allude to it, both in the old and new teſtament [a], eſpecially in the

[y] Joſh v. 2. & ſeq. [z] BASNAG. Rep. Hebr. Tom. I lib iii. c. 3. LE CLERC. GROT. & SAURIN, &c. † Vid. ſup. p. 9. [a] See Sir ISAAC NEWT. Obſerv. upon the prophecies, p. 259. & alib. MED. Clav. prophet. paſſ. & al.

prophetical

prophetical books. It is plain from the ſhort account which Moſes has left us of it [b], that it was preſcribed to him by God himſelf. And indeed, if we conſider their vaſt multitude, their untoward genius, the great mixture of other nations that joined themſelves to them, and the quantity of lumber which they were forced to carry with them, we can hardly ſuppoſe, that any man, how wiſe and experienced ſoever, could be equal to ſuch a taſk without a ſupernatural aſſiſtance. 'Tis true indeed, that the word wilderneſs, by which the ſcene of their forty years wandering is called, ought not to be taken too literally, ſeeing they did generally encamp near inhabited towns and villages, whoſe territories could furniſh them with proviſions for themſelves, and paſture for their cattle, and when that failed, they were often miraculouſly ſupplied; but nevertheleſs, to provide for all other exigencies, which muſt needs be ſuppoſed to happen in ſuch a numberleſs hoſt, to ſettle ſuch excellent order and diſcipline in it, as to prevent confuſion, diſorders, and defection, to breed up ſuch a number of excellent ſoldiers, and to teach them to encamp and decamp, to march and to fight in ſo regular a manner as they did, whatever Moſes might have learned from the Egyptians, who underſtood doubtleſs as much of the art of war as any other nation then did, ſeems ſtill to have been above the power of a mere man. And this conſideration ſhould, one would think, ſtop the mouths of thoſe who can find nothing of military art worth admiring, except in the antient Greeks and Romans.

HOWEVER as the ſubject has been copiouſly handled by other pens [c], who have been forced to ſupply the ſuccinct account of Moſes out of the writings of the Talmudiſts and other antient Jews, not to ſay ſometimes out of their own heads; we hope, our readers will eaſily excuſe us from launching farther into theſe particularities, than we have good grounds for from holy writ. Though where we find any thing in the Talmud, Joſephus, or any of the Rabbies, that carries a face of probability, or gives any light to the account we have in the text, we ſhall venture to give it in a note.

THE text tells us, that they were to pitch their tents every man by his own camp, tribe, and ſtandard, throughout the whole hoſt: that the tribe of Levi was to encamp round the tabernacle, and have the charge and cuſtody of it; and that

[b] Num. i. 51. & ſeq. [c] BASNAG. ex CUNÆO. Rep Hebr. Tom. II. c 18. CALM. & al.

the

the reſt of the tribes ſhould pitch their ſtandards with the enſigns of their father's houſe round about it, at an equal and convenient diſtance from it[d]. This diſtance, let it have been what it would (L), compoſed not a perfect ſquare, becauſe the tabernacle and its court were oblong, much leſs a circle, as ſome have fancied it, from the word round about taken too literally, but an oblong ſquare, in the centre of which was the tabernacle with its court in length one hundred, and, in breadth fifty cubits[e]. Parallel to each of the four ſides of it, and at a proper diſtance between it and the other tribes, was that of Levi; along the eaſt end was Eleazar the high-prieſt, with the reſt of the family of Aaron, at the head of the four claſſes of Levites. As for Moſes's pavilion, all that he has told us of it, is only, that it ſtood on the ſame ſide with thoſe of Aaron's children[f]; though we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that it was in the moſt honourable place of the whole camp, as he was their chief and lawgiver, and neareſt the tabernacle, to which he was obliged to repair upon all emergencies; but whether we may conclude [d] Num. i. 52. & ſeq. ii. 1, 2. & ſeq. [e] Vid. Exod. xxvii. 18. [f] Num. iii. 38.

(L) The Rabbies affirm this diſtance of the tents of the tribes, except that of Levi, to have been two thouſand cubits, which they therefore call a ſabbath-day's journey, becauſe they were not allowed to go farther on that day. This was the diſtance between Jeruſalem and the mount of Olives (46). This ſpace of two thouſand cubits ſeems well grounded, it being the diſtance which GOD commanded the people to keep from the ark, when they were on their march. They affirm moreover, that there was likewiſe a diſtance of three miles between every tribe, which if true muſt form a ſquare of near thirty ſix miles about. Joſephus indeed doth not tell us what that diſtance was, but he calls it a great one, and adds, that there were as ſpacious ſtreets, lanes, markets, ſhops, &c. in the camp, and in as regular an order, as could be ſeen in the moſt polite cities (47). However, the moſt rational Jews extend not this diſtance between tribe and tribe beyond two thouſand paces, nor that which each tribe took up beyond four thouſand (48). To which they add, that in the centre of the camp there was a ſpace of eight thouſand paces ſquare, of which the inmoſt four thouſand was for the tabernacle, and the tribe of Levi; and the reſidue, which was between theſe and the other tribes, was for paſture ground for their cattle.

(46) Vid. Acts i. 12. (47) Ant. l. iii. c. 12. (48) Vid. Baſnag. ex Cun. Rep. Heb. tom. ii. c. 18.

from

from his ſituation, that the tabernacle ſtood eaſt and weſt, that is, with the holy of holies towards the eaſt, and the entrance into it facing the weſt, as Cunæus and others do [g], is not very material. 2. On the weſt ſide were the Gerſhonites under Eliſaph the ſon of Lael, in number ſeven thouſand five hundred: 3. The Kohathites under Elizaphan, the ſon of Uzziel, in number eight thouſand ſix hundred: and laſtly, the Merarites under Zuriel, the ſon of Abihail, in number ſix thouſand two hundred; and theſe two laſt encamped along the ſouth and north ſides. All theſe together made an army of twenty two thouſand three hundred † (M). Each of theſe had their particular functions and charges allotted to them, both as to the worſhip of God, and the cuſtody of the tabernacle, with all its apparatus, as may be ſeen by the text [h]. This is all that can be affirmed with any certainty concerning the Leviti∫h camp, which the Rabbies affect to call the little hoſt, or camp, of the Lord; probably becauſe we find that name given to them, where mention is made of Hezekiah's reſtoring them, ---- to ſing the praiſes of GOD within the gates of the Lord's camp [i], whereas the other tribes are commonly called the grand army, or the great hoſt.

As the tribe of Levi made four ſmall bodies on each ſide the tabernacle, ſo did the other twelve make four large camps parallel to them, each body conſiſting of three tribes. That of Judah, whether becauſe it was the moſt conſiderable, it muſtering ſeventy four thouſand ſix hundred fighting

[g] BASNAG. ex CUN. ubi ſup. CALM. & al. † Vid. ſup. p. 28. [h] Numb. iii, & iv. [i] 2 Chron. xxxi. 2.

(M) This tribe was not numbered at the firſt recenſion of the people, but ſome time after. However, if the reader compares the amount of it mentioned in this place (49), with that of the three claſſes of which it conſiſted, he will find that it comes ſhort of the odd three hundred, which are therefore ſuppoſed to have been the firſt born of that tribe, and therefore out of the caſe. And as the Levites were choſen out inſtead of the firſt-born of all the tribes, when the number of the former came to be taken, and was found to fall ſhort of the firſt-born of the latter by two hundred eighty three, this overplus was redeemed at the rate of five ſhekels of the ſanctuary, and the money given to the ſons of Aaron (50).

(49) Num. iii. 39. Munſt. in loc. (50) Numb. iii. 41. & ſeq. Vid.

men, or in conſideration of the ſceptre, or the Meſſiah, being promiſed to it, had the poſt of honour, and encamped on the eaſt ſide behind the prieſts at the head of two other tribes; namely, that of Iſſachar, conſiſting of fifty four thouſand four hundred, and that of Zebulun, of fifty ſeven thouſand four hundred men; ſo that this body amounted to one hundred eighty ſix thouſand four hundred fighting men; but whether he encamped on the right hand of the other two tribes, as the Jews think, or which is more probable, ſeeing he was as it were their head and general, in the centre betwixt them, is neither certain nor material; the ſame may be ſaid alſo of the heads of the other three bodies.

REUBEN was at the head of the next body, and his camp on the ſouth ſide; his tribe conſiſted of forty ſix thouſand five hundred men, and Simeon with fifty nine thouſand three hundred, and Gad with forty five thouſand ſix hundred and fifty, marched under his banner; this body conſiſted of one hundred fifty one thouſand four hundred and fifty.

THE next was Ephraim at the head of forty thouſand five hundred of his own tribe, under whom Manaſſeh led thirty two thouſand two hundred, and Benjamin thirty five thouſand four hundred, in all one hundred eight thouſand one hundred; theſe encamped on the weſt ſide.

THE laſt was the tribe of Dan with ſixty two thouſand ſeven hundred, with that of Aſher, conſiſting of forty one thouſand five hundred, and Naphtali, of fifty three thouſand four hundred, in all one hundred fifty ſeven thouſand ſix hundred, and theſe were on the north ſide of the tabernacle. Thus the Iſraelitiſh hoſt amounted to ſix hundred and three thouſand five hundred and fifty fighting men, excluſive of the Levites. To which if we add the old men above ſixty, and the young men under twenty, their wives, daughters, ſervants, ſlaves, and ſtrangers, which, as we ſhewed before, amounted in the whole to little leſs than three millions, their vaſt number of cattle, waggons, and other lumber, the leaſt ſpace that can be allowed for ſuch a prodigious camp muſt be above twenty miles, though we ſuppoſed the ſpaces between each tribe, to have been much leſs than the Jewiſh doctors affirm (N).

THESE

(N) This prodigious camp is by the antient Jews called threefold, whereof the tabernacle with its precinct is called the camp of the divine Majeſty, the next the camp of Levi, and the largeſt the camp

THESE four large bodies had each their general ſtandard (O), to which their own and the other tribes were to repair; under theſe were twelve more, one to every tribe, and under theſe again were thoſe of all the heads of families, amounting to fifty ſeven, according to Moſes's own account [k]; and indeed leſs than that number cannot be ſuppoſed. What the colours, emblems, and devices of thoſe enſigns were, neither Moſes nor any inſpired writer has told us. The Rabbies have ſupplied all thoſe defects very plentifully; but though they are not always to be depended upon, yet ſome particulars they have given us, relating to thoſe of the four main bodies and thoſe of the twelve tribes, ſeem not to be ill grounded. Of the firſt they tell us, that Judah had the emblem of a lion, with this device, Let GOD ariſe, and let his enemies be ſcattered [l]; but the latter ſeems more proper for the enſign of Levi, if any belonged to that tribe, which is not improbable, becauſe thoſe were the words which were uſed by the Levites, when the ark was removing. As for the lion, it is the em-camp of Iſrael, and may well enough be compared to a cathedral in the heart of a city, round which are the biſhop, dean, canons, and inferior clergy, and round them the laity. The Gemarrah affirms (51), that it took up twelve miles in length and breadth, which they infer from that place in Numbers (52), where it is ſaid, that they pitched by Jordan, from Beth jeſimoth, even unto Abelſhittim in the plain of Moab, which, they ſay, is the diſtance between thoſe two places; but here we think there is no need of making the Jewiſh miles ſhorter than ours, as a certain author has done (53), without any foundation, only to juſtify the Gemarriſts, conſidering what a vaſt quantity of empty ground they allow between every tribe for paſture ground, and the like.

[k] Num. ii. & xxvi. paſſ. [l] Pſal. lxviii. 1.

(O) The Chaldee and Septuagint have indeed rendered the original word נֵדֶל Gedel, enſign or ſtandard, the former by תקס, borrowed perhaps from the Greek τάξις, גבר על תקפה, and the latter by τάγμα. Ἄνθρωπος ἐχόμενος κατὰ τάγμα αὐτοῦ, every man to his own order, ſtation or rank, which phraſe the apoſtle doth ſeem to apply in a ſenſe ſomewhat different from this (54). However it is plain, that thoſe verſions muſt have ſuppoſed ſome ſuch thing as ſtandards ſet up in full ſight; without which it would have been impoſſible for them to repair every one to their own tribe and family.

(51) Tract. סטוה, cap 1 ap. Goodwin, Moſ. & Aar. l. vi cap. 8. § 4. (52) Ch. xxxiii. 49. (53) Goodwin, ibid. note 1. (54) 1 Cor. xv. 23. Vid. Goodwin ubi ſup.

blem by which Jacob repreſented the tribe of Judah in his laſt will [m]; but they add, that it was painted of three colours on the ſtandard [n]. Reuben's enſign had the figure of a man, to which ſome add that of a mandrake, alluding to thoſe he found in the fields when a boy [o]. That of Ephraim was an ox or calf, and ſeems to be taken from the words of Moſes's bleſſing to that tribe; his glory is like the firſtling of his bullock [p]. To the tribe of Dan they gave an eagle, which agrees neither with Moſes's bleſſing, which compares him to a lion's whelp, nor to that of Jacob, which compares him to a ſerpent in the way. However, in order to make it agree with the latter, they pretend, that the eagle was painted holding a ſerpent in his claws [q]; but we have ſtill a better authority for theſe four emblems, namely, 1. The viſion of Ezekiel [r], which is univerſally allowed to allude to it. 2. The pſalmiſt repreſenting the congregation of Iſrael under theſe emblems [s] (P), and laſtly, St. John in his apocalypſe repreſenting the faithful by the four beaſts about the throne of GOD, crying night and day, holy, holy [t], and ſo on; from which it is moſt likely, that the four evangeliſts came afterwards to have the ſame emblems more particularly appropriated to them.

THAT every tribe had beſides their particular ſtandard of a different colour, and with a different emblem, and motto, if they uſed any ſo early, can hardly be queſtioned, and that

[m] Gen. xlix. 9. [n] Ita RR. JONATH. ABR. Ben Levi. Cabal Hiſtor. ap. Cunæum. ubi ſupr. [o] Gen. xxx. 14. [p] Deut. xxxiii. 17. [q] Vid. ABEN EZRA & FAG. in Num. ii. [r] Ch. i. 10. [s] Pſ. lxviii [t] Revel. iv. 6 & 7.

(P) The pſalmiſt here deſcribes the Iſraelitiſh commonwealth, particularly whilſt in the wilderneſs, their marches, encampments, order, and many other circumſtances, in a moſt elegant and poetic manner, and amongſt other alluſions uſed there, he repreſents it under that of חַיָּתִי, Hajah (55), which our verſion rightly enough renders congregation, but in the original doth properly ſignify life, beaſt, or living creature; and being compared to that which is mentioned in Ezekiel, which had all theſe four figures, of a man, lion, ox, and eagle, is juſtly concluded to allude to theſe four general ſtandards, repreſenting the Iſraelitiſh congregation, as it doth that of the faithful under Chriſt in the revelations (56).

(55) Pſal. lxviii. 10. (56) Vid Mede. Sir Iſaac Newton, in Apocal. Tremel. L'abbadie & al. in Ezek. i. 10.

theſe

theſe two laſt might be taken from thoſe alluſions which Jacob made uſe of in his laſt bleſſing, is far from improbable; and thus for inſtance, Naphtali might have a large tree, or a hind, in his enſign †, Iſſachar an aſs couching under his burthen, Benjamin a wolf [u], and ſo on, beyond which we dare not venture to affirm any thing (Q), much leſs concerning the enſigns of the principal families, which other authors have thought fit to give us [w]. One thing more however is certain, that they had likewiſe a ſeparate camp for lepers, for thoſe who had running ſores, or any infirmities of that nature, or had defiled themſelves by touching a dead body, and the like; all which were excluded from this grand one [x]. Some other orders Moſes gave them to preſerve cleanlineſs and decency, which need not be dwelt upon, † Vid. Vol. II. p. 446 note (O). [u] Gen. xlix. 14, 21, 27, &c. See alſo an antient apocryphal book called the Teſtament of the Twelve Patriarchs. [w] Baſnag. ubi ſupr. CALM. & al. [x] Numb. v. 1. & ſeq.

(Q) The Rabbies add, from what authority is more than we can gueſs, many other particulars relating to thoſe twelve ſtandards; as firſt, that their colour anſwered to that of the twelve ſtones in the breaſt-plate of the high-prieſt (57), on which the name of each tribe was engraven; but the misfortune is, that they are far from agreeing in aſſigning the names and colour of thoſe ſtones; beſides, another difficulty ariſes which they do not anſwer, which is, that Levi had its own name and ſtone, which they affirm to have been, ſome a beril, others a ſaphire, &c, on the breaſt-plate, though it be not here numbered with the other twelve, but inſtead of it, that of Joſeph is divided into Ephraim and Manaſſeh. Concerning the four grand ſtandards they add, that each of them had three letters taken from the names of their three firſt patriarchs Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob. Judah had א י י, A. I. I. Reuben ב נ ע, B. TZ H. Ephraim ר ח ה, R. CH K. and Dan מ ק ב, M. K. B. But theſe, with the learned interpretations of them, as well as ſome other wonderful things which they do tell us of this camp, ſuch as that, wherever they pitched it, there ſprang up a fountain before the tabernacle, which divided itſelf into ſtreams, which ran through and ſupplied every tribe with water, which we have elſewhere confuted †: that the miraculous pillar which went before them did lower the mountains, raiſe the vallies, &c to make the way eaſier for them, with many more of the like nature, we willingly leave to thoſe who have either a Jewiſh faith to believe, or a Jewiſh conſcience to retail them.

(57) Vid. R. Jonath. paraph. in Num ii. 5. † Vid. Vol. II. p. 544. note (T).

As

As to the order of their decamping and marching, of their engaging in battle, and ſuch like, as they are more particularly preſcribed by Moſes, we ſhall content ourſelves with mentioning the principal heads relating to each of them, and removing ſome few difficulties that occur; and refer our readers for the more circumſtantial parts to the text itſelf, and to thoſe who have treated on them more at large [y].

IN their decamping, whilſt in the wilderneſs, the firſt thing they were to obſerve was the ſignal from the miraculous pillar, of which we have already ſpoken †, which Moſes immediately took care to have communicated throughout the camp by two ſilver trumpets made by GOD's command [z]; and becauſe theſe were uſed for other ſignals, ſuch as the calling the elders to the tabernacle, proclaiming of anniverſary feſtivals, and the like; they were differently blown according to the ſignal they were to give, that is, for inſtance, ſingly when to call the elders; jointly when to call the whole congregation; with a conſtant and even ſound when they proclaimed a march; and with a tremulous interrupted one, when they ſounded to battle. To theſe the apoſtle ſeems to allude, when he ſays. If the trumpet gives an uncertain ſound, who will prepare to battle [a]? As ſoon therefore as the firſt ſignal was given for marching, every tribe ſet about making ready for it, and this took up ſome conſiderable time, eſpecially to the prieſts and Levites [b], who had the tabernacle with all its utenſils to take down, cover, and pack up (R), and

[y] Vid. BASNAG. ubi ſupr. c. xix. † Vid. Vol II. p. 529.
[z] Numb. x. 1. & ſeq. [a] 1 Cor. xiv. 8. [b] Vid Numb. iv. & alib.

(R) There ariſes a difficulty between the command here given about the taking down the tabernacle, with the vail, and covering, &c. and the prohibition for any but the high-prieſt to go into the ſanctuary, ſince even he was not allowed to enter it above once a year (58). This ſeeming contradiction is generally ſolved by the common anſwer, that GOD can diſpenſe with his own laws. Others confine the entrance, permitted here to the ſons of Aaron, only to the holy place, whilſt the high-prieſt alone went into the moſt holy one, to take down the vail, cover the ark, &c. and this ſeems probable enough by comparing what is commanded in the 4th and 10th chapter of Numbers, if we can ſuppoſe one ſingle perſon, and he not over young, to have been ſufficient for all this. But a learned critic has given us another

(58) Exod. xxx. 10. Levit, xvi. 2. & ſeq. Heb. 9. 7.

ſolution,

and ſet part upon waggons for that purpoſe, and part to be carried upon men's ſhoulders (S). By that time the Levites had got every thing ready for the march, the ſecond ſignal was given; for it is not to be doubted, but the other tribes could be ſooner in readineſs than they; and then all that bore arms repaired to their ſtandards, whilſt the invalids, women, children, and carriages marched towards the rear. Upon the next ſignal the tribe of Judah, at the head of the other two that belonged to his camp, began to march; and theſe were followed, according to the moſt general opinion, by the Gerſhonites and Merarites, who guarded the waggons loaded with ſolution, which we think is more ſatisfactory ſtill (59), which is: that this entrance was only forbidden whilſt the tabernacle was ſet up, and the cloud which was the known ſymbol of the divine preſence, continued to cover the holy place, but when that was removed, and the ark or mercy-ſeat had been covered, or perhaps ſhut up in ſome proper repoſitory ‡, then it might be lawful for the inferior prieſts to come in, and aſſiſt the high-prieſt and his ſons in the removal of the reſt.

S) Another ſeeming contradiction is, where it is ſaid, that as ſoon as the ark was covered, which was to be with a treble covering, they ſhould put in the ſtaves of it (60). Whereas it is ſaid elſewhere (61), that the ſtaves ſhould never be taken out; beſides, how was it poſſible to put them in, after the ark had been packed up in ſo many coverings. Some therefore inſtead of they ſhall put in, read, they ſhall lay, or put on, the ſtaves, namely, upon men's ſhoulders; but ſince the original may as properly be rendered, and they ſhall let the ſtaves abide in, that is, they ſhall cover it over without taking them out, probably leſt the ark might be ſeen through the holes of the covering through which the ſtaves muſt afterwards have been put in; there is no occaſion to ſeek for a better ſolution than this, as the author above quoted juſtly obſerves (62). All the other utenſils of the tabernacle had likewiſe their particular coverings, under which they were carried, as the moſt proper way to ſtrike an awe upon the people. And therefore the opinion of thoſe who think, that the ark was uncovered, when carried in proceſſion round the walls of Jericho, and into the camp of Iſrael, by the two ſons of Eli, ſeems ſomewhat abſurd, eſpecially conſidering, what terrible puniſhments were denounced and actually inflicted on thoſe who ventured to look upon it. It is therefore more probable, that it had, in ſuch caſes at leaſt, a ſky-blue covering thrown over it. But this by the by.

(59) Baſnag. ubi ſupr. ‡ See the next note. (60) Numb. iv. 6. (61) Exod. xxv. 15. (62) Baſnag. ibid.

the

the boards, ſkins, and pillars belonging to the tabernacle. Upon the next ſignal, Reuben and his two tribes began to move; after whom came the Kohathites, bearing the ark, altar, table, and other utenſils upon their ſhoulders, ſo that by that time they were got to their journey's end, the Gerſhonites and Merarites had ſet up the tabernacle, and got all things ready for their reception (T). The ark and its bearers were guarded by the tribes of Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manaſſeh, as ſoon as the third ſignal was given. To this alludes that of the Pſalmiſt [c], Thou that ſitteſt between the cherubims ſhine forth before Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manaſſeh. Laſt of all came the tribes of Dan, Aſher, and Naphtali, eſcorting the invalids that none might be left behind. For which reaſon this body is called the rear-ward, or, as our margins more properly word it, the gathering hoſt [d]. However, it is plain, that this order was not always obſerved; for firſt, with reſpect to the ark, there are ſome places where it is ſaid, it went before them [e] upon ſome emergencies; and with reſpect to the whole body, though they kept this excellent order of marching in columns, as often as the lands through which they paſſed would permit it; yet when they were obliged to croſs whole ridges of mountains, they were then forced to make the beſt of their way, ſome over heights, others through the valleys, preſerving ſtill the beſt order they could

[c] Pſal. lxxx. 1. 2. [d] Joſh. vi. 9. Vid. MUNST: in loc. GOODWIN's Moſ. & Aaron. lib. vi. c. 4. art. 3. See alſo Numb. x. 21. & ſeq. [e] See Numb. x. 33. Joſh. iii. 6.

(T) It is not eaſy to gueſs how far ſuch a camp may be ſuppoſed to go in a day, by marching in that regular manner: an author often quoted upon this ſubject (63) has pretended to prove, that they did not exceed two miles a day, from what is ſaid of one of their marches (64), that they took up three days in going from Sinai to Kibbroth-hattaavah, which, he ſays, is not reckoned above ſix miles, according to the calculation of ſeveral authors. But who knows how far this ſmall progreſs might be owing to the ruggedneſs of the ways, to ſome mountains interpoſing, or to ſome other reaſon not taken notice of by the hiſtorian; this therefore can by no means be an argument, that they never marched farther in one day, ſeeing in an open country ſuch an army might eaſily march above ſix times that ground, if not more.

(63) Id. Ibid. (64) Numb. x. 33.

far

for their own ſafety (V). All that can be added upon this ſubject is, that when the ark was taking up for the march, Moſes uſed to ſay, Ariſe, O Lord, and let thine enemies be ſcattered, and let them that hate thee flee before thee; and when the prieſts ſet it down, he ſaid, Return, O Lord, unto the many thouſands of Iſrael [f]. Theſe words are ſtill uſed to this day by the Jews, when they fetch the roll of the law out of its repoſitory, and when they carry it thither again.

CONCERNING their method of engaging with their enemies, order of battle, and the like, we have nothing certain, but what has already been occaſionally mentioned before. Such as the having one prieſt anointed to be conſulted by Urim, inſtead of the high-prieſt, who never went to the wars, the Amercol, or exhorting prieſt, who is thought to be the ſame with the former by ſome authors [g], and whoſe ſpeech, at leaſt the ſubſtance of it, has been preſerved to us by the antient Jews (W): all that we can ſay farther on this head

[f] Numb. x. 35, 36. [g] CALMET & BASNAG. ubi ſupr.

(V) If it be objected here, that it was unſafe and impolitic to leave the women, children, invalids, and all their baggage in the rear, where they had been once attacked by the Amalekites as we have ſeen before †, all that can be anſwered to this is, that when they had once croſſed the Red-ſea and ſeen an end of their enemies, they thought themſelves ſafe on that ſide, and conſequently appointed that order of marching, which was certainly the moſt convenient where it could be followed with ſafety. But we need not doubt, but whenever they had any reaſon to apprehend being attacked in the rear, they placed them nearer to the van-guard. Neither do we meet with any other inſtance of ſuch an attack, for thoſe other nations with whom they had any encounters always came in front, and endeavoured to obſtruct their paſſage. However, though we have ſpoken in this the ſentiments of thoſe who have wrote upon the ſubject, yet we are far from thinking it improbable, that the wives, children, and moſt valuable baggage might march either with each body to which it belonged, or in the ſpaces that were between them whenever the ground permitted it.

(W) Among other remarkable things in this ſpeech, were thoſe that follow: Hear, O Iſrael, —— you are now going to engage, not againſt your brethren, not one tribe againſt another, by whom, if you chanced to be taken, you might expect to be uſed with mercy: ——

† Vid. Vol. II. p. 153. 545.

Their manner of engaging.

head with any certainty is, that, as soon as the trumpets had given the signal for the engagement, the combatants gave a great shout and fell immediately upon their enemies [h]; an instance of which we find some time after, when they went to engage the Philistines [i]. This was no less practised by the Greeks, Romans, and other warlike nations, who often increased the horrid noise with knocking their weapons against their shields [k]. With relation to their besieging of towns we are still more in the dark; all therefore that can be added here is, what the Jews tell us from a passage in Joshua [l], that when he sent to offer peace to the cities of Canaan before he entered it, he dispatched three expresses to them: the first was to permit those who had a mind to leave the country, to depart; the second was to offer peace to those that would make peace with him, and the last, to declare war against those that refused the two former offers [m].

[h] Vid. CUN. & GOODWIN, ubi sup. & JOSEPH. de Bell. Jud. lib. 3. [i] Vid, 1 Sam. iv. 5. [k] POLYB. vid. CUN. ubi supr. [l] JOSH. xi. 19, 20. [m] GOODWIN ubi supr.

but against your enemies, into whose hands if it be your misfortune to fall, you must expect no quarter: .. let not your courage fail you; let not the neighing of their horses, the brightness of their spears, the clattering of their shields, or the sound of their trumpets dishearten you —— God is in the midst of you;—— your foes come against you with an arm of flesh, but you trust in the strength of the Almighty; and so on (65). Part of this speech we find to have been certainly dictated by Moses (66), but whether the rest was so or not, we dare not affirm. However, one thing is worth observing with respect to these words, Thou art not going to engage against thy brethren, from whom thou mightest expect mercy; that the tribe of Judah having been captivated by those of Israel, so long after as in Ahaz's reign, and these ready to use their captives with the same severity as they did strangers, a prophet of the Lord did strenuously oppose it, and made the conquerors cloath, feed and anoint them, and send them back to their brethren (67).

(65) Trac. סוטה cap. viii. vid. GOODW. Mos. & Aar. lib. iv. c 8. § 14. (66) Deut. xx. 2. & seq. (67) Vid. 2 Chron. xxviii. 8, & seq.

SECT.

The Camp of the Israelites according to Reyherus

THE CAMP OF THE ISRAELITES

WEST 108100

THE CAMP OF EPHRAIM

Tribe of EPHRAIM 40500.

Tribe of MANASSEH 32200.

Tribe of BENJAMIN 35400.

Tribe of DAN 62700.

THE CAMP OF REUBEN
SOUTH
151450

Tribe of GAD 45650.

Tribe of SIMEON 59300.

Tribe of REUBEN 46500.

GERSHONITES 7500.

The Camp of God

Ally. Levites 22000

KOHATHITES

ISRAELITES

The Tabernacle

Moses

Aaron

Tribe of ASHER 41500.

Tribe of NAPTHALI 53400.

THE CAMP OF DAN NORTH 157600

Tribe of ZABULON 57400.

Tribe of ISSACHAR 54400.

Tribe of JUDAH 74600.

THE CAMP OF JUDAH

EAST 186400

Tribe of EPHRAIM 40500

Tribe of MANASSEH 32200

Tribe of BENJAMIN 35400

Tribe of DAN 62700

THE CAMP OF DAN

NORTH

157600

GERSHONITES

Tribe of GAD 45650

The Camp of 7500 of God

Tribe of ASHER 41300

Ally's Levites 22000

KOHATHITES

MERARITES

The Tabernacle

Tribe of SIMEON 59300

Moses

Aaron

Tribe of NAPTHALI 53400

SOUTH

151450

THE CAMP OF REUBEN

Tribe of REUBEN 46500

Tribe of ZABULON 57400

Tribe of ISSACHAR 54400

Tribe of JUDAH 74600

THE CAMP OF JUDAH

EAST

180400

Gershonites

Kohathites

Merarites

The Tabernacle

Moses

Aaron

The Camp of the Israelites according to Lamy

D. P. sculp.

SECT. III.

The HISTORY of the Jews under Joſhua.

The deſcription, conqueſt, and partition of the land of Canaan.

THE Iſraelitiſh camp continued at Shittim, near the river Jordan, and in ſight of the land of Canaan, during the days of mourning for Moſes, and the people, whom a forty years wandering in the wilderneſs, under a diſcipline intermixed with the greateſt tenderneſs and ſeverity, had rendered more tractable, and more ſenſible of GOD's paternal care, were only waiting for the ſignal for paſſing over the river Jordan; when their new general received freſh and repeated promiſes of the divine aſſiſtance in the conqueſt of the promiſed land [n]. Nothing leſs than ſuch an aſſurance could indeed have ſupported Joſhua's courage in ſo arduous a task. He was now ninety three years of age, and had been trained up under Moſes at leaſt one third part of that time, ſo that he wanted neither experience nor ſagacity to foreſee all the difficulties he was to encounter with. He ſaw himſelf indeed at the head of ſix hundred thouſand fighting men, but on the other hand his army was clogged with an innumerable multitude of old men, women, and children, beſides ſervants, cattle, and other incumbrances. The very firſt ſtep he was to take was the croſſing of a large river, in doing which he knew himſelf equally expoſed to the arms of thoſe whom he went to attack, and thoſe whom he left behind. The nations he was to ſubdue were naturally warlike, of a gigantic ſtature and ſtrength, their towns well fortified by nature and art, their forces and intereſt united by the ſtrongeſt ties and alliances; they had all long ago taken the alarm, and had made the greateſt preparations againſt him, reſolved either to obſtruct his conqueſt, or loſe their lives in the defence of their country [o].

Year of the Flood, 1548. Year before Chriſt, 1451.

The ſtate of the hoſt of Iſrael.

THIS was the ſituation of the Canaanites and of Joſhua's affairs, when he received the divine ſignal to prepare for the glorious conqueſt. His firſt care therefore was to make choice of two proper perſons to go privily to the land of Jericho, and examine what condition their cities and people were in. Theſe ſoon ſet out for this perilous expedition, and, having

Two ſpies ſent to Jericho.

[n] Joſh. i. [o] Ibid. ix. 1, 2. & ſeq. x. & ſeq. paſſ.

happily croſſed the Jordan, went and lodged at an inn-keeper's houſe (X) named Rahab, where they had not been long,

(X) We have ventured to give Rahab a more favourable appellative than moſt verſions have done, who make no ſcruple to call her a harlot; though it is plain, that the word זונה Zonah, doth as properly ſignify an inn-keeper, or one who ſelleth victuals and drink, as a harlot; for it is derived from the root זן Zon, which ſignifies to give food, and is the feminine participle active of that verb. And in this we have followed the Chaldee paraphraſe, which renders it by the word פונדקיתא, from פונדק, an inn (68); in which he is alſo followed by ſome of the moſt learned Jews who paraphraſe the word here by מוכרת מזון Mokereth-mazon, a ſeller of victuals (69); and Kimchi allows, that it may be rendered either way (70); to which we may add, that the Septuagint, and after them St James, have made uſe of the Greek word πόρνη, which is capable of both ſignifications, namely, of a victualler or a harlot, as Junius has fully proved it (71). And indeed, as the word in its primitive ſenſe doth properly ſignify the former, it is not unlikely that the freedoms which thoſe kind of women were wont to allow to their cuſtomers, might give birth to the latter ſignification, and, from an hoſteſs or a victualler, come in time to ſignify a harlot. But as it doth not appear by the text, that ſhe did drive both theſe trades, but rather the contrary, the faith which ſhe expreſſed in GOD, and her behaviour to his two ſervants, might well deſerve to have the moſt favourable conſtruction put upon her profeſſion. To which we may add, that it is not likely, that Salmon would, or indeed could, afterwards have lawfully married her, if ſhe had been ſuch a public woman; he who was a prince of the houſe of Judah, and one of the Meſſiah's anceſtors.

However we do not pretend to enter into a ſcrutiny, how far her hoſpitality to her two gueſts was blameable or praiſe-worthy, or how far ſhe was guilty of betraying her country; much leſs ſhall we take upon us to juſtify the lye ſhe told the king's officers, as ſome have done with more zeal than diſcretion (72); but thus much may be ſaid on her behalf, ſetting even aſide her faith for which ſhe is commended in the goſpel; that if ſhe had heard of the overthrow of Pharaoh, Sihon, and Og, the king of Jericho could not be ignorant of it. It was therefore as natural for her to be terrified at it, and to provide for her ſafety, as it was for him to make a brave reſiſtance, or periſh in the attempt. To this we may add, that if what the ſcripture ſeems to intimate plainly enough, be true, that Joſhua was obliged to offer peace, before he made uſe of the ſword againſt any of the Canaanitiſh nations †, it was as lawful long, before a ſtrict ſearch was made after them, by order of the alarmed king of Jericho. Their fear however was ſoon diſpelled by their hoſpitable hoſteſs, who ſent away the ſearchers by telling them out of her window, that two ſtrangers had indeed refreſhed themſelves at her houſe, but that they were gone ſince towards ſun-ſet, and might be eaſily taken if cloſely purſued. Their backs were no ſooner turned, than ſhe went to the two ſpies, to whom ſhe freely owned the panic dread that had ſeized not only that city, but all the land of Canaan, at the news of what the GOD of Iſrael had done in favour of their nation, both at the Red-ſea, and againſt thoſe kingdoms which they had ſo lately conquered. To this ſhe added, that being now fully perſuaded, that he was the only true GOD, againſt whoſe decrees all oppoſition would be not only vain, but dangerous, ſhe was now ready to ſave them from their imminent danger, upon condition they ſwore to ſave her and her family, when they became maſters of the city. An offer ſo generous and unexpected, joyned to ſo candid a confeſſion, could not deſerve a leſs reward, and the two ſpies, who in the condition they were in, would have purchaſed their ſafety upon much harder terms, were not long before they gave her all the deſired aſſurance, that not only ſhe and her family, but all that were found in her houſe at the taking of the city, ſhould be exempted from the common ruin. She kept them hid the remaining part of the time under ſome hempen ſtocks, and about midnight let them down by a rope out of one of her back-windows, which was contiguous to the city-wall, after ſhe had charged them to keep themſelves concealed in ſome cliff of the neighbouring mountains for two or three days, till their purſuers were returned home. Before they took their leave they agreed, that ſhe Concealed by Rahab.

(68) Vid ערוך ſeu Lexic R Nathan. (69) R. R. Salom. Jona. Levi Ben. Geiſh. vid & Munſt. in loc. (70) In Rad. (71) Vid. Jun. in Epiſt. Jacob. ii. 25, (72) Vid. inter al. Tremel. in loc. † See before, p 17. note (P).

They ſwear to ſave her and hers.

lawful for her or any other ſubject to accept it, as it was glorious for a monarch to refuſe it. At leaſt we think, that the refuſal of ſuch advantageous terms from an irreſiſtible conqueror, at the riſk of being all infallibly maſſacred by him, for the ſake of a king, who, for ought that appears to the contrary, might be but a petty tyrant, and of a people whom fear had rendered incapable of making a defence, when perhaps the difference between being under the natural monarch, if he was really ſuch, or under the conqueror, was either inconſiderable, or, it may be, on the ſide of the latter: ſuch a refuſal, we ſay, would have been an inſtance of patriotiſm that could hardly be expected from a Canaanite, much leſs from ſuch a young inn-keeper as Rahab muſt have been, ſince ſhe was the mother of Boaz above thirty years after, as Junius has fully ſhewn in the place above quoted.

ſhould

ſhould hang a ſcarlet line out of her window, which ſhould be a ſignal to them, and a ſafeguard to her houſe. The risk they had run put a ſtop to their farther progreſs, and what they had learned at Jericho made it as needleſs as dangerous; ſo that, having happily eſcaped all further diſcovery, they returned to their camp on the third day, and related to Joſhua all that had happened to them [p], who could not but applaud himſelf, that he had made ſo much better choice than Moſes had done before upon the like occaſion.

Return to the camp and make their report.

THE conſternation, which they told him had overſpread itſelf throughout that whole land, was univerſally looked upon as a ſure omen of their future ſucceſs, and Joſhua failed not to improve it, by aſſuring them, that it was GOD himſelf who had injected ſuch a terror among their enemies, and that they had now nothing to do but to fight valiantly under his banner and protection. He then reminded the two tribes and half of their former promiſe of aſſiſting their brethren in the conqueſt of the land, and they on their part as readily promiſed to obey his orders at the peril of their lives [q]. However, as thoſe tribes compoſed an army of upwards of an hundred thouſand fighting men, Joſhua contented himſelf with leſs than one half, and left the reſt to defend their new poſſeſſions and families. After this he cauſed it to be proclaimed through the camp, that they ſhould paſs over Jordan within three days, during which time they ſhould make proviſion for victuals, ſeeing the manna was to ceaſe as ſoon as they had ſet foot on the other ſhore, and had taſted the bread of that country, as it actually did †; and then gave the ſignal for marching from Shittim to the neighbouring ſhore of that river.

They prepare to march towards Jordan.

As ſoon as they were encamped there, Joſhua ſent and communicated to every tribe the order that was to be obſerved in this ſolemn march. The prieſts bearing the ark were to begin the proceſſion, and as ſoon as their feet touching the water had opened a miraculous way [r] to them, each tribe was to follow in the ſame order as they had obſerved in all their marches, keeping however the awful diſtance, preſcribed of two thouſand cubits, from that ſacred ſymbol of the divine preſence *, whilſt thoſe that bore it were to continue in the middle of the river, till the whole hoſt of Iſrael had got ſafe to the other ſhore.

The order of croſſing that river.

To inſpire the people ſtill with a greater regard for this wonderful paſſage, they were commanded to ſanctify themſelves, [p] Joſh. ii. [q] Ibid. i. 12. & ſeq. † Ibid. v. 12. [r] Ibid iii. 13. * Ibid ver. 4.

as had been formerly done upon ſuch ſolemn occaſions †, by waſhing their cloaths, avoiding all impurities, and abſtaining from matrimonial intercourſe, on the eve of their march. He charged likewiſe every tribe to ſend a man to him, to be ready to execute ſuch orders as he ſhould give them on the morrow; which was no ſooner come, than the prieſts began their march towards the river, and the people made themſelves ready to follow them in two columns, one above, and the other below, the ark. This march happened on a friday, on the tenth day of the firſt month Niſan, which anſwers to our thirtieth of April, and was the day on which the lamb was to be choſen and ſet by for the paſſover ſ, about which time the waters of Jordan, being uſually ſwelled by the melting of the ſnows of the Lebanon and other neighbouring mountains, ſeldom or never failed to overflow its banks. As ſoon therefore as the prieſts that bare the ark had touched the extremity of it with their feet, GOD, who had promiſed to ſignalize their new general here, in as miraculous a manner as he had done their old one at the Red-ſea, cauſed the waters of the river from above to go back, and to riſe up in heaps far beyond the city of Adam, which is beſide that of Zaretan (Y), whilſt thoſe below, continuing their courſe towards the ſea of the plain, otherwiſe called the Salt, or Dead-ſea, opened a paſſage of about ſixteen or eighteen miles in breadth to the Iſraelites, till they were all got ſafe to the other ſide.

Which divides itſelf to open a dry paſſage.

† Vid. Vol. II. p. 411. & 548. ſ USHER's Ann. p. 25.

(Y) This city was afterwards called Zeredathah. It belonged to the tribe of Ephraim, and became famous for the fine copper-works which Hiram did caſt there for the temple of Solomon (73). As for the city of Adam, though ſome geographers place it upon the Dead-ſea, that is, below the place where the waters divided themſelves (74), it is plain from the text, that it was above it towards Scythopolis; ſo that if the place where they croſſed was about Bethabara, where John did baptize, as ſome think (75), the waters muſt have riſen near ſixty miles upwards. What adds therefore ſtill to the miracle is, 1ſt, that none of thoſe cities that were ſituate along the ſhore, where the waters roſe up to ſuch a height, were drowned, or even hurt, as we can find; and 2dly, that the inhabitants of Jericho, right over-againſt whom they croſſed the river, did not make ſome bold attempt to have diſputed a paſs of ſuch conſequence, and obſtructed their croſſing; all which can only be attributed to the ſame miraculous power which kept the waters ſuſpended.

(73) 2 Chron. iv. 17. (74) Cellar Geogr. Antiq. lib. iii. c. 13. (75) Vid. Calm. comm. in Joſh. & Hiſt. V. T.

DURING

DURING all the time of their croſſing, the prieſts continued with the ark in the midſt of Jordan, and waited only for Joſhua's orders, when to come out and joyn the reſt of the camp. But Joſhua, who deſigned to perpetuate the memory of this wonderful tranſaction, commanded them to ſtand ſtill, till he had made thoſe twelve men, whom he had directed to wait about him, to take twelve large ſtones, one for each tribe, and lay them on one heap in the place where the ark ſtood, ſo that they might be ſeen afterwards from each ſhore, when the waters of the river were abated; and at the ſame time he made them take up twelve other ſtones from the bottom of the river, and to erect a monument with them on the ſhore; which was no ſooner done than the prieſts had orders to march with the ark, and leave the waters to retake their uſual courſe. Joſhua, who by this time was in as high eſteem with the people as Moſes had been before, failed not to charge them to tranſmit to their poſterity the occaſion and meaning of theſe two monuments[t], both which, if we may believe Euſebius and others, were ſtill to be ſeen many centuries after [v]. From this place Joſhua commanded the vanguard, which conſiſted of the forty thouſand men of the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and half Manaſſeh, to march towards the plains of Jericho [w], and theſe were ſoon followed by the reſt of the army, and encamped at Gilgal, about ſeven or eight miles from Jordan, and about three or four from Jericho.

Two monuments of it reared up.

IN the mean time the feaſt of the paſſover drew nigh, unto which no uncircumciſed perſon was to be admitted under the ſevereſt penalties; and yet at leaſt two thirds of the men were ſo. That ceremony had been intermitted during their forty years wandering, ſo that all that had been circumciſed beſides Joſhua and Caleb, were only thoſe who were under twenty years of age at the rebellion of Kadeſh-barnea, all the reſt were dead in the wilderneſs †; it was therefore neceſſary before all things that it ſhould be renewed out of hand: wherefore Joſhua was commanded to have it immediately performed. The circumſtance of time was altogether favourable for ſuch an operation; and their miraculous paſſage over Jordan had ſpread ſuch an univerſal dread among their enemies, that they now had no cauſe to apprehend being ſurpriſed by them, as the Shechemites had been by Simeon and Levi.

Circumciſion renewed.

[t] Joſh. iii, & iv. ANSELM. ALBERT. Hiſt. V. T. lib. 3. cap. 1.

[v] EUSEB. loc Hebr. ſub Bounos & Gilgal. JOB. MOSCH. Vit. patr. & al. ap. Calm.

[w] Joſh. iv. 12, 13.

† Vid. ſupr. p. 28.

Beſides

Beſides, it was GOD that commanded, to whom they had all the reaſon in the world to commit their ſafety, ſo that his orders were chearfully and punctually obeyed. The ſharp ſtones which they made uſe of being more proper for the ceremony than knives or razors made of metal, as being leſs apt to cauſe inflammations, was a means of their being ſooner healed, and conſequently in a condition to celebrate the paſſover at the appointed time, as it was accordingly done; and GOD highly pleaſed with their obedience, told them, that he had now removed, or rolled away from them, the reproach of Egypt, that is, that he did no longer look upon them as uncircumciſed Egyptians, but as his own people, in memory of which the place was called Gilgal, or rolling (Z).

THIS

(Z) The text in this place (76) uſes an expreſſion which has puzzled ſeveral commentators, and even St. Jerom, as great an Hebraiſt as he was, to find out what this circumciſion was, that was performed a ſecond time. The generality of the Jews affirm that they had been circumciſed in the wilderneſs, but that one of the three parts of the ceremony, namely the puſhing quite back the remainder of the skin of the penis after the fore-part, was cut off, had been omitted during thoſe forty years, becauſe it put the infant to too much pain and agony. And that it was this operation which Joſhua cauſed to be performed, and which, being as troubleſome as the other two, is therefore here called a ſecond circumciſion (77). Another learned Jew (78), having taken upon him to prove from the words of Jeremiah, I will puniſh the circumciſed that has a foreſkin (79), for ſo he reads it, that it was poſſible to bring the foreskin again by art, ſome have thought that the Iſraelites had done ſo during their abode in the wilderneſs; for which they were ordered to be circumciſed afreſh. Thoſe Chriſtians who have embraced this notion, pretend to back it by the words of St. Paul (80), if any man is called, being circumciſed, μὴ ἐπισπάσθω, let him not get a foreſkin again, or, as we render it, let him not become uncircumciſed (81). To confute which St. Jerom has taken a great deal of pains to prove though perhaps without any reaſon, that this prepuce can never be recovered, when once cut off; and conſequently, that the circumciſion mentioned in Joſhua, muſt be underſtood of the circumciſion of the heart, and to have been performed with a ſpiritual knife. The truth is, that good father, though the moſt learned of all that bear that name, was ſo fond of the virginal, and ſo prepoſſeſſed againſt a matrimonial ſtate, that he has wreſted theſe words, thoſe of the apoſtle, and a vaſt number more out of the old and new teſtament in favour of his favourite opinion, right

(76) Joſh. v. 2. (77) Vid. Munſt. in loc. (78) Rab. Nath. in Lexic. ערוך ſub. voc. ערלה (79) Jerem. ix. 25. (80) 1 Cor. vii. 18. (81) Vid. Druſ. ap. Cunn.

The paſſover celebrated.

THIS was the third time of their celebrating that feſtival; the firſt was at their departure out of Egypt, and the ſecond on the next year, at the ſetting up of the tabernacle at the foot of mount Sinai, ſince when, whether for want of corn to make unleavened bread, or any other reaſon, it had been wholly intermitted till now; when, the text tells, the Iſraelites having provided themſelves with corn both old and new, they baked themſelves unleavened cakes with the former, and parched the latter in the ſheaves, and eat it inſtead of bread, this laſt being equally ſuitable to the feaſt, as being eaten without leaven. In this place it was alſo, that GOD, or, as ſome will have it [x], his angel appeared unto Joſhua in the plain, in the ſhape of a warrior, ſtanding at ſome diſtance from him with a drawn ſword. Joſhua knew him not, and was probably gone thus far alone to reconnoitre the city, and contrive the propereſt means of beſieging it: Being therefore ſurpriſed to ſee a man ſtand ſo near him in that hoſtile poſture, he aſked him, whether he was for or againſt Iſrael? and upon his anſwering that he was the captain of the LORD's hoſt, Joſhua fell down at his feet and worſhipped him, whilſt the viſion commanded him to ſhew the ſame reſpect to the place, as Moſes had formerly done at the ſight of the miraculous buſh [*]. He had no ſooner obeyed, and in the humbleſt terms expreſſed his readineſs to receive his command [y], than the Lord was pleaſed to direct the wonderful manner in which he would have Jericho beſieged, that the reſt of the Canaanites might be made ſenſible, that it was not an arm of fleſh that fought againſt them (A).

God appears to Joſhua.

WE

[x] GROT. LE CLERC, & al. Vid. Vol. II. p. 487. note (S) & alib.
[*] Vid. Vol. II. p. 496. at the end of note (V). [y] Joſh. v.

or wrong, and wrote with ſuch an air of triumph, and with ſo much heat againſt his oppoſers (82), that when he became ſenſible of it, he made no difficulty to cenſure himſelf for it in a pathetic apology, which is perhaps the fineſt piece of oratory that ever he penned, and may well atone for his indiſcreet zeal in favour of celibacy. However, all the difficulty in the words before us ariſes from miſunderſtanding the idiom of the original, and would have been eaſily removed if they had been tranſlated or paraphraſed thus:——Let, the ceremony of, circumciſion, which has been ſo long diſcontinued, be renewed, or, ſet on foot once more.

(A) Nothing could be more wiſely ordered than this miraculous manner of taking the city; not only to ſignalize the firſt conqueſt

(82) Hieron. cont. Jovinian. in Joſh. in loc. & alib.

of

WE have already given ſome account of the ſiege and taking of this place in the hiſtory of Canaan †*. All that needs be added to it here is, that the city, into which great numbers out of the neighbouring villages had retired, ſome to help to defend it, and others to ſave themſelves, had been cloſely ſhut up by order of the king, who commanded in it in perſon, no man being ſuffered to go in or out of it; and that on the ſeventh day, which was the ſabbath, the circumvection of the ark was repeated ſeven times with the uſual ſolemnity; the prieſts ſounding with the rams-horns (B), and the

†* Vol. II. p. 174.

of the Iſraelites in the land of Canaan, but likewiſe to inject ſuch a terror into its inhabitants, as might either make them more ready to accept their terms of peace, or, at the worſt, to induce them to ſave their own lives, by timely abandoning the country to the conquerors. To ſay that the latter was impracticable, is begging the queſtion; nay, the contrary ſeems plain from the Gibeonites finding means to ſend two different embaſſies to Joſhua ‡; though they could not do it without paſſing through ſome of the territories of the allied kings, as will appear by and by from the geography of that country.

(B) The original is שפרות היובלים Shopheroth hajoblim, which all the Jews in general (83), and after them very many Chriſtians, underſtand, as we do, of trumpets made of rams-horns *. And from the word יובל, jobel, the ſingular of it, they alſo think the jubilee to have taken its name, becauſe it was to be proclaimed by the ſound of that inſtrument (84). We ſhall have occaſion to offer a more proper etymon of the word, when we come to ſpeak of the jubilee itſelf; in the mean time there have not been wanting thoſe who have oppoſed this notion as ridiculous, becauſe they think it impoſſible to perforate them ſo as to give any ſuch ſhrill ſound (85), and therefore have ſuppoſed them to have been made of copper, in the ſhape of rams-horns. But this notion, as well as the impoſſibility of boring a ram's-horn, has been ſufficiently confuted by our learned Spencer. Sure it is, that it has a ſofter part in the inſide, which is eaſily drawn out whole by art, after which they are hollow all the way up, except about four or five inches towards the tip; part of which is ſawed off to make it ‡ Vid. Vol. II. p. 176. & ſeq. (83) Ita Rabbin. ſer. apud. Munſt. in loc. * Spenc. & Meyer. de tem. ſacr. ritib. § 11. Goodw. Moſ. & Aar. lib. iii. c. 10. § 2. & al. mult. (84) Id. ibid. vid. & R. Selomo. Ben. Melech in Levit xxv. 10 (85) Maſius in Joſh. vi. 4. Bochart Hieros. l. 2. c. 43. Calm. & al.

The manner of taking Jericho.

the ſame guard of armed men marching before and after it, as had been during the firſt ſix days. The whole proceſſion, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, kept at ſuch a diſtance from the walls as to be out of reach of their ſhot, whilſt the beſieged, too well ſkilled in warlike affairs to think that a city was to be taken by ſuch whimſical marches, did probably conclude, that they were only making an aukward ſhow of their ſtrength. However, as ſoon as the ſeventh round was ended, the ſound of the trumpets was accompanied with an univerſal ſhout of all the beſiegers, and this was followed by the fall of the city-wall which opened a way into it, at which every man mounted the breach that was next before him. Their firſt care was to convey Rahab and all her family out of the city, and theſe were no ſooner got ſafely out, but the Iſraelites killed all the men, women, children, and cattle that were found in it, after which, having ſeized upon all the gold, ſilver, braſs, and other baſer mettals to be repoſited in the treaſury, they ſet the place on fire, and levelled it broad enough for the mouth, after which the reſt is eaſily bored. And we can aſſure our readers, that we have ſeen ſome of them made in that manner, and uſed by ſhepherds and ſwineherds in the ſouth parts of Germany.

Rahab and her family ſaved.

Joſephus, who is very particular in deſcribing thoſe ſilver ones which Moſes made (86), ſays little or nothing of theſe here, but calls them plainly horns (87); only when he comes afterwards to ſpeak of thoſe which Gideon and his men made uſe of (88), he calls them rams-horns (89). However, let them have been made how, and of what they would, 'tis plain from this inſtance of Gideon and ſome others both before and after him, that beſides thoſe trumpets which were appropriated to the prieſts, to ſound before the ark, to proclaim feaſts, jubilees, and the like, whoſe number was increaſed to ſeven in Joſhua's (90), and to ſix ſcore in Solomon's time (91); (Joſephus ſays (92) two hundred thouſand, and adds, that it was according to Moſes's command, though upon what authority is hard to gueſs) beſides theſe, I ſay, 'tis plain, there were others for the war, which each general cauſed to ſound upon all exigencies. Thus Ehud, after he had privately killed Eglon king of Moab, ſounded the trumpet, and gathered Iſrael on mount Ephraim (93). And the ſame was afterwards done by Joab, Abſalom, and many more (94).

(86) Ant. lib. iii. c. 12. (87) Ibid. l. 5. c. 1. (88) Judg. vii. 8. & ſeq. (89) Ant. l. v. c. 8. (90) Joſh. vi. 4. (91) 2 Chron. v. 12. (92) Ant. l. viii. c. 2. (93) Judg. iii. 27. (94. Vid. 2 Sam. ii. 28. xv. 10. & alib.

to

to the ground. Joſhua added a prophetic curſe on the man that ſhould afterwards attempt to rebuild it, importing that he ſhould lay the foundation of it in his firſt-born, and ſet up the gates of it in his youngeſt ſon [z], by which the Jews do underſtand, that all his children, from the biggeſt to the leaſt, ſhould die an untimely death before he had finiſhed it [a]. However, we find it literally fulfilled above five hundred and fifty years after by Hiel the Bethelite, who laid the foundations of it in his eldeſt ſon Abiram, and ſet up its gates in his youngeſt ſon Segub accordingly [b]. Such was the fatal end of Jericho, which Moſes choſe to call by the name of the city of palm-trees [c], by reaſon of the great number of them that grew in the plain round about it. To which Joſephus adds, that the tree from which flowed the famed balm of Gilead, and other odoriferous trees, did likewiſe grow in its neighbourhood [d], from whoſe fragrancy it is ſuppoſed to have been named Jericho, which in the original ſignifies odour (C). As for Rehab and her family, they had a place aſſigned them out of the Iſraeliſh camp, and ſhe was ſoon after incorporated into their commonwealth, by her embracing the Jewiſh religion, and her marriage to Salmon [e], head of the tribe of Judah as was hinted before; whether the reſt of her kindred followed

She is married to Salmon.

[z] Joſh. vi. 26. [a] Vid. MUNST. in loc. [b] 1 Kings, xvi. ver. ult. [c] Deuter. xxxiv. 3. [d] Jew. Wars. l. v. c. 4. [e] Matth. i. 5. Vid. USHER's Ann. p. 26.

(C) This however muſt not be literally underſtood, as if there had been no city of that name from Joſhua to Hiel, ſince we read of the city of Palm-trees in Eglon's time (95), and of Jericho in David's days, for there it was that he bid his ambaſſadors ſtay, till their beards which had been cut off by Hanun king of Ammon, were grown again (96). And Joſephus tells us, this new one was rebuilt not upon the ſpot of the old, the ruins of which, he ſays, were ſtill to be ſeen in his time, but at a ſmall diſtance from it (97), as ſhall be further ſhewn in the geography of Canaan. However, after Hiel had ventured to rebuild the old town, no ſcruple was made of inhabiting it; ſo that it became afterwards famous upon many accounts. Here the prophet ſweetened the waters of the ſpring that ſupplied it and the neighbouring countries: here Herod built a ſumptuous palace: it was the dwelling place of Zacchæus, and was honoured with Chriſt's preſence, who likewiſe vouchſafed to work ſome miracles there.

(95) Judg. iii. 13. (96) 2 Sam. x. 5. (97) Joſeph. Ant. lib. v. c. 1. & al.

her her example or no, is neither certain, nor of great conſequence (D).

IN the mean time, though the wonderful ſucceſs of the Iſraelites againſt this city opened a way to new conqueſts, yet their general, wiſely conſidering the time which the making and dividing of them would take, during which his numerous army muſt be ſupplied with proviſions, choſe to make that fruitful plain the centre of his camp, from whence he might conſtantly draw out a ſufficient number of men to invade other territories, till they had ſo far enlarged their own as to admit of a diſtribution between the tribes, which was not done till ſix years after †. As ſoon therefore as Joſhua had ſettled the beſt order he could in his camp, he detached a body of three thouſand men againſt the king of Ai, whoſe capital was about ten or twelve miles diſtant from Jericho, where they rece ved an unexpected repulſe, with the loſs of about thirty ſix men. This defeat, how ſmall ſoever, did ſo damp the people's courage, that Joſhua was forced to have

The Iſraelites repulſed at Ai.

† Vid. Vol. II: p. 17.

(D) The Jews tell us, that Joſhua was very doubtful, whether the promiſe which the two ſpies had made to Rahab was lawful or not, and that he could not ratify it, till he had firſt conſulted Eleazar the high-prieſt and the ſeventy elders, who not only gave ſentence in her favour, but pronounced her worthy of a greater reward than ſhe had ſtipulated; upon which, as ſoon as ſhe had accompliſhed the days of her purification without the camp, on account of her being a Gentile, ſhe was admitted a proſelyte, and ſoon after married to Salmon the ſon of Naaſſon, and great grandfather of David. A Romiſh chronologiſt 98) ſays, upon the authority of the Jewiſh rabbies, that Joſhua married her, from which another writer of the ſame church has inferred, that it was a grand daughter of hers of the ſame name, that was afterwards married to Salmon (99; but, as we can ſee no foundation for either of theſe notions, we have choſen to follow the far greater majority of chronologers, and particularly the learned Uſſher, who affirms, that it was this Rahab whom Salmon took to wife †. However, as it is forbidden, by the cxiith negative precept of Moſes, to make any affinity with any of the ſeven nations there mentioned (100), the Jews affirm her to have been of ſome other nation, and only an inhabitant of Jericho (1), which is not at all improbable, ſeeing they were ſo ſtrangely intermixed, as we have ſeen elſewhere ‡.

(98) Genebr. Chronol. p 13. (99) Berruy. Hiſt. de Peup de Dieu. Age iii. l. 1. † Uſh. Ann. p. 26. (100) Deut. vii. 1. & ſeq. (1) Vid. מצות לא תעשה : ſub מצוה : cxii.
‡ Vid. Vol. II. p. 157. & ſeq.

recourſe

recourſe to GOD, who immediately anſwered by Urim, as is ſuppoſed, that his commands had been ſacrilegiouſly infringed, and ordered him to diſcover the guilty perſon by lot, and (E) to puniſh him with immediate death. Joſhua loſt no time, and having caſt lots from the tribes to the families, Achan, the ſon of Carmi of the tribe of Judah, was found to be the ſacrilege, who, at the general's requeſt, confeſſed that he had concealed ſome of the accurſed plunder of Jericho. His crime was no ſooner verified by the ſearch that was made in his tent, than he, his children, cattle, and all he had, were conveyed to the adjacent valley, which was from that time called the valley of Achor, or Trouble, from the trouble which this crime had brought upon the people, and there the former were ſtoned to death, and the reſt burnt (F); after which they reared up an heap of ſtones, for a monument of his crime and a determent to the reſt [f]. Achan's crime puniſhed.

THE army being thus purged, as Joſephus words it, they had much better ſucceſs, not only in their next expedition againſt [f] Joſh. vii.

(E) How theſe lots were caſt is neither plain from ſcripture, nor agreed about by commentators, though we have a great many inſtances of their being made uſe of, both to diſcover guilty perſons, not only by the Jews, as in this and the caſe of Saul (2), but by other nations, as we find by the hiſtory of Jonah; and for ſeveral other purpoſes bad as well as good. As to the manner in which the ceremony itſelf was performed, except the calling of the tribes one after another till it came to the right, and ſo down to the inferior branches of each family till they came at laſt to ſingle perſons, as in the two caſes above-mentioned, except this we have nothing certain about it. Joſephus (3) only ſays, that it was done before the high-prieſt and ſeventy elders. To this other Jews add, that they were made to paſs before the ark, and that the high-prieſt was directed by the Urim to pitch upon the right tribe, family, &c. (4). However that be, the lawfulneſs of this way of caſting lots cannot be denied, ſeeing it was not only countenanced, if not preſcribed by GOD, but afterwards practiſed even by the apoſtles (5), though the heatheniſh ſuperſtition which did ſince mix itſelf with it, and the vile purpoſes to which it has been put, hath made it exceeding dangerous, if not altogether criminal.

(F) The law againſt ſacrilege condemning the tranſgreſſor to the flames, and GOD commanding the perſon here guilty to be burnt

(2) 1 Sam. xiv. 38, & ſeq. Vid. Munſt. in Joſh. vii. (3) Ant. l. v. c. 1. (4) (5) Acts i. ver. ult.

accordingly

Canaan conquered in ſix years

againſt Ai, but alſo againſt the whole land, the conqueſt of which was, though not perfectly, finiſhed in ſix years. But as we have already given ſome account of it in the hiſtory of Canaan , we ſhall, to avoid prolixity and repetition, refer the other material circumſtances, that have been either but lightly touched upon there, or poſtponed as foreign, ſuch as the ſetting up the tabernacle in Shiloh, engraving the law on ſtone, ſetting up the bleſſings and curſes, and the like to the next article of the geography and partition of the land, where the whole will be more diſtinctly ſeen at one view.

The ſun ſtands ſtill at Joſhua's prayer.

IN the mean time our readers will not perhaps think it amiſs, if we venture to ſubjoin here ſome few, we hope not improper, remarks upon thoſe two miraculous tranſactions which happened at this time; namely the ſtopping the courſe of the ſun by Joſhua, and the remarkable rain of hail-ſtones, which did ſuch a terrible execution upon the confederate army of the Canaanites, both which happened on the ſame day [g]; but having been but barely mentioned before ‡, and having no connection with what is to follow, can no where be more properly offered than in this place. We need not tell them, how many, otherwiſe learned men, among the Chriſtians have ſcrupled to fall in with the Copernican ſyſtem, in this and many other countries free from the inquiſition, upon a miſtaken notion, that it is point blank accordingly (6), the Jews affirm, that Achan was actually burnt (7); and whereas it is ſaid in the text, that he was ſtoned (8), they think it to have been done accidentally by the people, who were ſo highly provoked, that they could not forbear caſting ſtones at him as he was led to execution (9). However, their large comment on this place obſerves judiciouſly enough, that he was alſo guilty of the breach of the ſabbath, becauſe it was on that day that Jericho was taken, and therefore, that as he had been guilty of a double crime, ſacrilege and ſabbath-breaking, ſo he received the double puniſhment preſcribed, ſtoning and burning (10). The Jews add, that the place where the 3000 men were routed by the men of Ai, was called שִׁבְרִים, Shebarim, breaches or defeats from the defeat which they received there, as עָכוֹר, Achor was from the grief which Achan cauſed them.

, Vid. Vol. II. p. 177. [g] Joſh. x. 11. & ſeq. ‡ Ubi ſupr.

(6) Joſh. vii. 15. (7) Vid. Munſt. in loc. (8) Ibid. ver. 25. (9) Munſt. ibid. (10) Bammidbar Rab. in loc.

contrary

contrary to ſeveral expreſs teſtimonies of holy writ, among which this of the ſun and moon ſtanding ſtill is ſtrenuouſly urged by them; whilſt others, from a contrary principle, have been induced to queſtion its divine authority, becauſe it favoured ſo abſurd a one as that of Ptolemy is now generally allowed and proved to be. It was doubtleſs this laſt error which gave occaſion to thoſe two witty, though prophane, ſayings reported of that great philoſopher Alphonſo king of Naples, that if the ſyſtem of the earth's ſtanding ſtill were true, the whole univerſe was but a bungling piece of mechaniſm; and that if he had been admitted into GOD's council at the creation, he could have ſaved him a world of trouble †.

Now it is plain, that theſe two extremes might have been eaſily avoided by two very obvious obſervations, namely, 1ſt, that the expreſſions here made uſe of, ſun ſtand thou ſtill upon Gibeon, and ſo on, are figurative, and incapable of a literal ſenſe (G); and 2d, that the ſyſtem which places the earth

† Vid. BACON's Apophthegms.

(G) The words literally run thus: Sun be thou ſilent in, or upon, Gibeon, and thou moon in the valley of Ajalon; and in the next verſe it is ſaid, that they ſtood ſtill accordingly; now it is plain, that thoſe two luminaries were neither in, upon, or even over, theſe places in any other than a relative ſenſe, and that they had a different ſituation with reſpect to thoſe that were one mile eaſt or weſt of the place where Joſhua ſtood. We may venture to add, that it was impertinent to make the moon ſtand ſtill with the ſun, upon any other ſuppoſition than that Joſhua had the ſolar ſyſtem in his thoughts when he uſed thoſe expreſſions, becauſe the preſence of the moon was uſeleſs to him as long as he had that of the ſun, but if he only prayed, that their light might continue in ſtatu quo, till he had accompliſhed his conqueſt, which is certainly all he meant, he could not but know, that upon the earth's ſtanding ſtill, both the ſun and moon, and all the reſt muſt ſeem to do ſo. It is plain our great philoſopher Sir Iſaac Newton, who was ſufficiently maſter of the Hebrew, was not frighted by theſe, or any ſuch popular phraſes from his favourite ſyſtem, though no man payed a greater deference to the authority of the ſcriptures than he did; and that he thought it ſufficient that the effect was the ſame, whether the ſun or the earth were ſuppoſed to be ſtopped in their career.

If it be asked how it was poſſible for the earth to reſiſt, for ſo many hours, the impulſe of the circumambient fluid of the Carteſians, or of the attraction and gravitation of the Newtonian ſyſtem, or of whatever other mover that hurries it along, without causing an univerſal ſtop in the whole ſyſtem? beſides, that the objection earth immoveable in the centre, and ſuppoſes the ſun, moon, and ſtars to turn round it, was the moſt univerſally received, the moſt adapted to vulgar capacities, and the freeſt from ſeeming difficulties, becauſe moſt agreeable to common appearances and obſervations; and that the groſs Iſraelites were ſo uſed to it, that had Moſes, Joſhua, or any other inſpired writer, known any thing of the ſolar one, yet it would have been improper, if not dangerous, to have ſo much as hinted at it. However, theſe conſiderations, though obvious and reaſonable, have been ſo far from being univerſally admitted, that a great number of authors, both Jews and Chriſtians, have ranſacked their brains to find out more ſatisfactory ſolutions, though with ſo little circumſpection and ſucceſs, that they have rather multiplied, than removed the difficulties which they endeavoured to avoid.

The ſyſtems of ſome authors concerning it examined.

AMONG the firſt ſome have affirmed, that the motion of the luminaries was only abated in its velocity, as that of a coach is from a full gallop to an even pace [h], from an expreſſion uſed there, that the ſun did not haſten to go down about a whole day. But whether or no they thought it eaſier to retard, than wholly to ſuſpend their motion, ſure it is, that neither of them could be done but by a ſupernatural power; the ſame may be ſaid of what ſome Rabbies affirm, that God ſubſtituted ſome meteor, or body of light [i], or that he retained the moon above the horizon to ſupply the ab-will be equally ſtrong, if not ſtronger, in the other hypotheſis of the ſun ſtanding ſtill, it may be anſwered, that the fact being altogether preternatural, we need but ſuppoſe a ſufficient power to have diverted that impulſe from the earth, and directed it to glide on each ſide of it, and then all the reſt might eaſily keep on their motion, though this ſtood ſtill all the while. However, we do not pretend to anſwer all the objections that have been raiſed againſt the poſſibility of this miracle from principles, which for ought we know, have no foundation but in the heads of thoſe who firſt invented them; we think it enough to ſay, that the ſupreme author of nature, who firſt gave motion to matter, and whoſe will alone appointed the laws of it, can either ſuſpend, or diſpenſe with them, whenever his own glory, or any wiſe ends of his providence, make it neceſſary, or expedient; to doubt of this is to deny the truth of all miracles, and unworthy of any anſwer.

[h] Chald. Paraph. R. LEVI Ben GERSH. & al. Vid. MUNST. in loc. & CALM. Differt. [i] R. ELIAKIM. B. NAPTHAL. שם טוב.

ſence

ſence of the ſun [k]; but all theſe are modeſt men in compariſon to the learned Maimonides, who makes all the miracle of this tranſaction to have conſiſted in a bare wiſh or prayer of Joſhua, that the ſun might not go down till he had gained a complete conqueſt, and in God's granting his requeſt, not by ſtopping the ſun's career during ſo many hours, as we underſtand it, but by enabling that general and his army, to do as much execution in one, as would reaſonably have taken up two days [l]. After this we need not wonder, if Spinoza, the laſt among the Jews we ſhall mention, has ſtill improved upon him, and quite removed the difficulty by denying the miracle, and attributing the extraordinary length of that day to the bare refraction of the ſun's rays by the ſky, which was then more than ordinarily charged with hail, but which the people miſtook for the ſun's ſtanding ſtill. According to him Iſaiah was no better a philoſopher than Joſhua, when he attributed the change that happened upon Ahaz's dial to the retrogreſſion of the ſun, rather than to a refraction of it from ſome cloud [m].

Maimonides and Spinoza confuted.

WE do very much queſtion, whether any of theſe, eſpecially the two laſt, would ever have been thought worth anſwering, or even mentioning, had they not been too cloſely followed by ſome very learned Chriſtians, proteſtants as well as papiſts. We ſhall only take notice of three of the moſt eminent of them, namely, Grotius, Peirerius, and Le Clerc, whoſe ſentiments, as well as what has been ſaid to confute them, we ſhall now give in as few words as the ſubject will admit of.

As for Grotius, though he doth not think it impoſſible, that God ſhould ſuſpend the courſe of the ſun, or make it appear upon our horizon after it is ſet, yet he is ſo far from granting that it was really done, that he thinks its not being mentioned, among other things of leſs moment, in the epiſtle to the Hebrews [n], to be a ſtrong argument againſt it (H). And therefore what is ſaid in Joſhua, that God hearkened Grotius confuted.

[k] Jos. & DAV. KIMCHI. vid. מכלול. & Epiſt. ſupr. Mor. Nevoch. MAIMONID. [l] More Nevoch. part ii. c. 39.
[m] Tract. Theologico-Politic. c. ii. [n] Hebr. xi. ad fin.

(H) The misfortune is, that the argument will hold equally againſt ſeveral other miraculous tranſactions, which are likewiſe omitted by the apoſtle, though expreſly mentioned in holy writ; ſuch as the plagues of Egypt, all the wonders wrought by Moſes in hearkened to the voice of a man, he thinks with Maimonides to mean no more, than that God, at his requeſt, granted him as much time and diſpatch as was neceſſary to gain a complete victory °.

Peirerius confuted.

Peirerius, mentioned before † for his extraordinary ſkill in accounting for all ſcripture miracles in a natural way, ſuppoſes the wilderneſs, the miraculous paſſage over Jordan, and many more of the like nature. He doth not ſo much as ſpeak a word of the conqueſt of Canaan, or mention Joſhua among his worthies, though his character be ſo vaſtly ſuperior to that of Gideon, Jephthah, and others that are mentioned in that place. Beſides it is plain, the deſign of this chapter was only to give ſome few notable inſtances of the wonderful power of faith: to have enumerated all that is recorded upon the ſubject would have ſwelled it beyond the bulk of the whole epiſtle; and to have been too curious in the choice of them, eſpecially to thoſe of his nation, who knew all theſe things as well as himſelf, would have been too affected, and have ſavoured too much of art and human wiſdom, which was always carefully and profeſſedly avoided by the inſpired writers *.

Under this head we may rank another objection, namely, the ſilence of all the antient hiſtorians, which, it is urged, could never have been ſo univerſal, had ſuch a memorable tranſaction ever happened. But it ought to be remembered, that this fact is vaſtly previous to any prophane writer, either extant or quoted, ſo that it was eaſy for the remembrance or monuments of it, if there were any, to be loſt among a vaſt multitude of others, during the long and dark interval between it and the moſt antient authors. However, if light may be allowed to be fetched out of darkneſs, whence could the notion come into the poets heads of their demigods and heroes, having the power of lengthening days and nights, as beſt ſerved their warlike or amorous deſigns, but moſt likely from this wonderful event? How came Jupiter, for inſtance, to be ſuppoſed to have ſpun the night which he ſpent with Alcmena, to twice its natural length? or Minerva to have done the ſame in favour of Ulyſſes, whilſt he was butchering his competitors, and making himſelf known to his wife (11)? and many others of the like nature (12); but though we could bring nothing out of prophane hiſtory to confirm this fact, yet would this be no fair argument againſt the truth of it, or the veracity of the writer, abſtracting even from his divine authority, if we judge of him with the ſame candor, as we do of any other hiſtorian.

° Comm. in Joſh. x. 14. † See before, p. 9. note (L).

* Vid. Luke xxi. 15. 1 Cor. i. 17, 21, 27. 2 Cor. i. 12. & alib. (11) Vid. Hom. Odyſſ. xxiii. ver. 242, 243. (12) Vid. Bacon. Syren. Huet. Demonſtr. Evang. Calm. Diſſert. & al.

poſes poſes [P], contrary to all reaſon as well as the plain meaning of the text, that Joſhua only wiſhed for a longer day, about the time of the ſun's ſetting, upon which the land of Paleſtine, or perhaps the territories only about Gibeon, were enlightened by a kind of twilight, or ſomething like our Aurora Borealis, which, continuing long enough to anſwer Joſhua's purpoſe, was miſtook by him for the ſun, though it was actually ſet as uſual; and made him and his army fancy that day to have been longer than any other by all that interval. But here the queſtion is, not how far theſe Parelia, or mock ſuns, can ſupply the abſence of the real one, but whether the hiſtorian's account can be capable of ſuch a forced interpretation. The text ſays expreſly, that the ſun ſtood ſtill in the mid-heaven (I) at Joſhua's prayer, and that

[P] Præadamit lib. iv. c. 6.

(I) The words are בחצי השמים, in the midſt of heaven, or, in the mid-heaven, which is always underſtood, both by aſtronomers, and by the vulgar, to ſignify the place where the ſun is at noon; and that he haſted not לבוא to go down, or literally to decline towards its ſetting, during one whole day (13). What follows in the next verſe, that no day was ever like it, either before or ſince, doth plainly confirm it. However, as theſe authors ſeem to rely little on the authority of the text, whatever they pretend to the contrary, it will not be amiſs to try to confute them in their own way, by ſhewing, that their ſuppoſition of the ſun's being then near ſetting, when Joſhua ſtopped it, makes againſt their favourite hypotheſis, and leaves him not time enough for all the work which he is recorded to have done on that day.

It is expreſly ſaid, that the army marched all that night from Gilgal, and came early in the morning to Gibeon, where Joſhua engaged and beat the enemy, put them to flight, and purſued them from the aſcent of Beth-horon to Azekah and Makkedah; and that, as they were going down the deſcent of Beth-horon, theſtorm of hail fell upon them, after which he commanded the ſun to ſtand ſtill in Gibeon, and the moon in Ajalon. All this might be done eaſily enough before the ſun was paſt the meridian, and the ſituation of thoſe two laſt places ſhews, that it muſt have been about that time of the day. From the Beth-horon here mentioned, or lower Beth-horon, he purſued them to Azekah and Makkedah, which could not be leſs than twelve or fourteen miles, according to St. Jerom, who places the former at nine and the latter at eight miles, northward of Eleutheropolis †. There he is told that the five kings had hid themſelves in a cave, and he ordered the mouth of it to be ſtopped with a heap of ſtones, and then continues his purſuit till part of the enemy

(13) Joſh. x. 13. † Vid. Epitaph. Paulæ, & loc. Hebr.

that his more than uſual continuance above the horizon, or rather in the ſame ſituation, made that a longer day than ever was known before or ſince. Suppoſing then for once the whole army to have been ſo little acquainted with theſe kinds of lights, as to have fancied the ſun ſtill above the horizon, could they be ſo ſtupid as not to know his uſual place at noon from that of his ſetting? but ſhould we ſuppoſe even this, could they chooſe being undeceived, either by ſeeing it riſe on the next morning at his uſual time, or by the concurring teſtimony of other people who had ſeen him riſe and ſet as at other times? And if they were undeceived, is it likely, that they would have tranſmitted an account of it in ſuch terms, as muſt of neceſſity betray either their want of common ſenſe, or common honeſty? Laſtly, can our author, or any of his admirers, if they really believe this book to be divinely inſpired, ſuppoſe, that the holy Ghoſt would have ſuffered the Hebrew general, not only to have continued under ſuch a deluſion, but even to have tranſmitted it to poſterity with the divine ſtamp upon it?

Le Clerc confuted.

The laſt perſon, we propoſed to mention under this head, is the famous M. Le Clerc, who has not only embraced the ſentiments of the two former, but has endeavoured to back them with new reaſons. The two firſt are taken from Joſhua's expreſſion, Sun ſtand thou ſtill upon Gibeon, which can admit of none but a figurative ſenſe; and from the literal one being contrary to the received ſolar ſyſtem. We have already ſhewn above, that they prove nothing on either ſide of the queſtion, and refer the reader to it. But he goes farther and ſays, 3. That providence is too ſparing enemy is killed, and the reſt fled into fenced cities, and then returns to Makkedah. Here again he cauſes the mouth of the cave to be opened, and the five kings to be hanged till ſun-ſet, and then to be taken down and buried again in the ſame cave. Can an army which had marched all the night, and fought all the day, be ſuppoſed to have purſued their enemies ſo many miles, kill them all the way they went, then come back to Makkedah, and execute and bury the five kings with ſuch ſolemnity, after ſun-ſet and by the help of a refracted light? And if ſo, what ſun was that which they ſaw ſetting when they took the kings down? how much leſs probable is it ſtill, that they ſhould have done all this before the real ſun-ſetting? The reader may further convince himſelf how much the ſituation of Gibeon and Ajalon is incompatible with the ſuppoſition we have been oppoſing, from the maps and geography that is to follow.

of

of miracles, to beſtow ſo ſignal a one, as the overturning the whole order of nature, upon a thing of ſo ſmall moment, as the defeat of the Canaaniti∫h army in one day rather than in two. To this it is added, that Jo∫hua's prayer was too unreaſonable for GOD to grant in the ſtrict ſenſe it is commonly underſtood in, ſince the next day might have done as well, without lengthening this at the expence of ſo great a miracle (K) : But is not this very preſumptuous, and may not ſuch a bold way of reaſoning, againſt the plaineſt facts mentioned in ſcripture, prove the ſource of endleſs errors and infidelity? Will it not equally hold againſt all the other miracles wrought from Mo∫es to Chri∫t himſelf? Why were ſo many done in Egypt, when Pharaoh might have been ſoftened into compliance at a much eaſier rate? Why muſt the Red-ſea or the Jordan be miraculouſly divided, when the former might have been coaſted, and the latter forded at more places than one? In a word, why did Chri∫t and his diſciples work ſuch a great number of miracles, when one or two great ones well known and atteſted, were ſufficient to prove their divine miſſion? Well might Job ſay, vain man would be wi∫e [q]. 4. The ſame author ſuppoſes the account of this tranſaction to have been taken from the book of Ja∫her, or the upright, which, like other poetical works, eſpecially thoſe that are written in the eaſtern tongues, is too ſwollen and hyperbolical to admit of a literal ſenſe, and cannot be rightly underſtood unleſs reduced vaſtly below it. We ſhall not trouble

[q] Ch. xi. 12.

(K) The Jews indeed tell us, that the reaſon of the lengthening of this day was, becauſe the next was the ſabbath, which would have given the Canaanites an opportunity either of rallying or eſcaping, whilſt Jo∫hua and his army were at reſt (14); but, beſides that we have nothing but their bare word for it, it is plain from their own confeſſion, that it was not always unlawful for them to do execution on the ſabbath, ſince Jericho was ſo lately taken on that day, as we hinted before. Some Chri∫tians however ſay, it was on a ſunday that the ſun ſtood ſtill (15). The learned Uſher ſays nothing of the day, or even the month, in which it happened, but only ſuppoſes it to have been towards the latter end of the year (16). As for the number of hours which that day laſted more than uſual, the text is neither plain, nor authors agreed, and therefore we ſhall affirm nothing about it.

(14) Rabbin in Sedar Olam. vid Munſt. in loc. (15) Serrar. Bonfrer. De Lyr in loc. (16) Ann. p. 26.

ourſelves with examining how unreaſonable the ſuppoſition of ſuch diſparate and unnatural hyperboles is, and eſpecially of their being afterwards cloſely followed by an inſpired hiſtorian, whoſe ſtyle is every where elſe rather in the other extreme; it will be ſufficient to ſay, that all this is affirmed gratis, and without any foundation. For who told Grotius, or our author, that the book of Jaſher was a poetical piece, abounding with ſuch hyperbolical flights? Sure it is, that no mention is made of it any where but in this place, and in the ſecond book of Samuel *; and theſe would rather incline one to believe it to have been a hiſtory of Hebrew worthies, written, and continued, by ſeveral hands, and at different periods. But even this is upon the ſuppoſition that they are the ſame book, which yet doth not appear. The Jews indeed think ſo, but then they underſtand by Jaſher, or righteous, Moſes himſelf, and this book to be the Pentateuch, in which are contained ſeveral promiſes of the wonders that God was to work in favour of his people . But, as this is owing to a ſuperſtitious unwillingneſs in them to own that any inſpired book could be loſt, they are not followed by any Chriſtian. However that be, M. Le Clerc has taken the pains to verſify the two places in queſtion, by the tranſpoſition of ſome words, in order to make it appear at leaſt probable, that the author of the book of Joſhua, in quoting them out of that of Jaſher, had only reduced them to hiſtorical proſe by the contrary tranſpoſition. But here we beg leave to obſerve, that it is at leaſt a very bold aſſumption to ſay, that a writer, who barely appeals to another for the truth of a ſingle inſtance, has taken the whole from him. The moſt that can be fairly concluded from ſuch an appeal is, that the fact is equally affirmed by both, either in the ſame or equivalent terms; but ſuch as an honeſt hiſtorian would never have uſed, who had had the leaſt ſuſpicion of their being ſo monſtrouſly exaggerated by poetic rhapſody; and that all that was meant by thoſe expreſſions of the ſun and moon ſtanding ſtill in the mid-heaven, and of that day being thereby ſo miraculouſly lengthened, was no more than that there remained ſo much light after their ſetting, occaſioned by ſome unuſual refraction, as made the whole army think thoſe luminaries to be ſtill above the horizon.

As to what our author adds, that it is more probable, that Joſhua ſhould pray for a longer day, when he perceived the ſun juſt going to leave him, than when it was at its height;

* Ch. i. 18.  Vid. Munst. in loc.

height; though it carries a great appearance of reaſon, yet can it by no means conclude againſt a poſitive text, backed with other circumſtances equally ſtrong on the other ſide. Joſhua might have his reaſons for what he did, though they are not recorded, nor we able to gueſs at them. He was an old experienced general, eager for a complete victory, which alone could ſave his new allies from the impending ruin, and able no doubt to compute what time it would take to atchieve it; ſo that his fear of loſing any part of it might make him pray, that the day might be thus prolonged, till he had gained the whole. But after all, where is the unreaſonableneſs of ſuppoſing, that GOD, who deſigned to ſignalize this day's action, by one of the greateſt miracles that ever was done, did himſelf inſpire the Hebrew general with that wiſh or prayer, which otherwiſe perhaps would never have come into his head?

BUT here it is further objected, that the occaſion was too inconſiderable to deſerve ſuch a ſignal miracle, ſince it was only the giving one inconſiderable nation an advantage over another, for which the next day might have done as well: but beſides, that this ſeems to ſet limits to the divine wiſdom and power, our author ſeems not to have examined the caſe thoroughly; we beg leave to do it for him, and to ſet it in a fairer light, by reminding the reader, that this battle was not fought offenſively, but defenſively on Iſrael's ſide, and in order to ſave a people, whom they had ſolemnly taken under their protection, from being utterly deſtroyed upon that very account. The Gibeonites, as a free people, had a right to take all proper meaſures for their ſafety, ſo that Joſhua could not but look upon the confederacy formed againſt them as cruel and unjuſt, and conſequently, that it would have been baſe and diſhonourable in him to have refuſed them the deſired ſuccour upon any pretence whatſoever. To this we may add, that the honour of GOD himſelf was concerned in the preſervation of his new made proſelytes, whoſe alliance with the Iſraelites had been ratified in his name, by the mouth of his high-prieſt. Upon theſe conſiderations Joſhua loſes no time, but marches all that night to their aſſiſtance, and on the next day GOD is pleaſed to reward his faithfulneſs and zeal by a miraculous victory, which not only ſaves the oppreſſed by the total defeat of the oppreſſors, but makes at once the whole land of Canaan ſenſible, that a mightier GOD was on Iſrael's ſide than any that was worſhipped there, by ſtopping the courſe of the ſun and moon, the two grand deities of thoſe idolatrous nations. Had Iſrael's ſword alone gained the conqueſt, it would would have been imputed to their ſuperior valour and ſtrength; had there nothing more remarkable happened in it than the rain of ſtones or large hail, it might have been thought owing to chance, or, at beſt, been only known in that neighbourhood; whereas the ſtopping of the two great luminaries in the height of their career, thus univerſally felt, could not but convince thoſe unhappy people, that the gods which they truſted to were ſubject to that of Iſrael, as well as prove a moſt powerful determent to the latter from falling into the idolatries of the former.

WHAT ſhews this laſt to be more than a bare conjecture is, that noble zeal which the nine tribes and half did expreſs ſome years after againſt their brethren on the other ſide Jordan, whom they ſuſpected to have ſet up an altar there with an idolatrous intent. This ſignal inſtance, being the more remarkable as it is perhaps the only one of that kind, is recorded by the divine hiſtorian †‡†, with all its circumſtances very much to their praiſe, and may be as properly inſerted here, as in any other place in this hiſtory, and is as follows.

THE tribes of Reuben, Gad, and half Manaſſeh, having aſſiſted the reſt in the conqueſt of Canaan, as far as was thought neceſſary, were honourably diſmiſſed by their brethren; but before they landed on the other ſide Jordan, they took care to erect an altar of a prodigious ſize upon the border of that river, in order to perpetuate the memory, both of the relation they bore to the other tribes, and of the wonders which GOD had wrought in their favour. However, their intention was ſo far miſtaken by their brethern, that they aſſembled themſelves at Shiloh, and there reſolved to enter into a bloody war againſt them, in caſe they could not diſculpate themſelves from the crime of rebellion and apoſtacy, which this new altar had given them cauſe to ſuſpect them guilty of. They therefore deputed ten of their chiefs, with Phinehas the high prieſt's ſon at their head, to go and enquire into the reaſons of this proceeding; and theſe were no ſooner come, than they began to charge them home with a manifeſt violation of GOD's law, and with a deſign of ſetting up ſome idolatrous worſhip there, ſince it was expreſly forbidden by Moſes to offer up any ſacrifices any where, but in the place which GOD was in due time to appoint. They reminded them of the heavy judgments which their former idolatries had brought upon them, and concluded their pathetic ſpeech with aſſuring them, that they were re-†‡† Joſh. xxii. per tot.

ſolved

ſolved one and all to oppoſe, even at the peril of their lives, the introduction of any new worſhip, which might involve them in a greater guilt.

THOUGH their alarm and reproaches were ill-grounded, yet, being imputed to their heat of zeal, they were not in any ways reſented by the reſt; who, being heard in their turn, took GOD to witneſs, that they had not built that ſumptuous altar with a deſign to offer up any ſacrifices there, much leſs to withdraw themſelves from his worſhip at the place that was to be appointed; but, on the contrary, to prevent their poſterity from being debarred that privilege in proceſs of time, either by their being diſowned by the other tribes, or by a pretence that GOD had ſeparated them from the commonwealth of Iſrael, by ſetting the river Jordan as a barrier between them. This anſwer, which was couched in the humbleſt terms, and backed with the ſtrongeſt tokens of ſincerity, not only gave the deputies and the reſt of the nation a full ſatisfaction, but fully ſhews how great a change all thoſe wonders had wrought on both ſides, and turned their ſtrongeſt propenſity to idolatry into a dread and utter deteſtation of it. Upon the whole then, ſince this miraculous tranſaction of ſtopping the courſe of the two luminaries is recorded in words ſo expreſs, ſo free from ambiguity, and ſo incapable of any other interpretation, without doing the greateſt violence both to the text and to the character of the hiſtorian, we cannot ſee how it is poſſible to depart from the obvious meaning of the former, without denying the authority of the latter.

Some other objections urged againſt our ſide of the queſtion, ſuch as the intolerable heat to which Joſhua's army muſt have been expoſed, had the ſun continued ſo long over their heads; the neceſſity there was of their ſtopping to refreſh themſelves with ſome ſuſtenance; and laſtly, that had Joſhua wrought a miracle, which ſo far exceeded thoſe of Moſes, he would have been greater than him: theſe, we ſay, would hardly be worth mentioning, were it not to ſhew to what ſtrange ſhifts a favourite notion or ſyſtem will drive men of the greateſt learning. For 1ſt, the exceſſive heat of a vertical ſun might be allayed by interpoſing clouds and refreſhing winds: none certainly ought to be more ready to grant this ſuppoſition than they who think, not that that day was longer, but that more execution was done in it than uſual ‡ (L). As to ‡ Ita MASIUS, GROTIUS, LE CLERC poſt MAIMON. ubi ſup.

(L) We may likewiſe add here, that the effects of ſuch a violent heat, as is here ſuppoſed, might be nothing ſo dreadful or fatal as to the next, we need not tell our readers, that nothing is more common in such exigencies as these, than for the soldiers, who carry their provision in their knapsacks, to take a piece in their hands and eat it as they march. The last thing objected, that such a miracle would make Joshua a greater man than Moses, contrary to some express texts of scripture, is too jejune to deserve an answer. Moses and Joshua were both instruments in the hands of GOD, to whose glory alone the greatness of the miracle redounds, without adding any preference to the one over the other, since one miracle cannot be said to be greater than another, with respect to an Almighty power.

IT is plain then, that, if we admit the divine authority of this book, we cannot but look upon this transaction as altogether supernatural, and of the number of those many which GOD was pleased to work in favour of the Israelites; it will be therefore needless to dwell long upon our next enquiry, how far the storm of hail-stones that preceded it was so or not.

The rain of stones which fell upon the Canaanites.

HOWEVER, though we have ventured to give it the name of hail, not so much in compliance with the modern taste, as because the original is capable of that sense without any great violence being done to it; yet it is plain to those that understand it, that the most natural one is, that it was a shower of real stones (M). The misfortune is, that men, who is pretended, especially to a people inured to it from their infancy, as the Israelites had been, during the space of forty years. History furnishes us with instances enough of marches and battles in as hot regions and seasons at least, though those excessive heats were nothing so natural to the armies that were exposed to them. Even these more northern climates have sometimes, nay very lately, endured such a degree of sultry weather, during some weeks successively, as came little short of that of the torrid zone, without any of those ill consequences which are urged by the other side.

(M) The text literally runs thus, And the Lord caused great stones to fall, or to be cast, upon them, and many more died by the אבני הברד, Abne habarad, the hail-stones, than by the sword; and it is this last expression that made the Septuagint, and, after them, Josephus (17), and the author of Ecclesiasticus (18), to understand them of a real hail of more than ordinary bigness, in which there is nothing but what is agreeable enough to the genius of the tongue, But on the other hand it is certain, that it is so far from being the obvious meaning of it, that the word hail seems rather to be used here to express the vast quantity, bigness, vehemence, and execu-

(17) Ant. lib. v. c. 1. (18) Eccles. xlvi. 6.

tion

who are more afraid than hurted, are apt to run themſelves into greater difficulties than thoſe they endeavour to avoid; and whilſt they take ſuch care to ſcreen themſelves from the ſuſpicion of being over credulous, eſpecially in caſes which carry the appearance of a miracle, they not only call in queſtion the moſt pregnant teſtimonies of the like facts in prophane hiſtory, both antient and modern, but likewiſe caſt a diſtant reflection on the divine hiſtorian, and thoſe inſpired writers who have mentioned the ſame facts after him, as if they had deſignedly made choice of ſuch terms in their recording of them, as would make them appear more ſupernatural than they really were. For if nothing had fallen on the Canaanites but a common ſhower of hail, in which there was nothing extraordinary but the ſize, why muſt they be ſuppoſed to have exaggerated it at any ſuch rate?

BUT here our two learned critics, Grotius and Le Clerc, who uſed to go hand in hand before, have taken a ſeparate notion contract: the former believes them to have been real ſtones, becauſe he finds many parallel inſtances of it in prophane hiſtory; and indeed it is no more than what has been fully proved by ſeveral eminent authors on that ſide of the queſtion [r]. However, Le Clerc has not ſcrupled to affirm, that it was nothing elſe but a large ſhower of hail; to call teſtimonies alledged out of hiſtory mere forgeries, and the endeavours of ſome authors to account for it in a natural way trifling and not worth confuting. How eaſy he would have found the taſk, had he gone ſeriouſly about it, will be beſt known by an impartial view of the teſtimonies themſelves, and of what has been urged to prove the poſſibility of the thing from natural cauſes. Le Clerc's futed.

As to the firſt, we hope our readers will think it ſufficient for our purpoſe, to inſtance in two or three of the moſt pregnant and unqueſtionable facts recorded in antient hiſtory, and back them with ſome few of a more recent date, but too tion of thoſe ſtones which then fell; and the expreſſion of flying and falling as thick as hail, is not only common to all the antient, but is likewiſe retained in moſt modern languages; for which reaſon ſeveral learned men have underſtood it of a miraculous ſhower of real ſtones, as being the moſt eaſy and natural meaning of the text (19).

[r] G. J. Voss. in loc. CALM. Differt. on the ſubject, and others.

(19). H. Grotius, Maſius, Bonfrer. Ger. Voſſ. Jun. Munſt. & al. mult. Vid. Calm. Differt. on the ſubject.

authentic

authentic to be so easily eluded: and if the latter are of such a nature as to lead us to any easy discovery of their cause, we shall not be at a loss for a sufficient ground to admit the possibility, if not the reality, of the former. It is no wonder, that they who lived in the early ages of the world did look upon a shower of great stones as too miraculous to be credited without ocular demonstration. Such prodigies happen so seldom, that we find the Romans, above a thousand years after Joshua's time, very backward to believe the report of that which fell upon the mountain Alba, in the reign of Tullus Hostilius successor to Numa Pompilius, till they had it confirmed by those whom they sent thither on purpose to examine it, who brought them word, that the fact was not only true, but that those stones had fallen from the skies in the same manner as hail that is driven down by the wind [r]. They became in time more familiar and less questioned, especially after that remarkable one which fell upon the same mountain, which the same author tells us [t] lasted two whole days. The same, or something like it, is likewise affirmed to have been seen at Rome, Capua, Lavinium, and so many other places in Italy, by so many authentic authors [u], that we cannot see how they can with any modesty be called in question (N).

Instances of it out of history.

[r] T. Liv. lib. i. dec. 1. [t] Id. lib. xxv, xxx & xxxiv. Vid. CALM. ubi supr. [u] Vid. & de Bell. Afric. c. 47. AMAN. Bell. Civil. lib. iv. AUGUST. de Civit. lib. iii. c. 32, & al.

We

(N) To these various Instances, of which the authors quoted above, have given us several other particulars, such as that those stones that fell in that prodigious manner were sometimes red-hot, and at other times cold, sometimes like hard clods of earth, and sometimes like sand or dust, we might add, what is likewise recorded by others of equal credit, of stones that have been observed to be carried for some considerable time in the air, and thence fallen with great violence upon the earth. Such was that which is mentioned by Plutarch to have fallen in Thrace into the river Argos (20), which Anaxagoras fancied to have fallen from the sun (21), and which the author, from whom the former has it, tells us (22), was observed to fly about in the air like a luminous cloud, about the space of seventy five days, during which time, several splinters did now and then break off and fly about like wandering stars before they fell down. The main stone itself was of such prodigious bigness, that Pythagoras could by no means think with Aristotle (23),

(20) In Vit. Lysand. (21) Vid. Diog in Anaxag. & Not. Menag. in Laert. (22) Damachus ap. Plut ubi sup. (23) Meteorolog. lib. 1. c. 7.

that

We might here alſo take notice of ſome other kinds of ſtony rains, mentioned by antient and modern authors, which are ſtill more natural, as being occaſioned either by vehement hurricanes, earthquakes, or by ſubterranean fires. Of the firſt ſort were thoſe which fell upon and routed the Perſians, when they went to plunder the temple of Delphos [w], and are affirmed by other travellers to be very frequent in ſome parts of America †. Thoſe that fell upon the Gauls, upon the like attempt, are attributed to a vehement hurricane by Pauſanias, but to an earthquake by Juſtin [x]. The laſt ſort is that which is cauſed by volcanoes and ſubterraneous fires; and theſe are ſo well known, that we ſhall mention but two remarkable inſtances of it, of a very late date, namely, that which preceded the ſurpriſing emerſion of the iſle of Santorino out of the Archipelago in the year 1707, concerning which we have the following account; that a dreadful noiſe had been heard ſeveral days, like that of thunder, or of great guns, during which volleys of ſtones all on fire were ſeen to riſe out of the ſea, and to fly up quite out of ſight like ſo many rockets, and then fall into the ſea again about five miles from the place whence they were thrown up. All this while the

Some cauſed by hurricanes and earthquakes.

[w] Vid. DIODOR. SICUL. Bibl. lib. xi. † Vid. COREAL & FEUILLEE's Voyages. [x] PAUS. lib. i. JUST. lib. xxiv. ſub fin.

that it had been broken off from ſome rock, and carried up into the air by ſome vehement wind, becauſe, as he juſtly obſerves, it would have been impoſſible for it to have kept itſelf ſo long ſuſpended there, as Damachus affirms it to have done. Pliny, who tells us, that it was ſtill carefully preſerved in his time, ſays, that it was magnitudine vehis of the bigneſs of a four-wheeled cart, or rather of a loaded waggon, of a dark burnt colour. Such was that likewiſe which is recorded to have fallen in Alſace, in the midſt of a ſtorm of hail, in November 29, 1630, (24) which our author (25) tells us he has ſeen in the great church of Anxiſſem, where it is ſtill preſerved, and is like a large, dark, flint-ſtone, whoſe ſurface has been ſplintered by the fire, and weighs near three hundred pounds. Of the ſame nature were thoſe which count Marcellin relates to have fallen in Thrace, A. D. 1452, and ſeveral others. For if ſuch prodigious ſtones could either be engendered in the air, or carried up thither by the force of vehement winds, or of ſubterraneous fires, the like may be more reaſonably ſuppoſed of thoſe which fell upon the Canaanites, which had nothing ſo extraordinary either in their ſize, appearance, or effects.

(24) Geſner. & Anſ. de Boot. Hiſt. Lapid. & Gem. (25) Calm. ubi ſupr.

air

air was filled with a thick ſulphureous ſmoke, mixed with cinders, which with much difficulty diſperſed itſelf, and fell in ſuch abundance, that the nighbouring countries were covered with it, and with ſmall ſtones that fell with it. Something like this is what Montfaucon tells us happened in Italy, near the village Tripergola, whence, after ſeveral terrible ſhocks and earthquakes, during which the air was darkned, and the ground was covered with ſtones and duſt, which kept pouring down from the ſky during the ſpace of two days, at the end of which a mountain was obſerved to have reared itſelf in the midſt of the lake Lucrino; this happened according to our author in the year 1538 [y].

THE reader may find ſeveral other inſtances of the like, and perhaps of a more ſurpriſing nature, in ſome of the authors above-mentioned [z], which we forbear to dwell upon; all that we ſhall add, at preſent, is, a remark or two on the poſſibility of ſome ſort of ſtones, different from thoſe of hail, being ingendered in the air, according to the hint we have given in the laſt note. How common hail is formed in the clouds is too well known to want any explanation; that duſt, ſand, earth, and other ſuch materials, may be carried up a conſiderable height into the air by a ſtrong whirlwind, is no more than what is commonly obſerved; here then we need but ſuppoſe, that theſe, mingling themſelves with other exhalations, whether ſulphureous, bituminous, oily, vitrioline, and with the moiſture of the clouds, are there conglomerated and hardened by their own weight, by the preſſure of the air and clouds, and thence fall down when they can be no longer ſupported (O). There is nothing in all this but what is natural,

Others ingender in the air.

[y] Vid. MONTFAUCON's Diar. Ital. [z] G. VOSS. CALM. ubi ſup. GASSEND. in lib. X. DIOG. LAERT. de Meteor. Epicur.

(O) Of this nature ſeem to have been thoſe which, an author of credit (26) tells us, did fall in the neighbourhood of Abdua, to the number of twelve hundred, which he ſays were of the colour of ruſty iron, ſmooth and hard, and of a ſulphureous ſmell, not unlike in all theſe reſpects to thoſe which are commonly called thunder-ſtones, or bolts. Theſe he adds, were obſerved to fall from a vehement whirlwind, which appeared like an atmoſphere of fire, and were ſo large and heavy, that one of them weighed ſix ſcore, and another ſixty pounds.

To all this we may add, that theſe rains of ſtones were ſo far from being queſtioned either by the Greeks or Romans, that they were

(26) Gardan. de Variet. lib. xiv. c 72.

A MAP of the Journey in the Wilderness, and of the Conquest and Partition of the Land of CANAAN, by the Children of Israel according to this History.

tural, and might, for ought appears to the contrary, have been the caſe of that which is mentioned in Joſhua. We ſee therefore no reaſon for having recourſe to allegory for fear of admitting the fact to be miraculous, as Le Clerc has, nor to the aſſiſtance of good or bad ſpirits, to prove the poſſibility of the ſuppoſed miracle, as others have done [a], ſince if any thing was ſupernatural in it, it was only the directing of that ſtorm to fall juſt at that time and place upon the flying Canaanites. However, the reader is at his liberty to attribute the phenomenon to which of theſe ſyſtems he pleaſes, though the ſeaſon of the year, the nature of the ſoil, of which we are going now to give the geography and natural hiſtory, and many other circumſtances, do rather incline us to aſcribe it to the laſt.

[a] MASIUS, BONFRERIUS, & al.

were looked upon both by them, and by other leſs polite nations, as ominous; who therefore never failed of conſulting the oracles, or endeavouring to avert the impending omen by ſacrifices, and other religious rites, which are reported to have laſted nine days (27), inſomuch, that theſe kinds of heatheniſh expiations have induced ſome chriſtians to believe, that the devil was the author both of thoſe prodigious rains, and of the ſuperſtitious rites that were uſed to avert them (28), in order to confirm mankind in their idolatry. But as ſuch overſtrained notions need not be confuted in the age we live in, we ſhall cloſe this note, and the ſubject, with obſerving, that it is not unlikely, that the fabulous ſtory of Hercules obtaining ſuch a ſhower of ſtones from Jupiter to cruſh thoſe enemies, which his arm and valour could not overcome (29), might owe its birth to this we are upon. We have already obſerved, under a former head, that the poets have joined in the character of that fabulous hero ſeveral characters and exploits, which they have taken from thoſe of Moſes, Joſhua, Samſon, and other Jewiſh worthies (30); what makes it very probable, that this rain of ſtones is of that number, is, that thoſe enemies, againſt whom he procured it, are called the ſons of Neptune (31), which expreſſion, being diveſted of the fable, properly ſignifies any people that traffic by ſea, and is very applicable to the Phœnicians, and to their neighbours the Canaanites. But this we ſubmit to the reader.

(27) Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. v. c. 27. ap. Calm ubi ſup.
(28) Vid. Maſi. in Joſh. x. (29) Mela, lib. ii. Gall. Narbon. Plin. lib. v. Æſchyl. ap. Strab. lib iv. & al. (30) Cirot. de Verit. Huet. Demonſt. Evang. (31) Vid. Melam. ubi ſup.

SECT. IV.

A Description of the Land of PROMISE.

THIS remarkable country, at firſt, a great part of it at leaſt, called the land of Canaan [b], or Chanaan (A) has been ſucceſſively known by ſeveral names; as the land of Iſrael, the land of God, the Holy Land, and ſimply the Land; as alſo Judea or Judæa, Palæſtine or Pa-

[b] See Vol. II. p. 157.

(A) This name ſometimes includes the whole land poſſeſſed by the twelve tribes, though it peculiarly belongs to no more than the country weſtward of the river Jordan. This being evident, and agreed on, we ſhall only obſerve that the Jews themſelves make a diſtinction between the land of Canaan promiſed to their fathers, and recommended for its abundance of milk and honey, and the lands of Sihon and Og, which were to the eaſtward of the river (1). Moſes plainly does the ſame in this expreſſion: Until I ſhall paſs over Jordan, into the land which the Lord our God giveth us (2). But we muſt not forget that Canaan, in the general extent of it, may be divided into the larger and the leſſer (3). The larger was to have extended to the Euphrates on the one hand, and the Mediterranean on the other (4). This was promiſed, but the Jews never had peaceable poſſeſſion of this wide dominion, though they, in a manner, ſubverted all the Syrian powers (5). The leſſer Canaan was confined to the land poſſeſſed by the nations particularly marked out for exciſion and expulſion (6). It is obſerved as an eſſential difference between the larger and the leſſer Canaan, that in the former, when the Jews beſieged a city, they were by GOD himſelf commanded to make offers of peace, while in the latter no conditions were to be granted on any account, but the People were to be deſtroyed and utterly rooted out (7). Again, the land on this ſide Jordan was eſteemed more holy than the land on the other; nay ſuch a wide difference was in this reſpect ſuppoſed to be between them, that the latter was even accounted unclean, if compared with the former, tho' poſſeſſed by the two tribes and a half (8). The one was barely called, the land of your poſſeſſion, the other, the land of the poſſeſſion of the Lord (9).

(1) Vide Reland. Palæſt. illuſt. c. 1. pag 5. (2) Deut. ii. 29. (3) See Vol. II. p. 295, &c. Vide etiam Reland. ubi ſup. (4) Deut. xi. 24. (5) See Vol. II. p. 273, &c. (6) See Vol. II. p 157. (7) See Fuller's Piſgah-Sight, lib. 1. c. 2. (8) Vide Reland. ubi ſup. c. 4. (9) See Joſh. xxii. 19.

Iſtine, leſtine, Syria Palæſtina, Syria, Cœle-Syria, Idumæa or Idumea, and Phœnicia or Phœnice.

THESE are the various names that have in general been impoſed on this ſmall part. It was called the land of Canaan, as a great ſhare of it was originally poſſeſſed by the deſcendants of the ſon of Cham of the ſame name [c], who being expelled and cut off to make room for the Iſraelites [d], it thence was called after their name [e]; to which we ſhall alſo add, that it was ſometimes called the land of the Hebrews [f], and ſometimes the land of the Jews [g]. It was called the land of GOD, as it was immediately given by him to the poſterity of Abraham, the place of his more eſpecial choice, and as he cauſed it to produce in proportion as his worſhip was obſerved or neglected; as it was alſo the place which he ſelected for his royal ſeat, and as here it pleaſed him to dwell, and more particularly in the temple of Jeruſalem [h]. It was called the Holy Land firſt by the Jews, and ſince by the Chriſtians. By the Jews it was ſo called, as GOD declared it to be particularly his own, to be as it were his only ſeat, and ſolely appropriate to his ſervice; beſides, that GOD had promiſed it to his own people, upon the expulſion of the prophane and unclean nations (B). By the Chriſtians it obtained this ſame name, as it was the great and ſtupendous ſcene

[c] See Vol. II. p. 157. [d] See Vol. I. p. 262, &c. [e] 1 Sam. xiii. 19. 2 Kings vi. 23. Ezek. vii. 2. Matth. ii. 22. JOSEPH. Ant. vii. 10, &c. &c. &c. [f] Idem Ibid. l. xv. c. 7. [g] PAUSAN. lib. vi. c. 24. JOSEPH. ubi ſup. lib. 7. c. 9. [h] Vide RELAND. Palæſt. Illuſt. lib. i. c. 3.

(B) This region was holy to the Jews, as it was GOD's choſen ſeat, and as it had been promiſed to their forefathers upon the expulſion of its firſt prophane and unclean inhabitants; but much more to the chriſtians, as there it was their ſalvation was wrought and effected (10). But the Jews did not account their whole poſſeſſion to be equally ſacred, as we have obſerved in the note next above, and that the Chriſtians, ſeemingly at leaſt, give preference to ſome places above others, it may be needleſs to ſay. But the Jews particularly exalt this land far above all others elſe in the world, as they believe, that here is to be the reſurrection of the dead, and that perſons buried elſewhere cannot enjoy a re-union of the ſoul and body, 'till the body has been transferred to the land of Iſrael (11). Abarbanel (12) pronounces, that whoſoever lives without the limits of the land of Iſrael is as he that is without God.

(10) Vide Reland. ubi ſup. (11) Vide eund. ibid. (12) Apud eund. ibid.

of what was wrought and ſuffered for their ſalvation, and that of the whole world [1]. It is ſometimes ſimply called the Land, by way of pre-eminence, and as above all others; as when at the crucifixion it is ſaid, there was darkneſs over all the Land, which cannot ſafely be extended beyond the limits of this [k]. Whence it derived its appellation of Judæa is ſeemingly plain; Judah, being the head or chief of the tribes [l], communicated its name to the reſt; beſides, that the kingdom of Judah, ſtanding after the diſſolution of the kingdom of Iſrael, may have given farther ground for the extenſive (C) and general uſe of this name. There are other, but erroneous, accounts of the origin of this name. In ſhort, it was called Paleſtine, as being a part of that tract or region very early ſo denominated (D); and this is the name that has ſince

[i] Vide eund. ibid c. 4. [k] Vide eund. ibid. c. 5. [l] See Num. ii. 3. vii. 12, &c. Revel. vii. 5.

(C) That the name of Judæa not only comprehended what the Jews poſſeſſed on this ſide of Jordan, but alſo what they held on the other, is plain, from Joſephus's (13) Ἰουδαία πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, or Judæa beyond Jordan, or the Judæa of Jordan (14), by way of diſtinction. For the portion of Judah, whence this general denomination derives its origin, was not bounded by the Jordan, but by the Dead ſea, or Aſphaltite lake (15). The extenſiveneſs of this name in honour of the patriarch Judah and his poſterity, is thus foretold by Jacob, according to thoſe who favour this tranſlation of the text, (16) Juda te confitebuntur, (de nomine tuo dicentur) fratres tui: Judah thy brethren ſhall confeſs thee, or be called by thy name. This verſion is approved by a man (17) of great eminence, tho' different from any other we have ſeen; but the completion of the prophecy in this ſenſe, having been moſt remarkably made good, may incline us to embrace it. The common interpretation is, that his brethren ſhould praiſe him, or pride themſelves in him, which in the judgment of ſome may imply what is ſuggeſted above. Euſebius (18) attributes the prevalence of this name to the efficacy of the ſame prophecy. Alexander Polyhiſtor (19) derives the name from the children of Semiramis, Juda, and Idumæa; while Claudius Iolaus (20) borrows it from one Judæus, the ſon of one Sparto who followed Bacchus to Thebes; abſurd fables.

(D) We have elſewhere obſerved, that tho' this name properly belonged to no more than what is commonly called the Pentapolis

(13) Antiq. lib. xii. c. 5. (14) Vid. Reland. ubi ſup. c. 6. (15) Vid. eund. ibid. (16) Geneſ. xlix. 8. (17) Reland ubi ſupr. (18) Demonſtrat. Evang. lib viii. (19) Apud Steph. Byzant. in Ἔβρων. (20) Apud eund. ibid.

of

ſince particularly prevailed with the chriſtian doctors and mohammedan writers [m]. It has alſo paſſed under the names of Syria Palæſtina, Syria, and Cœle-Syria, as being generally comprehended under the noted appellations of Syria [n], and Cœle-Syria [o], the antient cuſtom, as it is alſo at preſent, with the Arabian geographers [p]. How this country came to be known by the name of Phœnice we have ſufficiently explained already [q], and ſhall inſiſt no farther thereon. We have already obſerved, that the whole nation of the Jews were ſometimes called Idumæans [r]; and now add, as conſequential thereto, that the country of the Jews was ſometimes called Idumæa, from the Edomites who ſeized on the ſouthern parts of the country during the Babyloniſh captivity [s] (E). Theſe have been, and are, the ſeveral names of the land promiſed to of the Philiſtines, it had the fortune to ſpread itſelf over almoſt all the neighbour region (21). We have alſo touched on the vague and uncertain uſe of this name, together with thoſe of Syria and Phœnice (22). Dio Caſſius (23), ignorant, as he himſelf confeſſes, of the origin of the name Judæa, tells us, that the name of Paleſtine was prior thereto; and Julian (24) ſpeaks of the Jews as a handful of people inhabiting a part only of Judæa. That the Philiſtines ſhould have been conſidered above the Jews by the idolatrous nations of old, is no wonder, and thence it muſt ſeemingly have happened, that Paleſtine has been ſo much the name of all this tract for ſo many ages, and with ſuch numbers of nations and ſects as it has been.

[m] Vide RELAND. ubi ſupr. c. 7. [n] See Vol. II. p. 233. [o] STRAB. lib. xvi. [p] See Vol. II. p. 234, &c. [q] See Vol. II. p. 294, in the notes. [r] See Vol. II. p. 134. [s] See Vol. II. p. 146. Vide etiam RELAND. ubi ſup. c. 9.

(E) This is what we have formerly obſerved (25). It has been remarked above (26), that Alexander Polyhiſtor derives Judæa from one Juda, the ſon of Semiramis, to whom he gives a brother by the ſame queen called Idumæa, who according to him muſt have communicated this his name to his country But not to inſiſt upon ſuch authorities, it is evident, that this name naturally flows from the Edomites, who, being vaſſals to the great monarchies, and ever active againſt the Jews (27), came into great conſideration with the heathen, who may have accounted them more honourable than the Jews, and have therefore propagated their name beyond its natural bounds. Whenſoever it happened, Idumæa was very often uſurped for Judæa (28).

(21) See Vol. II p. 190. (22) See Vol. II p. 294. (D). (23) Hiſt. Rom. lib. xxxvii. (24) Contr. Chriſtianos. (25) See Vol. II p. 146. (26) In not. (27) See Vol. II. p. 147. (28) Vide Reland. ubi ſup. c. 9.

to the deſcendants of Abraham, and theſe are the beſt and moſt ſuccinct reaſons we have to aſſign for their variety.

Situation and boundaries.

IT was a received opinion formerly, that this country was, as it were, the navel of the whole earth [t], and exactly in the midſt of the nations (F); a notion which may be well excuſed in thoſe who had ſo ſlight a knowledge of the ſtructure and extent of the world as the antients. Its ſite, with regard to the ſeveral people round about, may be gathered from the geography of the ſeveral countries that precede in this hiſtory; wherefore we ſhall touch no farther thereon, than to exhibit the boundaries that have been aſſigned to this favourite land: but not to enter into a long detail of critical niceties, we ſhall briefly and roundly ſay, that to the ſouth it had the mountains or land of Edom [u], and Amalek [w]; to the eaſt it had the Aſphaltite lake, the river Jordan, the ſea of Tiberias or Galilee, and the Samachonite lake; to the north it had the mountains of Libanus or Antilibanus rather, or the territory of the Phœnicians; to the weſt it had the great or Mediterranean ſea. We forbear to ſet bounds to the Peræa, or land beyond Jordan, and content ourſelves with what is more peculiarly the Land of Promiſe. Theſe were its natural bounds; but the bounds of the conqueſts and other acquiſitions are not ſo eaſy to be ſettled (G).

WE

[t] Vide eund. ibid. c. 10. [u] See Vol. II. p. 130. [w] See Vol. II. p. 150 & 151.

(F) This was alſo arrogated to themſelves both by the Athenians and the Delphians. The Jews borrowed this notion from paſſages in ſcripture, ſuch as theſe—This is Jeruſalem: I have ſet it in the midſt of the nations and countries that are round about her (29 —that dwell in the midſt, or (as it is in the margin) the navel of the land. Theſe expreſſions taken in too vulgar and literal a ſenſe, have tempted men (30) to pronounce the land of Iſrael to be in the midſt of the habitable world, and to be the navel, as it were of the earth. What the Delphians and Athenians had to ſay for themſelves, as to this particular, may be beſt deferred 'till we come to treat of them diſtinctly.

(G) We need only obſerve, that the river Arnon is ſuppoſed to have been the firſt northern boundary of the children of Iſrael, on the other ſide of Jordan. With regard to the boundaries on this ſide of the river, Reland (31) takes notice of a great difference between the Hebrew and Samaritan pentateuch; his words are Quod ad terminos Palæſtinæ attinet deſcriptos, Gen. x. 19. eſt obſervatu

(29) Ezek. v. 5. (30) Kimchi & Hieronym. in Ezek. ubi ſup. (31) Ubi ſup. c. 25.

dignum,

WE have already exhibited the diviſion of this land by the Canaanites, its firſt inhabitants [x], we are next to part it between the children of Iſrael. Simeon was the ſouthermoſt of all: he had Edom to the ſouth, the Dead-ſea to the eaſt, Judah to the north, to the weſt uncertain whether a deſert tract or inhabited land. Judah was the next: he had Simeon on the ſouth, the Dead-ſea on the eaſt, Dan and Benjamin on the north, the Philiſtine on the weſt; Dan had the Philiſtine and Judah on the ſouth, Benjamin on the eaſt, Ephraim and the half tribe of Manaſſeh on the north, the Mediterranean-ſea on the weſt; Benjamin had Judah on the ſouth, the Jordan on the eaſt, Ephraim on the north, Dan on the weſt; Ephraim and the half tribe of Manaſſeh we join together in one common incloſure; they had Dan and Benjamin on the ſouth, the Jordan and part of Iſſachar on the eaſt, part of Iſſachar and Aſher on the north, the Mediterranean on the weſt; Iſſachar had Ephraim and the half tribe of Manaſſeh on the ſouth and ſouth-weſt, the Jordan on the eaſt, Zebulun on the north, Aſher on the weſt; Aſher had the half tribe of Manaſſeh on the ſouth, Iſſachar, Zebulun, Naphtali on the eaſt, the Phœnician on the north, the Mediterranean-ſea on the weſt; Zebulun had Iſſachar on the ſouth, part of Jordan and part of the ſea of Galilee on the eaſt, Naphtali on the north, Aſher on the weſt; Naphtali had Zebulun on the ſouth, part of the ſea of Galilee and the Samachonite lake on the eaſt, the mountains of Antilibanus on the north, Aſher on the weſt. To croſs on the other ſide; Reuben and Gad had their portion along the eaſtern banks of the Jordan between the Dead-ſea and the ſea of Tiberias, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh lay along the eaſtern ſhores of the ſea of Tiberias and the Samachonite lake. In this order was the land on this and that ſide of the river divided and diſtributed to the children of Iſrael under Moſes and Joſhua. Diviſion.

[x] See Vol. II. p. 158.

dignum, pentateuchum Hebræo-Samaritanum non niſi duos treſve extremos memorare, uti fluvium Ægypti & Euphratem vel mare magnum, licet in codice Hebræo plurimorum aliorum locorum in finibus ſitorum fiat mentio. Contextus Hebræus ita habet; & termini Canaan ſunt a Sidone, Geraram uſq; Gazam, qua itur Sodomam, Gomorram, Admam, & Tzeboim uſq; ad Leſcha, Samaritanus hoc comma ita exhibet—— Et fuit terminus Canaanæorum a fluvio Ægypti uſq; ad flumen magnum Euphratem, & uſq; ad mare poſterius, i. e. occidentale. Vides inſignem differentiam quæ inter Hebræum & Samaritanum codicem intercedit.

SOLOMON.

SOLOMON afterwards divided the land into twelve portions (H); but as the bare mention of this is ſufficient for our preſent purpoſe, and as it is impoſſible, ſeemingly, to aſcertain the limits and extent of each, we ſhall proceed to obſerve, that under the ſecond temple, it began to be divided into tetrarchies and toparchies, greater and ſmaller parts; the greater were Judæa, Samaria, and Galilee (I); the leſſer were Daroma, Geraritica, Sarona, and others (K); theſe were on this ſide of Jordan. The other ſide of the river was divided into Gilead, the Peræa, Gaulonitis, Batanæa, and Decapolis.

IN after times, and under the chriſtian diſpenſation, it was comprehended, for the moſt part, if not quite, under the denominations of Palæſtina prima, Palæſtina ſecunda, Palæſtina tertia or ſalutaris.

(H) It is ſaid, (32) he appointed twelve officers over Iſrael, to provide victuals for the king and his houſhold: each man his month in the year made proviſion. Now there was great inequality, as to extent at leaſt, between the portions of land belonging to the tribes; ſo that to have taxed them alike had been a ſeeming hardſhip. It muſt therefore follow, that this new diviſion was in equal parts, either in regard to extent or to production, and that this new diviſion was very different from the old. Reland (33) has confronted Joſephus with the ſcripture as to this matter, and to him we refer the curious reader.

(I) Reland (34), in the map he gives us of this diviſion, makes Idumæa encroach conſiderably upon Judæa, but in his text takes no notice of it, either as a tetrarchy or toparchy. Perhaps he does this upon ſufficient aſſurance, that Judæa and Idumæa were promiſcuouſly uſurped for each other, as we have obſerved before (35). To enquire farther into this were needleſs. We have only to add, that Galilee was twofold, the upper and the lower (36).

(K) Pliny (37), reckons up ten toparchies in this country; Jericho, Emmaus, Lydda, Joppa, Acrabatena, Gophna, Thamna, Bethleptephene, Orine, Herodium. Joſephus (38) has eleven, Gophna, Acrabatta, Thamna, Lydda, Emmaus, Pella, Idumæa, Engadæ, Herodion, Jericho; a very obſcure piece of geography, which we ſhall not take upon us to illuſtrate.

(32) 1 Kings iv. 7. (33) Palæſt. Illuſt. lib. 1. c. 29. (34) Ubi ſup. c 31. (35) See Vol. II. p. 146, & Vol. III. p. 93 (E). (36) Vide Reland. ubi ſupr. (37) Lib. v. c. 14. (38) De Bell. Jud. lib. iii. c. 4.

AGAIN,

AGAIN, it is divided into the hilly country and the low (L), which will naturally lead us, and no place more proper, to take a ſurvey of the more remarkable mountains, valleys, and plains. The midland, between the Jordan and the Mediterranean, is on all hands allowed to be particularly mountainous, while the land towards the ſea, mount Carmel excepted, and towards the river, is flat, except ſome gentle riſings, as at this day.

IT may be reckoned inaccurate in us to comprehend the mountains of Libanus and Antilibanus, or either of them, within the diſtrict before us, ſeeing they might have been more properly deſcribed in our geography of Syria and Phœnice, and we in part ſubmit thereto, and the rather as we have tacitly, as it were, admitted them to have been a part of the proper Syria, when we formerly deſcribed the cedars of Lebanon among the natural curioſities of that country [x]. But, having occaſion to make mention of theſe hills once more, we would venture here to ſupply our former omiſſi ons. Theſe mountains, as to their extent and ſituation with reſpect to each other, have been very obſcurely deſcribed by the antients, and very confuſedly underſtood by all the modern geographers, one ſeemingly excepted (M), who agrees very well with the only antients (N), who have ſpoken with ſome degree of clearneſs relating thereto. It is a confirmed opinion [y], that, whether you call them Libanus † Mountains

[x] See Vol. II. p. 236. [y] Vide RELAND. ub. ſup. c. 48.

(L) The Jews, in their Talmud (39), have a threefold diviſion of their country into mountains, valleys, and plains, allotting to each its peculiar (40), to the mountain the aſh, to the valley the palm, and to the plain the mulberry.

(M) Maundrell (41) is the perſon we mean; who has very ſatisfactorily diſtinguiſhed between the one and the other, which have been moſt unaccountably blended together, and confounded by all the geographers we have ſeen; but as we ſhall copy theſe mountains from his map publiſhed by Reland (42), we may ſave ourſelves the trouble of his verbal deſcription.

(N) We mean Strabo and Pliny, who make them two diſtinct ridges running almoſt parallel with each other.

(†) Some have affected to derive it from Λίβανος, Libanus, the Greek for frankincenſe; but Reland (43) very juſtly remarks, that they ſhould, in the firſt place, prove, that any ſort of that aromatic ever grew there.

(39) In Shevith. c. 9. 2. (40) In Gemar. Hieroſolym. (41) Journey to Jeruſalem. (42) Palæſtin. illuſt. (43) In Palæſt. Illuſt. ub. ſup. c. 48.

or Antilibanus, they derive their names from the whiteneſs of the ſnow which lies upon them; which ſome ſeem to think it perpetually does (O); while others aver, it is there but for a certain ſeaſon only (P). St. Jerom [z] ſays, that no hill in the Land of Promiſe is more lofty, more woody, or thicker ſet, than Libanus; and elſewhere [a] it is ſaid to be the higheſt of all Paleſtine. The cedars, once the great pride and ornament of theſe hills, are now, in a manner, extinct [b], though ſome few there are among the pines, cypreſſes, and other noble vegetables here produced. Finally, theſe mountains have, at ſeveral times, been a place of refuge and retreat for robbers and other deſperate people in great numbers.

MOUNT Hermon (Q) appears next, like Libanus capped with [z] In Zachar. ix. [a] THEODOR. in Pſal. lxxi. [b] See Vol. II. ubi ſup.

(O) We have already touched (44) upon this; Rauwolf (45) will have it, that the ſnow reſts on theſe mountains all the ſummer long. Le Bruyn (46) ſays, theſe hills are ever covered with ſnow. Sandys (47) obſerves, that when he was in this neighbourhood, a Moor, returning from theſe ſnow-topped mountains in company with an Engliſh merchant, periſhed with the exceſſive cold, tho', at the ſame time, the heat in the valleys on both ſides was exceſſive. Prince Radziville 48) reports, that the ſnows on the tops of theſe mountains never melt away, tho' the heats here be far more intenſe and ſcorching than in Italy. Phocas (49) ſpeaks of the mountains as covered with ſnow from the head to the foot; which agrees well with what Maundrell (50) relates. We have been the more particular upon this, as well formerly (51) as now, becauſe it has been roundly and formally contradicted by a traveller of more than ordinary reputation.

(P) The perſon who ſo differs from all the reſt is Monſ. De la Roque, or rather the chevalier d'Arvieux (52); but it being ſo common for ſnow eternally to lie on the ſummits of great hills, the abſence of it he obſerved muſt very likely have been owing to ſome very extraordinary cauſe

(Q) It was alſo called Baal-hermon (53), and ſeemingly by other names, not ſtrictly to our purpoſe. Hilarius (54) derives Hermon from

(44) See Vol. II. 236, (D). (45) Itinerary into the Eaſt Count part ii. c. 1. (46) Voyage au Levant, tom. 2. c. 57. p. 286. in 4^to. (47) In his travels, book iii. p. 212. (48) Peregrinat Hieroſolym. p. 27. (49) Apud Reland. ub. ſup. c. 48. (50) Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. (51) See Vol. II p. 236, (D). (52) Vide ibid. (53) Judges iii. 3. (54) In Pſ. cxxxiii.

with ſnow c (R), but for nothing more remarkable than the abundant dews which fall upon and about it (S).

MOUNT Carmel (T) on the ſkirts of the ſea is the moſt remarkable head of land of all the coaſt, at leaſt ſouthward of it, on all hands famed for its fertility (V), of particular note among the antients for being, above all others, the favourite place of Pythagoras (W); but by far more revered among c Vide RELAND. ub. ſup. c. 49.

חרם anathema. Hermon, ſays he (55), is a mountain in Phœnice, whoſe interpretation is anathema—It is reported—that the angels, when they deſcended from heaven for love of the daughters of men, aſſembled together upon this very lofty hill. That it was a place of antient ſuperſtition may be not only gathered hence, but is alſo confirmed by Euſebius (56), who ſays, that on the top of it there was a famous temple, held in high veneration with the neighbouring Heathen about, in Libanus and Paneas.

(R) Travellers have but little on the remarkables of this hill.

(S) We were, ſays Maundrell (57) ſufficiently inſtructed by experience, what the holy Pſalmiſt means by the dew of Hermon, our tents being as wet with it, as if it had rained all night.

(T) This was a name common to both a town and a mountain, and is equally applicable to any fertile and woody place; or it may be underſtood of purple, which was fiſhed at the foot of this ſame mountain (58). It was alſo a name common both to a mountain and a god (59). Thevenot (60) obſerving there are two Carmels mentioned by St. Jerom, ſuppoſes they are both mountains.

(V) This mountain is rich in olives and vines when huſbanded, and abounding with ſeveral ſorts of fruit and herbs, both medicinable and fragrant; though now much overgrown with woods and ſhrubs of ſweet ſavour (61). But according to another (62), this mountain is round about, towards the ſea-coaſt, very bare and rough, that we may very well ſay with the holy prophet Amos, That the paſtures of the herdſmen ſhall look miſerably, and the top of the mountain dried up. Others there are who do not ſpeak of this place, as it is at preſent, with any greater advantage, than, as it were a rock (63).

(W) It was antiently called ὄρος ἱερὸν Διὸς, (64) the holy mountain of Jupiter, if not rather as it is thought (65), ὄρος καὶ ἱερὸν Διὸς, the mountain and temple of Jupiter. The name of Carmel was among the Christians, as here they supposed Elias sojourned in a cave, some time before he was ravished into heaven (X).

(55) Ibid. (56) In Onomaſtico, ad vocem Ἀερμὼν (57) Journey from Alcppo to Jeruſ. p. 57. (58) Bochart. Hier. pt. 2. lib. v. c. 9, &c. (59) Tacitus. (60) Coſmog de Levant, p. 180. 61) Sandys, ub. ſup. p. 203. (62) Rauwolf, ub. ſup. p. 225. (63) Theven. Voy. au Levant, pt. 1. c. 58. (64) Scyl. Caryand, in Minor. Hiſt. vol. 2. (65) Vide Reland. Palæſtin. Illuſt. lib. i. c. 50.

TABOR

common both to the mountain and a god (66). In short, in such high veneration it was, either for its advantages of nature, or the famed traditions of old Paganism, that here Pythagoras is reported (67) to have taken particular delight, and to have frequently amused himself alone in the temple. But Tacitus (68) denies there was here any temple, or image of a god, but an altar only and veneration.

(X) This is on all hands allowed, and on this account it came to be in such high esteem with the Christians, that it is seemingly early, that they began to distinguish it by particular marks of piety. There was here a very large monastery, which, by the envy of time and the rage of the enemy, being brought to decay, the ruins of it were, as we may say, a-new consecrated, by a Calabrian priest, urged hither to the work, by revelation, who gathered together about ten monks, and restored the venerable credit of the place (69). "From hence proceeded the order of frier Carmelites, "as successors to the children of the prophets there left by Elias, "who had their beginning, in the desert of Syria, in the year "1180, instituted by Almericus bishop of Antioch; and said to have "received their white habit from our lady; whom Albertus the "patriarch of Jerusalem transported first into Europe. There is yet "to be seen the remains of their monastery, with a temple dedi-"cated to the blessed virgin; under which a little chapel, or "cave, the antient dwelling of Elias (70). —— Some years ago, "without doubt, have a great many of this order [of Carmel-"ites] lived hereabout, as still to this day doth appear by their "cloisters and churches, which by age are so mightily decayed, "that they are left deserted and uninhabited (71). Their convent "now is not on the top of the mount, where they had a lovely "one before the christians lost the Holy Land, the ruins whereof "are still to be seen; but there is a very little one somewhat low-"er, and needs no more but three monks to fill it, who would "have much ado to subsist, if they had not some alms given them "by the French merchants of Acre, who go often thither out of "devotion.—Their church is the very spot where Elias abode, "which is very neatly cut out of the rock."—They have an excellent prospect, especially upon the sea (72). This mountain seems not to have much bettered its condition with regard to its religious state, though the late king of France did what he could to regain its former splendor (73), and the reason may be, because

(66) Vide eund. ibid (67) Jamblich. in vita Pythag. c. 3. (68) Histor lib. 2. (69) Johan. Phoc. ap. Reland. ub. sup. (70) Sand. Trav. lib. iii. p. 203. (71) Rauwolf's Itinerary, pt. 3. c. 1. (72) Theven. Voy au Levant. pt. 1. c. 59. (73) De la Roque Voy. dans la Palest. in the preface.

it

TABOR is the next mount we are to ſurvey. There was a city of the ſame name. It was alſo called Itabyrion and Atabyrion (Y), and borrows its Hebrew name from its form (Z). It is remarkable for the regularity of its form, and proportion of its parts (A); for its being ſeated in the midſt it has been pretty much the ordinary reſidence of an emir of the Arabs (74).

(Y) Names beſt known to the Greeks, and ſuppoſed to be derived from אתדבור, a place where cattle was led to paſture (75). Other places there were of the ſame name; in Rhodes there was a mountain called Atabyrum; in Sicily there was an Alabyrium; there was alſo a city of the ſame name in Perſia; and laſtly, another in Phœnice (76). There was a Ζεὺς Ἀταβύριος, who was chiefly worſhipped in Rhodes (77): but what relation this Atabyrian Jove may have had to our mountain, does no where plainly appear, though that ſome he had may be eaſily conjectured, eſpecially if we recollect what has been ſaid of mount Carmel, that its name belonged both to the mount itſelf, and to a god (78).

(Z) טבור Tabor, is properly a navel.

(A) In the ſeventh century, it is deſcribed to have been of wonderful regularity, verdant and florid, to have had an ample plain at top, ſurrounded with a great wood, with a great monaſtery, and many cells in the midſt thereof (79). This monaſtery, or church, was dedicated to our Lord, Moſes and Elias (80). The ſame author adds, it was by the inhabitants called Agæ Mons; which muſt have been, in ſome ſort, a corruption of the Greek ἅγιον ὄρος, the Holy Mount, which denotes the veneration it was in, even in very early days, as well as at preſent. It ſeems to have been an antient tradition, that upon this hill, at the laſt day, four angels will, with four trumpets, raiſe the dead from the beginning of the world, that they may appear alive before the face of our Lord, in the valley of Jehoſhaphat (81). But not to inſiſt farther on the received ſanctity of the place, we will only add concerning its amænity as at this day, that "it has a plain area at "top, moſt fertile and delicious, of an oval figure, extended about "one furlong in breadth, and two in length. This area is en-"cloſed with trees on all parts, except towards the ſouth. It was "antiently environed with walls, and trenches, and other fortifi-"cations, of which it exhibits many remains at this day (82)." Another traveller (83), deſcribing the appearance of it more par-

(74) Sand. ub. ſup. De la Roque, ub. ſup. (75) Hilar in Onomaſt. ſacr. ap Reland ub. ſup. c. 51. (76) Steph. Byzant. Ἐθνικά. (77) Polyb lib. ix. (78) See before in the laſt note but one (79) Adamnan. de loc. ſacr. lib. xi. (80) Itin. Sr Willibald. ap. Reland ub ſup. (81) Mandev. c. 10. (82) Maund. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. p. 113. (83) Radzivil. Peregrin. Jeroſol. p. 43.

ticularly

midſt of a plain, at a diſtance from any other hill; for its fertility and beauty of production, and for its height (B); but above all for being the ſcene of the glorious transfiguration (†), which has derived on it the particular veneration of ticularly, obſerves, that it ſeems to have been rather the work of art than of nature, and of wonderful beauty; that from the bottom to the top it looks like a continued ſpiral of cinder-coloured rock continually crowned with verdant trees, which agrees not amiſs with the cut the former has given us to repreſent this ſame mount. A third (84) tells us, that moſt of the trees on this hill are hard oaks.

(B) Joſephus writes, that this mountain is thirty ſtades or furlongs in height, and Adamnanus (85) agrees with him exactly therein; but that it falls much ſhort of this meaſure, whether conſidered perpendicularly, or obliquely, will appear by the undoubted teſtimony of modern travellers. Maundrell (86) ſays, he aſcended it in leſs than an hour, and Thevenot (87) computes the aſcent of it at not quite half a league, tho' at the ſame time he obſerves, that ſome of his company went up on horſeback; ſo that the acclivity ſeems to be not ſo abrupt, as is commonly imagined, by the ſugar-loaf ſhape of this hill. In ſhort, this account tends to depreſs the perpendicular height of it. Before we cloſe up this note, we muſt remember, that Adamnanus (88) gives the plain at top an extent of twenty five ſtades, which is very ſufficiently contradicted by Maundrell, in the note above.

† This place having been had in great veneration by the Chriſtians, as we have partly obſerved already (89), we have only to add, that there are ſtill ſome remains of the religious ſtate of it. Prince Radziville (90) writes, that on the top of it, there is a middling ſort of a church, between two cells, or chapels rather, according to him erected by St. Helen, on the ſpot of the tranſfiguration. Thevenot (91) has it, that there is here but one grott, and that but a little one, in which is a chapel, made up of four arches croſs-wiſe: that the firſt is the entrance only; the ſecond, oppoſite to it, the place where our lord was tranſfigured; that on the right-hand of this, the place where Moſes ſtood; that, on the left where Elias: thus does he ſeemingly differ from the former traveller. A third there is, (92) who varies from both, and tells us, that on the top of this mount, there is a grott, which ſeems to be a part of ſome old ruins, all lined with great ſtones, and with many vaults ſtill ſtanding. The ſame author tells us, the mount itſelf is ſo ſteep that there is of Chriſtians in almoſt all ages, but that here this ſplendid miracle was wrought is doubted by ſome (C).

(84) Theven. ub ſup. c. 55. (85) Ub. ſup. (86) Ub. ſup. (87) Ub. ſup. (88) Ub ſup. (89) See before in the laſt note but one. (90) In Peregr. Teroſ. ub. ſup. (91) Voy. au Levant, ub. ſup. (92) Le Bruyn. Voy. au Levant, tom. 2. p. 410.

MOUNT Olivet, or the mount of Olives (D), is the next that claims place, which, on ſome accounts, it may almoſt do before all others. It is about a mile diſtant from Jeruſa- is no aſcending it on horſeback, which Thevenot contradicts (93). Finally, we have a fourth eye-witneſs (94), who ſeems to vary from the three in the deſcription he gives us of theſe remains, which is, that they are no more than three contiguous grottoes, made to repreſent the three tabernacles St. Peter propoſed to erect, in the aſtoniſhment which poſſeſſed him at the glory of the transfiguration.

(C) " Its being ſituated in ſuch a ſeparate manner has induced " moſt authors to conclude, that this muſt needs be that holy moun- " tain, as St. Peter (95) ſtiles it, which was the place of our bleſ- " ſed lord's transfiguration, related by Matthew (96) and Mark " 97). There you read, that Chriſt took with him Peter, James, " and John into a mountain apart; from which deſcription they " infer, that the mountain there ſpoken of can be no other than " Tabor. The concluſion may poſſibly be true; but the argument " uſed to prove it, ſeems incompetent; becauſe the term κατ' " ἰδίαν, or apart, moſt likely relates to the withdrawing and retire- " ment of the perſons there ſpoken of, and not the ſituation of the " mountain (98)." Reland (99) thinks it in ſome ſort raſh to diſpute a point, which has been ſo generally received for ſo many ages, but confeſſes himſelf in ſome doubt as to the thing, for many very ſtrong geographical and other reaſons, but particularly, becauſe there is no mention made of the name of this hill, as of the mount of Olives, mount Carmel, and others; the ſacred writers having been ſo very particular in naming the places where any thing memorable was wrought by Chriſt.

(D) By the Greeks, ὄρος ἐλμαὼνος or ὄρος τῶν ἐλαιῶν; by the Jews, in their language, called the mount of Unction, or the mount of Olives, or oil It was alſo called the mountain of three Lights, becauſe it was lighted on the weſt by the fire of the altar; becauſe on the eaſt it received the earlieſt light of the ſun, before the city; and becauſe it produced much oil, an aliment of light (100). But it is rather ſuppoſed to have been called the mountain of three heads or tops, as Sandys, in the Cut he gives us of it, deſcribes it to be. For three ſummits it had, the firſt, in the middle, whence Chriſt aſcended into heaven, the ſecond to the ſouthward of it, called the mountain of Offence,; the third to the northward, and higheſt of all (1).

(93) In the note before this. (94) Maund. ub. ſup. (95) 2 Epiſt. i. 18. (96) xvii. (97) ix. (98) Maund. ub. ſup. (99) Ub. ſup. (100) Reland Paleſt. Illuſt. lib. i. c. 52 Idem ibidem. (1) Vid. eund. ibidem.

&c., lem, and commands the beſt proſpect over that city (E). It is ſaid to have ſometime been the reſidence of the Shechinah (F). It has been falſly, or rather inaccurately, ſuppoſed to have been in, or on, the skirts of Galilee (G). Of fame it was (H), and ſtill might be (I), for fertility. In eſpecial veneration held by the chriſtians (K) for what was here wrought, tranſacted,

(E) In this the bulk of travellers are agreed, it being the loftieſt eminence in the neighbourhood of Jeruſalem, and overlooking the higheſt part of that city. But this muſt be obſerved, that Jeruſalem being itſelf ſeated high, it from thence looks to be no very lofty hill; but from other places it appears a mountain (2). Hence a poet (3) calls it a ſmall hill.

(F) The Jews ſay it reſted here during the ſpace of three years and a half, to try whether or no the Jews would return to God, during which it cried out, Return to me, O my children, and I will return to you; and that, having expected in vain, it migrated again to its place (4) This is underſtood to have reſpect to the true Shechinah, our Saviour, who often ſojourned here, and would have recalled the Jews to the true worſhip of God (5).

(G) This miſtake certainly aroſe from the diſciples who were Galileans, tho' in a deſcription of this mount it has been roundly aſſerted, that but two furlongs thence was Galilee, and Cana where the marriage was, at which Chriſt turned the water into wine (6). Whence this extraordinary miſtake aroſe is pretty well explained to us; for on the higheſt ground of this mount there was formerly erected an high tower, in memory of the apparition of the two angels to the apoſtles, after the aſcenſion (7), from whence the tower itſelf had the name given it of Viri Galilæi (8); not to examine farther into this, hence the miſtake may very likely have derived its origin.

(H) It is thus deſcribed by an author (9) of the ſeventh century: few or no trees are there to be found, except the olive and the vine, according to the report of Arculfus; but wheat and barley there flouriſh in a moſt kindly manner: for the nature of the ſoil is quite productive.

(I) The weſt ſide of mount Olivet is "bedecked with olives, "almonds, fig trees, and heretofore with palms; pleaſantly rich "when huſbanded, and now upbraiding the barbarous with his "neglected pregnancy (10).

(K) This mount is much reſorted to by pilgrims who viſit Jeruſalem; nor do travellers, who have been this way, forget to enu-

(2) Phoc. in Deſcript Loc. Ter. Sanct. (3) Perdic. Epheſ. in Deſcript Hieroſolym. (4) Vid. eund ibid (5) Vid eund ib. (6) Anonym ap eund. ib (7) Acts i 10, 11. (8) Maundr. Journ from Alep to Jeruſ pag. 165. (9) Adamnan. de Loc Sanct. lib i ap Reland ub. ſup. (10) Sandys ub. ſup. 198.

merate

tranſacted, and fulfilled by our Saviour, and particularly for his aſcenſion into heaven; nor much leſs revered even by the Mohammedans (L).

THE

merate the ſeveral ſanctuaries of this famous eminence; but it will be enough for us to conſult one of them, who agrees almoſt to a tittle as to what is here to be ſeen. He (11) tells us, they here ſhew, "about two thirds of the way up, certain grottoes cut with "intricate windings and caverns under ground, theſe are called "the ſepulchres of the prophets. A little higher up are twelve "arched vaults under ground, ſtanding ſide by ſide; theſe were "built in memory of the twelve apoſtles, who are ſaid to have "compiled their creed in this place. Sixty paces higher you come "to the place where, they ſay, Chriſt uttered his prophecy con-"cerning the final deſtruction of Jeruſalem (12). And a little "higher, on the right hand of this, is the place where they ſay "he dictated, a ſecond time, the Pater-noſter to his diſciples (13). "Somewhat higher is the cave of St. Pelagia; and as much more "above that a pillar, ſignifying the place where an angel gave "the Bleſſed Virgin three days warning of her death. At the top "of the hill you come to the place of our bleſſed Lord's aſcenſion. "Here was antiently a large church, built in honour of that glori-"ous triumph: but all that now remains of it, is only an octago-"nal cupola, about eight yards in diameter, ſtanding, as they ſay, "over the very place, where were ſet the laſt footſteps of the ſon "of God here on earth. Within the cupola there is ſeen, in a "hard ſtone as they tell you, the print of one of his feet. Here "was alſo that of the other foot ſometime ſince; but it has been "removed from hence by the Turks into the great Moſeh upon "mount Moriah—About two furlongs from this place northward is "the higheſt part of mount Olivet; and upon that was antiently "erected an high tower—called Viri Galilæi. This antient mo-"nument remained till about two years ſince, when it was demo-"liſhed by a Turk, who had bought the field in which it ſtood." More of this ſort is added by other travellers, but this ſhall ſerve our purpoſe.

(L) The Turks pretend ſo great a veneration for the building over the print of our Saviour's foot on this mountain, that they have ſometimes denied the Chriſtians all entrance into it; ſo that they were allowed only to ſtand at the door, to perform their de-votions, and view the holy ſtone of impreſſion at the diſtance of about four cubits from them (14) This it ſeems was owing to the rigid humour of the governor of thoſe parts, tho' before it was free and open to both Chriſtians and Mohammedans (15), as it

(11) Maundr ub. ſup. (12) Matt xxiii. 37. (13) Luke xi. 1. 2. (14) Radziv. Peregrin Jeroſolym. pag 74. (15) Idem. ibid.

THE foregoing are the more remarkable of the greater mounts: the more remarkable of the leſſer are theſe, both on the one ſide and the other of the river Jordan; mount Gilead, mount Baſhan, mount Gilboa, mount Gerizzim, mount Ebal, mount Sion, and others we need not name.

Of the low country, and firſt of the valleys.

WE will not enter into a nice diſquiſition of what were properly vales, and what were properly plains, in this country: whoever contemplates the face of the country, ſo very remarkably diſtinguiſhed into high lands and low, may think it a needleſs task; and beſides, it has been done to our hands with all the accuracy and induſtry imaginable [d]. To proceed then, the vale of Gerar was where Iſaac ſojourned when he departed from Abimelech [e]. The vale of Shittim of ſituation quite uncertain. The vale of Hinnom, or the valley of the children of Hinnom, near the walls of Jeruſalem (M), remarkable for the ſuperſtition there practiſed in times of old (N). The vale, or valley, of Salt, of note for the overthrow of the Edomites [f] there. The vale of the Rephaim, called alſo the vale of the Titans, and of the Giants (O), has been ſince (16). But notwithſtanding this pretended veneration on the part of the Turks, with regard to this and other places, it is ſhrewdly doubted (17), whether they do it "out of real devotion, or for lucre's ſake, and to the end that they may exact money from the Chriſtians for admiſſion into them."

[d] Vide RELAND. ub. ſup. c. 54. [e] See Vol. II. p. 205. [f] See Vol. II. p. 145.

(M) Euſebius (18) writes it was cloſe, or near, to the walls of the city on the eaſt ſide; but Reland (19) is rather inclined to believe, it lay ſouthward of the ſame (20).

(N) This ſuperſtition we have already (21) dwelt on, and given a ſufficient deſcription of the ſpot in general (22).

(O) So rendered by the ſeventy and Joſephus; whence St. Jerom (23) haſtily ſuppoſes the Rephaim of ſcripture to have been the Titans, and giants of the fabulous antients. But that the Rephaim were one of the ten nations of the Canaanites, we have ſhewn elſewhere (24); nor have we forgot to obſerve all that can be well ſaid of them, down to their exit and migration (25).

(16) Sandys ub. ſup. (17) Maund. ub. ſup. (18) Ad vocem Ταμμουζ. (19) Ub. ſup. c. 54. (20) See Vol. II. p. 191. (21) Ibidem. (22) Ibid. (D). (23) In Comment ad Gal. iii. (24) See Vol. II. p. 158, (B). (25) Ibid p. 161, (E).

of

of uncertain ſituation (P). The valley of Jehoſhaphat (Q), mentioned but once in ſcripture [8], cloſe in the neighbourhood of Jeruſalem, and ſuppoſed to be the place of the laſt and general judgment (R). The vale of Berachah (S) in the wil-

[8] Joel. iii. 2, and 12.

(P) Euſebius (26) places it within the portion of Benjamin; Bonfrere will have it to be in the tribe of Judah; but we forbear ſo uſeleſs and uncertain an enquiry.

(Q) According to St. Cyril (27), it was a few ſtades or furlongs eaſtward of Jeruſalem, a bare ſpot, and fit for riding. Aben Ezra (28) takes it to be the ſame with the valley of Berachah, Bleſſing, or Praiſe, ſo called by Jehoſhaphat (29). Kimchi (30) takes it to be a valley in the neighbourhood of Jeruſalem, where, perhaps, Jehoſhaphat erected ſome building, or performed ſome memorable action. Concerning the ſituation of this valley, Sir John Mandeville (31) expreſſes himſelf thus, "between Jeruſalem and the "mount of Olyvate is the vale of Joſaphathe, under the walls of "the cytee.— And there righte nyghe, is the tombe of kyng Jo-"ſaphathe (*); of whom the vale berethe the name." He adds, "This Joſaphathe was kyng of that contree, and was converted by "an heremyte, that was a worthi man, and dide much gode." Thevenot (32) inſinuates the ſituation of it to be the very ſame, as does alſo prince Radziville (33), and the whole claſs of travellers, antient and modern.

(R) This tradition took birth from this text of ſcripture (34), I will alſo gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoſhaphat, and will plead with them there for my people, and for my heritage Iſrael, whom they have ſcattered among the nations, and parted my land. Hence, ſays Reland (35), the Jews have gathered that the general judgment is to be on mount Olivet; adjoining to which many have perſuaded themſelves this valley of Jehoſhaphat to be, tho' upon a very ſlender argument. Reland then is not ſatisfied with the ſituation of this valley, ſo univerſally laid down by travellers; and no body has ever conſidered the geography of theſe parts like him.

(S) In the Latin of the Vulgate, Vallis Benedictionis; in the Greek of the Septuagint Κοιλὰς Εὐλογίας, the valley of Bleſſing, or Praiſe. ſo called becauſe of the overthrow and miraculous rout of the Moabites (36), Ammonites (37), and the Edomites (38), or inhabitants of mount Seir, in their war combined againſt Jehoſhaphat.

(26) In Onom. ad voc. Εμεκ Ραφαιν. (27) Comment. in loc. Joel. (28) Ap. Reland. ub. ſup. (29) 2 Chron. xx. 26. (30) Ap. Reland. ub. ſup. (31) Cap 8. (*) Vide etiam Maund ub ſup. pag. 103. (32) Coſmog. de Levant. pag. 177. (33) Peregrin. Hieroſolym. p. 60. (34) Joel, iii. 2. (35) Ub ſup (36) See Vol. II. p. 94 in the notes. (37) See Vol. II. p. 107. (38) See Vol. II. p. 144.

derneſs of Tekoah. The valley of Shaveh (T), or the king's dale [h], famous for the interview between Abraham and Melchizedek. The valley of Elah, or of the Terebinth (U), where David ſlew Goliath. Others we forbear to mention.

Plains. We ſhall only take a curſory ſurvey of the plain part of this country, though a very conſiderable portion of it. In Paleſtine there are two great plains, the one properly ſo called, and divided by the Jordan, one hundred and fifty miles in length; the other called the great plain of Eſdraelon, or of Legion [i]. The former of theſe, according to Joſephus [k], extended from Scythopolis, on the ſea of Tiberias, to the Aſphaltite lake. In the New Teſtament [l] it is called the region about Jordan (W). Beſides, there was, as we juſt now ſaid, another great plain, which from the city of Jezreel, and Legion (X), is called the plain of Jezreel, or Eſdraelon (Y), or the great plain of Legion [m] (Z). Beſides [h] Gen. xiv. 17. [i] Vide Reland. ub. ſup. c. 55. [k] Antiq. lib. vi. c. 2. [l] Matth. iii. 5. [m] Vide Reland. ub. ſup.

(T) In the Greek of the Septuagint, it is called Κοιλὰς τοῦ Σαβη, or τε Σαβυ; the valley of Saba, or Saby; which by the ſame is interpreted to mean, τὸ πεδίον τῶν βασιλεων, the Field of Kings.

(U) By Aquila and Theodotian rendered Κοιλὰς τῆς δρυὸς (39), the valley of the Oak.

(W) So the Greek interpreters have rendered it, περίχωρον τοῦ Ἰορδάνε (40), and τὰ ἔρημα τοῦ Ἰορδάνε (41), or the wilderneſs of Jordan, and that ſuch it might, properly enough, be called, or at leaſt comparatively, will hereafter appear.

(X) Now ſuppoſed to be called Legune (43). Reland (44) thinks, this great plain was partly in Samaria, and partly in Galilee, and that thence we have the μέγα πεδίον Σαμαρειτιδος, Magnus Campus Samaritidis of Joſephus (45).

(Y) So the ſeventy call it Πεδίον μέγα Ἐσδρηλὼν, with a little variation, the name either way being ſuppoſed to have been moulded by the Greeks, from the Hebrew name Jezreel (46). It being objected, that this valley of Jezreel appears not to have been conſidered as of any great dimenſion in ſcripture, confirmed by St. Jerom; it is anſwered, that to this great level it may have happened as to ſeas, which are divided into many portions, diſtinguiſhed by different names, borrowed from the more conſiderable places on the coaſts (47); ſo that the plain of Eſdraelon, or Jezreel, peculiarly

(39) Euſeb. in Onomaſt. ad vocem Ηλά. (40) 2 Chron iv. 17. (41) Iſa. xxxv. 2. (43) See Maundr. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſal. (44) Ub. ſup. (45) De Bell. Judaic. lib. ii. c. 2. (46) See Wells's Geog. vol. 2 ſub fin. (47) Reland. ub ſup.

(Z). Beſides theſe, which are moſt remarkably diſtinguiſhed as flat parts of the country, the whole coaſt from mount Carmel, to the ſouthermoſt borders of the land, is a plain and a level; excepting here and there a gentle hill, or ſand-heap. This great extent was not all known by the ſame name under the ſecond temple [n]. The northern part of it, from Joppa to Cæſarea, and no more as ſome will have it [o], was called Saron and Saronas (A). To the ſouthward of this was the plain of Siphela (B). The other plains, [n] Vide eund. ibid. [o] Vide eund. ibid.

culiarly ſo called, may have been of ſmall circumference, while the name itſelf, by a uſual cuſtom among men, may have extended itſelf over the whole of what it was only a part; inſtances of which it were needleſs and endleſs to give.

(Z) Euſebius calls it, μέγα πεδίον Λεγεώνος, Campum Magnum Legionis; and St. Jerom calls it, Latiſſimum Campum, vel Campum Maximum, or adding the name, Grandem Campum Legionis (48).

(A) In our verſion Sharon (49). It afforded excellent paſture, and it is obſerved, that it is no wonder the Gadites, or children of the tribe of Gad, who were chiefly addicted to a paſtoral life, ſought here to feed their flocks (50). But hence it has been miſtakenly concluded (51), there was another Sharon in the tribe of Gad. That this is a miſtake may be ſeen, where it is ſaid, the children of Gad— dwelt in Gilead, in Baſhan, and in her towns, and in all the ſuburbs of Sharon (52). Now would they have dwelt in the ſuburbs and not in the cities, if the country had been their own? is this likely? The truth is, the ſuburbs were appointed for cattle— and for all their beaſts (53). Is their Sharon then to be ſought for in the country, where they poſſeſſed not the cities, but took up with the ſuburbs? And ſince the country of Sharon was moſt noted and famous for the nurture of cattle, and ſeeing the Gadites did, in a particular manner, employ their time as graziers and ſhepherds far beyond all the tribes on this ſide the Jordan, why ſhould we croſs to the other ſide, in queſt of another Sharon? Thus is it that Reland (54) endeavours to deſtroy the notion of another place of this name on the other ſide of the river Jordan.

(B) So called from the Hebrew שפלת, extending itſelf weſtward and ſouthward of Eleutheropolis, though the name is equally applicable to the one plain and the other (55).

(48) Vide eund. ibid. (49) 1 Chron. v. 16. (50) Vide Reland. ub. ſup. (51) Vide eund. ibid (52) Chron. ub. ſup. (53) Numb. xxxv. 3. Joſh. xiv. 4. (54) Ub. ſup. (55) Vide Reland. ub. ſup.

as that of Jericho (C), which may be included in the great plain properly so called, we forbear to mention.

Wildernesses and deserts.

Of the wildernesses, or deserts of this country, we shall not have much to say; but by these we are not always to understand places quite uninhabited, and destitute of all useful production (D). The first of these is the wilderness of Judah [p] (E); and in this wilderness, as it is called, were the cities of Bath-arabah, Middin, and Secacah, and Nibshan, and the city of Salt, and En-gedi; six cities with their villages [q]. The wilderness of Gibeon [r]. Josephus [s] represents all the mountainous tract, from Jericho to Scythopolis, as quite barren and uninhabited; and under the same character includes all the space washed by the Jordan, from the sea of Tiberias to the Asphaltite lake (F). To these we

[p] Judg. i. 16. [q] Josh. xv. 61, 62. [r] 2 Sam. ii. 24. [s] De Bell. Judaic. lib. iii. c. 8.

(C) Josephus (56) writes, that Jericho stood in a plain, which others (57) call a vale; but, whether vale or plain, it must, by its situation, have been a part of the great plain divided by the Jordan; and may have been called the vale or plain of Jericho, by a rule we have observed five notes above, in speaking of the great plain of Jezreel

(D) Reland (58) observes, that the Hebrew word, which the Greeks render ἐρήμους, and the Latins Solitudines, does, in its strictest import, mean no more than barely an uncultivated place; and thereupon remarks, that tho' St. John is said to have proclaimed the gospel in the wilderness of Judea, it is plain, it was not such a desert as was quite wild and inhospitable, for that it had cities, whose inhabitants were the first auditors to whom the Baptist foretold the immediate advent of the Messiah. He then quotes Jewish doctors (59), who acquaint us, that the smaller cattle, as sheep, goats, and the like, were not fed in the land of Israel, but in Syria, and the wildernesses, as we render the original word, of the land of Israel. Upon the whole he supposes, that all such places were by the Jews considered in opposition to those which afforded corn, wine, and oil.

(E) Many, says Reland (60), are of opinion, that the wilderness of Judah was on the other side of Jordan, and there placed the wilderness of St. John the Baptist: but, by the authority of the Jews themselves, he sufficiently evinces this to be a mistake.

(F) Hence Reland (61), takes occasion to condemn the geographers, who rashly and presumptuously croud both sides of the (56) De Bell. Judaic lib. v c. 4. (57) Vide Reland. ubi sup. (58) Ibid. c. 56. (59) In Cod. Bava Rama. (60) Ub. supr. (61) Ibid.

Jordan

we may add the foreſts or woods of this land; as the foreſt of Hareth (G), whither David retired. The wood of Ephraim [t], where Abſalom periſhed on an oak; and the foreſt of Lebanon [u], where Solomon built him a houſe. Others we paſs over.

HAVING thus taken a tranſient view of the mountains, plains, dales, and ſolitudes of the country before us, order requires us next to conſider the waters which are properly ſaid to have belonged to it; and firſt of the ſeas. Of theſe are, commonly and more accurately, reckoned but four, the Mediterranean, the Dead-ſea, the ſea of Tiberias, and the Samachonite-ſea. The Mediterranean was by the Jews called the Great-ſea, the ſea of the Philiſtines, the Salt-ſea (H). Seas.

THE Dead-ſea (†), or the Aſphaltite lake (I), called alſo

[t] 2 Sam. xviii. 6——9. [u] 1 Kings vii. 2.

Jordan thick with cities and villages; but, at the ſame time, makes allowances for their zeal and warmth of imagination, unguided by documents, or the leaſt degree of certainty.

(G) This foreſt was evidently within the tribe of Judah, by the words of the prophet Gad, who ſaid unto David, abide not in the hold, depart, and get thee into the land of Judah (63).

(H) Bochart (64) is angry with Maimonides for ſaying, the purple-fiſh was found in the Salt-ſea, imagining, he thereby meant the Aſphaltite lake; but that he meant the Mediterranean, and expreſſed himſelf not improperly, has been ſufficiently ſhewn (65).

(†) It is ſo called for that it breeds no fiſh, nor ſuſtains any thing that has life, becauſe of its exceſſive ſaltneſs (66). A late traveller (67) however ſays he has ſome reaſon to ſuſpect this, obſerving among the pebbles on the ſhore, two or three ſhells of fiſh reſembling oyſter-ſhells; and "that they were thrown "up by the waves, at two hours diſtance from the mouth of "Jordan;" which he mentions, leſt it ſhould be ſuſpected they might have been brought into the ſea that way. As for the common tradition, that birds, attempting to fly over this ſea, drop down dead into it, the ſame traveller (68) ſaw it actually confuted by ſeveral birds, who flew over and about it, without the leaſt viſible harm.

(I) So called from the quantity of bitumen in and about it. It was antiently ſuppoſed, that great quantities of this combuſtible

(63) 1 Sam. xxii. 5. (64) In Hierozoico, pt. 2. lib. 5. c. 9. (65) Vid. Reland. Pal. Illuſtr. lib. i. c. 37. (66) Vid Hieron in Comment. ad Ezek. xlvii. (67) Maundr. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſalem, p. 84. (68) Ibid.

ſubſtance

also the Salt-sea (K). Much has been said and supposed of this famous, or as most will have it infamous, lake; as that nothing will sink in it, and that it rose up from the submersion of the vale of Siddim *, where once, as is most generally concluded, stood the five cities of Sodom, Gomorrah, and the other three. On this account has it been abhorred and detested, and represented as a prodigious and everlasting monument of the just judgment of God, to deter mankind from the sins committed by those, who thus drew down on them the fierce wrath and vengeance of the Almighty. Now, tho' it were a seeming rashness to contradict what has been so very universally advanced and received among Christians, with relation to the origin of this lake, it has all been very solidly contradicted, and, if it were lawful so to say, refuted even by the authosubstance were thrown up by this sea (69). And travellers (70) represent it as in great plenty on the shores of it. Whatever there might have been formerly, it seems, it is not now to be found every where upon the shore, tho' it is gathered in great quantities near the mountains on both sides. It exactly resembles pitch, and cannot readily be distinguished from it, but by the sulphureousness of its smell and taste (71). This bitumen seems not to have been sufficiently, or at all, distinguished from a sort of combustible stones found on the shore; being a black sort of pebbles, which being held in the flame of a candle soon burn, and yield a smoke of an intolerable stench (72); but have this extraordinary property, that by burning they lose only of their weight, and not at all of their bulk.

* See Vol. II. p. 159.

(K) It is to the highest degree impregnated with salt; insomuch, that Galen (73) supposes it in specific gravity to be as much beyond other sea-water, as sea-water is beyond the water of rivers, and that it was impossible to immerge in it; and elsewhere adds, that by the addition of salt, it would be possible to make any water as bouyant as this: The same physician elsewhere has it, that the saltness of this sea is attended with a bitterness and unpleasantness. All this agrees well enough with what we are told of it at present, except that bodies will immerge in it, tho' not so easily as in other water (74).

(69) Vide Reland. ub. sup. Brocard. Descrip. Terr. Sanct. c. 7. (70) Radziv. Jerosolym. Pereg. p. 95. Brocard. ub. sup. &c. (71) Maundr. ub. sup. (72) Idem ibid. vide etiam Radziv. ub sup. (73) Apud Reland. ub. sup. (74) Maund. ub. sup.

rity of ſcripture itſelf [y] (L). But, miſled by the common tradition, and blinded by an irregular zeal, travellers have for the moſt part (M) repreſented it as a place diſmal to behold, all ſulphureous, bituminous, and combuſtible. Nor has it not been ſeriouſly averred, that ruins of the five cities have been actually ſeen (N) in theſe later times. This [y] Vide RELAND. ubi ſup. c. 38.

(L) It is Reland (75) who profeſſedly undertakes this taſk. To enter into a detail of his arguments would exceed our bounds, we ſhall therefore only touch on ſome principal heads, 1. He obſerves, that the five kings of Sodom, Gomorrah, and the reſt, are ſaid to have met in the vale of Siddim, as if it was not the place of their immediate abode. 2. The ſacred penman no where ſays, the five cities were in the vale of Siddim. 3. In the whole ſeries of ſcripture there is no mention made of the ſubmerſion of the ſame five cities. 4. He proves, that this ſuppoſed ſubmerſion is contradictory to many paſſages he cites of holy writ. He contends, that ſome, if not all, of the five cities, were not on the ſpot where now ſtands the Dead-ſea. The ſcripture itſelf is what he chiefly builds on throughout this whole argument; tho' he finds no mean authorities elſewhere to ſupport him in his opinion, which we leave to be diſcuſſed by ſuch as think it of importance ſufficient to require it.

(M) Geographers, ſays Maundrell (76), in their writings and maps, generally deſcribe a ſmoke aſcending from the ſurface of this lake, but for his part he could ſee nothing of the kind. It is alſo obſerved as a moſt wonderful circumſtance, that this lake, as Joſephus (77) obſerves, ſhould change colour three times a day, which prince Radziville (78) confirms as an eye-witneſs: in the morning, ſays he, it was blackiſh, at noon blueiſh, in the evening yellowiſh, and as it were mixed with ooze (79). A variety which plainly proceeds from natural cauſes, and is eaſily accounted for, by the nature of its ſituation and the land about it, with the help of a little optics. The infernal apples alſo mentioned by Joſephus (80) and Tacitus (81) to be on the borders of this lake, all fair and beautiful without, and all ſoot and aſhes within, which have, againſt all experience, exiſted in the fickly imagination of the ſuperſtitious votaries, who have fondly reſorted hither, are now concluded never to have been in nature (82); for nothing, not the leaſt trace of the kind is now to be found.

(N) Concerning this, we ſhall give you Maundrell's own words (83), "I diligently ſurveyed the waters, as far as my eye could

(75) Ub. ſup. (76) Ubi ſupr. (77) De Bell. Judaic. l. v. c. 5. (78) Ubi ſup. (79) Ibid. (80) Ubi ſupra. (81) Hiſt. l. v. (82) Vide Maundr. ubi ſupr; vide etiam Radz. ubi ſupr. (83) Ubi ſup.

This ſea in its preſent ſtate is incloſed on the eaſt and weſt with exceeding high mountains, on the north it has the plain of Jericho, or, if we take in both ſides of the Jordan, the great plain properly ſo called; on the ſouth it is open, and extends beyond the reach of the eye. In length it is ſaid to be twenty four leagues, and in breadth ſix or ſeven. Its water is limpid and clear. On the weſt ſide of it is a promontory, where they pretend to ſhew remains of Lot's metamorphoſed wife [z] (O).

Sea of Tiberias.

THE ſea of Tiberias, called alſo the ſea of Kinnereth, Kinneroth, Chinnereth [a], Cinneroth [b] (P), the water of Geneſar [c], lake of Geneſarit and Geneſareth. (Q), was alſo called [z] MAUNDR. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. p. 84, 85. [a] Num. XXXIV. 11. [b] Joſh. xii. 3. [c] 1 Macc. xi. 67.

" reach; but neither could I diſcern any heaps of ruins, nor——
" But yet I muſt not omit what was confidently atteſted to me
" by the father Guardian and procurator of Jeruſalem, both men
" in years, and ſeemingly not deſtitute either of ſenſe or probity,
" viz. that they had once actually ſeen one of thoſe ruins;
" that it was ſo near the ſhore, and the waters ſo ſhallow at " that time, that they, together with ſome French men, went to it,
" and found there ſeveral pillars and other fragments of build" ings." Maundrell has, at leaſt, as much weight with Reland (84) as any modern traveller whatſoever, and perhaps more, but yet is unwilling to think, there ſhould be ſuch viſible remains of the original five cities.

(O) It ſeems the natives here have different ſtories at different times. They told prince Radziville (85), there was no ſuch thing as Lot's wife's pillar of ſalt to be found, and about a century afterwards they tell Maundrell (86), that there is a ſtump of it ſtill left, and point out to him the very place where it is. In ſhort, it is almoſt wonderful, they cannot always find a lump of ſalt in ſuch a place as this, to perſonate what has been ſo eagerly inquired for and ſought after.

(P) Theſe names are ſuppoſed to be derived from a muſical inſtrument which is ſuppoſed to have been nearly of the form of this ſea: but Reland (87) chooſes to borrow the ſame from the city of the name, in the tribe of Naphtali on the borders thereof.

(Q) Theſe names are ſuppoſed to have been formed from the foregoing; but Reland (88) is rather inclined to have them from

(84) Ubi ſup. (85) Ubi ſup. (86) Ubi ſup. (87) Ubi ſup. c. 39. (88) Ibid.

the

called the ſea of Galilee. According to Joſephus * it was one hundred furlongs in length and about forty in breadth. The ſame hiſtorian [d] commends it for the temper of its water, which expoſed in the night to air, as the inhabitants near were wont to do in ſummer-time, became as cold almoſt as ſnow itſelf. It is every way by the ſame author ſet in oppoſition to the Dead-ſea; eſpecially as this afforded no ſort of fiſh, and the other abounded with it. The one is repreſented as a water every way pleaſant and agreeable, the other as every way forbidding and horrid.

THE Samachonite lake is next in order. Whence it derives its name is uncertain (R). It is chiefly remarkable for the thickneſs of its waters [e]. Its length was ſixty furlongs or about ſeven miles and a half; its breadth thirty furlongs, or about three miles and three quarters [f]. It is ſuppoſed, that this may be the lake mentioned by Pliny † on account of its odoriferous reeds; but this is mere conjecture. Samachonite lake.

NOT far from this is the lake of Phiala, the true ſource or fountain-head of the river Jordan, tho' whether it was ſo or not was long diſputed [g] (S). This name, which ſignifies a vial, was common to other waters of the ſame kind. It is ſituated in the midſt of a moſt delightful country, which is alſo ſo very opportune for buſineſs, that marts, or fairs, are here held all the ſummer long, by the neighbouring people [h]. Lake Phiala.

To paſs over other lakes and waters of inferior note and degree, we will proceed to the river Jordan, which riſing from the lake of Phiala, enters the Samachonite lake, whence The Jordan.

* De Bell. Judaic. l. iii. c. 8. [d] Ibid. [e] Ibid. [f] Idem ibid. l. iv. c. 1. † Lib. xii. c. 22. [g] RELAND. Palæſt. Illuſtr. l. i. c. 41. p. 264. [h] SANCH. Secret. Fidel. Crucis. apud eund. ibid.

the country of Genneſar, on the borders of this ſame lake; celebrated by Joſephus (89), for fertility of ſoil and felicity of climate.

(R) In the Greek of Joſephus, it is written, Σαμοχωνῖτις λίμνη, and Σεμεχωνῖτις, which ſome derive from Samach, a fiſh, or from the plural Samachon (90).

(S) This doubt was ſettled by Philip the Tetrarch, who caſting ſtraws or chaff thereinto, they came out at Panion.

(89) De Bell. Judaic. l. iii. c. 8. (90) Vide Reland. Palæſt. Illuſt. l. i c. 40. p. 262.

proceeding it divides the ſea of Tiberias, and thence diſcharges itſelf into the Dead-ſea. The origin of its name, or names, is ſomewhat obſcure (T); therefore not to inſiſt thereon, this being by far the principal ſtream of theſe parts, it is by way of eminence called the River [i]; the reſt of this country being mere brooks in compariſon of it. Joſephus [k] makes mention of a leſſer Jordan, whoſe fountain-head he places about Panion, while he derives the other, or greater Jordan, from mount Libanus [l]; but he is not to be underſtood here as meaning two diſtinct rivers; but as dividing the ſame river into two parts, which are greater or leſs, as nearer to, or farther from, the original ſpring (U). To recapitulate the courſe of this river, we learn [m] that, taking its riſe from Phiala, it runs under ground for the ſpace of one hundred and twenty furlongs, or fifteen miles, and breaking forth at Panium, goes through the Samachonite lake; whence proceeding again to the diſtance above-mentioned of fifteen miles, it ſtreams through the ſea of Tiberias, and thence holds

[i] JOSEPH. Antiq. l. v. c. 1. [k] Ibid. c. 2. and l. viii. c. 3.
[l] Antiq. l. v. c. 1. [m] Ibid. l. iii. c. 18.

(T) It has been a commonly received opinion, that this river is called יַרְדֵּן, Jarden, as if it was אֹר דָּן, the River of Dan, becauſe it took its riſe near the city of Dan, or becauſe it was derived from two ſprings, the one Jeor, the other Dan. That the firſt of theſe derivations is unlikely we ſhall now attempt to ſhew, and that the ſecond is falſe has been partly demonſtrated in the note above. To ſuppoſe it to have received any part of its denomination from the city of Dan is ſeemingly wrong, in as much as it was called Jorden long before the city of Dan was built. But you may ſay, it may have been ſo called by way of prolepſis. But why Den ſhould be changed into Dan may be difficult to account for; ſo that after all, it is moſt natural to borrow this name from יָרַד, deſcendit, labitur. The Arabs call it Arden, and Ordonnon; the Perſians, Herdum; and the Nubian geographer, or the Sharif Edriſi, Zacchar, which in Arabic ſignifies tumid, full, or overflowing its banks, and therefore a name properly enough applied to the Jordan (91).

(U) Examples of this kind are exhibited to confirm this (92), as in the Vetus Vechta, and Vetus Rhenus, and the Anapus παλαιὸς and καινὸς, mentioned by Vibius Sequeſter; whereby it is not to be underſtood, that theſe rivers, ſo diſtinguiſhed into old and new, were to be deduced from different ſprings, but to be parts of one and the ſame.

(91) Vid. eund. ibid. c. 43. p. 271, 272. (92) Apud eund. Ibid.

it

its courſe through a vaſt and horrid deſert, till it loſes itſelf in the Aſphaltite lake. Here it is noted [n], that Joſephus ſpeaks but of one original ſpring belonging to this river, a demonſtrative proof, that this leſſer Jordan is no river diſtinct from his greater, and that no more than different parts of the ſame main ſtream are to be underſtood thereby. It is remarkable of the Jordan, that in the time of harveſt it is moſt full, and apt to overtop its banks [o], contrary to the general nature of rivers, which are moſt full in time of winter; whence it may poſſibly have been, that ſome have imagined a ſubterraneous communication to have exiſted between this river and the Nile of Egypt (X). But to wave ſo unlikely a matter, the banks of this ſtream are a harbour for lions and other wild beaſts, who take ſhelter amidſt the reeds and canes [p], which here ſo remarkably abound; and not only abound, but alſo grow ſo thick and tall, as to obſtruct the ſight of the river (Y); together with the willows, tamariſks, and other native vegetables of theſe banks (Z). The ſtream of [n] Vide RELAND. ubi ſup. [o] Vide eund. ibid. [p] MAUNDRELL's Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ.

(X) The more to confirm this, it has been reported that the Coracinus, a fiſh reputed to be peculiar to the Nile, has been taken in the Jordan. But this concludes nothing poſitively; for the Coracinus, as much as it is a native of the Nile, is to be found elſewhere (93).

(Y) Prince Radziville (94) writes, that on this ſide of the river in the place where Chriſt was baptized, there is a ſhady thicket, about half a mile, (a German one we ſuppoſe) in length, and a bow-ſhot in breadth; and that here were trees which bore the likeneſs of willows, but upon a nice examination proved not exactly ſo in fact. He adds, that he could perceive nothing of the locuſts and wild honey, which afforded ſuſtenance to St. John, who, with others, he ſuppoſes to have ſojourned in this wilderneſs. Maundrell (95) alſo obſerves, that this part is ſo beſet with buſhes and trees, ſuch as tamariſks, willows, and others, that you can ſee no water till you have made your way through. ——— He adds, that on the other ſide there ſeemed to be a much larger thicket, than on the ſide they were. To this effect do the travellers this way in general deliver themſelves.

(Z) Maundrell diſtinguiſhes the banks of this river as twofold: theſe are his own words (96); "On the farther ſide of the fore-

(93) Vide Athenæum (94) In Peregrin Jeroſolym. p. 98.
(95) Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. p. 81. (96) Ibid.

"mentioned

of this river is ſo ſtrong and rapid, that a man cannot ſtem it in ſwimming; but the dimenſions of it are by no means large, the breadth of it, where it ſhould be ſeemingly greateſt, not exceeding ſixty foot (A). It was formerly fordable in ſome places [q], and may be ſo ſtill, tho' we know of none that particularly takes notice of it. It ſeems alſo to have been formerly croſſed in boats or ferrjes [r].

To deſcribe or even to enumerate the other rivers, either on this or that ſide of the Jordan, were too minute, and indeed needleſs, and contrary to our cuſtom hitherto; wherefore we ſhall only ſay, that the Arnon ſeems to deſerve the place next to Jordan; and proceed to obſerve, that the productions of this land were great, and excellent, and abundant. This country was antiently of great fame for fertility, and well correſponded with the figurative deſcription of it, that it flowed with milk and honey; nor at this day are there wanting ſigns and ſufficient indications thereof, tho' now it is, as it were, decayed and neglected. But the preſent barren ſtate of this country having prevailed on ſome to imagine, it

[q] GULIEL. TYRIUS, Hiſt. xxii. 20. apud RELAND. ubi ſup.
[r] Vide RELAND. ibid.

" mentioned convent [dedicated to St. John] there runs along a " ſmall deſcent, which you may fitly call the firſt and outermoſt " bank of Jordan; as far as which it may be ſuppoſed the river " does, or at leaſt did antiently flow, at ſome ſeaſons of the year, " viz. at the time of harveſt, Joſh. iii. 15. or as it is expreſſed, " Chron. xii. 15. in the firſt month, that is, in March. But at preſent, [whether it be becauſe the river has, by its rapidity of " current, worn its chanel deeper than it was formerly, or " whether becauſe its waters are diverted ſome other way] it ſeems " to have forgot its antient greatneſs: for we could diſcern no ſign " or probability of ſuch overflowings, when we were there; which " was the thirtieth of March, being the proper time for theſe in" undations. Nay, ſo far was the river from overflowing, that it " ran at leaſt two yards below the brink of its chanel." The Jordan ſeems then to be very different from the river it was formerly.

(A) This is Maundrell's meaſurement (97), in which the moſt ſincere travellers are pretty nicely of a mind with him. As for depth, the ſame traveller ſays, it was deeper than his height. The water is turbid, the natural conſequence of its rapidity; to which Radziville (98) adds, it is very wholeſome, and incorruptible in its nature, as he ſufficiently found by the experiment of ſome of it he brought away with him.

(97) Ibid. (98) Ubi ſup.

never never was what the ſcripture repreſents it to be, we ſhall, with the ſame deſign, and in the ſame order obſerved, by a learned man[r], who has made this favourite region his ſtudy, more than ever any body did before and to founder purpoſes, proceed to diſplay what it affords for the uſe of its inhabitants.

Fertility. AND here, it may be neceſſary to obſerve, that as fine a country as Egypt is on all hands allowed to be, it ſubmitted, and ſtill ſubmits, to this, in ſome very noble productions, and particularly wine and oil, two of the moſt uſeful liquids to man next to water; to go about to prove which, were to ſuppoſe the reader ignorant of what he cannot poſſibly but know, and be convinced, and aſſured of (B); as for water, it is plain, there could have been no exceſſive want of that, for how ſhould the men and cattle have ſubſiſted at all without it? That they had ſufficient, for their uſe at leaſt, muſt be readily granted, and has been ſufficiently proved to our hands[s]; but it were needleſs for us to go about to do the ſame. Then for meats, and wherewithal to reliſh them, and ſerve them up; the Aſphaltite lake produced a ſalt, which, in the judgment of Galen, was for digeſtion and extenuation preferable to all other ſalts whatſoever. Then wheat and barley, and other kinds of corn and grain, were ſo plentifully abundant, that it is in ſcriptue (C) particularly denominated therefrom (D). That oxen, ſheep, goats, and the like, together with fowl, [r] RELAND. [s] Vide eund. l. 1. c. 46.

(B) This land was among other things preferred to Egypt, in that it enjoyed the benefit of rain (99); but that it exceeded this laſt for wine and oil is certain; and tho' it is not to be denied, but Egypt had her olives (100), they were certainly inferior to thoſe of Paleſtine. Whence the queſtion is aſked (1), What did the ten tribes? They ſent oil into Egypt. Solomon, we know, ſent yearly to the king of Tyre twenty cors, or meaſures, of pure oil (2). Then for vines, the Egyptians had none at all. Herodotus ſays (3), they drank a liquor made of barley to ſupply their want of wine (4). Accordingly Judæa is by Rabſhakeh called, a land --- of vineyards, a land of oil-olive (5). In ſhort, who knows not, that the wine of Aſcalon, the wine of Gaza, and Sarepta, were famed among the moſt remote nations ſays Reland?

(C) It is there called, a land of wheat and barley (6).

(D) and well it ſeems to have deſerved it, ſeeing Solomon could

(99) Vide Proc. Gaz. ad Deutéron (100) Vide Theop de Cauſ. Plant. lib. vi c. 12. (1) In Icha. Rabbal. fol. 85. 3 (2) 1 Kings v. 11. (3) Lib. ii. c. 77. (4) See Vol. I. p. 462. (5) 2 Kings xviii. 32. (6) Deut. viii. 8.

annually

fowl, were in no degree wanting, appears by the frequent sacrifices, and by the pasture grounds occupied by the two tribes and half on the other side of Jordan, not to mention the pastures of Sarona, and the plains about Lydda, Jamnia, and elsewhere. For fish; the Jordan, and sea of Tiberias, yielded a sufficient supply, as may be gathered from the New Testament; nor are we told, that they are at this day deficient therein. Besides the sea not only afforded quantities sufficient for the people on the coast, but helped to subsist even the citizens of Jerusalem, from whence you have the fish-gate of that metropolis, if any credit is to be given to St. Jerom [u], to omit the fish that was certainly taken in the other streams and waters of this land. Plenty of honey, besides what was collected by the Bee, was here to be had in the woods, and flowing from trees (E). Of trees, the palm of this country, and of shrubs, the balsam, are eminent above all others. The fruit of the palm of this country was thought the only of the sort capable of being kept for a future store (F). The balsam of annually afford to send the king of Tyre a present of twenty thousand cors, or measures, of wheat (7).

[u] Apud RELAND. Pal. Illust. lib. 1. c. 57. p. 382.

(E) This seems to be an extraordinary production; but is nevertheless supposed to have been the μέλι ἄγριον, or wild honey, St. John found in the wilderness (8). Our author cannot agree with Bochart, that this wild honey was deposited by the industrious bee; but recurs to Diodorus Siculus, who, speaking of the Nabatæans who inhabited these parts, tells us what this wild honey or μέλι ἄγριον, may have been, saying, in their trees they have a honey they call wild, which they drink mixed with water; as also to Pliny, who, speaking of what he calls the Elaiomeli, or oil-honey, says that it flows from the olive; and that in the maritime parts of Syria it comes spontaneously, flowing from the trees, of a fat substance thicker than honey, finer than rosin, and sweet of taste: and hence concludes, that Maundrell (9) was so sensible of a strong smell of honey in the maritime parts of Palestine. Pliny, however, does not tell us, it has the smell of honey; but that this is the μέλι ἄγριον, or wild honey of Scripture, we think there is all the reason in the world to believe.

(F) This is the opinion of Theophrastus (10); and doubtless he had good ground for what he says. In four sandy places only, says he, is the fruit of the palm fit to be laid up for store. These four places are Jericho, Phasaelis, Archelais, and Livias.

(7) 1 Kings ubi sup. (8) Vide Reland. Pal. Illust. lib. i. c. 57. p. 382. (9) Journ. from Alep. to Jerus. p. 66. (10) De Hist. Plant. lib. xi. c. 8.

Jericho (G) is famous beyond any thing of its kind, and applauded as the peculiar product of this happy country (H), and a moſt precious drug it was among the Greeks and Romans, as every ordinary ſcholar cannot but know. Wool muſt have been a natural commodity in a country which fed ſuch flocks of ſheep; and cotton is the common product of theſe parts, and of this country particularly about Lydda, and the plain of Eſdraelon. To go about to prove all this by authorities, antient and modern, were endleſs and mere affectation. Let it ſuffice, that we obſerve of this ſmall region, that to have ſuſtained ſuch numbers of inhabitants, who in a manner lived upon their own growth, without any conſiderable aſſiſtance, by foreign commerce, it muſt have been by far a more noble and fertile place, than by ſome at preſent repreſented.

The extent.

WE have been naturally induced to break into the order we have hitherto followed in our other geographical ſections, and now, with ſeeming irregularity, we come to ſpeak of the extent of this country, which from north to ſouth did not exceed ſeventy leagues, and from eaſt to weſt not above thirty.

The Soil.

BEING partly in the fourth and fifth north climate its ſoil was of the beſt, tho' greatly diverſified, as the country hap-

(G) Theophraſtus (11) leaves us in ſome doubt as to the ſpot which produced this precious balm, ſaying in general, that it grew in the valley of Syria; which is thus particularized by Juſtin (12): "There is a valley ſurrounded by mountains, as it were with a "wall—and the extent of the place may be about two hundred "acres. Its name is Hiericho [Jericho]. In this valley there is a "wood moſt famous for the fertility and amenity of its trees, but "above all for the balm and opobalſam." The fame is atteſted by Strabo, Joſephus, and others.

(H) So writes Joſephus, Pliny, and Dioſcorides. "But [ſays Re-"land] (13), Proſper Alpinus and Peter Bellonius will have it, that "theſe are miſtaken, becauſe it now grows in Judæa no where but "in gardens; and requires there to be tended very carefully; "whereas balſam of every ſort comes from Arabia, as from its na-"tive ſoil, and is thence conveyed into other regions. But I, for "my part, [continues he] am of opinion, that Joſephus and Dioſ-"corides wrote nothing but the truth, for there is no reaſon why "plants, which ſeventeen hundred years ago flouriſhed in one "country, may not in length of time, be produced in countries far "diſtant therefrom. But ſuppoſing even the nature of the ſoil "to have changed, it would be no ſuch great wonder: Viciſſi-"tudes of this kind certainly happen, as well as of others.

(11) Ubi ſup. lib. ix. c. 6. (12) Lib. xxxvii. (13) Ubi ſup.

pened to be mountainous or plain, close or open, bordering on salt waters, or fresh, which several circumstances of situation must naturally have propagated an almost endless variety of things pleasant and useful, necessary for life, and incentive to luxury. In short, such a country it must have been, as Dionysius of Halicarnassus (I) would have preferred in his choice. But to recur to authorities for all this, even from the most approved writers of antiquity, Greek and Roman, would be, as we apprehend, to no purpose, and draw us into a length we would avoid as much as possible; we shall therefore content ourselves with this general summary, which will raise a sufficient idea of this chosen seat, that, when carefully husbanded, it was inferior to no place else in the world. We would only add, that the soil is so very light, that it is ploughed with the least labour, tho' returning an exuberant increase (K), and that the nature of it is such, that to plough it deep were to destroy almost the hopes of any tolerable crop (L).

Why so much altered for the worse.

How it has happened, that this country has changed face from such beauty to such deformity, may be with no great difficulty understood; for overwhelmed by calamities of the most bitter and destructive sort, and its natives driven out to wander the wide world over, and the very soil itself groaning under the heavy pressure of divine vengeance, it became quite another place: And more particularly after the merciless and mutual devastations during the holy war, between the Christians and Mohammedans. This great and blindly zealous strife has ever since subjected this now unhappy spot to perpetual ravages and insecurity, from the Arabs and other wandering

(I) He says (14) he should not so much value a country for one production only, nor would choose to dwell where, at the same time the fields should be fruitful, there should be a total want of all the other necessaries of life, or at least a scarcity of them; but that he would choose a country which should be as much as possible sufficient of itself, or stand the least in need of foreign assistance. This he thinks to have been the happy lot of Italy.

(K) Brochard (15) says, he has often with his own eyes seen two oxen only at the plough, and that the land stands in need of manure of no sort, being naturally very fat and rich.

(L) The soil being shallow, if the plough went deep, the clods would dry up by the heat that would be reverberated from the stony bottom. In Syria therefore they make use of small ploughs, says Theophrastus (16).

(14) In Antiq. Rom. lib. i. p. 28. (15) In Descript. Terr. Sanct. c. 11. (16) Ubi supr. lib. iii. c. 25.

tribes; ſo that, upon the ſurface of the whole earth, there is not a place more dangerous or comfortleſs to travel in, than is now this promiſed land, as by every traveller we are told. How then can we, with any juſtice, compare the preſent with the antient aſpect of this country? So that it is in vain to object the ſterility and naked rocks now beheld, and the rather as nothing we are told is plainer, than that theſe ſtony heights were once covered with ſoil [u] (M). But what muſt

[u] See MAUND. pag. 64.

(M) Maundrell's words upon this occaſion being very remarkable and particular, we cannot help tranſcribing what he ſays (17). ——— "All along this day's travel — the country diſcovered a "quite different face from what it had before, preſenting nothing "to the view, in moſt places, but naked rocks, mountains, and "precipices. At ſight of which pilgrims are apt to be much "aſtoniſhed, baulked in their expectations, finding that country in "ſuch an inhoſpitable condition concerning whoſe pleaſantneſs and "plenty they had before formed in their minds ſuch high ideas, "from the deſcription given of it in the word of God: inſomuch "that it almoſt ſtartles their faith, when they reflect how it could "be poſſible for a land like this to ſupply food for ſo prodigious a "number of inhabitants, as are ſaid to have been polled in the "twelve tribes at one time; the ſum given in by Joab (18) a-"mounting to no leſs than thirteen hundred thouſand fighting "men, beſides women and children. But it is certain, that any "man, who is not a little byaſſed to infidelity before, may ſee, as "he paſſes along, arguments enough to ſupport his faith againſt "ſuch ſcruples. ——— For it is obvious for any one to ob-"ſerve, that theſe rocks and hills muſt have been antiently co-"vered with earth, and cultivated, and made to contribute to the "maintenance of the inhabitants, no leſs than if the country had "been all plain: nay, perhaps much more; forasmuch as ſuch a "mountainous and uneven ſurface affords a larger ſpace of ground "for cultivation, than this country would amount to if it were all "reduced to a perfect level ——— For the huſbanding of theſe "mountains, their manner was, to gather up the ſtones, and place "them in ſeveral lines along the ſides of the hills, in form of a "wall. By ſuch borders they ſupported the mould from tumbling, "or being waſhed down; and formed many beds of excellent ſoil, "riſing gradually one above another, from the bottom to the top "of the mountains ——— Of this form of culture you ſee evi-"dent footſteps, wherever you go in all the mountains of Paleſtine. "Thus the very rocks were made fruitful: and perhaps there is no

(17) Journey from Alep. to Jeruſalem. (18) 2 Sam. xxiv. 9.

muſt this country have been, to have withſtood the unparalleled and continued rage of the enemy it has ſo cruelly ſuffered? or what cannot an enemy do to deſtroy and utterly lay waſte a country? Joſephus * to our purpoſe writes, "the marching of his army [Simon's] was the ſame thing to the "people, that a flight of locuſts is to a wood: not a leaf, not "aſpire of graſs, was there left; not any thing more than a "deſert, that they left behind them ---- Then the malicious "rage of Simon, and his keen animoſity againſt the Idu-"mæans was ſtill a farther aggravation-----In fine, what "with burning, demoliſhing, devouring the fruits of the "earth, or trampling them under foot, Simon's troops did "not leave ſo much, even in a fruitful well-cultivated coun-"try, as the leaſt ſign or memorial of what it had formerly "been. 'This, and much more, is to be found in this and other authors; and if after this any one ſhould think fit to object to us, what is ſaid by Strabo relating to Jeruſalem (N), as if it included the whole country; we ſhall anſwer, that they deal expreſly againſt the plain ſenſe of Strabo, who confines himſelf to a ſpace only of ſixty furlongs, which the more rocky and inacceſſible it had been, ſo much the more apt and convenient to be the ſeat of the metropolis and great arſenal of the nation, as experience evinced.

The cities. THE cities of this land we ſhall forbear to deſcribe, tho' few cities have been of greater ſplendor, or on all accounts more worthy of notice; but as in our larger geographical

* De Bell. Jud. lib. v. c. 7.

"ſpot of ground in this whole land, that was not improved to the "production of ſomething or other, miniſtring to the aſſiſtance of "human life; for, than the plain country nothing can be more "fruitful, whether for the production of corn or cattle, and conſe-"quently of milk." — He then proceeds to ſhew, how this whole country, ſo wild at preſent, may have been, as it doubtleſs was, a paradiſe both for pleaſure and production.

(N) He miſtakenly ſays (19) that Moſes led them to the place where Jeruſalem ſtood, which he eaſily obtained, as it was a place not worth the contending for; for that it was rocky, though it abounded with water; and the country about, for the ſpace of ſixty ſtades or furlongs, dry, barren, and rocky. But what is this to the purpoſe? this was but a ſmall part of the country, and concludes nothing in prejudice to the reſt; for what country is there that wants its deſerts, wilds, and rocks?

(19) Lib. xvi.

ſections,

ſections, we have avoided the taſk, as too tedious and exceeding the bounds we preſcribe to ourſelves, as well as to avoid repetition, and anticipating what may be more properly mentioned in the body of our hiſtory, we ſhall do by theſe now, as we formerly [y] did by thoſe of Egypt, refer them, till they come to be occaſionally mentioned or deſcribed, and proceed to what is more immediately to our preſent purpoſe.

MEANING the more remarkable things and rarities of this country, which, as nicely as we can diſtinguiſh and ſeparate them, we will divide into the natural and artificial; though we might alſo, with great reaſon, divide them in general into the falſe, doubtful, and certain; but we ſhall leave that to the reader's own diſcretion or diſcernment. Upon mount Carmel they find melons, olives, and ſuch like fruits in ſtone, moſt exactly imitating thoſe vegetable productions, both within and without, and the melons even when opened emitting an agreeable ſmell; our author [z] adds, that here alſo are found a kind of oyſters of the ſame nature, and even, as reported, bunches of grapes of the ſame ſtony conſiſtence; but whether owing to petrifaction, or the wanton imitation of nature, is left undecided----Near Rachel's tomb, not far from Bethlehem, is a ſmall ſpot of ground, whereon are picked up a little ſort of ſmall round ſtones, exactly reſembling peas; owing, as they pretend, to a miracle wrought by the bleſſed virgin, who, to puniſh a ſurly ruſtic, who refuſed her a handful of that pulſe, converted them into ſtones [a] (O). The ſand of the river Belus, as ſuppoſed, not far from Acra or Ptolemais, is famous for being an excellent material for the making of glaſs, and not only ſo, but for having miniſtred the firſt occaſion and hint of that fine invention [b] ---- In the way from Jeruſalem to the Jordan de- Natural rarities.

[y] See Vol I. p. 388. vol. iv. pag. 308. 4to

[z] LE BRUYN, Voyage au Levant. &c.

[a] MAUNDR. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. pag 87. SANDYS, &c.

[b] SANDYS, p. 203. MAUNDR. ubi ſup. p. 56.

(O) This ſtory is told another way. They ſay, the bleſſed virgin going one day from Bethlehem to Jeruſalem, ſaw a countryman ſowing of ſomething, and aſking him what it was he was ſowing, he anſwered, ſtones; that this rude anſwer of his coſt him dear; for that, by the will and power of God, this ſeed produced nothing but ſtones in the likeneſs of peas; and from that time, ſay they, this ſame field hath afforded nothing elſe (20).

(20) Le Bruyn, Voy. au Lev. vol. iv. p. 231. in 4to.

ſcending

ſcending a ſteep hill, they ſhew what they call the fountain of the apoſtles; ſo called from a tradition current, that here the apoſtles were wont to refreſh themſelves in their frequent journeyings between Jeruſalem and Jericho [c] ---- Soon after, on the ſame road, they ſhew the mountainous deſert where our Saviour was led by the ſpirit to be tempted of the devil; a moſt miſerable and barren place, ſo ſeemingly torn and diſordered, that the beholder is ready to believe, the earth had ſuffered ſome extraordinary convulſion, in which its very bowels have been turned outwards [d]. ---- Next to this, which is ſeemingly a part of it, is a mountain called Quadrantana, or Quarantania, of ſteep and moſt dangerous aſcent, where, as they ſay, the devil took our bleſſed Saviour to tempt him with the deluſive ſight of the earth and its glories [e]. And here they ſhew alſo a number of ſtones, which they will have to have been the very ſame the devil would have had converted into loaves [f] (P). On the top of this ſame mount is a ſmall chapel, and on the prominence of it another, about which are many caves and holes, where, as hideous as the place was, hermits and anchorets took up their ſolitary abode [g] ----At the diſtance of ſome leagues from the Dead-ſea there are ſuch ſaline effloreſcencies, as are obſerved in the valley of Salt near Aleppo [h], after the winter's inundation; a demonſtrative ſign, that the whole plain about muſt be, in an extraordinary manner, impregnated with that mineral [i]. ---- At about an hour's diſtance from the Dead-ſea the ground is uneven, and varied into hillocks, and much reſembling the places in England where there have been antiently lime-kilns; which are ſuggeſted to have been the pits where the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah were overthrown by the four kings [k]. ---- In the plain of Jericho is a very remarkable fruit, called by the Arabs Za-cho-ne, it grows on a thorny buſh, with ſmall leaves; and both in ſhape and colour reſembles a ſmall

[c] Idem ibid. pag 79. [d] Idem ibid. pag. 79. [e] Idem ibid. p 80. [f] RADZIV. Peregrin. Jeroſolym. pag. 99. [g] Vide eoſdem in loc ſup. cit. [h] See Vol. II. p. 134. [i] MAUNDR. ubi ſup. p. 81. [k] Idem ibid. p 83.

(P) The ſame author obſerves in the ſame place, that thoſe who would have this deſert to have been what we commonly call a wilderneſs or wood, are moſt egregiouſly miſtaken; for that nothing like a tree is here to be ſeen, but rocks only, and moſt rugged cliffs.

unripe

unripe walnut. The kernels of this fruit the Arabs bray in a mortar, and putting the pulp into ſcalding water, ſkim off an oil which riſes to the top; which oil taken inwardly for bruiſes, or applied outwardly to green wounds, is preferred to balm of Gilead [l]. -------
In the ſame plain alſo are found what they call roſes of Jericho, of a very miraculous nature. They are ſaid to give eaſe to women at the time of delivery [m]; and to blow only on Chriſtmas-eve, according to ſome [n], or on all the feſtival days of our lady according to others [o] (Q); notions

[l] Idem ibid. p. 87. [m] RADZIV. ubi ſup. p. 98. [n] THEVEN. Voy. au Levant, p. 1. lib. i. c. 41. LE BRUYN, Voy. au Levant, vol. 4. p. 277. in 4to. [o] THEVEN. ubi ſup.

(Q) This property of theſe roſes, as they are called, ſeems to bear ſo conſiderable an affinity with Sir John Mandeville's (21) origin of roſes, that we cannot help inſerting his moſt extraordinary tradition at length, as it ſtands in his own words. "And "between the Cytee [Bethlehem] and the church is the feld floridus; that is to ſeyne, the feld flouriſched: for als moche as a "fayre mayden was blamed with wrong, and ſlaundred, that "ſche had done fornycacioun; for whiche cauſe ſche was demed "to the dethe, and to be brent in that place, to the whiche ſche "was ladd. And as the fyre began to brenne aboute hire, ſche "made hire preyeres to oure lord, that als wiſſely as ſche was "not gylty of that ſynne, that he wold helpe hire, and make it "to be knowen to alle men, of his mercyfulle grace. And whan "ſche hadde thus ſeyd, ſche entred into the fuyer; and anon "was the fuyr quenched and oute: and the brondes, that weren "brennyne, becomen rede roſeres; and the brondes, that weren "not kyndled, becomen white roſeres, fulle of roſes. And theiſe "weren the firſt roſeres and roſes, bothe white and rede, that "evere ony man ſaughe." &c. and ſo on. So groſs were the ſuperſtitions of the times, and ſo thickly benighted the underſtandings of the generation, that nothing was too hard to be believed by the univerſally credulous multitude. Which being perceived, and the ſweet gains of pious fraud once taſted by the deſigning and avaritious prieſt, ſhrines, and ſanctuaries, and ſtrange ſtories, to derive reſpect on particular places, became innumerable. In ſhort, if ſo ſincere, ſo worthy, and ſo ſenſible and knowing a man, as Sir John moſt plainly appears to have been, by that part of his travels which is properly his own, and which is not commonly half ſo much valued as it ought to be, could be ſo monſtrouſly gulled of his ſenſes, in this and other

(21) Page 84. in the laſt edition 8vo.

tions now on all hands exploded (R). To theſe we may add the wood olive of the ſame place. The outward coat of it is green. and like that of the common olive we eat; but being taken off, you find a nut of woody conſiſtence. This has ribs lengthwiſe, and is of the thickneſs of an almond-ſhell, and the kernel within is like a piſtachio, within-ſide of a cheſtnut brown, and inſipid to all likelihood [p]----- Between Jeruſalem and Bethlehem was the valley of Rephaim, ſo famous for the overthrow of the Philiſtines by David [q]. ------Between the ſame places is the turpentine tree, in the ſhade of which the bleſſed virgin is ſaid to have repoſed (S), when ſhe was carrying Chriſt in her arms to preſent him to the Lord at Jeruſalem [r].------Between Bethlehem and the convent of St. John the Baptiſt is that famous valley, where the angel made ſuch prodigious havock of the great Sennacherib's mighty army in the ſpace of one night [s].------- Either in or cloſe upon the ſkirts of this ſame valley is a village, called Booteſhellah, which is reported to have this ſtrange property, that no Turk or Mohammedan can live in it above two years [t] (T).------In leſs than an hour from this ſame other reſpects, what muſt we conceive, think ye, of the common rate of his contemporaries? The impudence of the clergy was immenſe, their avarice without bounds, and their ambition infinite.

[p] LE BRUYN, ubi ſupr. p. 278. [q] MAUNDR. ubi ſupr. p. 87. [r] Idem ibid. [s] Idem ibid. p. 91. [t] MAUNDR. ubi ſup. p. 92.

(R) It ſeems they will not blow except they are put into water; but in that caſe, they will blow in any ſeaſon, and at any hour (22). Beſides they are not peculiar to the plain of Jericho; they are to be found elſewhere, and particularly in the deſerts about mount Sinai (23); and yet people are ſtill ſo fond of this idle notion, that they are reſolved never to part with it; ſome of theſe we know, but their names muſt be a ſecret in this caſe, tho' well known in others.

(S) The tradition of the country goes, that this tree bent itſelf, to afford the virgin a more perfect ſhade than it could otherwiſe have done (24).

(T) Where ſtrength can be of no avail, art, they ſay, may be uſed. In this inſtance, the Chriſtians have, it ſeems, out-witted the Turks, who, weak enough to believe there may be truth

(22) Theven Voy. au Lev. part 1. lib. ii. c. 41. Le Bruyn Voy. au. Lev. vol 4. p. 278. in 4*to.* (23) Theven. ubi ſupr. (24) Le Bruyn ubi ſupr. p. 234.

in ſame place is the fountain, where, they falſly (V) ſay, Philip baptized in the ſtory leave the village to them, without moleſtation (25). Sandys (26) takes this ſame place to be called Bezec, and alſo tells us, that the Chriſtians have the good luck to keep it to themſelves; the place having, as the report went, actually proved mortal to ſuch Mohammedans as had attempted to make it the place of their abode: So that, if actual experience has given birth to this notion, it may be doubtful, whether the Turks took the fright of themſelves, or whether it was artfully injected by the Chriſtians. Thevenot (27) calls it, Boticella, and tells us, a report goes, that no Turk can live there above eight days. We had almoſt forgot, that prince Radziville calls this ſame place, Bethagil: that this is the ſame place meant by the three former travellers is evident by the ſituation he gives it, agreeing therein with them, tho' at the ſame time he magnifies the miracle ſtill more than Thevenot (28). He ſays, no one circumciſed can ſurvive the third day here; but that on the third night they would ſurely die; which, he ſays, was moſt ſolemnly affirmed to him, even by two Arabians, who had almoſt experienced the whole of the thing. The ſame Arabs told him, that the firſt night they were taken with a violent pain in the head; that on the ſecond their whole body ſo ſwelled up, that for fear of immediate death, they were obliged to be removed; and that the one of them was four, the other ſix, months before they were reſtored to their former health. In fine, that when he arrived near the place, no Mohammedan that was with him would venture in, but, to avoid the danger, choſe rather to go round about. As it were to confirm this marvellous relation, he inſtances another place indued with the ſame deſtructive property to all the circumciſed, which is a nunnery about three miles from Damaſcus, where none under the circumſtances of circumciſion can out live the third day. This, he ſays, is ordered, as many affirm, by the ſpecial grace and favour of God, in order to protect the chaſtity of the virgins from the unſparing luſt of the Pagans or Infidels Stories moſt religiouſly cultivated, and by the weak as greedily ſwallowed.

(V) Falſe it ſeemed to our traveller, and a thing impoſſible. His objection is the inacceſſibleneſs of the place for an horſeman, and much more for a chariot, ſuch as the eunuch rode in. However he grants, that the road to it may have been ſmoother formerly than now, and thinks there are ſome indications which ſeemingly declare it to have been ſo (29). Prince Radziville (30)

(25) Maundr. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. p. 91. (26) In his Travels, p. 182. (27) Voy. au Levt. part 1. lib. ii. c. 47. (28) In Peregrin. Jeroſolym. p. 88. (29) Maundr. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. p. 92. (30) Ubi ſupr.

baptized the Ethiopian eunuch.-----Somewhat beyond this is the wilderneſs of St. John; a wilderneſs called becauſe very rocky and mountainous, though well cultivated and producing plenty of corn, wine, and oil [u] (X).------An hour within this wilderneſs is the cave and fountain, where, as they ſay, St. John exerciſed thoſe ſevere auſterities related of him by the evangeliſt Matthew [x].------Not far from this ſame cave are ſome old locuſt-trees, which our author, [y] calls the monuments of the ignorance of the middle times (Y). ------A little way from hence is the valley of Elah, where not ſo free with his objections to the moſt palpable falſhoods impoſed on him in theſe parts, his ſuperſtition devouring his great good ſenſe, takes occaſion from the nature of this fountain to combat the doctrine of the Anabaptiſts. They, ſays he, cite this baptiſm of the eunuch as an example to juſtify their practice; but continues, that had they ſeen the place they would be of another mind; that the ſpring is ſo inconſiderable, as ſcarce to afford water enough to wet both feet together; and thence concludes, that Philip only took up the water, and poured it on the eunuch's head, and in that manner baptized him. Le Brun (31) ſeems to deſtroy this piece of criticiſm by ſaying, that the water of this ſame ſpring falls into a baſon made of very large ſtones, by which deſcription we might imagine it to be a very handſome and convenient dipping-place. It is ſtrange, that when travellers take upon them to deſcribe a place they cannot do it to purpoſe.

[u] Idem ibid. [x] Idem ibid. [y] Idem ibid.

(X) We know of no traveller, but our author, that takes notice of this; the reſt ſpeak of it as compleatly a deſert or wilderneſs. Radziville (32) takes notice of nothing here in the vegetable way, except a few ſmall tufts of poor buſhes.

(Y) Theſe trees the friars aver to be the very ſame that yielded ſuſtenance to the Baptiſt; and the popiſh pilgrims, who dare not be wiſer than their blind guides, gather the fruit of them, and carry it off with great devotion (33). The thing being ſo, it is impoſſible we ſhould doubt our author of ſaying more than he ſaw or heard, we wonder there ſhould be ſuch a ſilence as there is with the other pilgrims of note, concerning theſe extraordinary trees. Prince Radziville (34) is at a loſs to know how he ſubſiſted here, ſo far was he, ſeemingly, from hearing of, or ſeeing theſe locuſt-trees. Poſſibly it may be a new device.

(31) Voy. au Lev. vol iv. p. 207. in 4*to.* (32) Peregr. Jeroſol. p. 89. (33) Maundr. ubi ſupr. (34) Ubi ſupra.

David

David ſlew the giant; as alſo Modin, on a high hill the burying-place of the Maccabees [y].---- Between the convent of St. John and Jeruſalem in the convent of the holy croſs, as by the Greeks it is called, they ſhew you the earth which nouriſhed the root that bare the tree, which yielded the timber that made the croſs. The hole in the earth where ſtood this tree is ſhewn under the high altar; and marvelouſly revered by the pilgrims, who are ſuch very ſtocks as to fall down and worſhip it [z].----- About a furlong from the church of the holy ſepulchre, they ſhew, the place where ſtood the houſe of Zebedee. The Grecks, who have poſſeſſion here, pretend that Zebedee, being a fiſherman, was wont to bring fiſh from Joppa hither, and yend it at this place. --- A little farther on is the place where antiently, as they ſay, ſtood the iron gate which opened to Peter of its own accord [a].---- In Jeruſalem alſo they point out the very place where, as they ſay, our Lord appeared to the three Maries, as the friars there will have it, though the evangeliſt Matthew records but one [b]. ---- In the Armenian church, in this ſame city, built upon that part of mount Sion within the walls, they ſhew the place where St. James, the brother of St. John, was beheaded; and in a ſmall chapel on the north ſide of it the very ſpot of his decollation [c]. ---- In the ſame church they ſhew three large rough ſtones, held in great veneration, for that one of them was the very ſtone on which Moſes caſt the two tables, when violently moved with indignation at the idolatry of the Iſraelites; and the other two, for that they were brought, the one from the place of Chriſt's baptiſm, the other from the place of his transfiguration [d]. ---- A little farther they ſhew the place where ſtood the houſe of Annas the high-prieſt [e].---- A little without Sion-gate, under the altar of a ſmall chapel belonging to the Armenians, they boaſt of the very ſtone that was laid to ſecure the door of our Saviour's ſepulchre (Z) [f]. ---- In the court of the chapel, built where Annas's [y] Idem ibid. [z] Idem ibid. pag, 94. RADZIV. Pereg. Jeroſol. pag. 90. LE BRUYN, &c. [a] MAUND. ubi ſup. pag. 98. [b] Idem ibid. [c] Idem ibid. RADZIV. &c. [d] MAUND. ubi ſup. pag. 99. [e] Idem ibid. [f] Idem ibid.

(Z) "It was a long time kept in the church of the ſepulchre; "but the Armenians, not many years ſince, ſtole it from thence "by ſtratagem, and conveyed it to this place. ——— It is two "yards and a quarter long, high one yard, and broad as much,—

Annas's houſe is ſaid to have ſtood, they have an olive-tree, of which they have a tradition (A), that Chriſt was for ſome time chained to it, by the order of Annas, to prevent his eſcaping [g]. ---- Near a little cell belonging to a chapel, built where ſtood the houſe of Caiaphas, which they will have to have been the priſon where Chriſt was kept till the next morning, they point out the place where Peter irreſolutely denied his maſter [h] (B). --- Not much farther, without the city gate, near the church of the Cœnaculum, is a well which is ſaid to mark out the place where the apoſtles divided from each other, in order to go every man to his charge [i]. ---- On the weſt of the valley of Hinnom, is the place cal-

[g] Idem ibid. [h] Idem ibid. p. 100. [i] Idem ibid.

" plaſtered all over except in five or ſix little places, where it is " left bare to receive the immediate kiſſes and other devotions of " pilgrims (35)".

(A) A tradition it ſeems, which varies a little. This tree, which by our traveller, ſtands in the court before what was the houſe of Annas, is, by prince Radzi-ville (36), removed to the houſe of Caiaphas; and this he not only does, but alſo forgets the ſtory of Chriſt's having been chained to it. But Thevenot and Le Bruyn continue the tree in its firſt place, the former (37) ſaying, that he was bound to it, till he received ſentence; the other (38), that here he was made faſt, when Malchus gave him the buffet; for Malchus they will certainly have this anonymous perſon to have been.

(B) Travellers all agree, that this happened at what they ſhew for the ſpot where Caiaphas's houſe once ſtood; but they differ a little in the deſcription of the ſpot. Prince Radziville (39) tells us, there is an olive-tree on the ſuppoſed ſpot; Thevenot changes it for an orange-tree (40): Le Bruyn (41) mentions no tree at all. There is alſo ſome variation as to where the cock was perched when he crowed; prince Radziville (42) talks of both an olive and an orange-tree in this ſame court, and ſays, the cock crowed upon the latter: Thevenot (43) writes, that ſome ſeven or eight ſteps from the orange-tree, he mentions, is the place of the pillar where the cock crew: Le Bruyn (44) tells us, they ſhew a piece of the pedeſtal of the pillar, whereon the cock crew twice; and that in memory thereof the cock himſelf is repreſented in marble upon the wall.

(35) Maund. ubi ſup pag. 100. (36) Pereg. Jeroſol pag. 59. (37) Voy. au Lev. par. 1. lib. ii. c. 49 (38) Voy. au Lev. Vol. iv. pag. 177. in 4to. (39) Ubi ſup. (40) Ubi ſup. (41) Ubi ſup. (42) Ubi ſup. (43) Ubi ſup. (44) Ubi ſup.

led

led antiently the Potters-field, but ſince the field of blood, and for the particular veneration it has obtained among Chriſtians, the Campo Sancto: a ſmall ſpot of ground, not above thirty yards long and half as much in breadth [k], with earth of ſo extraordinary a nature, that if a dead body be but laid upon it only, and not at all covered, it will conſume it away to the bare bones, within leſs than twenty four hours, ſay ſome [l], or within eight and forty according to others [m] (C); but the ſuddenneſs of this effect is diſputed (D). ---- In the valley of Jehoſhaphat is, 1. The well of Nehemiah, ſo called, becauſe it is reputed to be the ſame place whence that reſtorer of Iſrael ſo miraculouſly recovered the fire of the altar, after the Babyloniſh captivity, as mentioned in the firſt chapter of the ſecond book of the Maccabees [n]. 2. A little higher, on the left hand in this ſame valley, is a tree, ſuppoſed to mark out the place where the prophet Iſaiah was ſawn aſunder [o]. 3. About a hundred paces higher on the ſame ſide, is the pool of [k] Idem ibid. p. 101. [l] RADZIV. Pereg. Jeroſol. pag. 64. [m] SANDYS, pag. 187. [n] MAUND. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. pag. 102. [o] Idem ibid.

(C) Prince Radziville (45) profeſſes to have been an eye-witneſs, that this earth performs the effect within twenty-four hours; and Sandys (46) verily believes, it will perform what is ſaid of it in eight and forty hours. A greedy grave he (47) calls it, and great enough to devour the dead of a whole nation. It is now the great ſepulchre of the Armenians, who, for a ſmall gratuity, admit the dead bodies of other nations; ſo that it may be ſtill called a place of burial for ſtrangers. It is walled in, that the bones of the chriſtians may not be abuſed by the Turks (48); and the one half of it is taken up by a building in the nature of a charnel-houſe, ſquare, and twelve yards high, with little open domes at top, convenient to let down the dead bodies. This charnel-houſe is the proper place of burial (49).

(D) Maundrell (50) tells us, the earth, here is as he expreſſes himſelf, of a chalky ſubſtance; and that, looking down through the holes formerly mentioned, he could ſee many bodies under ſeveral degrees of decay; and that thence he conjectured, and ſeemingly with good reaſon, that this grave does not make the very quick diſpatch commonly reported.

(45) Pereg. Jeroſol pag. 64 (46) Travels, pag. 187. (47) Ibid. (48) Radziv. ubi ſup. (49) Maund. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. pag. 101. Vide etiam Sandys, ubi ſup. (50) Ubi ſup.

Silvam

Siloam [p] (E). 4. About a furlong farther on the same side is a fountain called after the blessed virgin; because as reported, she was wont to resort to this water; but at what time, and upon what occasions, is not agreed [q] (F). 5. Over against this fountain, on the other side of the valley, is the place called Siloe, where Solomon is said to have kept his strange wives; and above it a hill, which they will have to have been the Mountain of Offence; because Solomon there built his high-places [r]. 6. On the same side, and not far from Siloe, they shew another Aceldama, or field of blood; so called, because here, as they pretend, Judas, by the just judgment of GOD, met with his compounded death [s]. ---- In the side of the ascent from the valley of Jehoshaphat to the city of Jerusalem they shew a broad stone, on which they will have it the protomartyr St. Stephen was stoned to death; and not far from thence a grott, where, they tell you, the outragious zealots threw his body, after they had sated their cruel rage

[p] Idem ibid. [q] Idem ibid. [r] Idem ibid. [s] Idem ibid.

(E) From this pool all the gardens in the valley of Jehshoaphat are said (51) to be abundantly watered. The Turks, it seems, hold this water to be sacred, and a number of them, almost every day, wash themselves therein. For though by the ablution of any water they fancy themselves to be cleansed from sin, they particularly expect it here. It has a descent to it by steps (52); and contains not above half an acre of ground (53). How much soever its water may be valued, it seems to be sometimes wanted; for we have a witness (54), who saw it dry in the bottom.

(F) As there is nothing too ridiculous to be expected in the traditionary stories here, it need not be wondered, that they are silly enough to say, that here the virgin was wont to wash her clouts (55). Sandys (56) is ashamed to account for the name this spring is honoured with; but Le Bruyn (57) has a cleanlier reason than is assigned above, and only says, that the same holy person was here wont to draw water, as she returned from mount Sion. It was also called the fountain of the dragon (58); and the descent to it is pleasant and commodious by several steps (59). It is replenished with pleasant waters (60), which are said to be an immediate cure for fevers, if either bathed in or drank of (61).

(51) Radziv. Pereg. Jerosol. pag. 63, 64. (52) Vide Idem ibid p. 64. (53) Sandys, p. 188. (54) Idem ibid. (55) Radziv. ubi sup. p. 63. Theveh. par. 1 lib. ii. c. 49. (56) In his Trav. pag 188. (57) Voy. au. Lev. vol. iv. p. 184. in 4to. (58) Radziv ubi sup. (59) Le Bruyn. ubi sup. (60) Sandys, ubi sup. (61) Theven. ubi sup.

upon

upon him [t] (G). ---- Between the foot of mount Olivet and the brook Cedron they ſhew you Gethſemane, an even plat of ground, not above fifty ſeven yards ſquare, of great fame for its olive-trees, which are ſaid to be the very ſame which ſtood here in the days of our SAVIOUR [u] (H). ---- At the upper end of this garden is a flat naked ledge of rock, reputed to be the place on which the apoſtles, Peter, James, and John, fell aſleep during the agony of our Lord; and a few paces thence a grotto, where, they ſay, Chriſt underwent that bitter part of his paſſion [x]. - - - - About eight paces from the place where the three apoſtles ſlept, they ſhew a ſmall ſhred of ground, twelve yards long and one broad, ſuppoſed to be the very path on which the traitor Judas walked up to Chriſt, ſaying, hail maſter and kiſſed him [y] (I). - - - - - Not far from the gate of St. Stephen they ſhew the palace of Pilate, [t] MAUND. ubi. ſup. [u] Idem ibid. [x] Idem ibid. p. 106.

[y] Idem ibid.

(G) The ſtones hereabouts have a red ruſt upon them, which, they ſay, gives teſtimony of the bloodſhed of this holy perſon (62).

(H) In virtue of this tradition the olives, and olive-ſtones, and oil, here produced, became an excellent commodity in Spain (63). But that theſe trees cannot be any thing like ſo antient as pretended, is evident by the repeated teſtimony of Joſephus (64), that Titus, when he beſieged Jeruſalem, felled all the trees within about an hundred furlongs of that city; and that, in conſequence of this, the ſoldiers were obliged to go to that diſtance for timber, to make their mounts, when they aſſaulted the temple. But after all, they have ſeemingly more to ſay for themſelves, in ſupport of what they give out concerning theſe olive-trees, than of many other important matters they are very confident of; for the olives here being of an extraordinary ſize, they, according to the philoſophy of theſe parts, conclude the trees that produce them muſt be of an extraordinary age (65).

(I) Our author (66) obſerves, that this narrow path is ſeparated by a wall from the midſt of the garden, as a terra damnata; "a "work the more remarkable, ſays he, as being done by the Turks, "who, as well as the Chriſtians, deteſt the very ground on which "was acted ſuch an infamous treachery."

(62) Vide Sandys, ubi ſup. 191. (63) Maund. ubi ſup. p. 107. (64) De Bell. Judaic. lib. vii c. 15. (65) Vide Le Bruyn, Voy. au Lev. vol. iv. p. 191, in 4to. (66) Maund. ubi ſup p. 106.

or

or place rather where it ſtood [a] (K). - - - - From this ſpot you have a fair proſpect of the place where the temple ſtood, on the top of mount Moriah [z]. - - - - - Coming out from the houſe, pretended to have been Pilate's, is a deſcent, where was antiently the ſcala ſancta [b]. - - - - - From this ſame houſe they carry you along the Dolorous Way, as it is called; in which walk they firſt ſhew the place where Pilate brought forth our Lord to preſent him to the people, with that myſtic ſaying, behold the Man! Secondly, where Chriſt fainted thrice under the weight of the croſs. Thirdly, Where the bleſſed virgin ſwooned away at ſo tragical a ſpectacle. Fourthly, Where St. Veronica preſented to him the handkerchief to wipe his bleeding brows. And, Fifthly, where the ſoldiers compelled Simon the Cyrenean to bear his croſs [c]. - - - At Na-

[z] Idem ibid [a] Idem ibid. [b] Idem ibid. [c] Idem ibid. p. 107.

(K) Prince Radziville (67) talks of the palace of Pilate itſelf as ſtill ſtanding, or at leaſt in his days, and particularly takes notice of a court belonging to it, paved with marble, which he ſuppoſes to be the very ſame St. John (68) calls the pavement; and adds, that it had on each hand a portico ſupported by porphyry columns, where that Roman governor was wont to ſit in judgment, and obſerves, it was then the reſidence of the Turkiſh chief. Sandys (69) alſo makes mention of this ſame palace, which he will have to have been the ſame: but according to him the chief remains of it are, at the weſt corner, a pair of ſtairs, which led to Pilate's place of judgment; an antient arch that ſupports a ruined gallery; and in the eaſt ſide a two-arched window, where, as they ſay, Pilate preſented Chriſt to the people. Thevenot (70) adds, that under this two-arched window there is inſcribed, Tolle, tolle, crucifige eum. Le Bruyn (71) delivers himſelf exactly to the ſame purpoſe, and they all agree the place in their time to have been the reſidence of the Turkiſh baſha, and the place of judgment for the city. But it is poſſible they may have been miſled, and confounded the palace of Herod with that of Pilate juſt by it; for Maundrell (72) takes notice of little more than an ordinary Turkiſh houſe on the ſpot, when he was there. He adds (73), that, among other remarkables in this pretended houſe, they ſhew a room, where, they ſay, our Saviour was ſcourged; but that, when he was there, it was no better than a weaver's ſhop. All our travellers agree, that from this houſe you have the fulleſt and moſt commodious proſpect of the ground whereon ſtood antiently the temple.

(67) Peregr Jeroſol. p. 91. (68) c. xix. ver. 13. (69) In his Trav. p. 193. (70) Voy. au Lev. par. I. lib ii. c. 37. (71) Voy. au Lev. vol. II. p. 180. in 4*to.* (72) Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. p 106. (73) Ubi ſup. p. 107.

zareth they ſhew the place of the Annunciation [d]; to be reſumed hereafter. - - - - - Not far from mount Hermon appears the mount of Beatitudes, where our Saviour delivered his ſermon recorded in Matthew [e]. - - - - Laſtly, in this ſame neighbourhood they ſhew the mount of Precipitation as they call it, or the brow of the hill, from whence the Nazarites would have thrown down Chriſt, incenſed at the ſermon he preached to them recorded by Luke [f]. Theſe, with thoſe we have occaſionally mentioned before in the courſe of this ſection, are the more remarkable natural curioſities of this country; we now proceed to the artificial, as well as we can diſtinguiſh or ſeparate them.

Artificial rarities.

WORTHY of notice are the ruins of Ptolemais, or St. John d'Acre, or Acra, from the Hebrew name Accho. Theſe ruins look as if the city had conſiſted of caſtles only, without the intermixture of private dwellings; it had two walls well fortified with bulwarks and towers, and each wall had a ditch lined with ſtone, and many ſecret poſterns beneath; but now the huge walls and arches, turned topſy turvy, lie like rocks upon the foundation [g]. In the fields without theſe once extraordinary works, are ſeen ſcattered up and down great balls of ſtone, of at leaſt thirteen or fourteen inches diameter, part of the ammunition uſed in battering the city, the uſe of guns being then unknown [h]. Of the ruins within theſe broken walls, which, by ſome tokens of more than ordinary magnificence and ſtrength, appear above the reſt, are, 1. The cathedral dedicated to St. Andrew, not far from the ſea-ſide, and high and conſpicuous above the reſt. 2. The church of St. John, the titular ſaint of this city. 3. The convent of the knights hoſpitallers, whoſe remaining walls bear ſufficient teſtimony of its former ſtrength. 4. The palace of the grand maſter of the order, ſtill exhibiting a large and noble ſtaircaſe, and part of a church, ſtill remaining in it. 5. Some remains of a large church formerly belonging to a nunnery [i]. Some pretend to farther and more important diſcoveries of particular places (L): but all we ſhall farther obſerve is, that there are

[d] Idem ibid. p. 112. [e] Idem ibid. p. 115. [f] Idem ibid. p. 116. [g] SANDYS, l. iii. p. 204. [h] MAUND. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. p. 54. [i] Idem ibid.

(L) Thevenot (74) reckons, there are the remains of about thirty churches ſtill to be ſeen, and particularly of one above the reſt, where the knights had a treaſure, which they diſtinguiſhed with a

(74) Voy. au Lev. part I. lib. 2. c. §3.

are here ruins of a palace which had our king Richard for founder, as is not only acknowledged and reported, but confirmed also by the paſſant lion [k]. - - - - Sebaſta, or the antient Samaria, which, though now as it were wholly obliterated, and turned into garden-ground, yet retains ſome token of what it formerly has been; for on the north ſide of it is a large ſquare piazza, incompaſſed with pillars, and on the eaſt ſome poor remains of an old church, ſaid to have been built by the empreſs Helena, over the place where St. John the Baptiſt was both impriſoned and beheaded [l] (M). - - - - Juſt without the city of Naploſa, in the narrow valley between mount Gerizim and Ebal, is a ſmall moſque, called by the name of Joſeph's ſepulchre, it being a tradition current in theſe parts, that the bones of that patriarch were here interred, after their tranſportation out of Egypt [m]. - - - About the third part of an hour from the ſame town of Naploſa, they ſhew Jacob's well, not ſo famous for its author, as memorable for the conference our Saviour here had with the woman of Samaria (N). This well is at preſent covered with an old ſtone vault, into which being let down through a very ſtrait hole, the mouth of the well itſelf is diſcovered. It is hollowed out of the firm rock, is about three yards in diameter, and thirty five in depth, five of which our traveller [n] found full of water, and thereby confutes a ſuperſtitious ſtory that has piece of marble, and which, ſays he, not many years ago was brought away in a ſhip, which came for that end to Acra, though pretending only to buy goods. Sandys (75) relates, that this treaſure was in a vault of the ſame church, which, being known to the ſucceſſors of theſe knights, was, about forty years before his time, fetched away by the gallies of Malta, the inhabitants forſaking the town as ſoon as they landed. By Maundrell (76) it appears, that this ſame church was the cathedral itſelf of St. Andrew.

[k] SANDYS, ubi ſup. p. 205. [l] MAUND. ubi ſup. p. 59.
[m] Idem ibid. p. 62. [n] Idem ibid. p. 63.

(M) "In the body of this church you go down a ſtair-caſe, into "the very dungeon where that holy blood was ſhed." The Turks have this place, and over it have erected a ſmall moſque; into which they will admit a Chriſtian for a little piece of money (77).

(N) This well ſeems at preſent to have been too far from Samaria for women to come thither to draw water; but it is pretty evident to the curious obſerver, that the city extended farther this way formerly, than it does now (78).

(75) In his Trav. lib. iii. p. 205. (76) Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. p. 55. (77) Ibid. p. 59. (78) Ibid. p. 63.

taken

taken root among Chriſtians (O). ---- The next thing more remarkably obſervable is the ſtately and much frequented church of the holy ſepulchre in Jeruſalem. But as it may be needleſs to deſcribe it in words, when we have ſo many exact plans and draughts of it, we ſhall haſten to what it contains. 1, Mount Calvary, with the very individual hole where the croſs of our Lord was planted, and the very cleft (P) ſaid to have been cauſed by the earthquake at his paſſion [o]. 2. The ſtone of unction, or the very place where his body was anointed and prepared for burial [p]. 3. The ſepulchre where he was depoſited to the hour of his reſurrection [q] --- A little without that gate of Jeruſalem, called the Damaſcus-gate, they carry you to a large grot, which they pretend to have been ſome time the abode of Jeremiah: On the left ſide of it they even point at the prophet's bed, which is no more than a ſhelve from the rock, about eight foot from the ground; and not far from hence is the place where they ſay he wrote his Lamentations [r] (Q), --- Not far from hence are the famous grots, called the ſepulchres of the kings, but of what kings is uncertain (R); but that they were uſed as repoſitories

[o] Idem ibid. pag. 72. [p] Idem ibid. pag. 73. [q] Idem ibid. [r] Idem ibid. pag. 76.

(O) It has been idly reported, and as ſimply believed, that this well is dry all the year round, except on the anniverſary of the day our Saviour ſat on it; but then bubbles up with abundance of water (79).

(P) "This cleft, as it now appears, is about a ſpan wide, at its "upper part, and two deep, after which it cloſes: but it opens again "below, (as you may ſee in another chapel contiguous to the ſide "of Calvary) and runs down to an unknown depth in the earth. "That this rent was made by the earthquake, that happened at "our Lord's paſſion, there is only tradition to prove: but that it "is a natural and genuine breach, and not counterfeited by any "art, the ſenſe of every one that ſees it may convince him; for "the ſides of it ſit like two tallies to each other; and yet it runs "in ſuch intricate windings as could not well be counterfeited by "art, nor arrived at by any inſtruments (80).

(Q) "This place is at preſent a college of Derviſes, and is held "in great veneration by the Turks and Jews, as well as the Chriſ- "tians (81)."

(R) Prince Radziville roundly pronounces the kings of Judah to have been interred here; imagining, they were formerly within pofitories of the dead, appears fufficiently by fome coffins at prefent there, and which we fhall take notice of in the fequel of this defcription. The whole is a work of fuch vaft labour and expence, that it may fairly be pronounced a royal work, being all hewn out of the natural rock, and confifting of an entrance made through the rock, a court of about forty paces fquare, hollowed out of the fame, on the fouth fide of which is a portico, nine paces long and four broad, wrought alfo out of the fame. This portico has a kind of architrave in front, once adorned with fculpture of fruits and flowers, but now defaced; and on the left of this portico you defcend towards the fepulchres. Firft you come into a large room about feven or eight yards fquare, exactly and moft exquifitely formed, fo that it may be called a fine chamber, hollowed out of one folid piece of marble. From this you may pafs into fix rooms more, one within another, and all of the fame fabric with the firft; but the two innermoft are deeper than the reft, having a fecond defcent of about fix or feven fteps into them. In every one of thefe rooms, the firft excepted, are ftone coffins placed in niches in the fides of the chambers; once covered with handfome lids and carved with garlands; but now moft of them (S) are broken to pieces. But what moft of all the wall of the city, tho' now without it (82). Other travellers (83) give into the fame feeming miftake; while Maundrell (84), confidering more maturely of the thing, concludes it certain, that none of the kings of Judah, or Ifrael, were here intombed, unlefs, perhaps, Hezekiah, and is not certain, that thefe may not be the fepulchres of the fons of David, mentioned in fcripture (85).

(79) Ibid. (80) Maundr. pag. 73. (81) Ibid. pag. 76.

(S) Maundrell (86), by this, feems to infinuate, that feveral of thefe coffins were ftill entire, and Radziville (87) obferves, that he alfo faw bones remaining in feveral of them; fo that, whether broken or entire, one would naturally imagine there was a number; while Le Bruyn (88) takes notice of no more than three, the one broken, and the other two entire. Radziville (89) computes, that about forty odd might have been here conveniently depofited in the cells or niches in the fides of thefe chambers, each containing two coffins. Le Bruyn (90) computes that about fifty might have been here received in the fame manner; but as, in fuch obfcure and damp places, people are a little uneafy, and, however great their curiofity

(82) Pereg. Jerof. p. 104. (83) Vide Le Bruyn, Theven. &c (84) Journ. from Alep. to Jeruf. pag. 76. (85) 2 Chron. xxxii. 33. (86) Ub. fup. pag. 77. (87) Ub. fup. (88) Voy. au Lev. vol. ii. page 195. in 4*to* (89) Ubi fup. (90) Ubi fup.

all ſurpriſes the obſerver is the artifice of the doors of theſe chambers, all cut out of the ſame rock, and turning upon hinges of the ſame ſtone with the reſt [r]; this, which, at firſt, appears ſo very puzzling to underſtand (T), has been, ſeemingly, well explained of late (U), and the thing appears no longer a myſtery, though otherwiſe very extraordinary in itſelf [t]. --- Returning from hence to the city of Jeruſalem, not far from Herod's gate, is ſhewn a grotto full of filthy mire and water, which paſſes for the dungeon in which Jeremiah was kept by Zedekiah [u]. --- Going out of St. Stephen's gate to Bethany, they, at the entrance into that village, point at an old ruin, which they call Lazarus's caſtle, and ſuppoſe to have been the habitation of that favourite of Chriſt; and at the bottom of a ſmall deſcent, not far from the caſtle, is ſhewn the ſepulchre where he was raiſed from the dead [x] (X). --- About a bow-ſhot from hence they point at Mary Magdalen's habitation [y]. --- Within about a furlong of the river Jordan, is an old ruined church and convent, dedicated to St. John, who is ſuppoſed here, or hereabouts, to have bapcurioſity may be, ſomewhat in a hurry to get out, we are not to expect but travellers will, in ſuch caſes, vary a little, if not a great deal, from each other.

[r] Vide RADZIV. LE BRUYN, MAUND. &c. [t] MAUND. pag. 76. [u] Idem ibid. p. 78. [x] MAUND. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. page. 79. [y] Idem ibid.

(T) Travellers are quite loſt in admiration at it, and particularly Le Bruyn (*), who may have had ſome judgment in things of this nature, is aſtoniſhed, that they ſhould be done out of one and the ſame piece of hard rock, and eſpecially by lamp-light, for no other was here to be had.

(U) Maundrell (91) took notice, that the only door left hanging did not touch its lintel by at leaſt two inches, and believes it might have been eaſily lifted up and unhinged; and that the doors which had been thrown down had their hinges at the upper end twice as long asthoſe at the bottom, by which the whole artifice very plainly diſcovers itſelf.

(X) In this ſepulchre you deſcend by twenty five ſteep ſtairs, which letting you down into a ſmall ſquare room, you thence creep down into a leſſer room, about a yard and a half deeper, in which the body is ſaid to have been laid. This place is in great veneration with the Turks, who uſe it as an oratory, and demand a ſmall caphar of ſuch Chriſtians as deſire to ſee it (92).

(*) Ubi ſup (91) Ubi ſup. pag. 78. (92) Maund, Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. pag. 97.

tized

tized our Lord [z]. --- On the road between Bethlehem and Jeruſalem, they ſtill ſhew, 1. The houſe of Simeon. 2. The impreſs of Elias's body. 3. The well where the ſtar appeared to the eaſtern magi. 4. Rachel's tomb [a]. ---- At Bethlehem they ſhew the very place of our Saviour's nativity (Y); the very manger in which he was laid (Z); the chapel of Joſeph his ſuppoſed father; the ſchool of St. Jerom, and other ſuch places [b]. --- In the neighbourhood of this place are pools and gardens, ſaid to have been the contrivance and delight of king Solomon (A); the pools are three in a row, one above another, ſo diſpoſed, that the water may from the uppermoſt deſcend into the ſecond, and from the ſecond into the third. They are quadrangular, and all of the ſame breadth, being about ninety paces; but in length they differ, the firſt being about one hundred and ſixty paces long, the ſecond two hundred, and the third two hundred and twenty; all lined with wall, and plaſtered, and containing a great depth of water. At the diſtance of about one hundred and ſixty paces is the ſpring whence they derive their waters, which the friars here will have to have been the Sealed Foun-

[z] Idem ibid. pag. 81. [a] Idem ibid. pag. 87. [b] Idem ibid.

(Y) The church of the nativity, or manger, at Bethlehem is a moſt ſumptuous and elegant ſtructure, tho' unfortunately ſubject to the inſults of the infidels of thoſe parts (93). The ſpot where Chriſt is ſuppoſed to have been born, is marked out by a marble-ſlab; and over it, upon the altar, is another, with this inſcription, HIC DE VIRGINE MARIA JESUS CHRISTUS NASCI DIGNATUS EST (94). But to enter into the particulars and coſtly decorations of this ſanctuary, and the church, and other parts it belongs to, would by far exceed our length.

(Z) It is cut out of the rock (95), about two foot from the floor; but now flagged with white marble, as well as the rock that roofs it (96).

(A) He is ſuppoſed to allude to thoſe works, where (97) among the other inſtances of his magnificence, he reckons up his gardens, vineyards, and pools (98).

(93) Vide Radziv. Le Bruyn, Theven. &c. (94) Vide Radziv. (95) Idem, pag. 84. (96) Sandys, Trav. pag. 177. (97) Eccl. ii. 5. 6. (98) Maundr. ubi ſup. p. 38.

tain

tain † (B). The gardens may be ſaid to be now no more, and the ſpot at preſent ſeems to be but little adapted to ſuch a uſe [c] (C). ——— On the weſt, as the former on the ſouth ſide of Bethlehem, they ſhew you the well David ſo paſſionately thirſted after *; but it is rather a mere ciſtern ſupplied with rain, and, otherwiſe, of no particular eſtimation. But, about two furlongs from thence, you behold the remains of an old aqueduct, which antiently conveyed water from Solomon's pools to Jeruſalem, and which, very much to the honour of Solomon, is reckoned to be a work of his. It goes along the ſurface of the ground, and conſiſts of large ſtones (D) perforated and let into each other, after the manner of pipes; and, for the greater ſecurity, covered with a courſe of ſmaller ſtones, firmly cemented together with a very ſtrong mortar; a work which formerly extended five or ſix leagues, and, ſeemingly, deſigned for eternity; though now ſo deſtroyed by violent hands (E), that there is only a fragment of it here and there re-

† Cant. iv. 12. [c] Idem ibid. p. 88. * 2 Sam. xxiii. 15.

(B) "In confirmation of this opinion, they pretend a tradition, "that king Solomon ſhut up theſe ſprings, and kept the door of them "ſealed with his ſignet; to the end that he might preſerve the "waters for his own drinking, in their natural freſhneſs and pu-"rity." Our author (99) adds, it was not difficult thus to ſecure them, they riſing under ground, and having no avenue to them, but by a little hole like the mouth of a narrow well. The whole as deſcribed by travellers, muſt have been a ſtupendous work.

(C) The ſoil is rocky, and ſo bad, that our author (100) thinks Solomon diſplayed his wealth more than his wiſdom, if he made choice of it for the purpoſe ſuppoſed; tho' after all, if it is ſo very plain, that here was his ſealed fountain (1), it is not unlikely, that here alſo was his incloſed garden (2). The ſituation ſeems to correſpond with this deſcription, the ſpot being a rocky valley, deſcending from the pools, and incloſed on each hand by high mountains (3).

(D) Our author (4) leaves blanks for the dimenſions of theſe ſtones, and we know of none that has been curious enough to ſupply the defect; but that they are very conſiderable appears by his manner of expreſſing himſelf.

(E) The blame is, in this caſe, thrown upon the Arabs, who, for the ſake of an immediate and ready ſupply of water (5), make no ſcruple to tear up all before them, and, by degrees, entirely to demoliſh this ſolid and magnificent work.

(99) Idem ibid. p. 89. (100) Idem ibid. (1) Cantic. ubi ſup. (2) Ibidem. (3) Maund. ubi ſup. (4) Idem ibid. pag. 90. (5) Le Bruyn, ubi ſup. pag. 216.

maining [d].-----In Bethlehem they ſhew a grot, cut out of a chalky rock, where they pretend the bleſſed virgin concealed herſelf and her child, to avoid the murderous fury of Herod, ſome time before ſhe fled into Egypt; but the whiteneſs of this place they will have to have been not natural, but miraculous [e] (F).----Between Bethlehem and Jeruſalem, in what is ſometimes called the Deſert of St. John, is a convent called after the name of that Saint, ſuppoſed to ſtand on the ſpot where he was born. This convent has, of very late years, been rebuilt from the ground; and is, at preſent, a large ſquare building, uniform and neat all over, but chiefly remarkable for its church conſiſting of three iſles, and, in the midſt, an handſome cupola, and under that a moſaic pavement, equal to, if not ſurpaſſing, the fineſt works of the antients in that kind. At the upper end of the north iſle, by a deſcent of ſeven ſteps, you deſcend to a very ſplendid altar, erected, as they ſay, over the very place where the Baptiſt was born [f].----About three furlongs diſtant from this convent, they point at what they call the houſe of Elizabeth, the Baptiſt's mother (G); formerly a [d] Maund. ibid. pag. 90. [e] Idem ibid. pag. 91. [f] Idem ibid. p. 92.

(F) They ſay, the ſtone of this grot is ſo white and chalky, becauſe of ſome milk which fell from the virgin, while ſhe was giving ſuck to the holy infant, which converted the colour of the native rock. And ſo poſſeſſed are they here with this chimerical notion, as to imagine, the chalk of this place has a miraculous virtue of increaſing the milk of women. And for this ſupernatural property is the ſame highly valued, as well by Arabs and Turks, as by Chriſtians (6). This notion having taken ſuch root with all ranks, and ſects, lumps of this chalk are carried to Jeruſalem, and there impreſſed with the ſeal of the city, to be thence ſent into Europe (7). Our author adds, that he met with a phyſician at Venice ſimple enough to aſk him for ſome of it for a lady, a patient of his, who was defective in her milk.

(G) " If you chance to aſk how it came to paſs that Elizabeth " lived in one houſe, when ſhe was big with the Baptiſt, and in " another, when ſhe brought him forth? the anſwer you are like " to receive is, that the former was her country, the latter her " city habitation; and that it is no wonder for the wife of one of " the prieſts of better rank [ſuch as ſhe was, Luke i. 5] to be " provided with ſuch variety (8).

(6) Maund. ubi ſup. pag. 91. (7) Le Bruyn, ubi ſup. pag. 221.
(8) Maund. ubi ſup. pag. 93.

convent

convent, though now an heap of ruins, and only remarkable for a grotto, in which, they tell you, the bleſſed virgin ſaluted Eliſabeth, and pronounced her Magnificat [g].------At the diſtance of about three quarters of an hour from the convent of St. John, in the way to Jeruſalem, is a convent belonging to the Greeks, and called the convent of the Holy Croſs, a neat ſtructure, and pleaſantly ſituated; but chiefly to be taken notice of, as they pretend it to ſtand over the very ſpot where grew the tree that ſupplied the timber that made the croſs [h].-----In Jeruſalem, cloſe by the church of the holy ſepulchre, is what they ſhew for the priſon of St. Peter. It is a priſon ſtill [i].-----About a furlong from hence, is a ſmall church, as they ſay, built over the houſe of St. Mark. It is in the poſſeſſion of the Syrians, who venture to ſhew you the very windows at which Rhoda looked out, while Peter knocked at the door; and in this ſame church they let you ſee a folio manuſcript of the New Teſtament in Syriac, which, if they are to be believed, is now about nine hundred years old; and a ſtill greater curioſity, meaning a little ſtone font, uſed by the apoſtles themſelves in baptizing [k].----- Upon that part of mount Zion, which is within the walls of the city, ſtands a convent of Armenians, whoſe church is built over the very place where St. James, the brother of John, was beheaded. In this church are two altars of extraordinary ſplendor, decked with rich mitres, embroidered copes, croſſes both of ſilver and gold, crowns, chalices, and other church utenſils without number. In the midſt of this ſame church is a pulpit made of tortoiſe-ſhell, and mother of pearl, with a beautiful canopy or cupola over it of the ſame fabric; the tortoiſe-ſhell and mother of pearl being ſo very exquiſitely blended together, that the workmanſhip far exceeds the materials [l].----- A little without Zion gate is the church of Cœnaculum, where, they ſay, Chriſt inſtituted his laſt ſupper [m] (H).-----At a little diſtance from hence are the ruins of an houſe, where the Bleſſed Virgin is ſaid to have breathed her laſt: and a little farther down the hill, is a grot, where, they ſay, St. Peter ſo bitterly lamented his inconſtancy to his maſter [n].----- From a garden on the ſouth

[g] Idem. ibid. p. 93. [h] Idem ibid. pag. 94. [i] Idem ibid. pag. 98. [k] Idem ibid. [l] MAUND. ibid. pag. 99. [m] Idem ibid. pag. 100. [n] Idem ibid.

(H) "It is now a moſch, and not to be ſeen by Chriſtians" (9)."

(9) Idem ibid. pag. 100.

ſide of mount Moriah, they conduct you to ſeveral large vaults, annexed to the mountain on that ſide, and running, at leaſt, fifty yards under ground. They were built in two iſles, arched at top with huge firm ſtone, and ſuſtained by tall pillars, each of one ſingle ſtone, and two yards in diameter; conjectured to have been ſome ſubterraneous work made to enlarge the area of the temple [o] (I).---To theſe may be added the beautiful gate of the temple (K), which, ſays our author, can be only obſerved by a tranſient ſurvey, becauſe of the ſuperſtition of the Turks [p] (L).-----At the bottom of mount Sion is what they call Bathſheba's pool, ſuppoſed to be the ſame ſhe was in when David was ſo ſmitten with her beauty; but others ſuppoſe it to have been a ſmaller one in a garden juſt within Bethlehem gate, and both, perhaps, equally right [q].--At a ſmall diſtance from the firſt of theſe pools, a little below the Campo Sancto, or Field of Blood, as it was antiently

[o] Idem ibid. [p] Idem ibid. pag. 101. [q] Idem ibid.

(I) Our author (10) thinks Joſephus (11) ſeems to deſcribe ſome ſuch work as this, erected over the valley, on this ſide of the temple.

(K) Travellers are ſomewhat ſhort in their deſcriptions of this gate. Prince Radziville (12) repreſents it as lofty, great, and aſcended to by ſteps, which he went up, but dared not go over the threſhold, for fear of polluting the area of the temple of Solomon.

(L) Whatever may have been the milder temper of theſe people, when they permitted prince Radziville to aſcend the ſteps leading up to it, as in the note above, they are, ſince, it ſeems, grown to that height of jealouſy, that they will ſcarce admit of a ſtranger's turning his eyes towards it, as he paſſes by. The reaſon is, the Turks have a ſtrange notion of the more than ordinary ſanctity of the area or place within it, where ſtands a beautiful moſch, which they have erected, as they pretend, on the very ſpot where ſtood the temple of Solomon. They have a notion, that if a Chriſtian or any other, does but ſet foot in the area it ſtands upon, his prayers will have ſuch irreſiſtible prevalence with GOD, that nothing he could aſk of heaven could be refuſed him; and fondly imagine, that, as Chriſtians would not fail to pray, that the Turks might be driven out, and the Chriſtians enter again into poſſeſſion of the city, the prayer would be infallibly heard, and inevitably granted (13); ſo that they cannot bear to ſee a Chriſtian ſo much as offer to look that way.

(10) Idem ibid. Hieroſol. pag. 117. (11) Antiq lib. xv. c. ult. (12) Peregr. (13) Ibid. pag. 118.

called called, is an intricate cave or ſepulchre, conſiſting of ſeveral rooms one within another, in which the apoſtles are reported to have hid themſelves, when they forſook their maſter and fled. Its entrance diſcovers ſigns of its having been antiently adorned with paintings [r].-----In the valley of Jehoſhaphat are two noble antiquities, called the ſepulchre of Zachary (M), and the pillar of Abſalom (N), as alſo the ſepulchre of Jehoſhaphat [s].----- Near the corner of the city wall, on the oppoſite ſide of this valley, is a ſhort end of a pillar, jetting out of the wall; whereon the Turks fable, Mohammed ſhall ſit in judgment, at the laſt day, the whole world being gathered together in the valley below, to receive ſentence from his mouth [t] (O).----- A little farther northward is the gate

[r] Idem ibid. pag. 102. [s] Idem ibid. pag. 103. [t] Idem. ibid.

(M) Suppoſed to be the ſame who was ſlain between the temple and the altar. "All of the natural rock eighteen foot high, four "ſquare, and beautified with Doric columns of the ſame unſepa-"rated ſtone, ſuſtaining the corniſh, and topped like a pointed "diamond (14)."

(N) It is ſometimes called the tomb or ſepulchre of Abſalom (15); and it hath, indeed, rather the looks of ſuch, than of, what it is otherwiſe commonly called, a pillar. He was not buried there, but it is imagined, he erected, or rather had it wrought out of the ſtone in his life time, "to retain the memory of his name, in "that his iſſue male failed——yet entire, of a good fabric, riſing "in a lofty ſquare; below adorned with half columns, wrought "out of the ſide and corners, of the Doric form; and then "changing into a round, a good height higher doth grow to a "point, in faſhion of a bell; all framed of the growing ſtone "(16)." Travellers for the moſt part obſerve, that there is always a great and daily encreaſing heap of ſtones lying near it, thrown thereat, both by Jews and Turks, in deteſtation of Abſalom's rebellion againſt his father David.

(O) To this the Mohammedans add, it ſeems, a moſt ridiculous tradition; but firſt, we are told (17), they alſo report, that Mohammed is to ſit on the end of this pillar, to obſerve, whether our Lord judge the Chriſtians well or not; that, if he judge them righteouſly, Mohammed will give him his ſiſter in marriage, together with a great dowry; that, this done, Mohammed ſhall turn himſelf into a ſheep, and the Turks neſtle into his wool, like ſo many fleas; that, thus incumbered, he ſhall fly into the air, and gate of the temple; at present walled up; the Turks having a prophecy, that their destruction is to enter by that gate; the completion of which they endeavour to obviate by this means [u] (P).----In the bottom of this same valley is what they will have to have been the sepulchre of the Blessed Virgin; with a magnificent descent of forty seven stairs: on the right hand, as you go down, is the sepulchre of St. Anne, the mother, and on the left hand, that of St. Joseph, the husband of the Blessed Virgin [x].---- In the pretended house of Pilate, they shew the room where Christ was mocked with the ensigns of royalty, and buffetted by the soldiers [y].------- They pretend likewise still to shew the pool of Bethesda, one hundred and twenty paces long, forty broad, and at least eight deep, but void of water. At its west end it discovers some old arches, now dammed up [z] (Q).---- As also the pool of Gihon, about a quarter of a mile without Bethlehem gate, westward, a stately relique, one hundred and six paces long, sixty seven broad, lined with wall and plaister, and when our author was there, well stored with water [a]: ----- At Nazareth, besides the church which stands in a cave, supposed to be the place where the Virgin Mary received the angelical salutation (R), they shew the house of Joseph, shake himself very hard; that those who stick fast to him shall be happy, and those that fall from him shall be damned (18); so very ridiculous a story, that had we not met with it in so grave an author, we should never have taken notice of it; and, after all, we are afraid, this is a story fathered upon them; but what can't men be brought to believe!

(14) Sandys, pag. 189. (15) Radziv. Peregrin. Jeroſolym. pag 62. (16) Sandys, ubi ſup (17) Theven. Voy. au Lev. lib. ii. par. 1. c. 50.

[u] Idem. ibid. [x] Idem ibid. [y] Idem ibid. pag. 107.
[z] Idem ibid. [a] Idem ibid. pag. 108.

(P) All travellers this way take notice of this particular, and most add, that for the very same reason, and out of the same superstitious dread, they shut up all the other gates of the city, every Friday, 'till morning service is over, adding, that on that day the destined work of their expulsion is to be effected.

(Q) "These some will have to be the five porches, in which "lay that multitude of halt, lame, and blind, [John v.] But the "mischief is, instead of five, there are but three of them (19).

"(R) "Just at the section of the cross [of this church] are "erected two granate pillars, each two foot and one inch diame-"ter, and about three foot distance from each other,—— supposed "to stand on the very places, the one where the angel, the other, (18) Idem ibid. (19) Maund. ubi sup. pag. 107.

"where

Joſeph, the very ſame, as they tell you, where the Son of GOD lived for near thirty years, in ſubjection to man [b]. Theſe and other particulars, which we have occaſionally mentioned before, both in the text and the notes, are the more noted remarkables of this promiſed and deſtined land; whereon we leave the reader to make his own obſervations.

SECT. V.

The religion, government, laws, cuſtoms, learning, arts, and commerce of the Jews.

THE inſtitution of the Jewiſh religion and commonwealth is by Moſes attributed wholly to GOD; for which reaſon Joſephus makes no ſcruple to diſtinguiſh the latter from all the other governments in the world by the name of Theocracy [a], or a government under the immediate command and direction of God: and indeed, tho' this theocracy has often varied under Moſes, Joſhua, the judges, kings, and high-prieſts, and the divine authority differently interpoſed during thoſe revolutions, yet God was ſtill looked upon as the ſupreme monarch of the Iſraelites. We have ſeen, in a former ſection, that he was the ſole director of every momentous tranſaction under Moſes, and the dictator of the main body of his laws. Joſhua, though not honoured ſo far as to receive the divine commands from the mouth of God, yet always conſulted him by the Urim upon all emergencies. The judges were valiant and wiſe men, whom God made choice of to govern the people, and to deliver them, from time to time, from thoſe thraldoms which their frequent rebellions brought up-

The Jewiſh government was a theocracy.

[b] Idem ibid. pag. 113. [a] Cont. Apion. lib. ii.

" where the Bleſſed Virgin ſtood at the time of the Annunci" ation. Of theſe pillars, the innermoſt being that of the Bleſſed
" Virgin, has been broke away by the Turks, in expectation of " finding treaſure under it; ſo that eighteen inches length of it is " clean gone, between the pillar and its pedeſtal. Nevertheleſs it " remains erect; tho' by what art it is ſuſtained, I could not diſ" cern. It touches the roof above, and is, probably, hanged up" on that: unleſs you had rather take the friars account of it,
" viz. that it is ſupported by a miracle (20).

(20) Maund. Journ. from Alep. to Jeruſ. pag. 112.

on

on them. Accordingly, when Gideon had delivered them from the Midianites, and the people offered the government to him and his posterity, he modestly replied, that neither he nor his sons [b], but the Lord God, should rule over them. When, in process of time, their desire for a king was grown to such a height, that all Samuel's expostulations could not divert them from it; tho' he told them, that by so doing they rejected the Lord from ruling over them; God was pleased to nominate Saul, and, after him, David, to the regal dignity, and to make it hereditary in the posterity of the latter, reserving to himself, nevertheless, the power of altering the succession from the eldest to a younger branch, whenever he saw fit, as he actually did in his immediate successor Solomon. Nay, we may say, that God himself, foreseeing that they would be for a kingly government, did reserve to himself the choice, and prescribed some wholesome laws for the conduct of those who should enjoy the regal power [c]; and if, at any time, either the kings or the people refused to be directed by him, or disobeyed the laws which he had given them, they never failed of some severe punishment, to remind them of their dependence, and to recall them to their duty. The kings of Israel indeed, after their revolt from those of Judah, did reign more arbitrarily, but their endeavours to shake off the yoke of God proved a source of endless evils to the rebellious tribes; till at length, when neither his prophets exhortations and threatnings, nor his severe judgments, could bring them to obedience, he entirely cast them off, and condemned them to an endless captivity. Thus not only the kingdom of Judah, but even that of Israel, corrupt and idolatrous as it was, continued still under a Theocracy, until its dissolution. This is what will more evidently appear by the sequel of this history.

Their laws As for their laws, the greatest part of them were given to Moses on mount Sinai, and the rest at different times, and as occasion required, as we have seen in a former section †. Whether, therefore, we look upon them as the first body of laws that ever was compiled, whilst other nations had not so much as a name for it, as Josephus [d] has endeavoured to prove against his learned antagonist, from the writings of Homer, the most antient writer, in which the word Nomos [law] is not so much as once mentioned; or whether we ſuppoſe, with others [e], that the Egyptians and other nations had already laws of their own, and that Moſes was permitted by God, to model and improve his own by them, by altering or retaining what he liked or diſliked, concerning which we ſhall not repeat what has been already ſaid upon that head [f]; it is plain, that the greateſt part of them were dictated by God himſelf, and that the reſt received, if not the finiſhing hand, yet at leaſt their ſanction and approbation from him. And indeed, if we conſider, that they extended to all duties, caſes, and exigencies, whether moral, political, or ceremonial; that the moral were to be of eternal obligation; that the political were to endure as long as the Jewiſh polity; that great part of the ceremonial were typical of, and conſequently to laſt, at leaſt, till the coming of the Meſſiah; if we conſider further, that the prieſts and rulers were to be no more than the bare guardians of them, and that they were forbid, under pain of death and of the divine curſe, to add, diminiſh, or alter the leaſt part of them; it will be ſcarce credible, that Moſes would have given them ſuch a firm and durable ſanction, and backed it with the divine authority, had any but God been the author or confirmer of them.

[b] Judg. viii. 22, 23. [c] Vide Deut. xvii. 14. & seq.
† Vide Vol. II. p. 562. & seq. [d] Cont. Apion. ibid.

whether

HOWEVER, our deſign is not to dwell here upon the diſplay of their excellency above thoſe of all other nations, much leſs to confute all the empty cavils that have been raiſed againſt them from different quarters. That has been already done by Joſephus, Philo, Maimonides, Moſes Gerundenſis, and a great many more among the Jews, and by a greater number of learned divines, both of this and other churches, to whoſe province it belongs more particularly [g]. We might indeed, conveniently enough, have followed their diſtinction of them into moral, political, and ceremonial, and ſo have given the following body of them under thoſe three heads; eſpecially becauſe ſuch a diſtinction is generally thought to be hinted at by the three different terms which Moſes makes uſe of, laws or precepts, judgments, and ſtatutes [h]; but if we conſider, that Moſes makes uſe of ſome other terms likewiſe to expreſs them by, ſuch as ordinances, teſtimonies, and ſome others, in a very undeterminate ſenſe; that he calls the ſame laws ſometimes by one, and ſometimes by another of theſe names; and laſtly, that this

[e] SPENCER, de Leg. Ritual. Jud. paſſ. LE CLERC, &c al.
[f] Vide Vol. I. p. 432. [g] Vide inter al. GROT. SELDEN. PUFF. CUMBERL. GASTREL. L'ABBAD. CUN. BASNAG.
[h] BASNAG. Republ. Heb. lib. 1. cap. 18.

diſtinction

distinction will not hold with respect to very many of those laws which are partly moral, and partly ceremonial and political, and so vice versâ, we shall have little ground to think, that the Jewish law-giver designed to intimate any such distinction by those terms. Thus the law concerning the seventh day, or day of rest, is partly ceremonial and typical, and partly moral and political, as it was designed as well for the ease and rest of the labourers, servants, and slaves, as for that of their masters [i]. To this we may add here, that these laws did likewise differ with respect to their observance and obligation. Some of them, such as the making the tabernacle, altar, setting up the blessings and curses on mount Ebal and Gerizzim, were to be observed but once for all; others were to last no longer than the time of the Messiah, and others to the end of the world. When therefore they are commanded to observe all the laws and ordinances of Moses, some of which were of no force out of the land of Palestine, the Jews, in those cases, understand the precept, not of an actual observance, but of a constant remembrance and readiness to obey them, whenever they shall become in force again [k].

BESIDES, as we are writing the history of the Jews, it may perhaps be thought more proper, that we should give the body of their laws in the same order and method in which they themselves have collected and digested them out of the five books of Moses, in which they lie scattered, and which they call, by way of excellency, Ha-thorah, the law (A); but the truth is, they have jumbled them so together,

[i] Confer Exod. xx. cum Deut. v. 6. [k] Vide MUNST. pref. in lib. sequent.

(A) This תורה Thorah, or law, they divide, as we do, into five books, which they call by the first words of each: thus, they call Genesis בראשית Bereshith, that is, in the beginning; Exodus they call אלה שמות, Elle-shemoth, these are the names; Leviticus ויקרא, Vajikra, and he called; Numbers וידבר Vajdabber, and he spake; and Deuteronomy אלה הדברים, Elle-hadebarim, these are the words. These five books, or pentateuch, are again subdivided into fifty four פרשות parashoth, or sections, of unequal lengths, according to the subject; so that by joining two of the shortest together, they read the whole law once a year. The generality of the Jews attribute these divisions, and the constitution of reading them on the sabbath, to Moses, but the Christian gether, without order or method, and blended them ſo with thoſe which they pretend were delivered by God to Moſes, and conveyed by oral tradition (B), that our readers would be Chriſtians, with more probability, to Eſdras (1), from whom it was continued, even to the times of the apoſtles, if not longer (2). The firſt paraſhah reaches from Gen. i. 1. to Gen. vi. 9. and is called Bereſhith: the ſecond reaches to Gen. xii. 1. and is called נוח Noach, from Noah being the chief perſon mentioned in it; the third, which reaches to Gen. xviii. is called לך לך Lek Leka, go thy ways, from the command of God to Abraham to go out of his native land; and ſo of the reſt.

The Jews have always expreſſed a greater veneration for theſe five books, than for any of thoſe which they received afterwards tho' they look upon the latter as divinely inſpired: the reaſon they give for it is, that Moſes, being in many reſpects vaſtly ſuperior to all the other prophets and inſpired writers, a great preference ought to be given to his writings, upon that account; and they have been ſo ſuperſtitious in this reſpect, that they look upon it as a crime to lay any of the ſacred books upon thoſe of Moſes; whereas they think, the latter may be laid upon any of the others.

(B) To the written law the Jews do likewiſe add the oral one which, they pretend, was alſo given by God to Moſes, during his abode on mount Sinai. For firſt they think it abſurd to ſuppoſe, that he ſpent all that long interval of twice forty days in the bare writing of the written law, for which leſs than one quarter of that time was more than ſufficient. They affirm therefore, that he was taken up all the reſt of that while in learning the oral law by heart, which he afterwards did carefully deliver by word of mouth to Aaron, Eleazar, and to his ſervant Joſhua, and theſe to the ſeventy elders, from whom it paſſed to all the prophets, the three laſt of whom, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, delivered it to the grand Sanhedrin; from whom the wiſe men of Jeruſalem and Babylon received it. Thus they affirm that this oral law, given to Moſes, was tranſmitted, from one generation to another, entire and uncorrupted, under the name of קבלה Cabbalah, or tradition, which was afterwards committed to writing, by ſeveral hands, in that volume which they call the Talmud, conſiſting of two parts, the Miſhnah and Gemarrah, to which they give, by far, the preference to the written books, whence comes that ſaying of theirs, the Mikdaſh, or Old Teſtament, is like water, the Miſhnah like wine, and the Gemarrah, being more plain and perfect, like Hippocras, or the richeſt of wines. For they add, ſecondly, that the obſcurity of the written law, be rather confounded, than inſtructed by them. Thoſe that are willing to be further ſatisfied about it may ſee the abridgment which Munſter has given us of them, and of the Jewiſh comments upon them, with his verſion of each, as he has collected them from their Talmud, and other rabbinic works. All, therefore, that we ſhall ſay further of it is, that they divide theſe laws only into negative and affirmative (C), in imitation of the decalogue, which not only its ſeeming inconſiſtency in ſeveral reſpects, and the ill uſe which God foreſaw would be made of it by the wicked, rendered the oral one very neceſſary, ſince without it the other would have proved in many reſpects uſeleſs, if not dangerous. Theſe learned gentlemen, who love to call themſelves מרבצי התורה, Merabtze-hatborah, fixers of, or givers of reſt to the law, do tell us, that the obſcurity of it is obvious to every reader: as for the inconſiſtencies, they are ſuch as theſe; that in one place it is ſaid, thou ſhalt eat unleavened bread ſeven, and in another ſix days: in one place it is ſaid, thou ſhalt offer the paſſover to the Lord thy God, ſheep, oxen, &c. and in another, only a male lamb without blemiſh: one text ſays, that the Lord came down upon mount Sinai to ſpeak to the people; and another ſays, that he ſpake to them from heaven. Theſe are the mighty contradictions, which, they pretend, cannot be reconciled without the help of the oral law (3). Well might Chriſt ſay of them, that they ſtrained at a gnat, and ſwallowed a camel (4); ſince theſe are but trifles compared to thoſe which we meet with among theſe learned compilers of the Talmud, and their commentators, tho' they all pretend to expound all theſe ſeeming difficulties, and pretended contradictions of the written, by the help of this oral law; for this reaſon we ſhall not ſpend any more time in confuting this vain pretence of theirs, nor the abſurd and fabulous comments with which it is ſtuffed, but ſhall content ourſelves with giving now and then a ſketch of them in a note, as we go on with the body of their laws, as well when they are judicious and right, as when they are ſuperſtitious or wrong, and deſerving of the cenſure which our Saviour paſt upon them, that they had made the word of God of none effect by their tradition (5).

(1) Vide Packhurſt Mazorah, ſect. de Paraſhah. (2) Vide Acts xiii. 15, & 27. xv. 21.

(C) theſe they call, according to the genius of the Hebrew tongue, מצות לא תעשה Mitzvoth lo taghaſſeh, and מצות עשה Mitzvoth ghaſſeh, that is, commandments, thou ſhalt,

(3) Vide Maimon. præfat. in Miſhn. Munſt. præfat. in Mitzvoth-hatborah. Cun. Baſnag. & al. (4) Matt. xxiii. 24. (5) Mark vii. 13, & alib,

or only begins with three negative laws, but contains, in all, eight of that kind, and but two affirmative. Accordingly, they reckon up the negative laws to the number of three hundred ſixty five, and the affirmative to two hundred and forty eight; in all, ſix hundred and thirteen: and as they have a wonderful ſkill in fetching ſome ſignificant myſteries out of every text and ſubject, they have not failed to apply the firſt number to the days of the year, and the ſecond to the number of parts in a human body; and to affirm, that God deſigned thereby to inculcate, that not a day of our life ought to paſs without meditating upon the law of God, nor any member of our bodies be enjoyed, which is not conſecrated and employed in his ſervice, according to that ſaying of Eccleſiaſtes, fear God and keep his commandments, for that is the whole [duty] of man. Theſe, and all ſuch like moraliſing reveries, is what they have drawn from their Cabbalah, or oral tradition, of which we have given an account in a late note: however, it muſt be owned, that their Caraites, a wiſe and antient ſect among them, did always reject it, and applied themſelves wholly to the plain meaning of the text; but theſe are but few, in compariſon of the reſt, and are mortally hated by them; the reader may be convinced of it, by one inſtance among a thouſand. The Caraites are all very rich, and are ſo often at a loſs for a wife among themſelves, that they would gladly purchaſe one at any rate, from their other brethren the Talmudiſts, but as well as theſe love money, they never could yet be perſuaded to give one of their daughters to any of them, though never ſo rich, and themſelves never ſo indigent.

BUT here it will be neceſſary to obſerve, that tho' this Jewiſh Cabbalah, or oral tradition, is juſtly rejected by all the Chriſtians, as being ſtuffed with the moſt carnal and ridicuor ſhalt not do, or as we render it, negative and affirmative; concerning which they make this difference, that if a man ſin againſt the latter, it will be forgiven him upon his repenting or doing ſome penance for it; but he that ſins againſt a negative precept cannot be cleared by any acts of repentance, but continues under the guilt of it until the day of expiation, at which time it will be forgiven. He that commits a ſin worthy of death cannot be ſufficiently cleared on the expiation-day, or by any thing, but by God's ſevere chaſtiſements; but as to thoſe that prophane or blaſpheme the name of God, nothing can expiate their ſin, but their being put to death for it.

lous notions; yet there is another Cabbalah, which has been received by ſome of the antient fathers, and is to this day ſtrenuouſly defended by many learned moderns. This they call, by way of diſtinction, Kabbla, or reception, and contains that myſtical ſenſe of the Old Teſtament, in which, it is pretended, the writers of the New underſtood and explained it, which ſenſe, they affirm, has been conveyed to them from Moſes by the prophets, not by a human tradition, but by divine inſpiration, as being very different, if not contrary, to the obvious and literal one. This, they think, is plain from the interpretation, which ſome of the evangeliſts, particularly St. Matthew as well as St. Paul, give of ſeveral prophecies quoted by them, particularly thoſe which the reader will find in the margin †*†, in a ſenſe ſo foreign from the literal one, that it cannot, in their opinion, be juſtified, without having recourſe to this chriſtian Kabbla, as they term it. We have no buſineſs to enter into the merits of this queſtion, which has been ſo lately and ſo learnedly debated by the writers for and againſt the accompliſhment of literal prophecy. All that we ſhall venture to ſay further is, that if ſuch a myſtical and primary ſenſe be admitted, it muſt be confined to the writers of the New Teſtament, who, beſides their being inſpired, could prove their interpretations by miracles; for it is plain, that ſome of the primitive fathers have gone ſuch great lengths in that way, that Origen, learned as he was, has made himſelf ridiculous by them, and St. Jerom and Auſtin, though more moderate than he, have in many caſes over-ſhot the mark †‡†; but to return to the written law, we ſhall endeavour to give the main body of them under ſuch diſtinct heads and claſſes, as ſhall give our readers a clear idea of them, and to avoid prolixity, we ſhall take the liberty to abridge ſome, and to omit thoſe that are either of ſmall conſequence, or whoſe deſign is not ſufficiently underſtood. For the ſame reaſon we ſhall ſubjoin to every law the ceremonies, cuſtoms, and uſages that relate to it, as well on the account of the immediate connexion they have to one another, as becauſe the latter are often explanatory of the former; that ſo the reader may at one view have a complete ſyſtem of the Jewiſh laws, religion, government, manners, and cuſtoms, as they all flowed from the ſame divine original. As for the laws, they generally run †*† Matt. ii. 15, 17, 23. Rom. x. 6, & ſeq. comp. with Deut. xxx. 12. and Eph. v. 31. with Gen. ii. 24. Hebr. ii. 6. with Pſal. viii 4. & al. †‡† Vide int. al. HIERON. in Matt. xxvii. 51. Vide BASNAG. in Cunæ. in RHEINFERD, Op. Philolog. & al. Vide MUNST. טצוות התורח מושה.

in

in the ſtyle of the five or ſix following ones, which we give only as a ſpecimen of it, but which for that reaſon ſhall follow no farther.

Laws againſt idolatry, and for the pure worſhip of the only true God.

THOU ſhalt have no other Gods before, or beſides, me [l]. Laws againſt idolatry.

YE ſhall not prophane or take in vain (D), but hallow, God's holy name [m].

YE ſhall utterly deſtroy all the idols, altars, groves, and all other monuments of Canaaniti∫h idolatry [n].

YE ſhall not tempt the Lord your God (E), as ye did in the wilderneſs [o].

YE ſhall make no image or repreſentation of God, from the likeneſs of any of the celeſtial, terreſtrial, or aquatic bodies [p].

YE ſhall not bow down to, nor worſhip any kind of idol (F) [q].

[l] Exod. xx. 3. [m] Exod. xx. 7. Levit. xxii. 32. & al. [n] Deut. xii. 2. & ſeq. [o] Deut. vi. 16. [p] Exod. xx. 4. Deut. 4. paſſ. & v. 8. [q] Exod. xx. 5. Deut. v 9. & alib.

(D) That is, as the Jews underſtand it, rightly enough, by giving it to idols, as Aaron did, when he called the molten calf the Gods that brought Iſrael out of Egypt. This is one of thoſe ſins which, they think, cannot be expiated but by the death of the ſinner; and for which Aaron muſt have undergone that fate, had not Moſes interceded for him.

(E) This precept they underſtand of thoſe who ſerved God only in hopes of ſome temporal advantage, which they look upon as a leſſer kind of idolatry.

(F) A man is not, according to them, to ſtoop down before an idol, though it were to take a thorn out of his foot, or to take up any thing that he has dropped, or even to take up a little water to drink, tho' never ſo thirſty, leſt it ſhould be looked upon by any by-ſtander as an act of reſpect to it; in all ſuch caſes therefore they muſt ſit down upon the ground, with their backs to it, and then no ſuch ſcandal can be taken (6). However, no idolatry was deemed capital, unleſs accompanied with one of theſe four things, rearing an altar, offering ſarifice, burning incenſe, and adoration (7).

(6) Vide Tractat. Abodah Zarah ſeu de Idololatria. (7) Vide Munſt. in præc. 17 neg.

WHOSOEVER

WHOSOEVER enticeth another to commit idolatry ſhall be ſtoned as ſoon as he is convicted of it [r].

THE ſpoil of an idolatrous city ſhall not be ſaved upon any account, but be publickly burned. The inhabitants of it ſhall be put to the ſword, and the place ſhall be no more rebuilt, but continue an heap for ever [s].

THE ſilver, gold, and other precious ornaments belonging to idols ſhall not be turned to advantage, but be deſtroyed with the utmoſt abhorrence [t].

WHOSOEVER ſacrificeth his ſeed to Moloch (G), whether he be an Iſraelite, or a ſojourner in the land, ſhall be ſtoned to death [u].

THERE

[r] Deut. xiii. 6. & ſeq. & alib. paſſ [s] Ibid. ver. 15. & ſeq.
[t] Ibid. vii. 25, 26. [u] Levit. xx. 2.

(G) We have already given an account of this Ammonitiſh deity and its worſhip, in the hiſtory of Ammon †. All that needs be added here, with reſpect to the different opinions of authors, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian, concerning the meaning of the phraſe of making their ſons and daughters to paſs through the fire, which we there took notice of, is, that there are ſeveral expreſs texts of ſcripture which prove, that it was neither a bare leaping over a fire, nor a being carried between two fires ſet cloſe by one another; but a real burning of them to death (8). In the ſecond book of Kings it is ſaid, that the Sephărvaites burnt their children in the fire to Adrammelech and Anammelech their gods (9); which we have ſhewn elſewhere were, in all probability, the ſame with Moloch ‡. 'Tis plain from the prophet Amos (10) and St. Stephen (11), that the Iſraelites had been much addicted to the worſhip of this idol, whoſe tabernacle they are ſaid to have carried about with them in the wilderneſs, but that they ſhould continue it in Canaan after Moſes had made it capital, and God had expreſſly told them, that he would ſet his face againſt ſuch offenders, and exterminate them from the midſt of his people (12), is ſomewhat ſurpriſing, and yet the ſequel of this hiſtory will ſhew, that ſeveral, even of the kings of Judah, were guilty of that abominable cruelty How it came to be at the firſt introduced into the world, we have elſewhere endeavoured to account for*. As for what is commanded concerning the deſtroying of all the monuments of idolatry, the Jews underſtood it only of thoſe places which became theirs by conqueſt, beyond which the command did not extend; and as to the idolatrous cities, they † Vide Vol. II p 99, 100. (8) Vide Pſ. cvi. 37, 38 Iſai. lvii. 5. Jerem xix. 4, & ſeq. Ezek. xvi. 21. xxiii. 37, & alib. (9) 2 King. xvii. 31. ‡ Ubi ſup. (10) Amos v. 26. (11) Acts vii. 43. (12) Levit. xx. 3, & ſeq. * Vide Vol. II. p. 462.

affirm,

THERE are ſeveral more to the ſame purpoſe interſperſed, and often repeated in the four laſt books of Moſes, which we need not dwell longer upon. Of the ſame nature are alſo thoſe which forbid all commerce, intercourſe, contracting of affinity with idolatrous nations, and all kind of imitation of their ways, leſt they ſhould inſenſibly draw them into their idolatries; of the ſame kind were thoſe which condemned the uſe of familiar ſpirits, inchantments, obſerving of times and omens [x], divinations, reſorting to wizards and necromancers, and ſuch like, under pain of death [y]; as alſo the rounding of the corners, or temples of the head, and marring the corners of their beards, cutting their fleſh for the ſake of the dead, or making any marks upon it [z]; and laſtly the promiſcuous uſe of apparel in either ſex, in imitation of the Canaanites [a].

Poſitive laws concerning the worſhip of the one true God.

THAT the Lord, who delivered his law from mount Sinai, is the only God in heaven and earth (H) [b]. Laws concerning the true worſhip of God.

THAT he alone is to be loved with all ones heart, mind, and ſtrength [c]; that he only is to be feared above all things [d], and his name to be ſanctified.

[e] THAT

[x] Ibid. xix. 26, 31, & alib. [y] Deut. xviii. 9. & ſeq. [z] Levit. xix. 27. & ſeq. [a] Deut. xxii. 5, &c. [b] Exod. xx. 8. Deut. vi. 4. [c] Ibid. ver. 5. [d] Ibid. ver. 13.

affirm, that they were firſt of all to forewarn them, and if they forſook their idolatry, they were to be ſpared, but if they perſiſted, they were then to be deſtroyed. They likewiſe underſtood the prohibition of turning any of the ſpoil to their advantage in ſo ſtrict a ſenſe, that they thought it even unlawful to ſit under the ſhade of any of their trees. But it is plain, that this great averſion to idolatry and idolatrous things did not ſhew itſelf, till they had ſeverely ſmarted for their too great propenſity to it under the Babyloniſh captivity.

(H) This precept in one place † begins thus: שמע ישראל יהוה אלהינו יהוה אחד Hear O Iſrael the Lord our God, the LORD [is] one; where it is obſerved, that the ע Ain in the firſt, and the ד Daleth in the laſt words, are majuſcula, or letters of a larger ſize than the reſt. Whether they were originally written in that manner, as containing ſome important myſtery, as the Jews pretend, or whether altered afterwards by accident, or with deſign, is not eaſy to determine: ſure it is, they not only urge it as † Deut. vi 4.

an

[e] THAT they ſhall engrave his laws in their hearts, diligently teach them to their children and grandchildren; and wear an unanſwerable argument againſt the Chriſtian doctrine of the Trinity, but from too literal an interpretation of the verſes following, they wore theſe words written on parchment about them, as bracelets and frontlets, and placed them at their beds, doors, &c. juſt as it is there preſcribed. Some antient fathers (13) were of opinion, that this had been conſtantly practiſed, from Moſes till after our Saviour's time, and that he wore them himſelf; tho' upon what foundation is hard to gueſs. Lightfoot and others believe, that they were univerſally uſed in our Saviour's time (14); and St. Jerom aſſures us, that they were ſo in his, and that thoſe who did not wear them upon their foreheads were eſteemed irreligious (15). However that be, it is not to be doubted, but their ſuperſtition in this reſpect has ſtill gained ground; this is plain from the many ſcrupulous niceties which they are bound to obſerve in the making, writing and caſting of theſe phylacteries (16).

[e] Deut. vi. 6, 7.

This verſe which they call the SHEMAH, from the firſt word of it, they are likewiſe obliged, by an expreſs command in the oral law, to repeat twice a day; that is, in the morning at ſun riſing, and in the evening juſt as it is ſet. There is likewiſe a great deal of ſuperſtitious traſh preſcribed in the Talmud, about the repeating of the words; the eyes, lips, and fingers, muſt be ſtill, that the mind may be wholly intent upon the words; ſome letters are to be pronounced ſwiftly, and others ſlowly; no ordure or dead carcaſs ought to be nearer the place where the perſon repeats it, than four cubits at leaſt, and then he is to turn his back to it; but if the place will not permit ſuch a diſtance, the ordure is then to be covered up, and the eyes kept from it, and a great deal more to the ſame purport (17), which it were needleſs to dwell longer upon. However, ſince they urge this text ſo ſtrenuouſly againſt the Chriſtians, we ſhall beg leave, before we diſmiſs this note, to examine, whether the antient Jews underſtood it in the ſame ſenſe as the moderns do: ſome learned converts from Judaiſm to Chriſtianity ſeem to have proved the contrary from their moſt antient writings (18); but as proſelytes are always ſuſpected of being over-zealous, there have not been wanting thoſe eminent Chriſtians, who, after a mature examination

(13) Orig. Chryſoſt Hieron. Euphym. in Matt. xxiii. (14) Lightfoot, Scaliger, Maldon, & al. (15) Hieron. in Matt. xxiii. vide & Theophilact. in loc. (16) Vide Leo. de Moden. Ceremon. Jud. part. i. c. 12. (17) Vide Wotton's Verſ. of the Miſhnah. ſub voc. Shemah. (18) Vide inter al. Raymond. Martin, Pugio Fidei paſſ.

wear them for a ſign upon their hand, as frontlets between their amination of their evidence, have confirmed it, as we think, beyond all poſſibility of replying. We ſhall ſingle only one from among thoſe many, not only as he was very well verſed in this kind of learning, but becauſe, as he was not a prieſt, but a ſtateſman, he may be leſs ſuſpected of partiality, we mean the great Philippe de Mornay (19), who among other antient authors, quotes rabbi Simeon ben Jobai, who in his Zobar, a book by the Jews acknowledged to have been written before the Talmud, if not before Chriſt (20), quotes the expoſition of rabbi Ibba, of this text, to this purport, that the firſt יהוה, Jehovah, which is the incommunicable name of God, is the father; by אלהים Elohim is meant the ſon, who is the fountain of all knowledge; and by the ſecond יהוה is meant the holy ghoſt, proceeding from them, and he is called אחד Achad, one, becauſe God is one. Ibba adds, that this myſtery was not to be revealed till the coming of the Meſſiah. The author of the Zobar goes on, and applieth the word holy, which is thrice repeated in the viſion of Iſaiah (21), to the three perſons in the deity, whom he elſewhere calls three ſuns, or lights, three ſovereigns—without beginning and without end.

It muſt be owned, that the genuineneſs of this paſſage is diſputed by the Jews, as well as the authority and antiquity of the book itſelf by ſome Chriſtians (22); but as to the firſt, it is known, that they make no ſcruple of denying all that makes againſt them, and that where they dare not do it, as in the caſe of the ſacred writings, they will manifeſtly pervert the ſenſe, and appeal to the oral law: and as for the Chriſtians, 'tis to be feared, they are all but too apt to be partial to their favourite ſyſtems, and to over-ſhoot the mark on both ſides. However, tho' it is out of our province to enter any farther into the controverſy, how far the doctrine of the trinity was, or might be, known to the antient Jews, from ſeveral places of the Old Teſtament, urged againſt them; yet we beg leave to make an obſervation or two out of their Talmud, which ſeem to make very much againſt them, becauſe they have not yet been taken notice of by any author that we know of. There is one ſection in it (23), written dialogue-wiſe, in which are ſeveral queſtions, as firſt, why the names of God, Elohim, Zabaoth, &c. are in the plural number? and ſecondly, why they are joined to verbs in the ſingular? [thus, for inſtance, the firſt verſe of Geneſis ſays, Elohim bara, where God is in the plural, and created in the ſingular, which our divines have applied to the trinity in unity] and their eyes, and write them upon the gates, posts, and other parts of their houses [f].

(19) Avertiſſement aux Juifs, c. 3. Vide ſi lubet Meyer Theolog. de Myſter. SS. Trinit. Haveman, Jooden Vegh Wyzer, & al. (20) Vide Buxt. ſen. Tiberiad. in voc. זהר Zobar Bartoloc. & Wooll. Bibliot. Rabin. (21) Ch. vi. 3. (22) Vide Woolf. Bibliot. Rabin. No. 2175 p. 1134. & ſeq. (23) Tract. Sanhedrin.

[f] Ibid. ver. 6. & seq.

thirdly, why God speaks in some places in the plural number? as, let us make man, &c. in our image, &c. (24)? Now it is plain, that to all these questions, or rather objections, the Talmud gives us no answers but what are plainly illusory ‡, and such as the compilers would most probably have suppressed, as well as the questions, had they not designed thereby to make a kind of a tacit acknowledgment, that these irregular expressions contained some mystery, which they did not think lawful to divulge. This was the reason why a learned rabbi (25), who was severely charged with having betrayed the mysteries of his religion, because the straitness of his circumstances had forced him to accept of the generous offer, from a Roman cardinal, of a large salary for teaching the Hebrew tongue, protests, among other things, which he urges in his own vindication, that he had never so much as explained the first verse of Genesis.

But what will convince our readers that this was the case of the writers of the Talmud, is the answer that is given, in the chapter above quoted to the question, why the throne of God is in the plural number in Daniel's vision (26). The words in the Chaldee are כרסון רמיו, Carsevan remiú, which our version renders the thrones were cast down, contrary to the express meaning of the verb רמם which signifies to raise, to exalt, and set up, in which sense all the Jews do rightly understand it. The question therefore that is asked is, why the throne, on which the antient of days was to sit, is put in the plural? after several trifling answers, which are given as the solutions of several learned rabbies, the last but one of whom pretends, that the plural implies the thrones of God and of David; the last and concluding one is to the following purpose, that it is blasphemy to set the creature on the throne of the creator, blessed for ever, and closes the whole with these notable words, if any one can solve this difficulty, let him do it, if not, let him go his way and not attempt it. The meaning of it being too obvious to want explaining, we shall wholly submit to the reader, and only add, that something very like this seems to be intimated in that distinction in their creed, about the unity of God, namely that he is one by an oneness or unity peculiar to himself *.

(24) Gen. i. 26. iii. 22, & alib. ‡ Vide Vol. I. p. 91. note (K. (25) Elias Levit. vide præf. ejusd. in Grammat. Hæbraic. (26) Dan. vii. 9. * Art. 1.

THAT

THAT they ſhall circumciſe their hearts, as well as their fleſh [g] (I); and be no more rebellious to him, but ſerve him ſincerely, cleave unto him, and ſwear by his name alone [h].

THAT the whole law ſhall be read by the prieſts to all the people, men, women, and children, every ſeventh year, at the feaſt of the tabernacles [i], and the ſubſtance of it ſhall be learned by heart by every Iſraelite; and that every king of Iſrael ſhall be obliged to write a copy of it with his own hand, from that which was by Moſes committed to the cuſtody of the Levites, in order to be conſtantly read and obſerved by him [k] (K).

THAT all bleſſings ſhall be thankfully acknowledged to come from GOD (L), and his puniſhments ſubmiſſively received, as fatherly chaſtiſements or trials of their obedience [l].

THE

[g] Deut. x. 16. & alib. paſſ. [h] Ibid ver. 20. [i] Ibid. xxxi. 9, & ſeq. ad 14. [k] Ibid. xvii. 18, & ſeq. [l] Ibid. viii. paſſ.

(I) What is meant by the circumciſion of the heart needs not be told, it being here and elſewhere put in oppoſition to ſtubbornneſs, rebellion, and ſtiff-neckedneſs. We have already ſpoken of that in the fleſh in another ſection (27); the manner in which it was performed ſhall be ſhewn, when we come to ſpeak of the Jewiſh ceremonies.

(K) What the abſtract or ſubſtance of the law was, we have elſewhere ſhewn †, but the Jews conclude, from the words of Moſes (28), write ye therefore this ſong, &c. that every private man was obliged to write likewiſe, a copy of it; but it ſeems rather, that he only enjoined them to learn it by heart *. They add, that if the king had not writ a copy of it before he came to the crown, he was obliged to write two after it, the one to be depoſited in his treaſure-houſe, and the other to be kept about him for his daily meditation and inſtruction (29).

(L) This command of praiſing the Lord for his bleſſings, they alſo extend to ſaying grace at leaſt before meat, in which their ſtrictneſs is ſuch, that if a man through inadvertency chance to neglect it, he is bound, if he is gone abroad, to return home as ſoon as he recollects his omiſſion, and perform that duty. They likewiſe enforce from it the neceſſity of waſhing of hands before eating, and affirm, that he that eats with unclean hands is equally guilty with him that eateth unclean meat. They add many more of the like ſuperſtitious niceties, for which, however, they own, they have no poſitive command, either in the written or oral law;

(27) ſee Vol. II. p. 367. ſub note (R) † Sup. p. 36. ſub note (F). (28) Deut. xxxi. 19. * Vide ſup. p. 39. ſub note (H). (29) Vide præcept. affirm. 24, 25.

THE law ſhall be engraven upon ſtones, and ſet up upon an altar, and the bleſſings of obedience, and curſes for diſobedience ſhall be publickly ſet up upon the mounts Gebal and Gerizzim, for a perpetual remembrance [m].

No forgiveneſs, or deliverance from puniſhment for any diſobedience ſhall be expected, without a deep ſenſe and acknowledgment of the fault [n].

BURNT-offerings, ſacrifices, tithes, vows, firſtlings of the flock, and free-will-offerings, ſhall be brought and ſacrificed at no other place, but that which the Lord ſhall appoint [o].

Laws, poſitive and negative, concerning the ſabbath, paſſover, and other feſtivals, holy days, and faſts.

Laws concerning the bath.

THE ſabbath, or ſeventh day, ſhall be kept holy [p] (M). No ſervile work ſhall be done in it, by maſter, ſervant, ſlave, ſtranger, or cattle [q]. There ſhall no fire be kindled on that day [r], nor any thing bought or ſold. No except that one which enjoins them to ſubmit to the ordinances of their wiſe men (30). Well therefore might our Saviour ſo often reprove them, for being ſtricter obſervers of theſe human injunctions, than they were of the more weighty points of the law of God, juſtice, mercy, &c. (31).

[m] Ibid. xxvii. 1. ad fin. 28. paſſ. [n] Ibid xxx. paſſ. [o] Ibid. xii. 5, & ſeq. [p] Exod. xxiii. 12. xxxiv. 21. Deut. v. 14, & alib. [q] Exod. xx. 10, & ſeq. Deut. v. 14, & ſeq. [r] Exod. xxxv. 3.

(M) What that ſanctification of the ſabbath conſiſted in before David, or rather Solomon's time, except repairing to the tabernacle, if they dwelt near it, rehearſing the wonders which God had done for them, and a total ceſſation from work, is not eaſy to gueſs. We have endeavoured in a former ſection (32) to account for this indolent obſervation, from which the day is called שבת, Sabbath, or reſt. The Jewiſh doctors have ſtretched this abſtinence from work to the moſt ſuperſtitious degree. They extend it not only to every buſineſs that tends to the getting of food and raiment, ſuch as plowing, ſowing, reaping, threſhing, and the like, which they make to amount to thirty nine negative precepts, beſides many others which are as appendixes to them; ſuch as thoſe that follow: graſs muſt not be walked upon leaſt it be bruiſed by it: a horſe muſt not be rid leſt it be galled; if wet of any kind fall upon one's cloaths it muſt not be wringed out, nor dirt be bruſhed off them; an apple muſt not be put to the fire to roaſt, or any liquid be mingled with

(30) Vide præc. affirm. 27. Sup. p. 35. ſub. fin. note (E). (31) Matt. xv. 3. & ſeq. (32)

muſtard,

muſtard, tho' never ſo dry; a flea muſt not be caught whilſt it hops about, but if it faſten upon the fleſh it may; vermin that is ingendered by the ſweat of the body, ſuch as lice, &c. reptiles and inſects that ſting, ſuch as vipers, ſcorpions, waſps, gnats, and the like, may be killed, and ſo may mad dogs and wild beaſts, if they aſſault one, but if quiet or running from one, they muſt be let alone.

Whatever ought not to be done in public is likewiſe forbid to be done in private; tho' they do not all agree in this, ſome of them thinking it lawful to do ſome things in private, ſuch as wiping any dirt or filth off ones cloaths and the like in a corner, which it would be unlawful to do in ſight of others. If a houſe chance to be ſet on fire, nothing is to be ſaved from the flames but the victuals and cloaths deſigned for the ſabbath, unleſs it be a cheſt or bag in which there is a ſacred book, in which caſe it may be carried off, tho' there chance to be alſo money in it. It is not lawful to ride in a coach or cart, tho' a heathen drive it. No ſinging, dancing, playing upon inſtruments, or any kind of noiſe is allowed, tho' it were to quiet a croſs child. No cauſe is to be tryed, accounts made or caſt up, or marriages ſolemnized. No diſcourſe about buying and ſelling, or any other wordly matter, much leſs looſe and prophane talk is to be ſuffered; a field, vine yard, orchard, and the like is not to be viſited on the ſabbath, with many more of the like nature. However, they allow it to be violated in caſes of dangerous ſickneſs, by adminiſtring any help to the ſick; a woman may be aſſiſted in her labour, or even be cut open, if ſhe die in it, and there be any hope of ſaving the child.

The poſitive precepts concerning the ſabbath run much in the ſame ſtrain, we ſhall only inſtance in two or three of them. On that day every one is obliged, according to their circumſtances, to put on clean linen, to wear better cloaths than ordinary, to eat fleſh, fiſh, or fowl, and to drink wine, and to eat at leaſt once in ſix hours. Care alſo is to be taken, that a clean table-cloath be laid, and the victuals ſet upon it, the beds made and the lamps lighted before the entrance of the ſabbath, which begins and ends with them on or about ſun-ſet, according to the ſaying in Geneſis, the evening and the morning were the firſt day (33).

A learned Jewiſh author tells us ‡, that they were obliged, in all diſtricts and towns throughout Iſrael, to blow the trumpet, on the evening of the ſixth day, ſix different times from ſome eminence, whence it might be eaſily heard at a due diſtance, ſo that they who were abroad in the fields might have timely notice to repair to their habitations before the ſabbath began. Accordingly at the ſound of the firſt trumpet, they left off work, and began to march homeward: at the ſecond ſounding, all ſhops, ſtalls, and places of trade were ſhut up: at the third the pots and kettles were taken off the fire, the tables covered, and the meat dressed for the sabbath was set upon them, &c. —— The last trumpet was generally about sun-set; and on the next night as soon as they could perceive two or three stars in the sky, the trumpets blew from the same places to proclaim the end of the sabbath; at which time the head of the family, after a short prayer, wished himself and the rest a good week, as he did a good sabbath at the entrance of it. From this blowing of these trumpets from some high places, a cabbalistical philologist (34) hath concluded, that the מוסך השבת, Mussach hassabath, the vail, or, as our version renders it, the covering of the sabbath, which king Ahaz took away from the temple (35), was some kind of watch-tower on the top of it, from which the priests used to proclaim the entrance and exit of the sabbath to those that lived at Jerusalem. But for ought we can see, it might as well have been any thing else.

(33) Gen. i. 5. vide Munſt. in loc. & præcep. negat. & affirm. de ſabbat. ‡ Maimon. Tract. שבת cap. v ſect. 27. vide Goodwin's Moſes and Aaron, l. iii. c 3. §. 10.

taken

The Jews are fallen into several extravagant notions about the sabbath, some of which we shall but just hint; such as that the obligation of sanctifying it is of much greater force than any other command: that it is the soul and totum of all the rest; so that he that violates it breaks all the rest. That on that day the dæmons, satyrs, and other such hurtful creatures shun the light of it, and do not return from deserts and dark caverns to infest mankind till it is over, with many more of the like nature, which the reader may see at full length in Leo de Modena (36).

It must be owned however, that many of the wiser Jews do make the sanctification of the sabbath to consist in duties of a more noble nature, than these talmudical trifles; namely, in meditation on the wonderful works of God, in the study of his law, and instructing those that are under them in it (37). Some of them do even maintain, that they used to assemble themselves every sabbath, even from the time of Moses, to hear the law read and expounded (38). And this is likewise believed by several learned men among the Christians (39), who infer it from the words of St. James, that Moses ἐκ γενεῶν ἀρχαίων has in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day (40). All that we dare say is, that the much greater number are of opinion that this custom was not set on foot till Esdras's time. All that the priests were commanded to do on the sabbath was only to set the new shew-bread on the tables, to take away the old (41), and to offer the meat, drink, and burnt-offerings peculiar to that day (42);

(34) Reinferd Op. Philolog. dissert. 18. (35) 2 King. xvi. 18. (36) Ceremon. Jud. part iii. c. 1. vide & Munst. in Gen. ii. 1 & Exod. xx. & præc. affir. 29. (37) Vide Munst. in Exod. xx Meyer. de Temp Sacr. cap ix. §. 66. (38) Phil. in vit. Mos. Joseph. cont. Apion, lib. ii. Talm. Hieros. Tract. Megill. Maimon. Tephilah, & Ercath-bacohanim, & al. mult (39) Vide Coccej. Sum. Theol. c. xxi §. 14. & seq. Grot. & Meyer, ubi sup. (40) Acts xv. 21. comp. with ver. 36. (41) Levit. xxiv. 6, 8. (42) Num. xxviii, 9, & seq.

however,

however, their antient doctors did ſince clog it with ſuch a number and variety of precepts and ſubtilties; and thoſe that came after have been ſo divided about the right meaning of them, and their practice has ſo often varied, that it is impoſible for them to know whether they kept it right or not. This made ſome of their rabbies ſay, that if they could but obſerve two ſabbaths as they ought, God would ſoon put an end to all their miſeries (43).

Whether the obſervation of the ſabbath or ſeventh day be as old as the creation, as ſome authors both Jews and Chriſtians contend for, from thoſe words of Moſes, and GOD bleſſed the ſeventh day and ſanctified it (44); or whether that text means no more, than that God ſet apart that day to be afterwards obſerved by the Iſraelites, as the far greater part of the fathers and Chriſtian commentators underſtand it; is a queſtion which, tho' more curious than important, has been very ſtrenuouſly debated on all hands. The Jews are as much divided about it as we are; for whilſt ſome affect to call the ſabbath their ſpouſe, as being granted to the Jews alone excluſive of all other nations (45), others affirm, that all the patriarchs and all good men did obſerve it up to Adam, whom they pretend to have been the author of the 92d pſalm, intitled, a pſalm or ſong for the ſabbath day (46). They likewiſe interpret the words in Geneſis, becauſe Abraham——has kept my charge, of his keeping the ſabbath (47). The ſame they affirm of Jacob, and add, that the reaſon of his taking up his lodging in the open field in his way to Meſopotamia, was, that it happened to be the eve of the ſabbath, ſo that he was obliged to ſtop there as ſoon as he perceived that the ſun was about ſetting (48). Job's offering ſacrifices for his ſeven ſons every ſeventh day, is likewiſe underſtood of his keeping the ſabbath, tho' another reaſon ſeems to be given in the text (49).

Joſephus and Philo go ſtill farther, and affirm, that the obſervation of it had been preſerved among the Gentiles. The former ſays, that there was ſcarce any nation either Greek or Barbarian, that did not in ſome meaſure conform to the obſervance of the ſabbath (50); and Philo aſſures us (51), that it was not a feſtival peculiar to any nation or country, but common to all, and kept as a kind of birth-day of the world. He adds in another place, that the Jews, whilſt in Egypt, having quite forgot the ſeventh day, God was pleaſed to indicate it to them by ſending them manna ſix days, and ſtaying it on the ſeventh (52). We find likewiſe ſeveral antient writers among the Heathen, ſuch as Homer, Heſiod, and others, quoted by the fathers, who ſpeak of (43) Vide Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. c. xi. (44) Gen. ii. 3. (45) Vide Selden & Rabbin. ab eo citatos. (46) Vide Chald. Paraphr. Targum, in titul. Pſ. xcii. Middraſh Tehill. Talm. Babil. Tract. Sanhedr. & al. (47) R. Salom. in Gen. xxvi. 5. (48) Bereſh. Rabb. Paraſh. 79. Talm. Tract. שבת R. Bechai. & al. (49) Vide Abenez. in Job. i. 25. (50) Cont. Apion. lib. 2. ad fin. (51) De Opific. Mund. (52) In vit. Moſ. lib. i. (53).

the

the ſeventh day as ſacred to religion (53). Something like this may alſo be gathered from that abſurd account, which ſome others, particularly Tacitus and Plutarch, give of the Jews, obſerving it in imitation of the Heathens, who conſecrated that day to Saturn according to the former (54), or to Bacchus according to the latter, who adds, that he was alſo named Sabbos, becauſe they uſed frequently to ſhout out the word Sabboi at his feſtival (55). However, as theſe teſtimonies would at beſt amount to a bare probability, and ſeem contradicted by ſome expreſs texts both in the writings of Moſes and ſome of the prophets (56), which intimate, that the ſabbath was given to the Iſraelites for a memorial of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, and to diſtinguiſh them from all other nations; the far greater part of Chriſtians, both antient and modern, have declared for the other ſide (57); and it muſt be owned, that if that feſtival had been inſtituted and kept from the beginning, we cannot ſee why Moſes ſhould be ſo exact and cautious in the particulars he gives about the inſtitution and obſervance of it, eſpecially in his prohibition of gathering manna on that day; unleſs we ſuppoſe with Philo, that the Iſraelites had quite loſt the memory of it.

We muſt beg leave to cloſe this note with taking notice of that expreſſion in one of the goſpels (58), ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, in the ſecond prime ſabbath, or as our verſion more clearly renders it, on the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt, which has puzzled a world of Commentators, till Joſ. Scaliger did hit upon an explication (59), which has been univerſally approved and followed ever ſince (60). We need not to trouble our readers with the various conjectures of the reſt. That of our author carries its own evidence, being founded on the Jewiſh manner of computing the ſabbaths from the feaſt of the paſſover to that of the weeks, or from Eaſter to Whitſunday. The firſt of theſe, namely, that which immediately followed the two great feaſts, or the firſt and laſt day of the paſſover, was by them called שבת שני ראשון, Sabbath Shenireſhon, the ſecond prime ſabbath; the next was called the ſecond ſecend, or the ſecond after the ſecond prime; the third ſecond third, and ſo unto the ſeventh, which laſt did immediately precede the feaſt of the weeks or pentecoſt (61). The fact for which this ſabbath is recorded by the evangeliſt, namely, Chriſt's diſciples plucking and rubbing

(53) Vide Euſeb. præp. lib. xiii c. 12. Clem. Alex. Stromat. lib. v & al. (54) Hiſtor. lib. v. (55) Sympoſiac. lib. iv. (56) Vide Exod. xxxi. 13. Deut. v. 15. & alib. paſſ. vide & Jerem. xvii. 22. Ezek. xx. 12, 20. (57) Juſt. Dial. cont. Typh. Tertul. cont. Jud. lib. iv. Iren. cont. Hæreſ. lib. iv. & al. vide Seld. de Jur. Natural. Gent. juxt. diſcipl. Hebr. lib iii. c. 13. & ſeq. Spenc. de Leg. Rit. Hebr. Jun. Le Clerc, Calm. Comm. in Gen. ii. & al. mult. (58) Luk. vi. 1. (59) De Emend. Temp. lib vi. (60) Vide Lightfoot, Cauſab. Baron. Jun. Grot. in loc. Goodwin's Moſ. & Aar. Sir Iſaac Newt. & al. (61) Vide ſi lib. Miſhnam Tract. יומא cap. 5.

No perſon ſhall be put to death for any crime whatſoever, no travelling ſhall be allowed on the ſabbath [r] (N).

THE ſabbath-breaker ſhall be ſtoned [s]; with ſeveral others, either to the ſame purpoſe, or of leſs moment.

Laws relating to the three grand feſtivals, the paſſover, the feaſt of the weeks, and the feaſt of the tabernacles.

THREE times a year ſhall all the male children appear before the Lord their God, at the place by him appointed; namely, at the feaſt of unleavened bread, or paſſover, at the feaſt of the weeks, or pentecoſt, and at the feaſt of tabernacles. They ſhall not come empty handed before him; but every man ſhall offer unto the Lord, according to the ability wherewith he hath bleſſed him  (O). The three grand feſtivals.

Of

[r] Ibid. xvi. 29, & alib. [s] Ibid. xxxi. 14, 15.  Deut. xvi. 16, 17. Exod. xxii. 1, & alib.

rubbing the ears of corn, confirms this expoſition, their harveſt happening always between Eaſter and Whitſunday.

(N) Tho' the text doth expreſly ſay, that they ſhall not ſtir out of their place, yet it could mean no other than a prohibition of going out to gather manna, for it is plain, they were obliged to repair to the tabernacle from all parts of the camp, and afterwards to the temple from all quarters of Jeruſalem (62); however, the Jews underſtand it of going out about worldly buſineſs, or for pleaſure, and indeed upon any account, beyond what they call a ſabbath-day's journey, this diſtance is not indeed fixed by Moſes or any other prophet, but is determined at two thouſand cubits. And tho' they differ among themſelves about the length of that meaſure, ſome making it much longer than others, yet they agree, that the ſafeſt way is not to exceed two thouſand moderate paces, (63), and this ſeems to be pretty near the diſtance between Jeruſalem and the Mount of Olives, which St. Luke calls a ſabbath-day's journey (64), of which we have already ſpoken †, however, he that exceeded that diſtance was not judged a violator of the ſabbath, but came off with a beating, whereas the breaker of it was to be ſtoned to death (65).

(O) The Talmud, however, exempts from this obligation, 1. The women, who were to take care of their families, unleſs their

(62) Vide Levit. xxiii. 3. (63) Vide Maim. Tract שבת, c. v. ſect. 27. Goodwin's Moſ. & Aar lib. iii. c. 3 § 10 (64) Acts i 12. † See before p. 48. note (L) (65) Vide Maim. ubi ſup.

Of the Paſſover.

Eaſter or paſſover.

WE have already ſpoken of its inſtitution, and the occaſion and deſign of it in a former ſection †; the laws relating to it are to the following purpoſe.

IT ſhall be of perpetual obligation, both to the Iſraelites and to all circumciſed proſelytes [u].

No

† See Vol. II. p. 520. [u] Exod. xii. 14, 24, & alib.

huſbands permitted them to go with them, as in the caſe of Hannah and the virgin Mary. 2. Boys under 12 years of age, who were not under the obligation of the law, or called בְּנֵי הַחֻתּוֹרָה, Bene-hathorah, that is, the ſons or diſciples of the law, till they were entered into the 13th, and this ſeems to be the reaſon why Chriſt did not make his firſt appearance among the doctors at the feaſt, till he had attained to that age. 3. All old men above ſixty. 4. All the ſick and impotent, lunatics, &c. And laſtly, all that either lived at ſuch a diſtance from the tabernacle, and afterwards from the temple, or were any otherwiſe ſo weak, that they could not perform the journey on foot.

Nothing could be more wiſely calculated to preſerve the union of the Jewiſh nation, already ſo ſtrongly cemented by their religion, laws, weights, meaſures, cuſtoms, &c. which were common to them all, than this frequent and univerſal concourſe to the chief place of worſhip. But here ariſe two very great difficulties: firſt, how Jeruſalem could contain ſuch prodigious multitudes, as did flock to thoſe ſolemnities from all parts of Judea; and ſecondly, how the Iſraelites could leave their towns and villages deſtitute of males, without the greateſt danger from thoſe nations which were ſtill left amongſt them, and would be ready, no doubt, to embrace every opportunity of retrieving their lands and liberties. Add to this, that thoſe who lived upon the borders of the land, ran ſtill a greater riſk of being invaded by their neighbours, if they had left their country under no better guard than that of old men, women, and children.

To the firſt difficulty, beſides what has been hinted in the geography of the land, concerning the capaciouſneſs of Jeruſalem; it may be anſwered firſt, that they did not all appear together on the ſame day, but that they took it by turns, and ſtayed in the city but one night; and on the next morning, having performed their devotions, they departed and made way for others. This is plain from the inſtance of Elkanah; and ſecondly, that there were tents and other conveniencies for their reception, not only in the empty ſpaces within, but likewiſe in all convenient places without the walls of the city. And if this be thought ſtill inſufficient for ſo vaſt a concourſe, what is anſwered to the ſecond difficulty of their leaving

the

No circumciſed perſon, whether of the ſeed of Abraham, or admitted into the commonwealth by circumciſion, unleſs hindered by ſickneſs, journeying, or ſome legal impurity, ſhall omit the annual celebration of it, under the penalty of being cut off from his people [x] (P).

No

[x] Num. ix. 13, 14.

the country too much expoſed to their enemies, will eaſily remove all that is left of the firſt.

And here we need not have recourſe to improbable conjectures, as Cunæus, Baſnage, and others have done, who think that this obligation laſted no longer than during their abode in the wilderneſs, when their nearneſs to the tabernacle did eaſily admit of it. For, beſides that, if this had been the caſe, there would have been no need for Jeroboam to ſet up the g lden calves to prevent his ten tribes going to Jeruſalem; their hiſtory furniſhes us from time to time with ſufficient teſtimonies, that theſe feſtivals were kept conſtantly till after our Saviour's time, as it plainly appears from the vaſt multitudes that were at Jeruſalem, from all parts of the world, at the feaſt of pentecoſt, when the holy ghoſt fell upon the apoſtles. Neither need we ſecondly ſuppoſe with others, that they only ſent a certain proportion of men, as one in ten or twelve, to Jeruſalem, to be as it were the repreſentatives, and to offer the gifts of the reſt, whilſt theſe kept the ſolemnity in their own towns. For if any ſuch thing had been either allowed or practiſed, we ſhould certainly have met with ſomething of it in holy writ, whereas the contrary doth rather appear, from the inſtances above-mentioned. But ſince there was a permiſſion from God, that they that were unable to celebrate the paſſover on the firſt month, ſhould do it in the ſecond, as we ſhall ſee in the next note; will it not be more reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that they might extend this indulgence alſo to the other feſtivals? ſo as that one half of the males ſhould ſtay at home to guard their houſes, whilſt the others went up, and at their return, to go and partake of the ſolemnity of the ſecond month. It is indeed urged, that there was a promiſe from God, that none ſhould deſire their lands whilſt they went up to appear before him, but, beſides that their natural backwardneſs in believing him gives us little reaſon to think, that they would commit their wives, children, and all that was dear to them to his ſole care, whilſt they went ſo far from them to worſhip him, it is plain, that thoſe promiſes were only conditional, that is, as long as they continued ſtedfaſt in their obedience, which was ſo ſeldom their caſe, that had their faith in his promiſes been ſtronger than it was, yet their diſobedience gave them but ſmall encouragement to lay hold on them to ſuch a degree.

(P) We have already given the moſt probable meaning of this penalty *, and indeed, conſidering that the principal end of this

* See Vol. II. p. 522.

No ſervant or ſtranger ſhall eat of it, unleſs he become circumciſed [y].

THE feaſt (Q) ſhall begin on the eve of the fourteenth day of the month Abib, or, as the original expreſſes it, between inſtitution was, not only to perpetuate the memory of all the wonders which God did in Egypt and at the Red-ſea, but alſo to make it a ſtanding and irrefragable monument to all poſterity of the truth and certainty of thoſe amazing works ‡; nothing could be more expedient than to enforce the obſervation of it under ſome ſevere penalties. However, it is evident by the ſequel, that they did not underſtand it of a capital puniſhment, ſuch as was to be inflicted on blaſphemers, idolaters, ſabbath-breakers, and the like, ſeeing they not only omitted to celebrate it during their abode in the wilderneſs, without any viſible excuſe (66); but were afterwards guilty of a moſt ſhameful neglect of it, during ſeveral wicked reigns, till Hezekiah, and after him Joſiah, revived it (67), as we ſhall ſee in its proper place.

[y] Exod. xii. 43, & ſeq.

As for thoſe who by reaſon of any legal impurity, whether accidental or voluntary, were unfit for, and thoſe who were hindered by any lawful impediment, from celebrating this feſtival, with the reſt of the people, on the month Niſan, they were ordered to keep it with the uſual ceremony on the following month called Jair. This indulgence was granted by God himſelf in favour of ſome men, who had defiled themſelves by aſſiſting at the burial of ſome relation (68); and was afterwards made uſe of by the prieſts and Levites, who being under ſome legal impurities, when the king commanded them to revive this feſtival at its uſual time, were forced to poſtpone it to the next month (69).

(Q) This feſtival is called in the original פסח, peſach, from the verb paſſach, which ſignifies to paſs by or leap over, and not from the Greek, πάσχω, to ſuffer, as if it had been prophetical of Chriſt's ſuffering at that feaſt, as ſome antient fathers have imagined for want of underſtanding Hebrew (70). God himſelf explained the etymon, where he commanded them to tell their children, that this was the ſacrifice of the Lord's paſſover אשר פסח, Aſher-paſſach, who paſſed by or leaped over the houſes of the Iſraelites (71). It was to begin בין הערבים, Ben-haarbaim, between the two evenings (72) of the 14th of the month called by Moſes, Abib, which properly ſignifies the ſtalk that bears

‡ See Vol II. p. 531, note (P). (66) See before, p. 66. (67) 2 Chron xxx. & xxxv. paſſ. 68) Vide Num. ix. 6. & ſeq. (69) 2 Chron. xxx. 3. (70) Tertul. cont. Jud. c. 10. Ambros. lib. de Myſter. Paſch. & al, (71) Exod. xii. 27. (72) Ibid. ver. 6.

tween the two evenings [z], at which time the paſchal lamb ſhall be killed (R); and the feſtival be continued, till the one and twentieth day of the ſame month at evening.

THE

[z] Ibid ver. 6. See the margin of our bible.

bears the ear of corn, becauſe wheat begins to be ripe about this time. This month was afterwards called Niſan, and anſwers to our March and April. The expreſſion between the two evenings is variouſly taken. Some reckon the firſt evening to be between noon and ſun-ſet (73), others between two and ſix (74), but the moſt rational opinion, and the moſt received, is, that the firſt evening is that which immediately follows ſun-ſet, and that the ſecond begins when that planet is ſo far ſunk below the horizon, that the ſtars do viſibly appear above it (75).

The computation of this new year began at the firſt new moon that happened neareſt, or upon the vernal equinox; with this rule, that the preceding full moon, how near ſoever to it, belonged to the laſt month of the former year. Now as they had no aſtronomical tables to regulate thoſe conjunctions, but were forced to guide themſelves by the firſt appearance of the new moon, all their diligence in ſending out people to obſerve it from high places at ſun-ſet, could not prevent great irregularities happening in their months and years, becauſe ſometimes it is not to be ſeen till the ſecond or third night, nor even then if clouds interpoſe. Add to this, that they were in all other reſpects ſo negligent of their chronology, that it is no wonder, if ſo many learned men have laboured ſo much to correct and adjuſt it (76), and with ſo little ſucceſs. However, as to the new moons, and thoſe feſtivals which depended upon them, and indeed all other computations of time, they were committed to the care of the prieſts and judges, and the people were obliged to abide by their calculations, whether they proved right or wrong (77).

(R) This ordinance of the paſchal lamb our learned Spencer thinks to have been one of thoſe which God expreſly appointed in oppoſition to the Zabian and Egyptian worſhip, in order to cure, as he expreſſes it, the Iſraelites of their itch of idolatry, becauſe the ram among them was ſacred to Jupiter. He adds alſo, that the ceremony of killing, dreſſing and eating of it, namely, neither boiled nor raw, but roaſted, with the head and all the other appurtenances, that a bone of it ſhould not be broken, &c. were in like manner oppoſite to thoſe that were uſed in ſacrifices by thoſe idolaters (78).

(73) D. Kimchi ap. Munſt. in loc. (74) Calm. Dic. ſub. voc. Paque. (75) Moſ. Gerund. Abenezr. Salom. & al. in loc. (76) See Vol. II. p. 355. Vide & Scaliger, ubi ſup. Vignier. Genebr. Uſſer. Sir. Iſ. Newt. Bedford, & al. (77) Vide præc. affirm. 46. (78) De Leg. Rit. Hebr. lib. ii. c. 24.

A a

THE first and last day shall be kept holy and free from all servile work, even as the sabbath; except only that on the former victuals may be dressed, but not on the latter [a]; those two days shall likewise be solemnized by an holy convocation b. No

[a] Compare Exod xii, 16. with xxxv. 3. [b] Ibid ver. 16.

As to the Egyptians, the reader may see by what we have often said on that head, that this pretended contrariety is at best but very lame and imperfect. 1. Because as they instead of sheep sacrificed goats to him, so here Moses ordains the killing either a lamb or a kid; and 2. because even they once a year killed a ram in honour of that God, and cloathed his golden statue with the skin of it; so that there was nothing in this paschal lamb so very proper to obliterate that piece of idolatry in the worship of Jupiter.

As for the sect of the צבאים, Tzeboim, or סבאים, Sebaim, we dare venture to say, that it is, at least, a very bold assumption in our author, to make it more antient than Moses, when he tells us himself in another place (79), that nothing is more obscure and uncertain, than its origin and antiquity, and that there are as many opinions as authors, and errors as opinions, about it. He quotes every where the testimony of Ben Maimon, who tells us, among other things (80), that he came to understand the design and meaning of a great number of Moses's laws, by being conversant with the religion, worship, and ceremonies of the Zabeans; from which, he adds, that Abraham, who was brought up in them, had been converted. But of what weight the opinion of a Jew, and he far from a strict one, can be, to account for the design of the Mosaic laws, or of what authority his testimony can be, who lived but in the 12th century, to prove the Zabeans to have been so considerable a sect in Abraham's, or even in Moses's time, that God should take such care to preserve his people from their idolatry, by giving them a great number of ceremonies that were quite opposite to theirs, we submit to the reader. Dean Prideaux seems indeed very fond of Maimon's notion, and wonders, that any one should mislike it (81), but brings neither proof nor testimony sufficient to back it. However, as to the paschal lamb we may more justly wonder, that any Christian should fetch its origin from so dark and muddy a source, when the writers of the New Testament have pointed to us one that is so much clearer and more divine, its being a type of Christ. We shall find a more proper place to speak of the nation, or rather sect, of the Zabeans, and to shew how little their boasted antiquity is to be depended upon.

(S) We find no precept about the keeping of the five interme-

(79) Ubi sup. c. i. sect. 1. 2, & seq. (80) More Nevoch, part iii. c. 29, & 40. Haxdah Zarah, c. 11, 12, & alib. pass. (81) Connect. part 1. lib. iii. Candiate

No leaven of any kind ſhall be uſed or even kept in the houſe during thoſe ſeven days; whoſoever uſeth any leaven on thoſe days ſhall be cut off from Iſrael [c] (T): all leaven therefore ſhall be removed out of the houſe before the paſchal lamb is killed [d].

ON the firſt day of the paſſover ſhall be offered a burnt-ſacrifice of two young bullocks, one ram, and ſeven lambs of the firſt year; with ſome other offerings of leſs value [e]; and on the ſecond day of the feaſt ſhall be offered, beſides the uſual ſacrifices, a ſheaf of the firſt fruit of that year's harveſt; no new corn ſhall be eaten in any way before the firſt ſheaf has been preſented unto the LORD [f] (V). Some other diate days, except the eating of unleavened bread and abſtaining from very laborious works. The rabbies have ſupplied that defect by their comments. They allow that time to be ſpent in mirth and all lawful recreations; they enjoin all, eſpecially the women, to wear the gayeſt apparel, to eat fleſh, fiſh, and fowl, and to drink wine. Weddings are forbid during this, and the other two grand feſtivals, leſt the joy that attends the former ſhould make them forget the occaſion of the latter. Some allow labours of neceſſity to be done during thoſe five days, and others think it unlawful to take up a ſtraw to pick their teeth. However, they all agree, that women may ſhave and waſh themſelves, or even their cloaths, upon ſome occaſions (82). There is one merry injunction of theirs, that obliges every man and woman, though they be ſo poor that they live by alms, to drink at leaſt four bumpers of wine on the firſt night of the paſſover, whilſt they are rehearſing the wonders wrought by God in Egypt and at the Red ſea (83, with ſome more of the like nature not worth repeating (84).

[c] Ibid. ver. 15, 19. [d] Ibid. xxxiv. 25, & alib. vide præc. aff. 347. [e] Num. xxviii. 19. & ſeq. [f] Levit. xxiii. 10, & ſeq.

(T) This curſe is underſtood to extend only to the perſon that eats any thing that has leaven, and not to him who only keeps it within his doors, and whoſe tranſgreſſion is only puniſhed with a certain number of ſtripes. But in the former caſe their doctors are ſo ſtrict, that they even forbid eating a fowl in whoſe crop is found one ſingle grain of corn, becauſe it is apt to ferment where it meets with moiſture. They have likewiſe ſeveral wild diſtinctions with regard to liquors that are, or are not, apt to ferment, which are more nice than true, and conſequently not worth being dwelt upon (85).

(V) We ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of all the different kinds of firſt-fruits which were to be offered to God, as a token of their

(82) Vide præc. neg. 75. (83) Pr. aff. 40. (84) Pr. neg. 77, & ſeq. (85) Ibid. pr. 77, & ſeq.

ſubmiſſion

other ordinances of lefs moment about this and other feſtivals are interſperſed in the pentateuch, which we therefore omit.

The feaſt of the weeks, or pentecoſt.

The feaſt of weeks.

THIS feaſt was inſtituted in memory of the law being given upon mount Sinai, fifty days after the exod (W), and to oblige the people to appear before the Lord, to offer the firſt-fruits of their harveſt (X), as ſubmiſſion, gratitude, and dependence, and the manner of offering them, when we come to ſpeak of offerings in general. As for this ſheaf we are now ſpeaking of, it was to be of barley, becauſe that is the firſt corn that is ripe about this time in that country. It was reaped on the evening of the 15th day of Niſan, and was to be offered up in the name of the whole nation. Thus far the text. The Jews add, that as ſoon as the evening of the firſt day of the paſſover was come, at which time the ſecond began, and in which ſome kind of works might be done, the בית דין, Beth-din, or great council aſſembled, and deputed three men to go and gather the ſheaf, with a kind of ſolemnity, at which, great crouds from the neighbouring cities, flocked to Jeruſalem, within whoſe territories it was to be gathered. Theſe deputies asked three times whether the ſun was ſet, and were as often anſwered by the byſtanders in the affirmative. They then asked three times leave to reap the ſheaf, and it was no ſooner granted, than they entered into three different fields, each with a ſickle in his hand, and gathered each a diſtinct parcel, which they put into three different boxes, and brought them to the temple. Here they were threſhed, winnowed, and parched, and an Homer, which contains about three pints, was filled with it, and preſented to the prieſt, who poured a quantity of oil, and threw ſome incenſe upon it, and having heaved it to the Lord towards the four points of the compaſs, he threw ſome part of it on the fire of the altar, and the reſt he kept for himſelf. After this ceremony it was lawful for every man to begin his harveſt (86).

(W) The reader may remember, that the Iſraelites came out of Egypt on the fifteenth of the firſt month Abib, or Niſan (87), and came to Sinai on the third day of the third month, two days after which the law or decalogue was given in the preſence of all the people (88).

(X) Some commentators are of opinion, that every family was bound to offer two loaves of the firſt-fruits of the new corn; but it as an acknowledgment of his abſolute right and dominion over them and their land, and of their dependence upon him.

(86) Vide Maimon. ם. מנהות ם. תמידים ומוספים. Abenezr. in Deut. xxvi. & al. (87) Exod. xii. 3, 6, 41, 51. (88) Ibid. xix. 1, 11, & ſeq. See Vol. II. p. 524, & p. 547. & ſeq.

SEVEN weeks, or fifty days, were to be reckoned from the ſixteenth day of the month Niſan, which was the ſecond of the paſſover, and the fiftieth day was to be the firſt day of this feſtival (Y).

THE ſacrifices ordained upon this day were to be, beſides the two loaves, ſeven lambs of the firſt year, one young bullock, and two rams, to be for a burnt-offering; together with their uſual meat and drink-offerings, and likewiſe a kid for a ſin-offering, and two lambs for a peace-offering (Z). No ſervile work was to be done on that day, is more reaſonable, that there were but two in all, offered in the name of the whole nation, as the firſt barley ſheaf was, which we mentioned in the laſt note but one. Theſe loaves were made of wheat, becauſe the wheat harveſt was ended about the time of this feſtival.

(Y) It is therefore called in the original חג שבועות, Chagg Shebaghoth, or the feaſt of weeks, from the ſeven weeks which were reckoned from that of the paſſover; as from the fifty days the Greeks gave it the name of pentecoſt. Neither the text, nor Joſephus, nor any antient Hebrew writer, tells us, whether or no this feaſt laſted ſeven days, like thoſe of the paſſover and of the tabernacles. However, the modern Jews keep it but two days, during which all ſervile work, except dreſſing their meat, is wholly ſet aſide. As for their other ceremonies on thoſe two days, as they are foreign to our purpoſe, the curious reader may ſee them in Leo de Modena (89).

(Z) There is ſome difference between the ſacrifices that are ordered on this feſtival, in Leviticus and in Numbers (90). Joſephus joins them all together (91), but whoever compares them will rather think, that there is ſome error of the tranſcriber, either in one or the other of theſe places. Buxtorf tells us, that the Jews were ſo afraid leſt they ſhould be miſtaken in their calculation of this feſtival, and that of the paſſover, that they kept it two days inſtead of one. He inſtances in one place in Judith (92), in which the Greek ſeems to confirm his aſſertion, and by that means removes the difficulty which has been ſtarted of our Saviour's eating the paſſover one day before the reſt of the Jews (93).

(89) Cerem. Jud. part. iii c. 4. (90) Comp. Levit. xxiii. 15, 19. & Num. xxviii. 27. (91) Ant lib iii. c 10. (92) Judith viii. 6. (93) Synag. Jud vide & Cyril. Alex. in Joh. xiii. Chryſoſt. Homil. 82. Epiphan. Eutym. Paul. Burg. P. de Middl. Scalig. Janſen. Maldon. & al. mult.

ſave that victuals might be dreſſed, and a holy convocation was to be called, as on other ſolemn feſtivals [g].

The feaſt of the tabernacles.

The feaſt of tabernacles.

THIS feſtival was ordained in memory of the forty years abode of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs; for which reaſon it is called the feaſt of the tabernacles, or tents (A); not only becauſe they lived in tents, or booths, during all that time, but becauſe it was to be celebrated in ſuch kind of booths, made of the branches of ſeveral ſorts of trees, ſuch as willows, palms, olives, and the like (B), and erected in the moſt decent and convenient manner [h].

THIS

[g] Levit. xxiii. 15, 16, 18, 19. Exod. xxxiv. 22. Numb. xxviii. 26, & alib. [h] Levit. xxiii. 40, & ſeq. & alib.

(A) The original calls it חג הסכות, Chagg haſſukoth, the feaſt of the tents or booths, from which the Greeks gave it the name of Σκηνοπηγια, Skenopegia (94). Though the text ſays it was appointed in memory of their abode in the wilderneſs; yet the Chaldee paraphraſt ſeems to have underſtood it, not of their living in tents, but in the open air, when he renders the word סוכות, Succoth, Tents, by ממלא ענניס, the ſhade of the clouds. It is likewiſe thought to have been inſtituted as a feaſt of thankſgiving for the concluſion of their harveſt and vintage, which did generally end there about this time, which anſwers to the beginning of our October.

(B) Moſes gives us a fuller deſcription of this feaſt (95) than of any other, probably becauſe it was not to be celebrated till after they were ſettled in the promiſed land; but as to the particular trees of which the booths were made, and the manner of their ſtructure, they are not ſo eaſily underſtood. The firſt wood that is mentioned there is עץ הדר, Gbetz hadar, goodly tree, or, as the original imports, rich or magnificent wood, which the Jews will have to be the citron tree (96). The others are the תמר, Thamar, or Palm; the third עץ עבות, which ſignifies any thick or buſhy wood; and the laſt, ערבי נחל, which certainly ſignifies river or water willows: But when Nehemiah (97) directs the people what branches to gather for the revival of this feaſt, he calls the firſt זית, Zajith, the olive, the ſecond עץ שמן, Gbetz ſhemen, fat or oily wood, which is applicable to any wood that abounds with turpentine, as the pine, fir, &c. the third is called הדס, Hadas, concerning which we know little but the name; and to

(94) LXX, & 1 Maccab. x. 21. 2 Maccab. i. 9, & alib. (95) Levit. xxiii. 40. (96) Vide Munſt. in loc. (97) Nehem. viii. 15.

theſe

THIS feaſt was the third grand one, and equal in ſolemnity to the other two, except in what related particularly to the paſſover. It began on the eve of the fifteenth day of the ſeventh month called Tiſri, which was the firſt of the civil year, and anſwered to part of our September, by which time all the harveſt being finiſhed and brought in, they returned their ſolemn thanks to GOD for it [1]. It was to laſt ſeven days, the firſt and laſt of which were kept with the greateſt ſtrictneſs (C), by repairing to the tabernacle, or temple, with theſe three he adds the palm and thick wood, concerning which we are alſo in the dark, though the Jews think it was the myrtle, which they have uſed ever ſince; and ſeveral interpreters have tranſlated it ſo accordingly; in particular Joſephus (98), the Syriac, the generality of rabbies, and Chriſtians. However, the two firſt are differently named from thoſe in Leviticus, but whether they are the ſame trees or not is neither certain nor of great importance. It is rather more likely, by this difference of names in thoſe two places, that they were not ſo ſcrupulous about the exact choice of them, as about getting ſuch as were the moſt beautiful, fragrant, and convenient, that the land could afford, and eſpecially ſuch as would beſt keep their verdure during thoſe ſeven days. This, at leaſt, was the caſe of the wiſe Caraites, who, deſpiſing the niceties of the Cabbaliſts, thought they ſufficiently anſwered the deſign of the law-giver, if they lived in ſuch tents or booths as their foreſathers had done in the wilderneſs; whilſt the Talmudiſts and their commentators have rather obliterated it by their numberleſs additions to it †.

[1] Exod. xxiii. 16.

(C) The firſt day of this feſtival was uſhered in by a general proceſſion, in which the men carried branches of thoſe trees mentioned in the laſt note, ſome in one hand, and ſome in the other, waving them about to the four winds, and ſinging ſome pſalms or hymns proper for the ſolemnity, and crying hoſanna! which word doth properly ſignify, ſave we beſeech thee; from this word the laſt day of the feaſt, on which this ceremony of carrying palms round the altar was performed ſeven times, and with greater ſolemnity, in memory, as is pretended (99) of the taking of Jericho , was called Hoſanna Rabbah, or the day of the great Hoſanna.

The Jews add, that every Iſraelite who neglected to carry their branches any morning of the ſolemnity, and to go with them round

(98) Antiq. lib. iii. c. 10. Talbin. Leo Jud. Jun. Vatabl. Buxtorf. Rab. Heb. tom. 1. lib. iv. c. 24, & al. ſæpe. † Vide Maimon. Tract. סוכה. Arbab, Tarum Mamon. Tract. ישיבה, & alib.
(99) Buxtorf. ibid.  Hottinger. Hiſt. Orient. Fabric. Calend. & al.

the

with palms and other branches in their hands, by marching round the altar, and singing the praises of GOD; by sacrifices peculiar to the solemnity, over and above the usual ones, and by a cessation from all servile works, except cookery [k].

THEY were likewise obliged to dwell in those booths all the seven days, and to eat and drink and lie in them (D), unless lawfully hindered [l].

THE

[k] Numb. xxix. 12, & alib. [l] Levit. xxiii. 42.

the altar of burnt-offering, was not to eat during all that day. The hundred and eighteenth psalm is likewise supposed to have been sung on, if not composed for, that festival, because there are not only several expressions in it that have an affinity to it, such as these: אנא יהוה הושיעה נא, אנא יהוה הצליחה נא ana adonai hoshiibah na, ana adonai hatzlichah na (100); but also from the very analogy of the whole composure with the ceremonies of that feast; such as the praying more particularly for the coming of the Messiah, for the prosperity of the next year, the fetching of water from the pool of Siloah, and the like; but whether these and several other particulars, which they observed in it, were used during the standing of the first temple, or were afterwards introduced by Esdras and others of their great synagogue in process of time, is too uncertain to be dwelt longer upon. As for the ceremony of fetching water from Siloah's pool, it seems to be of much later date, and to have been introduced but a little before our Saviour's time, though some of the Jews attribute the institution of it to the prophets Haggai and Zechariah [1]. Our Saviour is thought to have alluded to this, when he cried in the temple, on the last day of this feast, If any man thirst let him come unto me, &c. (2).

(D) The Jews except out of this number the sick and their nurses, and those who could not bear either the dampness of the earth, or the fragrancy of the boughs. They add, that as these booths were not to be covered with any thing but branches, and these not to be set up so thick but that they might see the stars through them; they were allowed to retire into their own houses whenever it rained through them [3]. It is not at all unlikely, that from these ceremonies of carrying branches in their hands, &c. Pharaeb might take it in his head to affirm, that the Jews celebrated

(100) Ps cxviii. 25. (1) Vide Cun ubi sup. Calm. sub voce Pentecost. Meyer, Fest. Heb. Goddwin's Mos. & Har. & al. Vide & Mishn. sub tit. סוכה, & Woot & al. Comment. in cap (2) John vii. 37, 38. (3) Vide Munst. in Levit. xxiii. Præc. affi. & neg. & auct. sup. citat.

THE ſacrifices peculiar to this feaſt were, on the firſt day, thirteen bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of a year old, all without blemiſh; which were offered up in a burnt-offering, with their uſual meat and drink-offerings, conſiſting of a certain quantity of flour mingled with oil, and ſome wine, brated this feaſt to Bacchus, and that they entered into their temples with branches of the vine and thyrſe in their hands, though he knew not what was done in the inſide of them (4). It is true, that Joſephus, ſpeaking of this feaſt, and of the noſegay or bunch of greens which the Jews wore in it (5), calls it εἰρεσιώνη, which among the Greeks ſignified a bunch of olive tied up with wool, on which did hang great variety of fruit. This noſegay uſed to be carried by a child, and laid at the gate of the temple of Apollo (6). But our author here tells us, that the Jewiſh one was made up of myrtle, willow, and palm, on which hung little ſprouts of peach, or, as others render it, young citrons. However that be, Spencer has from thence fancied, that it was inſtituted by Moſes in imitation of the Heathen, who about that time uſed to celebrate ſome feaſts to their gods, with the ſame mirth and ſolemnity (7); but Moſes gives us a quite different reaſon, namely, that their poſterity might know, that God had made the Iſraelites to dwell in booths at their coming out of Egypt (8), and elſewhere, that they departed from Rameſes and encamped at Succoth (9), ſo called from the booths which they reared up there, the place abounding with proper materials for them.

To

Walton adds another reaſon to this of Moſes, namely, that it was on the tenth day of the month Tizri that Moſes came down the ſecond time from the mount, and brought them the joyful news that God was appeaſed for the ſin of the golden Calf, and that he had ordered the tabernacle of the congregation to be reared up (which that idolatrous defection had obſtructed for a time), in token that he did now no longer diſdain to be among them, ſeeing he vouchſafed to dwell with them in the tabernacle (10); and as he obſerves there, that this happened ſix months after the exod, it doth account for that feaſt being inſtituted in that month, rather than in the firſt, in which the people began to live in booths or tents. Maimon gives indeed another reaſon for it, namely, that that ſeaſon was fitter to dwell in booths, than the other (11); but he forgets, that if there be any difference between the months Ni-

(4) Sympoſiac. probl. v (5) Ant lib. iii. c. 10. (6) Vide Gloſſ. in voc. (7) De Leg. rit. Jud lib 1. c. 6. & lib. iii. c. 8. (8) Levit. xxiii. 43 (9) Exod. xii. 37. See Vol II. p. 408, & 525. (10) Harmon. Evang ad Luc iii. 21. ap. Meyer. de Temp. Sacr. cap. 16. § 3. (11) More Nevoch. lib. iii. c. 43. מהריץ, de Rit. Jud. per tot. ann. Vide Meyer ubi ſup. § 4.

ſan

To these was added likewise a kid, for a sin-offering, which was offered up in the name of the whole people of Israel; besides the usual morning and evening sacrifices, which were never to be intermitted, and those which any one might offer out of devotion. On the second day they offered twelve bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs; with their concomitant offerings of flour and wine, and a kid, as on the first day; and thus on the third, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh, they offered the same sacrifices, with this difference only, that they lessened every day one bullock, so that on this last day they sacrificed but seven (E); as for the other offerings, they continued the sen and Tizri, that is, between March and April, and September and October, the former seems to have the preference. And therefore the learned R. Jacob Levita doth judiciously enough observe, that God did choose the latter for the celebration of that feast, because that was the time in which the cold mornings, winds, and rains, obliged people to quit such kind of dwellings, who had lived in them all the summer, for the sake of coolness; whereas, had he appointed it in Nisan, the fifteenth of which answers to about the beginning of our April, there would have been nothing singular enough to have put them in mind of the occasion of it, seeing that was the season in which people left their houses for such airy booths (12). However, as this festival was likewise instituted as a thanksgiving for the conclusion of their harvest and vintage; upon which account it was also called חג לולב, Chagg lulabb, the feast of branches. and חג תאסף, the feast of gathering †; this is reason sufficient for its being appointed in that month, in which the whole was generally finished. Several interpreters, both Jewish and Christian, have thought that the psalms which are intit ed על הגתית, Ghal Hagittith, which are the 8th, 81st, and 84th, were composed for this solemnity, because the word Gittith signifies a wine-press (13). But Leo de Modena (14) tells us, that the psalms which begin with הללויה, Hallelujah, that is, the 111th, 112th, 113th, &c. to the 118th, were the proper ones to be sung on that day. Those who are curious to know how the Jews do observe this feast since their dispersion, may find a full account of it in the same author and place.

(E) The reason which the Jews give for lessening one bullock every day is, that the whole number of them offered in those seven days amounted to seventy, which they say is the number of the nations for whom these sacrifices were offered, that they might dwindle by little and little, till they were all brought under the sceptre

(12) מיהריל, de Fest. Jud. p tot. ann † Vide Abarb. in Levit. 23. Meyer, & al. (13) Vide Theoph. in John vii. (14) Cerem. Jud part. ii. c. 7.

the ſame throughout. On the eighth or laſt day, which was the moſt ſolemn of all, and on which they were to hold a ſolemn aſſembly, and to abſtain from all ſervile work, they offered but one bullock, one ram, and ſeven lambs, beſides the goat for a ſin-offering, and the uſual and voluntary ſacrifices *; which laſt did riſe and fall, according as their harveſt had been more or leſs plentiful. Laſtly, on this day the firſt fruits of thoſe things, which were of later growth, were brought up and offered to GOD, and theſe came ſometimes in ſuch numbers, that they were forced to continue the feaſt one day longer [m].

The Feaſt of the trumpets and new moons.

The feaſt of trumpets.

WE have already taken notice, that the month Tizri was the firſt of the civil, as that of Abib or Niſan was of the ſacred year; this feaſt was appointed to be kept on the firſt and ſecond day of that month. It was to be uſhered in by the ſound of trumpets, to be kept holy, ſceptre of the Meſſiah, who is emphatically called the deſire of all nations (15). Thoſe who have called this eighth day the Hoſanna-rabbah (16), are certainly contradicted by all the Jews, who affirm that it was the ſeventh day (17); as for this eighth day, on which there was to be, what moſt interpreters render as we do, a ſolemn aſſembly; the Hebrew word עצרת, Ghetzereth, ſignifies a retention, or, as our margin hath it (18), reſtraint, for which reaſon they affirm, that, after the ſeventh day was over, and ſo conſequently the feſtival, the people uſed to ſtay, or to be detained one day longer (19). On this day it is, that the Jews end the laſt paraſha or ſection of the pentateuch, and, immediately after, begin the firſt, that they may not ſeem to be better pleaſed with having ended the one, than with beginning the other (20), and for this reaſon it is called חג שמחת תורה, the feaſt of joy of the law (21).

* Ibid. ver. 14. ad fin. [m] Vide SIGONIUS, BERTRAND, CUNÆUS, MEYER, GOODWIN, & al.

(15) Haggai ii. 7. Vide Hoſpin. Orig. Feſt. in loc. Goodwin's Moſ. & Aar. lib iii. c. 6. § 8. (16) Goodwin, ubi ſup. Calm. in voc. Tabernacle (17) Vide Viſon. ubi ſup. Shulchan, Haruch, Arbah, Thurim, & al. (18) Levit xxiii. 36. (19) Vide Munſt. ibid. Meyer, de Feſt. c. xvi. § 15. (20) Buxtorf in Abbreviat. & Synag. Jud. c. 28. Vide & Abarb. in Deut. 31. (21) אחרון, Exod. xxiii. 16. & xxxiv. 22.

Free

free from all ſervile work, and to be diſtinguiſhed from other new moons by particular ſacrifices [n].

As the ſcripture doth no where give the reaſon of this feſtival, authors are much divided about it; the Jews in general believe, it was inſtituted in memory of the creation, which happened on that month (F) †, though ſome rabbies think, that is was alſo in memory of Iſaac's deliverance, and of the ram that was caught by the horns, and ſubſtituted for him [o]. Some of the fathers think, it was in memory of the law being given upon mount Sinai [p], at which time the trumpet and thunder were heard: others, laſtly, from ſome of the ceremonies obſerved by the Jews by way of preparation for, and from ſome of their notions about, this feſtival (G), have fancied, [n] Levit. xxiii. 24. Num. xxix. 1, & ſeq. † See Vol. I. p. 100. [o] Vide R. SAL. FAG. MUNST. & al. in Levit. xxiii. [p] BASIL. in Pſ. lxxxi. THEODORET. Qu. 32. in Levit.

(F) The Gemarra doth poſitively affirm, that בחשרי ובראו העולם, the world was created in the month of Tizri, for which reaſon it is thought, that this feaſt was ordained to prevent the old or civil year being obliterated by the ſacred, and obſerves, that that of the tabernacles was to be kept בתקפת השנה, at the revolution or return, or, as our verſion renders it, though not ſo properly, at the end of the year †. And the miſhnah adds, that the firſt day of this month is the head of the year, from which the ſeventh year, the jubilee, &c. are to be computed (22).

(G) The antient Jews had a notion, that God paſſed a kind of judgment upon men at this time, for the good or bad deeds of the foregoing year, according to which he ordered his bleſſings and puniſhments for the next (23). The miſhnah expreſly ſays —— that at the beginning of the year they paſs before him like ſheep, according to the ſaying of the pſalmiſt (24), from the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth, he faſhioneth their hearts alike, he conſidereth [or takes notice of] all their works. For this reaſon they thought that nothing could be more proper to awaken men from their ſleep of ſin than the ſound of the trumpets, according to that of the prophet Joel, (25), blow the trumpet in Sion, ſanctify a faſt, &c. Accordingly MAIMON obſerves from the Megillah-taanith, that the trumpets, which were more ſolemnly blown on faſt-days, were proper to excite men to prepare themſelves during the ten days, that were between this feaſt and † Vide Maim. Kidduſh hakodeſh, c. 9. (22) Tract. ראש שנה cap 1. Vide & Levit. xxv. 3, 5, 6. (23) Ubi ſup. (24) Pſ. xxxiii. 14, 15. Vide Hotting. & Wootton, in Miſhn. (25) Ch. ii. paſſ.

the

cied, that it was to put mankind in mind of the general reſurrection, which is to be uſhered in by the ſound of the trumpet [q]; but the moſt probable reaſon for this feaſt, and for proclaiming the entrance of the civil year by the ſound of trumpets, ſeems to be in order to render it more obſervable, ſeeing all their contracts, mortgages, bargains, and ſuch like, as well as their ſabbatic years and jubilees, were to be regulated by it [r]; for which reaſon the trumpets ceaſed not to ſound every where from ſun riſing to ſun ſetting *.

[q] Vide Goodw. ubi ſup. § 6. [r] Idem ibid. § 5. * Vide SHINDLER, ſub voc. שופר.

the next faſting day, or day of expiation, for the work of repentance (26). Remarkable is the ſpeech which a learned Jewiſh rabbi has tranſmitted to us (27), which then uſed to accompany the ſound of the trumpets. Awake, awake from your ſleep, awake, ye that deal in vanity, for deadly is the ſleep that holdeth you. Conſider ſeriouſly in your hearts who it is that ye are going to appear before to give an account, &c The apoſtle ſeems to allude to this in his epiſtle to the Epheſians (28).

Hitherto there is nothing either improbable or abſurd; but that is more than we can ſay of the additions which have been ſince made to the Talmud; we ſhall only inſtance in two or three of them: they believe, that God keeps three books, one of the good, a ſecond of the bad, and a third of thoſe that are neither one nor the other. The firſt is the book of life, the ſecond that of death, and thoſe that are in the third are to be transferred either to the firſt or ſecond, on the next expiation day, according as they grow better or worſe. Thoſe two books have two kinds of pages, the one for this life, the other for the next, and it is on this day that they think their names are written for that year. Upon this account they take particular care, whatever they do the reſt of the year, to be well employed about this time. Some appear at the ſynagogue in white, others in their ſhrouds, in token of repentance; others will plunge themſelves gradually into the water, confeſſing their ſins and ſmiting their breaſts as they ſink lower and lower, till they are over head and ears in it; and laſtly, others will give themſelves 49 laſhes on their bare backs, or procure ſomebody to do it for them, and after theſe mortifications and ſuitable prayers, &c. they wiſh one another the happineſs of being written down for a good year (29).

(26) More Nevoch. part iii. ch. 43. (27) ר' שם טוב, Comm. in Maim. in loc. (28) Ch. v. 14. Vide Goodw. ubi ſup. § 6. (29) Vide Buxtorf, Synag. Jud. Hoſpin, Goodwin, Leo de Moden. & al.

THE proper ſacrifices for this ſolemnity were a bullock, two rams, and ſeven lambs, offered up in a ſolemn burnt-offering, with the uſual addition of flour and wine, in the name of the whole nation, beſides the kid for a ſin-offering, and the daily and monthly ſacrifices [r].

The New Moons.

New moons THE Iſraelites were commanded to obſerve the firſt day of every month or moon, and to offer, beſides the uſual ſacrifices, a burnt-offering of two young bullocks, one ram, and ſeven lambs, with the uſual quantity of flour, wine, and oil [t]. The moſt ſolemn of all the twelve was that of the month Tizri, which we ſpoke of laſt, and which was kept holy upon a particular account. The reſt had nothing to diſtinguiſh them from common days, except the ſacrifices above-mentioned, which were accompanied with the ſound of the trumpets (H); making better chear, and perhaps [r] Num. xxix. 3, & ſeq. [t] Ibid. xxviii. 11, 12, &c.

(H) The fixing the time of the new moon, for want of aſtronomical tables, was done in this manner. The firſt men that obſerved, or thought they did obſerve the new moon, were to repair with all ſpeed to the grand council, and to give notice of it. An enquiry was then made, 1ſt, whether the perſons were credible witneſſes, and ſecondly, whether their report agreed with ſuch computations as they were then able to make; in which caſe the preſident proclaimed the new moon by ſaying מקדש, Mekudaſh, it is conſecrated, which word was twice repeated aloud by the people; after which it was ordered to be proclaimed every where by the ſound of the trumpet, or by other ways according to the times and places (30).

Some authors have denied that theſe new moons were proclaimed by the trumpet (31), and think, that only the firſt in their civil year was ſo; whereas the contrary is plain from the expreſs command of Moſes (32), to blow the trumpet in the beginning of their months; but whether the diſtinction which the Jews make between the trumpets which the text calls חצוצרות Chatzotzeroth, and thoſe that are called שופר, Shoper, and between the ſound that is called תרועה Terugbah; and that which is called קול, Col, voice, and תקע, Tekagh, be ſo well founded as they pretend, is hardly worth enquiring. They affirm however, that theſe two inſtruments differed in length, ſhape, and ſound, and that the one,

(30) Vide Hottinger, in Goodw. ubi ſup. § 7. ſub not. 5. (31) Goodw. ubi ſup. § 4. (32) Num. x. 10.

which

perhaps uſing ſome kind of devotion or aſſemblies peculiar to thoſe days. We find nothing like it indeed enjoined by Moſes, but one may gather the former from David's excuſe for abſenting himſelf from Saul's table on the firſt day of the month, and Saul's reſenting it [u], and the latter from what the Shunammite's huſband ſaid to diſſuade her from going to the prophet Eliſha, that it was neither new moon nor ſabbath [w].

HOWEVER, though in all other reſpects this day was like a common day, they were very ſcrupulous in the obſerving of it; and, as the ſpace of the moon's entering and coming out of the partile conjunction of the ſun, belongs one half to the old, and the other to the new month, and they had no ſure way of computing it with any exactneſs or certainty, they obſerved two days, namely, the laſt day of the old, and the firſt day of the new, for greater ſecurity. That this cuſtom began very early, ſeems plainly intimated in the inſtance we have given of Saul, wherein it is ſaid, that he excuſed David for his abſence on the firſt day, but reſented it on the ſecond.

THIS irregularity of the moon obliged them likewiſe to make ſome tranſpoſitions of the days of the month, in order to fix the beginning of that of Tizri; and of the reſt of the months according to that (I). But how early theſe tranſpoſitions began which was the nobler of the two, was founded on the firſt day of the new year, and the other on the firſt day of the month (33).

[u] 1 Sam. xx. 5, 18, 27. [w] 2 Kings iv. 23.

(I) The reaſon of this tranſpoſition was threefold, monthly, political, and mixt (34); the monthly was, leſt they ſhould celebrate the new moon before the old one was expired. The political was leſt two ſabbaths or days of reſt ſhould follow one another; becauſe, as it was forbid to dreſs victuals, bury their dead, &c. on ſuch days, they thought it a grievance to live two days upon cold meat, and to keep the dead bodies ſo long above ground. The mixed tranſpoſition is that which is done upon an account that is partly menſtrual and partly political. Theſe diſtinctions are in many reſpects very judicious and neceſſary, but they have branched them out at ſuch a rate, and with ſub-diſtinctions, and nice rules for the right uſe of them, that we chooſe to refer the readers that are curious about ſuch things, to thoſe authors mentioned above.

We ſhall only add with reſpect to theſe Neomeniæ, that our Spencer has a long diſſertation to prove, that the Heathen did likewiſe began is what cannot eaſily be conjectured. All that we know, is, that Scaliger has taken an infinite deal of pains to find out and rectify them, and that they have ſince been of great uſe in many caſes, as may be ſeen by the book itſelf, and by the authors quoted in the margin [x].

(33) Vide Hotting. ubi ſup. ſub note 3. lib. ii.

(34) Scalig. ubi ſup.

THESE are all the feaſt-days that were appointed by the Moſaic law, the Jews added in proceſs of time ſeveral others in memory of ſome great mercies, ſuch as that of Purim or Lots, in memory of their deliverance from Haman's cruelty [y], The dedication of the temple, and many more, which we ſhall not need mention here, becauſe they are below our epocha. All that needs be added to the foregoing is, that there was a command, that if any part remained unconſumed of the ſacrifices offered on thoſe ſolemnities, after the firſt and ſecond day, or even before, if the fleſh of them had contracted any filth, fly-blow, or ill ſmell, it was not to be eaten, but burned to aſhes [z].

Laws concerning the ſabbatic and jubilee years.

THE ſabbatic, or ſeventh year, and the jubilee, which happened once in ſeven times ſeven years, are alſo to be looked upon as ſolemn times. They were appointed by God, and deſigned for reſt and rejoicing; and as they did bear a kind of analogy, or rather were a kind of conſequence of the ſabbath, or ſeventh day, they may upon that account be alſo reckoned among their ſolemn feſtivals.

THE Moſaic law diſtinguiſhes four ſorts of years: 1. The civil, according to which all political matters were regulated, obſerve them in honour of the moon (35); but what he would inſinuate from it, that the Jewiſh ones were appointed in imitation of the others, is what we think a wild conjecture; neither do we ſee any reaſon for ſuppoſing, that either ſide did borrow this rite from the other: the worſhip of the moon being common to almoſt all the Heathen, it was natural enough for them to pay her ſome particular honour at her firſt appearance, without knowing any thing of the Jewiſh laws; and as for the other ſide of the ſuppoſition, it is what we have already oppoſed upon other heads, and ſhall avoid repeating here [†].

[x] De emendat. temp. HOSPIN. Orig. Feſt. BUXT. GOODW. MEY. USSER, & MUNSTER, & al. mult. [y] Esther c. ix. ver. 20, & ſeq. [z] Levit. vii. 15, & ſeq. Præc. aff. 207, 208.

(35) De leg. rit. lib. iii. c 1. differt. 4. [†] See Vol. II. p. 367, note (R), 556, note (Y), & 559, note (Z).

conſiſting

conſiſting of twelve ſolar, and afterwards of lunar, months (K), beginning at the month Tizri, or September, as we ſaid above. 2. The ſacred, which began at the month Nijan, or March, which was the ſeventh of the civil year, and regulated the order of all their religious ceremonies; ſo that the paſſover, which happened in the middle of that month, was, as it were, the mother of all the other feſtivals. 3. The ſabbatic, or ſeventh year; and 4. The jubilee or fiftieth year, which was kept at the end of ſeven weeks of years. We have already ſaid as much as is neceſſary concering the two firſt.

THE

(K) It is plain by the calculation which Moſes gives us of the days of the flood (36), and elſewhere, that the year conſiſted of 365 days, and conſequently of 12 ſolar months, the laſt of which conſiſted of 35 days; and it is more than probable, that, having been brought up in Egypt, he had learned that way of reckoning from them, becauſe they are generally allowed to be the firſt inventers of it, as we have ſeen in their hiſtory *. Beſides that it muſt have been the moſt known and eaſy method to the Iſraelites, who had been accuſtomed to it during their long abode there. Scaliger (37), and others after him have indeed ſuppoſed, that they had an intercalary month once in ſix ſcore years, but it is plain, that the ſcripture hints nothing like ſuch an intercalation, or year of 13 months; tho' it is not eaſy to gueſs what they did with the ſix additional hours of the Egyptians to the 365 days, without ſome ſuch ſuppoſition. However, Moſes, by the expreſs command of God (38), did afterwards compute the year by moons, for that is the meaning of the word חודש, Chodeſh, from חדש, to renew, though our Engliſh verſion renders it month; and theſe anſwered partly to each of our months, and parly to the next.

The ſame authors have imagined, that the Iſraelites had no names for their months before the captivity (39), becauſe they are often diſtinguiſhed only by their numbers, as firſt, ſecond, &c. yet it is certain, we find ſome of them called by particular names long before; thus we have ſeen, that the firſt month of the ſacred year was originally called אביב, Abib. We find likewiſe that of זיו, Ziv (40), איתנים, Ethanim 41), and בול, Bull (42); from which it is not improbable, that the others might likewiſe have their names, though they are not recorded, and are oftner mentioned by their numbers. As for the etymology of thoſe names, as well as of thoſe which they uſed after the captivity, about which the learned have puzzled their brains more than the thing deſerves, (36) Gen. vii. & viii. paſſ. * See Vol. I p. 472. (37) De emendat. temp. lib. iii. (38) Exod. xii. 2. (39) Vide Hotting. in Goodw. lib. iii. c. 1. § 13. note 3. (40) 1 Kings vi. 1. (41) Ibid. c. viii. 2. (42) Ibid. vi. 38.

Laws concerning the seventh years.

THE ſabbatic year was to be kept every ſeventh year; the obſervation of it conſiſted chiefly in the five following articles:

1. A total ceſſation from all manner of agriculture [a].

2. In leaving all the product of their ground to the poor, the orphan, and the ſtranger [b].

3. In the releaſe of all Hebrew ſlaves, unleſs they voluntarily renounced their proffered liberty, and choſe to abide by their old maſters; in which caſe they were to be brought before the judges, and to have their ears bored in their preſence, in token that they freely embraced a perpetual ſervitude, or at leaſt till the year of jubilee [c].

4. In the remiſſion of all debts from one Iſraelite to another; but this did not extend to ſtrangers, who were excluded that benefit [d].

5. It was to begin and end on the month Tizri, or September, that ſo there might be ſufficient time for gathering all the fruits of the earth of that year, and for ſowing it againſt the next year, that ſo the land might not lie fallow two years together [e] (L).

SOME

[a] Levit. xxv. 4. [b] Ibid. ver. 6. [c] Exod. xxi. 2, & ſeq. & alib. [d] Deut. xv. 1, & ſeq. [e] Levit. xxv. 9.

deſerves, we think them too uncertain to trouble our readers with it, and ſhall content ourſelves with ſubjoining a liſt of the names themſelves, which is as follows:

		Days.
1	Tiſri	30		September
2	Marcheſhvan	29		October
3	Chaſlev	30		November
4	Thebet	29	Anſwers to our	December
5	Sebat	30		January
6	Adar	29		February
7	Niſan	30		March
8	Yiar	29		April
9	Sivan	30		May
10	Thamuz	29		June
11	Abib	30		July
12	Elul	29		Auguſt.

To this liſt they added, in proceſs of time, the intercalary month, which they called ואדר, Veadar, that is, and, or, the ſecond, Adar, as that was the laſt of the ſacred year.

(L) This year is by Moſes called by ſeveral names, as שנה השבעית, Shaneh haſhbighith, the ſeventh year, שבת הארץ, Sabbath

SOME other laws we find relating to this year, ſuch as that thoſe ſervants, who were releaſed in it, ſhould not go away empty, but that a compenſation ſhould be made to them for their ſervice [f]; that they ſhould not withdraw any needful aſſiſtance from their poor brethren, by reaſon of the nearneſs

[f] Deut. xv. 13, & ſeq.

Sabbath baaretz, the ſabbath, or reſt of the earth; שמטה ליהוה, Shemitah Ladonai, the releaſe of the Lord, and the like. The time of the year in which it was to begin is no where fixed by Moſes, but is eaſily gathered from that of the jubilee, which was to begin on the 10th of the 7th month (43), and from the reaſon of the thing given under that article, as well as from the generality of Jewiſh authors. Neither is it agreed, how ſoon this ſabbatic year was obſerved after their entrance into Canaan, concerning which it would be endleſs to mention all the different conjectures of the learned, both Jews and Chriſtians. The reader may, if he pleaſes, conſult the authors quoted in the margin (44); all that we dare advance on the ſubject is, that if any opinion appears to us more probable than another, it is that of the learned archbiſhop Uſher, who fixes it on the ſeventh year after the manna ceaſed, at which time they began to ſow and till the ground ‡. Cunæus ſpeaks ſtill more particularly to the ſame effect; his words run thus (45): there is no neceſſity for beginning the epoch of the ſeven years at the diviſion of the land of Canaan, but rather at the death of Moſes, which was the 41ſt year after the exod, and then the firſt ſabbatic year will be on the 7th after the paſſage of Jordan; ſo that after having been taken up ſix years in the conqueſt and dividing of the land, the ſeventh proved in all reſpects a year of reſt, ſeeing they reſted from their conqueſts, and peaceably enjoyed the fruit of them, and of the conquered land.

There is likewiſe no ſmall diſpute, whether the releaſe of debts, and of ſlaves was to take place at the beginning or end of the ſabbatic year. The original orders it to be done מקץ שבע שנים, at, or from the end of ſeven years; from which Maimon would infer, that it was not to take place till the ſeventh year was expired; but though there is ſome difference between ſaying at the end of ſeven years, and at the end of the ſeventh year, yet is it generally believed to have taken place at the beginning of it, becauſe the week of years was then complete.

(43) Levit. xxv. 9. (44) Gemar. Kidduſh. Gemar. Hieroſ. in loc. Sedar. Holam. Maimon. de Shemitah & Yobel. paſſ. Abarb. in Joſh xiv. 12, & alib. R. Dav. Gantz. in Zemach. & al. Scaliger. Annotat. in Chronic. Euſeb. & alib. Goodw. Moſ. & Aar. lib. iii. c 9. Munſt. Calend. Meyer. de Temp Sacr. cap. 17. Cun. Calm. et al. ‡ Sub A. M. 2554. (45) Vide Balmag. Rep. Heb. tom. ii. c. 8.

nearneſs of the ſeventh year [g] ; with ſome others relating to the opening of their fields, orchards, and vineyards to all comers, and the like (M). Among theſe, was that remarkable [g] Ibid. ver. 7, & ſeq.

(M) It may be perhaps asked, what they lived upon during that year, if they muſt relinquiſh the product of all their lands to the poor? But it muſt be remembered, that they were allowed to take as much out of it as was ſufficient for themſelves and their families (46). However, as ſome of them made a ſcruple to touch even any of it we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that they made what proviſion they could againſt that time of ſuch things as could be eaſily preſerved, ſuch as corn, wine, oil, olives, raiſins, figs, dates, pulſe, and the like; and as to herbs, roots, fruits, and all kind of סְפִיחַ, or things of ſpontaneous growth, they might gather them in their own or any other ground. Tho' even this, ſome of their rigid ſcribes pronounce unlawful, not ſo much becauſe the law expreſly forbids it, as for fear of tranſgreſſing by too great a liberty (47). But the misfortune is, that before the Babyloniſh captivity they were ſo far from being ſuch ſcrupulous obſervers of theſe laws, that their prophets were continually upbraiding them with the univerſal breach of them, and in particular, for defrauding and oppreſſing the poor in this point; but after they had been chaſtiſed for their incorrigible diſobedience, they ran into the contrary extreme, and this produced that vaſt number of gloſſes and ordinances, which we find in their Talmud and rabbinical writings, and which grew up to ſuch a height of ſuperſtition, that it almoſt obliterated the main end and deſign of the law. Tho' it muſt alſo be owned, that they were not alike ſtrict, and that ſome of their head doctors and lawyers took as much pains to find out pretences for eluding the law, as others did to have it ſcrupulouſly obſerved. We ſhall give but one inſtance, which relates to the expreſs command of remitting all debts on this and the jubilee year, where, beſides their excepting ſeveral articles, ſuch as what we may properly call a tavern ſcore, or what a man owes to a victualler; debts for which either pledge or bond has been given, and the like, the famous Hillel, a man in the higheſt repute amonſt them, next to the inſpired writers, obſerving that the rich forbore to lend to the poor, by reaſon of the approaching year of releaſe, made an ordinance, that upon a man's putting a caveat in the judges court to this effect: This I deliver to you the judges of this place, ſuch a one and ſuch a one, to the end, that whatever money I lend, I may challenge it whenever I pleaſe, he ſhould be free from this law of remiſſion (48). This plainly ſhews, that markable one, which we have taken notice of in another place, of reading the law before all the people on the day of pentecoſt. For as they were to abſtain from all works of huſbandry, there is no doubt but there was a greater concourſe to hear it, than could have been at any other intermediate year.

(46) Levit. xxv. 6. (47) Vide Ben Maim. ubi ſup. Tract. שְׁבִיעִית, cap vi. (48) Ibid. c. x. & ſeq. Vide Hotting. in GOODW. ubi ſup. not. 6. Munſt. Jun. Mey. & al.

THE reaſons and excellence of theſe laws, as well as thoſe that relate to the jubilee, are obvious to every one, being extremely proper to breed up a faithleſs and ſtubborn nation in a conſtant dependence upon, and ſubjection to, the divine providence, and to inſpire them with ſentiments of mercy and beneficence towards their poor brethren, ſervants, ſlaves, and ſtrangers, by reminding them of their Egyptian ſlavery, which is aſſigned as one of the reaſons of this inſtitution [h]; to which we may add another, namely the great advantage which the land received by being left fallow every ſeventh year. However, the generality of the Jews, and a great number of Chriſtians, both antient and modern, have looked upon the main deſign of theſe inſtitutions to be typical of the millenium, or thouſand years reſt; for as the pentateuch conſecrates the ſeventh day, the ſeventh year, and the ſeven times ſeventh year to reſt, they conclude, that the world will laſt ſix thouſand years in the ſtate we ſee it in; or as R. Elias in the Talmud expreſſes it, two thouſand years without the law, two thouſand under the law, and two thouſand under the Meſſiah [i]; after which comes the grand ſabbath of one thouſand years; but this is too nice a point for us, and which we willingly refer to the divines; only we beg leave to obſerve, from a modeſt hint of the learned Mr. Mede [k], that as long as we perſiſt in denying the ſecond appearance of Chriſt upon earth, in as glorious a manner as his firſt was obſcure, we ſhall hardly be able to convince Jews that he is the true promiſed Meſſiah; becauſe we can give no tolerable reaſon, why the prophecies concerning his humiliation and ſufferings ſhould be underſtood in a literal, and thoſe of his exaltation and glorious reign in a ſpiritual ſenſe. Whereas were the doctrine of the Millenium, which is far from being anti-the command was deſigned to extend to all debts, elſe there would have been no occaſion for their refuſing their aſſiſtance to the poor upon that account, much leſs for God's forbidding it ſo expreſly as he did (49).

[h] Ibid. ver. 15. [i] Tract. Sanhedr. § Helec. Vide HOSPIN. GOODW. MEY. MUNST. & al. [k] Clav. Apocalypt. ad fin.

(49) Deut. xv. 9.

evangelical, in any but a Jewiſh and carnal ſenſe, generally received, it would effectually anſwer one of their ſtrongeſt objections, without caſting the leaſt reflection on the Chriſtian religion, whilſt the Jews were left at their liberty to take it in as groſs, and we in as ſpiritual and refined a ſenſe, as we ſaw fit (N).

(N(We do not pretend to take upon us to ſhew how far this doctrine can be proved from the ſcriptures of the Old and New Teſt. eſpecially from the prophecies of Ezekiel, Daniel, and of the Revelations. The reader may ſee that ſubject copiouſly treated by Mr. Mede above-mentioned, among many others. But with reſpect to the Jews expectation of a glorious Meſſiah, it is ſo ſtrongly rivetted in them, that they have even gone ſo far as to acknowledge two Meſſiahs; namely, one ſuffering and obſcure, deſpiſed and perſecuted, whom they believed to have appeared at the time foretold by the prophets; and the other a glorious one, of the ſeed of David, whoſe kingdom is to reach unto the end of the world, and is ſtill expected by them; tho' they own themſelves altogether in the dark concerning the time of his coming. But this notion of a twofold Meſſiah is plainly oppoſite to that prophecy of Iſaiah, which appropriates both thoſe characters to one and the ſame perſon (50)' However, as to this firſt character, it is plain, the antient Jews were not fond of publiſhing it, whatever notion they might have of it. This is plain from the Septuagint's paraphraſe of that verſe of the pſalmiſt (51), in which the Meſſiah is repreſented as voluntarily taking upon him the form of a ſervant, by an expreſſion alluding to the law of boring thoſe ſervants ears that refuſed to be releaſed, ſpoken of under this article. The words in the original are אזנים כרית לי, Oznaim carita li, mine ears haſt thou bored; theſe interpreters fearing, in all probability, leſt ſuch a ſervile mark ſhould be thought too derogatory to his character, have rendered it σῶμα δὲ κατηρτίσω μοι, a body haſt thou prepared me, or adapted for me, which in the main comes near to the ſame purpoſe, and only ſoftens very much in the expreſſion; the firſt implying by the boring of the ears, that Chriſt freely ſubmitted himſelf to become God's perpetual ſervant, and the other, that God had given him a body fit for the ſervice he had voluntarily undertaken at his coming into the world. This is therefore the reaſon of the difference between the words in the original, and in the quotation from it by the apoſtle to the Hebrews (52), and is a further confirmation of the writers of the New Teſtament making uſe of the Septuagint verſion; and this will, we hope, apologize for this digreſſion, if it may be deemed ſuch.

(50) Iſai. liii & alib. Vid. R. Mart. Pug. Fid. Dupleſs. Advertiſſ. ad. Judæ. Grot. de Verit. Bartoloc. Bibliot: Rabbinic. Munſt. Calm. & al mult. (51) Pſ. xl, 6. comp. with ver. 8, & ſeq. (52) Hebr. x 5.

Laws

Laws relating to the Jubilee.

THIS ſolemnity is the laſt, and moſt conſiderable, that God enjoined to the Iſraelites. It was to be celebrated every fiftieth year [l], and had this advantage over that of the ſeventh, that it releaſed all ſlaves that had refuſed their liberty; annihilated all debts, and reſtored to every man all his lands, houſes, wife, children, and poſſeſſions, however alienated; and every Hebrew ſervant or ſlave to his own tribe and family, liberty and property, how and upon what account ſoever he had been deprived of them [m], during thoſe fifty years: for this reaſon it is, that we think after many commentators, that it was called Jubilee, or Yobel, becauſe it reſtored every thing to its priſtine ſtate (O). However it muſt be obſerved, that this privilege extended no farther than to the original Iſraelites, or to thoſe who had been incorporated into their religion and common-wealth by circumciſion; theſe indeed might claim the benefit of it, tho' they had been ſold for ſlaves for any crimes, even by the ſentence of the grand ſanhedrin [n]; but as for the Gentiles, they were wholly excluded from it [o]. Jubilee year.

[l] Levit. xxv. 8, & ſeq. [m] Ibid. ver. 28, 41, & alib. [n] Ibid. ver. 40. [o] Ibid. ver. 46. Vide MAIMON. Tract. עבדים, c. 9.

(O) Authors are fallen into various opinions about the etymon of this word, ſome thinking that it is ſo called from the Hebrew יובל, Yobel, which ſignifies a trumpet made of rams horns, from the Arabic, Jobelah, a ram; becauſe the Jubilee was proclaimed by the ſound of that inſtrument (53). Others, that it is a fictitious word in imitation of the ſound of that inſtrument (54); others again think, that it comes from Jubal, the firſt inventer of muſical inſtruments (55): But we prefer that which derives it from the obſolete root יבל, Yabal, in hiphil, הוביל, hobil, which ſignifies to recal, reſtore, bring back, &c. which is what the Jubilee did. The reader may ſee that word occur in many places of ſcripture, and particularly in the Pſalms, where among others he will find this expreſſion: יובילון שי למורה. Yobilù ſai lammorah, bring preſents to him that is to be feared (56).

(53) Rabbin. ſer. Omn Vide Kimch. in Rad ſub. יובל, Goodw. Mey. Munſt. &c. (54) Bochart. Hier. p. Buckius Annot. in Maimon. Shemitah veyobel, note 5. (55) Goodwin, Hotting. &c. (56) Pſ. lxxvi. ver. penult. vide & Job x. 19. xxi. 30, 32. Jerem. xxxi. 9. & alib.

SOME think, that the Israelites were wont to reckon by Jubilees, as the Greeks did by Olympiads, the Romans by Lustra, and the Christians by Indictions [p]; and probably enough they did so, because they were always to have regard to that year in all bargains of lands, houses, and the like, which generally sold for more or less, according to their nearness to, or distance from it [q]. The case was somewhat different with respect to the sale of houses that were within walled towns, tho' not of those that were in the country, for those might be redeemed at any time within the space of twelve months, by paying the whole sum of the purchase: but if they were not redeemed with in that time, they were not to return to their original owner at the year of Jubilee [r] (P). As for the possessions of the priests and Levites, they had certain priviledges, and immunities, which shall be spoken of in a more proper place [s].

DURING the whole twelve months all kind of agriculture was expresly forbid, the poor had the benefit of the harvest and vintage, and of all the product of that year, and all other things of that nature went on after the same manner as they did in the sabbatic year. The beginning of it was by God's own appointment fixed to the seventh month Tisri [t], which is about the time of the autumnal equinox; but in what year after they entered into the land of Canaan they celebrated the first Jubilee, and whether from the beginning of every forty ninth or fiftieth year is not easy to determine. As to the former, the Jews begin to reckon the first of the fifty years, from the fourteenth after Joshua's passing the Jordan. Their computation ran thus, according to the learned Maimon [u]: "From their entrance into Canaan to their being "carried out of it are seventeen Jubilees, and the year in "which they went into captivity and the temple was de-"stroyed was the seventh or sabbatic year, and the thirty "sixth of the 18th Jubilee, which they prove thus: the first

[p] HOSPIN. Orig. Fest. c. 9. Goodw. Hotting. [q] Levit. xxv. 27, & seq. [r] Ibid. ver. 29, 30. [s] Ibid. ver. 32. & seq. [t] Ibid. ver. 8, 9. [u] Ubi sup. c. x. ex. Vers. BECKII.

(P) The Jewish lawyers add another exception, from what authority we cannot find, that those who sold their houses, lands, &c. in order to traffick and make a gain of the purchase money, or indeed upon any other account than to supply the necessities of life, were excluded the benefit of the Jubilee (57).

(57) Maimon. Shemit. veyobel. c xii.

"temple

" temple ſtood 110 years, after which there was an end of " that epocha; the land then did lie waſte ſeventy years, and " then the ſecond temple was built, which ſtood likewiſe " 120 years. In the ſeventh year after its reſtoration, Ezra " went up to Jeruſalem; and from this time began a ſecond " epocha. On the thirteenth after the rebuilding of the tem- " ple, they celebrated the ſecond ſabbatic year, and ſeven " weeks of years, or forty nine years, being elapſed, they " conſecrated the fiftieth; for tho' they did not celebrate the " Jubilee after their return from the captivity, nevertheleſs " they continued to compute the years of it in order to cele- " brate the ſabbatic ones (Q)." Thus far Maimon: but here it muſt be obſerved, that he has followed the reckoning of Joſephus, Philo, and all the Jews, who not only place the firſt ſabbatic year, and conſequently the Jubilee, ſeven years later than Uſher and Cunæus, namely, from the fourteenth year after their entrance into Canaan, but allow fifty complete years to every Jubilee; whereas that primate, and with him a great number of learned Chriſtians [x], think, that it was celebrated every forty ninth year, as we ſhall ſee preſently. However, as he has here rectified the Jewiſh chronology in ſome other reſpects, ſo he reckons but the ſame number of Jubilees that Maimon doth before the deſtruction of the temple; as the reader may ſee in the table at the end of his annals under the word Jubilee.

THE firſt of them he fixes on the 3318th year of the Julian period, which is the 2609th of the world, or 1396 years before Chriſt, and the ſeventeenth or laſt before the captivity in 4102 of the Julian period, 3393 of the world, and 612 before Chriſt. As for the remainder, which he has carried down to the thirtieth, or to the year of the world 4030, they are only added in order to make a complete calculation of them to the thirtieth year of Chriſt, or to the beginning of [x] HUGO CARDINAL. GERARD MERCAT. in Chronol. JOS. SCALIGER, PETAV. CALVIS. LANSBERG, CAPELL. CUNÆUS, SPANHEIM, JUN. LE CLERC. & al. mult.

(Q) There is ſome difficulty in apprehending what that author means by keeping up the computation of the Jubilee, in order to obſerve the ſabbatic years, for the latter uſed to regulate the former, while it continued, but after it ceaſed, the ſabbatic years could eaſily be kept in their courſe without it; and ſo they did accordingly; for Joſephus tells us, that Alexander the Great remitted to the Jews the ſeventh year's tribute, upon that very account (58).

(58) Joſ. Ant. lib. xi. c. ult.

tho

the gospel. For it is plain, as Maimon observes in the place above quoted, that the Jews observed no Jubilee after their return from the Babyloniſh captivity, either with reſpect to the ceſſation of agriculture, the reſtitution of lands, manumiſſion of ſlaves, or any of thoſe ends for which it had been inſtituted. Neither indeed was it practicable; for the ſeventy years captivity having quite obliterated the memory and pretenſion to their forefathers land, every one, at their return, ſettled himſelf as well as he could, in the confuſion that then reigned, after which their affairs did take a quite new face in Judæa; whilſt a very conſiderable number of their brethren choſe to continue in the place of their captivity.

THE next controverted point is, whether it was celebrated on the forty ninth or on the fiftieth year? We have already given a liſt of the principal authors who are for the former; thoſe who declare for the latter, (without reckoning Philo, Joſephus, the Targums, and all the Jews in general, Caraites as well as Talmudiſts) are ſtill more conſiderable.---- Among theſe we may reckon ſome of the fathers [y], and a great number of moderns [z]. The truth is, that either hypotheſis may be defended from the different expreſſions which Moſes makes uſe of in the inſtitution of it; and on the other hand there are certain difficulties in each of them which cannot be eaſily ſolved. We ſhall content ourſelves with a bare hinting of them. In one place he expreſly commands them to number ſeven ſabbaths of years, or forty and nine years, and on this laſt to proclaim the Jubilee by the ſound of the trumpet [a]; and in the very two following verſes he ſays, that the fiftieth year ſhall be that of the Jubilee. The grand objection againſt the firſt of theſe is, that if Moſes had meant that the forty ninth ſhould be the Jubilee year, there would have been no neceſſity for his forbidding all kind of agriculture and the like on that year, ſince that was forbid of courſe, by its being likewiſe the ſabbatic year, for ſeven times ſeven make forty nine. On the other hand it is objected, that if the fiftieth year was to be the Jubilee, it will follow that the land muſt have had two ſabbaths, or lain fallow two years, which is thought an unreaſonable ſuppoſition, ſince without a miracle it muſt, in all likelihood, have cauſed a dearth in the land. This Cunæus inſiſts very much upon in favour of the forty ninth year, tho' he paſſes

[y] EUSEB. S. JEROM. AUGUST. GREG. Mag. ISIDOR. & al.
[z] TOSTAT. BONFRER. FAGIUS, JUNIUS, DRUSIUS, VILLET. HOTTINGER, SCHINDLER, PRIF. HEIDEKKER, LEWSDEN, CALMET, & al. [a] Levit. xxv. 8, 9.

by

by the great difficulty above mentioned as of no weight; but we think this objection of the two concurring ſabbaths may be more eaſily anſwered. For in the firſt place, thoſe who are for the 50th year do rightly enough obſerve, that there is no neceſſity for ſuppoſing, that the land reſted two years, ſeeing the lawgiver's intention ſeems fully anſwered by the repoſe of one, and that upon the account of its being ſabbatical; and that therefore, when Moſes ſays that the 50th ſhall be a year of reſt, he uſes only that round number to expreſs the uneven one of 49. There is indeed hardly any other way of reconciling the difference of Moſes's expreſſions; and one may add, that as the ſolemnity began on the firſt month of the civil, which was the ſeventh of the ſacred year, it might be called indifferently the 49th or 50th year, without any contradiction or difficulty. What convinces us further that this is more than a bare conjecture is, that Moſes makes uſe of the ſame calculation for the feaſt of pentecoſt. The analogy which ſeven weeks of days bears to ſeven weeks of years is obvious to every eye; now as it is plain, that the pentecoſt did not begin on the 49th, but on the 50th day; ſo we ſee no reaſon why the ſame may not be allowed with reſpect to the Jubilee.

HOWEVER, as to thoſe who will not eaſily forego the notion of the land reſting two years in this caſe, we beg leave to obſerve, ſecondly, that even ſuch a ſuppoſition may be well enough granted, without the pretended inconveniency of cauſing a dearth in the land. For to ſay nothing of the extraordinary bleſſing which was promiſed to them upon ſuch occaſions, as long as they did religiouſly obſerve theſe ordinances, it is certain, that the natural fertility of the land, and the proviſion which every one might lay up during the foregoing years, might eaſily prevent any ſuch danger. We meet with a more ſignal inſtance of it in the time of Hezekiah, when the prophet Iſaiah ſent him word, that he ſhould be delivered from the threatning power of the king of Aſſyria, and as a token of it, commands the people to live on that year upon ſuch things as grew of themſelves, and on the next upon ſuch as ſprang from the ſame, and on the third year to ſow and plant [b]. Here indeed the Jews pretend that the middle year was a ſabbatic one, but whether it were ſo or otherwiſe, it is plain that there were to be at leaſt three years without any harveſt; for on the firſt year it is ſaid they ſhould eat, not the fruit of the foregoing harveſt, but that which grew of itſelf, and that which was ſown on the third could not be gathered 'till the fourth; and yet we do not find that there was any dearth dearth upon that account. Upon the whole therefore we are more inclined to the latter opinion of the Jubilee being kept every fiftieth year.

[b] 2 King xix. 29.

THIS year was to be celebrated with the greateſt tokens of joy, becauſe it was deſigned to put them in mind of their Egyptian ſervitude, and to prevent their impoſing the like on their brethren. But whatever joy the maſters and land-holders might outwardly expreſs, we need not doubt, but that of the ſlaves and poor was ſincere, at the ſight of their approaching reſtoration. 'Tis true, this was not to take place till the tenth day of the month, otherwiſe called the day of expiation, which was therefore kept as a ſolemn faſt; but during the nine preceding days the ſlaves were wholly exempt from doing any work for their maſters, and ſpent that time in eating, drinking, and other diverſions, and wore garlands about their heads, not unlike the Roman ſaturnalia; and as ſoon as the tenth day was come, the ſanhedrin cauſed the trumpet to ſound all over the land, upon which they were reſtored to their liberty at that very inſtant, and the reſt to their poſſeſſions [c].

IT is plain, the deſign of this ordinance was to prevent the too great oppreſſion of the poor, as well as their being liable to a perpetual ſlavery. By this means alſo their law-giver prevented the rich accumulating lands upon lands, and preſerved, as much as poſſible, the freedom and order of Iſraelitiſh families, and a kind of equality of their poſſeſſions, than which nothing could more effectually inſpire them with a particular fondneſs for their country and patrimony, whilſt they knew, that this laſt could never be alienated from their poſterity, above the ſpace of half a century at the moſt. And that it wrought ſuch an effect upon them is plain, among many others, from the inſtance of Naboth, who choſe to incur the king of Iſrael's diſpleaſure, rather than to part with a ſmall portion of his inheritance to him; for which tenaciouſneſs he fell a ſacrifice to Jezebel's reſentment, and loſt both that and his life [†].

[c] Vide MAIM. Halak. Shemita, Veyobel. [†] 1 Kings xxi. paſſ.

Expiation-day

Expiation-day, or day of Atonement.

THIS is the laſt ſolemn day that was of divine inſtitution. It differed from all the reſt, in that they were days of joy and thankſgiving, but this a day of faſting, humiliation and confeſſion of ſins, and the only one of that kind of divine appointment [d], if we except that occaſional one which God enjoined the Iſraelites, after their ſetting up of the golden calf [e] (R), but which we do not find to have been made annual by Moſes, or obſerved by the people till after the captivity, when they became ſo religious, that they appointed as many faſts for every miſcarriage and misfortune that had happened to their nation before it, as filled near the fourth part of their calendar [f]; but this is not the proper place to ſpeak of them. Thoſe who conjecture, that this expiation-day was ordained in memory of the golden calf, do limit the deſign of it too much, ſeeing it appears rather inſtituted to expiate for the ſins of the whole nation, both public and private, but more particularly for thoſe of the foregoing year. This is to be plainly inferred from the name which Expiation-day.

[d] Levit. xxiii. 26. & ſeq. [e] Exod. xxiii. 5. & ſeq. [f] Vide Miſn. Megillath, Tahanith, per tot. LAMY, CALMET, & al.

(R) And yet we do not find one word of faſting, on that ſolemn occaſion of humiliation, nor even on this day of expiation, unleſs we ſuppoſe it to be implied in the words, afflicting your ſouls. However, it would be abſurd to deny, that faſting had been in uſe long before Moſes's time, becauſe he has not taken notice of its being practiſed by any of the old patriarchs; or that it was not intended as part of ſolemn humiliation, becauſe it is not expreſſed in ſo many words. The contrary ſeems rather to follow from his ſilence, not only becauſe the early cuſtom of faſting among the Heathen upon all particular occaſions, as in the caſe of the Ninivites (59), and many others, ſhews it to have been diſcovered by the light of reaſon; but becauſe the very courſe of nature ſeems to give it a ſanction, for when men are viſited with any ſenſible affliction, or threatened with any immediate danger, it never fails of palling the appetite, and inclining them to faſt. And what evinces, that this practice was well known among the Iſraelites, is the many inſtances which we meet with from Moſes's time. Thus after their unexpected defeat before Ai, Joſhua and all the elders of Iſrael continued proſtrate before the ark from morning till night which Moſes gives to it (S), as well as from the confeſſion of ſins, and other remarkable ceremonies, which he enjoined to be uſed on that day, of which we are now going to ſpeak. We ſhall ſay nothing of the typical relation it bears to the grand expiation wrought under the goſpel, it being out of our province.

(59) Jonah iii. 5. 6.

IT was to begin, as other ſolemn days, on the evening of the ninth day of the ſeventh month, and to laſt till the evening of the tenth, during which time they were obliged to abſtain from all labour and pleaſure, and to continue in the work of mortification, under the penalty of being cut off from among their people. They were likewiſe to hold a ſolemn convocation, confeſs their ſins, and to offer a peculiar ſacrifice for them by fire g.

THE high-prieſt's office on this day was ſtill more ſolemn and awful. It was the only time in the whole year on which without eating or drinking (60); the ſame was practiſed by the eleven tribes upon another occaſion (61); by all the people at Mizpeh, in token of their repentance for having ſerved Baalim and other ſtrange gods (62): and more particularly by David, in hopes of ſaving the life of the child he had got by Bathſheba (63). And, by theſe and many more inſtances of the like nature, it appears, that they not only abſtained from eating and drinking, but from all other things that might refreſh either the body or mind. Accordingly, the Miſhnah forbids theſe ſix things on theſe days, eating, drinking, bathing or waſhing, anointing, putting on of ſhoes or ſandals, and matrimonial intercourſe (64), for every one of which they quote one or more precedents out of the ſacred books.

g Levit. xxiii. 27, & ſeq.

(S) The original calls it יום הכפורים, Yom hakkipburim, the day of expiations or atonements; becauſe on that day there was an atonement made for the ſins of the whole foregoing year, and of the whole people. For which reaſon the Talmud calls it by way of excellence יומא, Yoma, the day; and perhaps likewiſe from a tradition they had, that it was on that day that Adam began to repent of his tranſgreſſion, and God was reconciled to him (65). For the world, and conſequently our firſt parents, according to them, were created on the firſt day of this month, as we have ſeen before; their tranſgreſſion and puniſhment followed immediately after, and ſo conſequently their repentance; for which reaſon ſome of them think that this day was appointed in memory of the fall †.

(60) Joſh. vii. 6. (61) Judg. xxi. 2. (62) 1 Sam. vii. 6. (63) 2 Sam. xii. 16. (64) Tr. Yoma. (65) Rab. Eleazer, in Talmud. Vide Abarb. Comm. in Levit. xxiii. † See Vol. I. p. 119.

he

he was permitted to enter into the moſt holy place, under pain of ſudden death from the Lord [h]; and therefore he was obliged to prepare himſelf for that grand ceremony, in that extraordinary manner which was preſcribed by GOD himſelf, as follows: he was firſt of all to waſh himſelf, not his hands and feet only, as at other times, but his whole body. The Talmud adds, that he was to abſtain during ſeven whole days from all matrimonial commerce, and from every thing that might cauſe an accidental pollution, and thereby render him unfit for this duty [i]; ſecondly, his mitre, breaſt-plate, and other prieſtly ornaments, were to be ſet aſide that day, and he only to appear cloathed in linen; this garb did conſiſt only in a linen mitre, or cap, a coat, breeches, and a girdle. He was in the third place to offer, as ſoon as he came to the holy place, a young bullock for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering for himſelf and his whole houſe, confeſſing his and their ſins over them. After this he received from ſome of the heads of the congregation a couple of kids for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, for the whole congregation. Then were two goats ſet before the tabernacle, and the high-prieſt caſt lots for them, which of the two ſhould be ſacrificed on that day, and which ſhould be ſent away; and this latter was called Hazazel (T), or ſcape-goat.

[h] Ibid. xvi. 2. [i] Vide præc. affirm. 209.

(T) We have here followed our verſion, and the generality of commentators, who derive the word עזאזל Ghazazel, from עז, a goat, and אזל, to go, or to eſcape; in which they have followed the Septuagint, who have rendered it ἀποπομπαῖος, and the Latin after them emiſſarius (67): and it is certain that the verb אזל, Azal, is often uſed in that ſenſe in the Old Teſtament (68). However from Moſes's words (69), it ſhou'd rather ſeem, that Hazazel is the name of the place whither the goat was led; for he ſays, that the man who lets the goat go לעזאזל, lehazazel——— which laſt cannot properly be rendered any other way than to Hazazel; and in this ſenſe moſt of the Jews, and ſome Chriſtians, have taken it (70); and ſome of the former do tell us, that it is a mountain diſtant about ninety furlongs, or about eleven thouſand paces from Jeruſalem (71).

(67) LXX. Aquil. Simmach. Theodoret. Bochart. de Animal. Sacr. Marſh. Seeul. ix. Pagn. Jun. & al. (68) Vide Kimch. in rad. Buxtorf. Theſ. in voc. (69) Levit. xvi. 26. (70) Munſt. Ar. Mont & al. (71) Targ. Jonath. R. R. Saad. Gaon. Kimch. Salom. Abenez. & al.

ſcape-goat. He then entered into the holy of holies, with his cenſer in one, and a large quantity of fine incenſe beaten ſmall in the other, that the ſmoak of it might fill the place, ſo as to cover the mercy-ſeat from ſight: and as ſoon as he had ſet the cenſer upon the altar, he came out and dipped his fingers into the blood of the bullock, which he had offered for himſelf, and went and ſprinkled it towards the mercy-ſeat eaſtward ſeven times. This done he killed the goat for the

And here we cannot but take notice of a ſtrange notion which Spencer has taken into his head, that this Hazazel was neither the name of the place, nor of the ſcape-goat, but of a devil, unto which the goat was ſent by the meſſenger (72). He mentions one Mark, an arch-heretic, who pretended to have a dæmon of that name, by whoſe aſſiſtance he performed wonders (73), and from this and ſome expreſſions, which he found in ſome cabbaliſtical writings, and in thoſe of Julian the apoſtate, he pretends, that this ſcape-goat was ſent with its load of ſins to the devil, in which notion he is followed by ſome others †, who believe, that both the ſacrificed goat and the ſcape one were typical of Chriſt, and think the firſt to be ſignificative of his death, and the other of his being expoſed to, and overcoming the power of Satan. But as for us, we ſhould rather prefer Mr. Le Clerc's opinion, that Hazazel was a ſteep and cragged precipice, down which the goat was thrown: and this is not only more agreeable to the original, as we obſerved above, and to the Jewiſh notion of its being a rocky mountain, but the ſame author has further proved it from the words of Moſes, that it ſhould bear all their iniquities אל ארץ גזרה. el eretz Gezarah (74). which doth properly ſignify, not only an uninhabited land, or a land of ſeparation, as our verſion renders it, but a land that is cut off, or broken off, from another, ſuch as precipices are. It might alſo be probably enough called Hazazel, from its being inhabited only by goats, as Hottinger obſerved in his notes upon Goodwin.... Le Clerc doth further confirm it by a new etymon of the word Hazazel, which we ſhall not dwell upon. Neither is it eaſy to gueſs either what was done to the goat, or what became of it, after it was brought to the place appointed. The Talmudiſts, if we may rely on them, affirm, that it was thrown down a precipice, and broken in pieces by the fall. They add, that during the high-prieſthood of Simon, ſurnamed the juſt, which was ſignalized by many remarkable tokens of the divine favour, the goat uſed to fall in pieces before it had reached half way to the place, but that after his days, it uſed to be caught and eaten by the Saracens (75).

(72) Diſſert. in hirc. emiſſar. 34. † Turretin. Cocceii, Alting-Meyer, & al. (73) Vide Epiphan. Hæres. (74) Levit. xvi. 22. Vide Le Clerc. in loc. (75) Miſhn. Tract. יומא vide & Maim. in יום הכפורים people's people's ſin-offering, and went and ſprinkled the mercy-ſeat with the blood of it, as he had done with that of the bullock, and by theſe aſperſions the tabernacle was purified from all the pollution it had contracted, by ſtanding in the midſt of that ſinful people. During all this ceremony, that is, till this ſolemn atonement had been made for the ſins of the prieſts and people, neither prieſts nor any perſon were permitted to come either within the tabernacle or even into the courts of it.

As ſoon as theſe ablutions were ended, and the prieſts and people purified, the goat, whoſe lot it had been to eſcape (V), was

(V) How theſe lots were caſt doth not appear from ſcripture. What the antient Jews tell us of it is, that there was an urn brought unto the high-prieſt, into which he threw two wooden lots, upon one of which were written the words, FOR THE LORD, and on the other, FOR HAZAZEL, and after he had ſhaken them; he put both his hands into the urn, and brought up the lots, the one in his right, and the other in his left; and as the goats ſtood on each ſide of him, their fate was determined by the lot that came up in the hand next to them. They alſo uſed to draw a good omen of god's being pacified with them, if the right-hand chanced to draw the lot that was for the Lord, as they ſay it happened all the time of the high-prieſt mentioned in the laſt note. As for the reſt of their cuſtoms obſerved on that day, ſuch as their mutual aſking and granting forgiveneſs for paſt offences, making reſtitution, and the like, though they are probably as old, or very near, as the inſtitution of this feaſt, yet we rather chooſe to refer our readers for them to the two laſt quoted books; or if he pleaſes to Leo de Modena and Buxtorf (76).

One thing, however, is worth obſerving, that on the eve of this ſolemnity the Jews of old uſed to take a white cock, if it was to be had, if not, of any other colour but red; and after a prayer they ſtruck their heads with that of the cock three times, ſaying, Bear thou my ſins, ſuffer thou the death I have deſerved, die thou for me, and make thou reconciliation for me, that I may be admitted into a bleſſed life, with all the people of Iſrael. After which they killed the cock, confeſſing, that they deſerved the death they inflicted on him, and threw his entrails on the top of the houſe, in hopes that the crows would bear them and their ſins into the wilderneſs. 'Tis true, this ceremony is looked upon by the Dutch Jews as ſinful, and that Leo de Modena, who owns that it was practiſed heretofore in the Levant and Italy, adds, that it was afterwards left off, becauſe it was found to be a mere piece of ſuperſtition, for which no tolerable reaſon could be aſſigned. But he ſeems to have forgot, (76) Cerem. Jud. part. iii. c 6. Vid. & Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 20.

that was brought to the high-priest, who laid his hands upon its head, and confessed his own sins, and those of the whole nation, in words to this effect: O LORD, thy people, the house of Israel, have sinned, have rebelled against thee; ——— and now, O Lord, I beseech thee, forgive their sins, rebellions, and backslidings, by which they have offended thee, according as it is written in the law of thy servant Moses: in that day he shall make atonement for you, he shall cleanse you, and you shall be clean from all your sins before the Lord (W) †. The confession being ended, he delivered the scape-goat that they gave one, which however ridiculed by our learned Goodwin, is not without a singular meaning. It is this: the word גבר, Geber, in the scripture, signifying a man, and in the Talmud and Chaldee a cock, the divine justice required, that as Geber in the first sense had sinned, Geber in the other sense should bear his sin. Now what other foundation can this custom have than the prophecies that the Messiah, as Geber, in his human nature should expiate for the sins of man; unto whom therefore they substituted this typical Geber, or cock, till the antitypical one should accomplish that expiation by his death? And might not the christians urging this against them be the motive of their abolishing it? Might not moreover, the Περίψηματα of the Gentiles, those human victims, which they chose out of the dregs of the people, to sacrifice yearly to their gods, by way of expiation (77), and their Κάθαρματα, which they offered in times of plague, famine, and other public calamities, and on whom they so liberally bestowed all the curses, which they thought due to themselves, have their original from hence (78)? this is what the apostle justly complains was practised against the first christians (79), since there hardly happened any public calamity in the empire, but they were immediately persecuted with the utmost cruelty, as the cause of them; and were looked upon as proper victims to avert the divine anger.

† Levit. xvi. 30.

(W) He was likewise to make such another confession when he offered the bullock for himself and family, before he ventured to enter into the holy of holies; only instead of the house of Israel, he only mentioned that of Aaron. The reader may find it in the Mishnah, in the place above-quoted. It is plain, however, from the ceremonies which he was to perform there, that he was to enter four times into it on that day; 1. To set the incense a burning, (77.) Vide Suid. in voc. περίψημα. (78) Vide Vet. Scholiast. in Aristoph. (79) 1 Cor. iv. 13. Vide Budæ. Annot. in Pandect. de panis. Goodwin's Mos. & Aar. lib. iii. c. 9. § 7. & seq.

for

goat to a man appointed for the purpoſe, who conducted it into a deſert place, and there left it to ſhift for itſelf, according to ſome, or threw it down a ſteep precipice according to others, as we have ſeen in the laſt note. After this ceremony the high-prieſt waſhed himſelf all over, and having changed his cloaths, or, as ſeems moſt likely, having put on the ephod, mitre, breaſt-plate, and his other prieſtly garments, he was to offer a burnt-offering of two rams, one for himſelf and the other for the people. As for the man that conducted the ſcape-goat, he was deemed unclean, 'till he had bathed himſelf and waſhed his cloaths, as were alſo thoſe who carried away the fleſh, blood, and entrails of the bullock, and goat of the ſin-offering, to be burnt without the camp [k].

IT was likewiſe on this day, that the high-prieſt did give the people the ſolemn bleſſing preſcribed by Moſes [l], in which he pronounced the unutterable name of God, of which we have ſpoken in another place ‡; for according to the Jews [m], the uttering of that word had been forbidden upon any other occaſion by a particular law, ever ſince the ſtoning of a notorious blaſphemer [n]; but whether true or not, the pronouncing of that tremendous name, joined to the ſacred awfulneſs of the place, may be reaſonably ſuppoſed to have filled him with uncommon dread whilſt he ſtayed in it, which is the reaſon, why he uſually made what haſte he could decently out of it, leſt he ſhould be ſtruck dead for ſome accidental miſcarriage or inadvertency during his ſhort ſtay there; and for he went in with both his hands full, and could carry nothing elſe with him (80). 2. When he carried ſome of the blood of the bullock that was offered for himſelf (81). 3. When he carried ſome of that which he offered for the people (82). And 4. when he went to fetch out the cenſer and fire. The Talmud adds, that it was death for him to go in the fifth time. And therefore when the apoſtle ſays, that he went in but once a year (83), it is plain he has followed the verſion of the Septuagint, which renders the words אחד בשנה, Achad baſhanah, by ἅπαξ τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ, but it is certain it might have been more properly rendered one day in the year.

[k] Ibid. 26. 27, 28. Vide FAG. in loc. HOTTING. & al. [l] Numb. vi. 24, & ſeq. ‡ See Vol. II. p. 488, note (T). [m] PHILO in vit. Moſ. lib. iii. Joſeph. Talmud, & al. [n] Levit. xxiv. 10. & ſeq.

(80) Levit. xvi. 12, 13. (81) Ibid. Ver. 14. (82) Ver. 15. (83) Heb. ix. 7.

whom

when he came out he went backwards, keeping his face ſtill towards the mercy-ſeat, and bending towards the ground. All theſe things no doubt took up a conſiderable time; the reſidue of the day was ſpent in prayers and other works of mortification, and they were ſo afraid of ſhortening it, that they begun it half an hour ſooner and ended it half an hour later than in other feaſt-days; after which the trumpet gave notice that the ſolemnity was expired, and then they dreſſed themſelves in white, or at leaſt put on clean linen, and after a bleſſing, ſat down to break their faſt. They ſeldom failed making a plentiful meal, and to rejoice that their ſins were now expiated; but above all, the high-prieſt expreſſed a more than ordinary joy, that he had gone through the ſolemn and dangerous office of that day, and was come out alive of the moſt holy place ° (X).

Laws concerning other expiations or atonements.

BEFORE we leave this ſubject of expiations, it will not be amiſs to give an account of ſome others, which were enjoined by Moſes upon their contracting of any legal impurities, ſuch as thoſe of a woman after child-birth, of a man by touching of any unclean thing, as a dead body or carcaſe, or an unclean perſon, as a leper, and the like; and ſecondly by the breach of any one branch of the law, whether knowingly or through ignorance. By theſe and ſuch like the perſons contracted a kind of legal defilement, from which they could not be cleanſed, but by offering ſuch ſacrifices as the law appointed (Y); and this purification was to be performed in the following manner. The perſon who had committed ° Vide Miſhnah, Tract. Yoma. MAIMON. Tract. Yom hakephur. MEYER, c. xv. § 9.

(X) The Jews add ſeveral other particularities relating to this day, which we dare not affirm to have been in uſe during the firſt temple, ſuch as theſe, that the ſcape-goat was eſcorted all the way, by prieſts and laymen, to the place appointed; that between the temple and it, there was a cauſey made on purpoſe, with ten different ſtages on it; that as ſoon as the goat was thrown down the precipice, and broken in pieces by the fall, notice was immediately given to the people, who waited impatiently for the news in the temple, by proper ſignals ſet up at convenient diſtances, with many more of the like nature.

(Y) We believe, it is ſcarce neceſſary to obſerve here, that, in the language of the Old Teſtament, all tranſgreſſions, before they were expiated, are compared to a filth or defilement contracted by committed any treſpaſs, whether knowingly or ignorantly, was to bring his victim or ſin-offering to the door of the tabernacle. This offering was to be a bullock or a goat, if it was for a prieſt, and if for a layman, a goat, ſheep, kid, or lamb; and if the perſon was too poor to afford one of theſe, then two pigeons or turtle doves, or even a ſmall quantity of flour was accepted of. One or more then of theſe, according to the nature of the treſpaſs, or the circumſtances of the perſon, were brought to the prieſt, and the perſon to be purified brought his victim; and having confeſſed his ſin, laying his hands upon the head of it, killed and offered it up. The prieſt then took up ſome of the blood of it with his fingers, and applied it to the horns of the altar of burnt-offerings, and poured the remainder at the foot of it. He then took the fat of the caul, kidneys, and the rump, and burnt it upon the altar; and having prayed for the perſon, pronounced him pardoned and abſolved from his treſpaſs; the fleſh of ſuch victim thus offered, belonged to the prieſt alone; none other was to eat it [p]. This ceremony was performed ſomewhat more ſolemnly when the king, high-prieſt, or the whole nation had committed a treſpaſs, but in the main it came much to the purpoſe.

As for legal pollutions, ſuch as we mentioned above, there was added another ceremony for their cleanſing; namely, the aſhes of the red heifer reſerved for that purpoſe. The ceremony of killing and burning it, as it was preſcribed by Moſes [q], was after this manner. The high-prieſt was to take care that it was without ſpot or blemiſh, and that it had never been yoked. It was to be carried out of the camp, where he killed it, and made a ſevenfold aſperſion of the blood with his fingers towards the ſanctuary; after which, a large fire being kindled, it was flung into it, with its ſkin, entrails, and other appurtenances, and a bundle of cedar-wood, hyſſop, and ſcarlet, and burnt to aſhes before his face, himſelf helping to caſt her into the fire; and this was to be done in the preſence of all the people. The aſhes were the tranſgreſſor; and the pardon, that attends this expiation of them, to an ablution or purification from it. It is according to this alluſion, that the Septuagint have rendered the words כופר and כפר, Kopher and Kaphar, as likewiſe thoſe of טהר and חטאה. Tahar and Chatab, when this laſt ſignifies a forgiveneſs, by καθαρισμος and καθαριζειν; and it is in the ſame ſenſe that the writers of the New affirm Chriſt to cleanſe and purify us from our ſins by his blood.

[p] Vide Levit. iv, v, vi. paſſ. [q] Numb. xix.

then gathered and laid up for uſe, and all that had had a hand in this ceremony were to be unclean until evening. Whenever afterwards any perſon had contracted a pollution, ſuch as made him unclean ſeven days, he was to be ſprinkled with water, in which ſome of theſe aſhes had been thrown, on the third and ſeventh day, on which laſt he was to be clean; but if he neglected being ſprinkled on the third, he was not to be clean till the tenth day. This law was ſo ſevere againſt thoſe who were polluted by the touch of a dead body, or by coming into the tent or room where it lay, that if they offered to go to the tabernacle before they had been thus purified, they were to be cut off, as having polluted the ſanctuary. The very veſſels that were in the place uncovered, as well as the place itſelf where the corpſe lay, were likewiſe defiled, till ſprinkled with this water of ſeparation, as it is called in the text. How often this grand ceremony was repeated from Moſes to the captivity is not agreed. Some affirm, that the heifer which was burnt by Eleazar, Aaron's ſon, did laſt them all that time; others, that there was one burnt every year, and that ſome of the aſhes of it were ſent to every city and town in Iſrael [r] (Z). Whether or

[r] Vide HIERON. Epiſt. 27.

(Z) It is juſtly wondered, that this water thus mixed with the aſhes of the red heifer, ſhould purify the unclean, and at the ſame time pollute not only thoſe who aſſiſted at the ſlaying, burning, and gathering of the aſhes of it, but even thoſe who ſprinkled the unclean perſon with it (84). The Jews have a very antient tradition, that Solomon, who was maſter of all other myſteries and knowledge, and could account for every precept in the law, even thoſe which forbad the eating of ſwine's fleſh, or wearing of mixtures of linen and wool, yet owned himſelf ignorant of the meaning of this red heifer (85). However, our Spencer has ventured to dive deeper than he, by the help of his infallible rule of relation either of conformity or oppoſition to the Egyptian rites, he ranks therefore the red heifer under this laſt claſs, becauſe that nation ſacrificed none but male animals, and that they had an averſion to all red-haired creatures, and even to the colour itſelf; whereas the Mo- ſaic law makes no diſtinction of colours in any caſe but this (86). But we beg leave to obſerve here, that the Jews were as little fond of the red as the Egyptians, and that Moſes commanded the uſe of (84) Num. xix. 7, 8, 10, 21. (85) Miſhn. Tract. de פרה אדמה Maimon. More Nevoch, p. 3. c. 26. vide & lib. Jalcut & al. (86) De Leg. Rit. lib. ii. c. 15.

ſcarlet

or no this ſacrifice was to be numbered among the burnt-offerings which were made for the whole nation, is a diſpute amongſt the learned, both Jews and Chriſtians, which we ſhall not enter into; ſure it is, that the author of the epiſtle to the Hebrews looked upon it as a figure of Chriſt, who therefore ſuffered without the gates of the city even as the heifer was burned without the camp *; and whoſe blood is of much greater efficacy towards the purging and ſanctifying of men, than that of bulls and goats, the aſhes of an heifer, or any other legal ſacrifices f.

* Heb. xiii. 11, 12. f Ibid. ix. 13.

ſcarlet in ſacrifices for ſin. only to expreſs the guilt of it. Accordingly all the inſpired writers compared ſins of the deepeſt guilt to crimſon and ſcarlet, as they did innocence to white (87); and this, we think, doth ſufficiently account for the colour of the heifer.

And here we beg leave to ſubjoin a remark to the ſame effect, which is, that in the twenty ſecond pſalm, which abounds with many particularities relating to Chriſt's paſſion, there is one expreſſion, not hitherto obſerved, nor rightly rendered, by any tranſlation that we know of. It is where he is called a worm and no man (88), for it is plain, the word תּוֹלַעַת, Tholahath, is no where uſed in ſcripture, but to expreſs either the crimſon or ſcarlet colour itſelf (in which caſe it is commonly joined to the word שָׁנִי, Sheni, and ſignifies double dyed); or at moſt the inſect from which that dye is made, unleſs it be figuratively taken to imply a deep degree of guilt, as in the place above quoted out of Iſaiah. The moſt literally therefore that the pſalmiſt's words can be rendered would be; as for me, I am a ſcarlet inſect or worm, and not a man; but the figurative ſenſe will be plainly this; I bear the ſcandal and reproach of the deepeſt guilt, and am wholly free from it; I am reputed a ſinner, and yet am free from ſin. But this by the by. We ſhall only add, that the Jews, Maimon excepted, whom Spencer affects to follow, allow, that there is a deeper myſtery in the ordinance of the red heifer, than any in the whole ſcripture, and highly condemn the preſumption of thoſe who pretend to dive into that deep abyſs (89). However, what was a myſtery to the Jews, is ſufficiently explained to the Chriſtians by the apoſtle to the Hebrews, in the place quoted above, and to which, we think, Spencer has given but a jejune and trifling anſwer (90).

(87) Vide int. al. Iſai. i. 18. (88) Ver. 6. (89) Vide Miſhn. ubi ſup. R. Abr. Seba. in Zeror Hamor, fol. 118. & ſeq. R. R. Salom. Abenez. Abarban & al. (90) Ubi ſup. ſect. 6. obj. 3.

Laws concerning some other sacrifices and oblations, not mentioned under the former heads.

AS we had occasion to mention the sacrifices that were enjoined to be offered upon every solemn festival, under the head of each, and of those which were offered by way of expiation for sin; we shall now mention those few others that remain unspoken of. These may be reduced under the seven following heads. 1. The daily sacrifice. 2. Peace-offerings. 3. Meat and drink-offerings. 4. Offerings for cleansing. 5. First-fruits. 6. First-born, and 7. Tythes. Besides these there were other occasional sacrifices, some of them directed by some prophets, as in the case of Samuel [t], and Elijah [u], and others observed by particular families, which were rather feasts than sacrifices, as appears by the pretence which David made for absenting from Saul's table [w], and the like, of which we shall take no further notice, they being entirely arbitrary; as for those that were to be offered at the consecration of the high-priest, and of other inferior priests, they will be better seen in another place.

1. THE daily, or, as it is called in the original, the continual sacrifice, consisted first and before all things in burning a certain quantity of incense upon the golden altar, after which they were to offer two lambs of the first year, and without blemish, as a continual burnt-offering for the whole nation; these were burned every morning and every evening, and with a stower fire than ordinary, that it might last the longer. They offered likewise a certain quantity of wine and of flour, mixed with oil, for a meat and drink-offering. This was ordained by God upon mount Sinai [x], and is therefore called continual, because it was not to be interrupted by any other sacrifices or solemnity, as we have seen under the article of each festival.

2. PEACE-offerings; this sacrifice was either eucharistical, in acknowledgment of some mercies received from God, or supplicatory, in order to obtain some blessings from him, or out of mere devotion in honour to God, or lastly upon account of some vow. These were all free and voluntary, there being no law that obliged the Israelites to them, except where it is said, that they should not appear empty before the [t] 1 Sam. ix. 13. xii, 9. xvi. 2, & seq. [u] 1 King. xviii. 30, & seq. [w] 1 Sam. xx. 29. [x] Exod. xxix. 38. Num. xxviii. 6, & seq.

Lord

Lord, but be liberal in theſe kind of ſacrifices according as God had bleſſed them. It was likewiſe left to them to offer what beaſts they would, without regard to ſex or age, ſo they were of the clean ſort, and free from any pollution or defect. The votary was to bring it to the door of the tabernacle, lay his hands upon the head of it, and kill it. The prieſt then took ſome of the blood, and ſprinkled it upon, and round the altar, and poured the remainder upon the ground, at the foot of it. All the fat of the offering, the kidneys, and, if it were a ſheep or lamb, the rump were burnt upon the altar, after the prieſts had laid them upon the hands of the perſon, and directed him to wave them to the four points. The breaſt and ſhoulder of the victim was the perquiſite of the prieſt in waiting, and the reſt belonged to the owner, who might then dreſs and eat it, how and with whom he would, as if it had been killed within his own gates [y].

3. THE meat and drink-offerings; theſe we have already ſpoken of occaſionally, becauſe they uſed to accompany the burnt-offerings of every feſtival, the daily and all other ſacrifices made with fire. They conſiſted of a certain proportion of wine, oil, and fine flour, to every beaſt that was ſacrificed. Thus, for inſtance, with a bullock they offered half an hin, that is about a wine galion, of wine and oil, and three tenth deals, or wine pints of flour; to a ram, was allowed the third part, and to a lamb the fourth part of an hin, and ſo proportionably of the flour [z]. Beſides theſe there were ſome others of the ſame nature, which were to be offered by the poor, who could not reach a higher offering, of which we have ſaid enough already.

4. Offerings for cleanſing; we have ſpoken of ſome of them above, under the head of expiation. There remains two more, namely, that of two pigeons, which a woman was to offer for her purification after child-bed, in caſe ſhe could not afford a lamb; or even a ſmall quantity of flour and oil, if the pigeons were alſo above her circumſtances [a]; and that of two ſparrows, which the leper offered, after his cure, for the cleanſing of himſelf [b] and his houſe [c]. In both theſe caſes one of the birds was inſtead of a lamb for a burnt-offering, and the other for a ſin-offering. The firſt bird was to be killed in a clean earthen veſſel over a running water; after which the prieſt took the other bird, with a [y] Levit. iii. paſſ.

[z] Numb. xxviii. paſſ.
[a] Levit. xii.
[b] Ibid, xiv. 4. & ſeq.
[c] Ibid. ver. 49, & ſeq.

bunch

bunch of cedar-wood, ſcarlet, and hyſſop, and dipped them in the blood, and ſprinkled the perſon or houſe ſeven times with it, and then pronounced them clean, and the living bird was let looſe. The perſon was likewiſe to add three tenths of flour mingled with oil, and a log of oil. Theſe quantities of flour and oil were made into cakes, and offered up to God. Some were of barley, others of wheat-flour, ſome had leaven, and conſequently came not near the altar [d]; others had none. All of them were to have ſome ſalt. Some were voluntary, others not, ſome dreſſed one way, and ſome another, as the reader may ſee more fully at the end of the next note (A).

THE

[d] Ibid. ii. 11.

(A) It will not be amiſs to obſerve here, that all the offerings which had life were called קוּרְבָּן, Corban, and thoſe which had not מִנְחָה, Minchah; the firſt is derived from קָרַב, Karab, to approach, becauſe the victims were brought to the door of the tabernacle, the other ſignifies a preſent; but both of theſe conſiſted of ſuch things as were commonly eaten, if we except the incenſe and the wood, which were likewiſe called offerings. The Corban was always looked upon as the moſt ſacred, and was therefore called קֹדֶשׁ קָדָשִׁים, or moſt holy, the others קָדָשִׁים קַלִּים, or holy things of a lighter, or inferior nature. Theſe Minchahs were of five ſorts, 1. Of bare flour. 2. Made into cakes, and baked in an oven. 3. Fryed in a pan. 4. Upon a gridiron. And 5. The firſt-fruits, of which we ſhall ſpeak under the next head. Again, theſe cakes were either kneaded with, or fryed in, or only rubbed over with oil, which was always that of olives, and as none of theſe three were to have any leaven, ſo neither were they to have any honey (91). If this laſt was at all offered, it was by itſelf, and under the notion of firſt fruits.

There is one of Moſes's laws which expreſly forbids the prieſts to offer any thing to God, that is in any way marred or ſpoiled, and particularly any bread from the hands of a ſtranger, as being polluted and corrupted (92); by which ſome underſtand any kind of ſacrifices, and others only that of theſe cakes, or meat-offerings; but in either caſe there is no doubt, but if a ſtranger was ſo well diſpoſed as to offer any ſacrifice to the God of Iſrael, the prieſts could furniſh him with either victims or bread ready baked, provided he payed the price of them †. But be that as it will, it ſeems from two or three texts, that they had a conſtant reſerve of loaves or cakes, kept in baſkets, for thoſe who came to offer up

(91) Levit. ii. 11, 12. (92) Levit. xxii. 24, 25. † Vide Num. xv. 14, & ſeq.

theſe

THE next under this head is the ſhew-bread, called in the original the bread of faces (B), becauſe it was always to ſtand before the Lord upon the golden table in the holy place. It was to be made of the pureſt wheat, into twelve loaves or cakes, anſwering to the twelve tribes. The prieſts were to take care to bring freſh ones warm every ſabbath-day in the morning, at which time they took away the old, which were to be eaten by none but prieſts. Each loaf was to contain two tenth deals, or about three wine pints of flour, and to be ſet up in two rows, ſix to each row, one loaf upon another. The Jews tell us, that there were ſome double plates of gold between each loaf, to give them air, and prevent their growing mouldy. This offering was accompanied with incenſe, with which the loaves were to be perfumed, but they were to be without leaven. Some commentators ſay, that there was a quantity of wine offered with them, but the text mentions nothing but incenſe and ſalt [e]. Theſe loaves were called the hallowed bread, in oppoſition to the common ſort which every body might eat [f].

[e] Exod. xxv. 30. Levit. xxiv. 5, & ſeq. [f] Vide 1 Sam. xxi. 3, 4.

theſe meat-offerings, or any other ſacrifices that required them (93). And here we might add likewiſe under this head the meat-offerings of the Nazarites, and the cake of jealouſy, but they will be better ſeen in their proper places, when we come to ſpeak of them in the ſequel.

(B) The words are לחם פנים, Lechempanaim, which name ſome, eſpecially of the Jews, affirm to be given, becauſe the loaves had four phanim, or faces, that is, were four ſquare (94); but it is more likely, that they were ſo called from their ſtanding continually, לפני אלהים Liphne-elohim, before the Lord. Some have thought it improper to place this ſhew-bread among the meat-offerings, becauſe they were not offered upon the altar as theſe were. For our part we think with ſome others, that the ſacred table on which they were ſet, (which may not improperly be deemed an altar) their being kept before the Lord, and called hallowed bread, and as ſuch allowed only to be eaten by the prieſts, may eaſily excuſe our ranking them under this claſs, rather than any other, eſpecially they being accompanied with incenſe, and offered in the name of the twelve tribes. The Jews add, that they were covered with leaf gold, but do no where tell us where they are commanded to do ſo.

(93) Compar. Exod. xxix. 32. & Num vi. 15, & alib. (94) Vide Maim. Tract. תמידין, Abr. Haroph. שלטי גבורים, & al.

5. Firſt

5. First fruits. We have already spoken of these that were offered at Easter, Whitsuntide, and at the feast of Tabernacles; and these were offered in the name of the whole nation; but besides them, every private man was likewise obliged to bring the first-fruits of his fields, orchards, and vineyards, to the tabernacle, and afterwards to the temple, as an acknowledgment that God was the giver of them. Neither the time, nor the quantity being prescribed by the written law, the former was left to the conveniency of the people, and the latter was determined in some sort by their wise men, yet so as to leave room for generosity to exert itself, more or less according to the disposition of each person. Thus it was agreed, that they ought to offer at least the sixtieth part of the product; but some did offer the fiftieth, and some even the fortieth part [g]. After the building of the temple they were all obliged to bring them thither, and the ceremony was performed as follows.

As soon as the person who came to offer them had reached the court of the priests, the Levites began to sing the 30th psalm, after which the person made this confession: I do this day make a publick acknowledgment before the LORD your GOD, that I am entered into the good land which he sware unto our fathers that he would give us (C). Whilst he [g] Vide Mishn. Tract Terumoth & Bekorim, & commentat. in eund. vide & Maim. in loc.

(C) The Talmud adds several other remarkable particulars concerning the bringing of the first fruits to the temple, which we can neither warrant nor disprove to have been used during the first temple. They are as follows. As soon as a man was got to the foot of the mount on which the temple stood, he was to take up his basket (in which the first-fruits, or rather a sample of them, were laid, not confusedly, but every sort by itself) and put it on his shoulders, and carry it up to the priest's appartment. They tell us, that the kings themselves were not dispensed from it. These baskets were more and less magnificent, that is, from those made of gold wire to the common ozier ones, according to the circumstances of the persons. To prevent confusion as much as possible, they used to join themselves by troops of four and twenty to a troop, which drove before them a bullock crowned with olive-branches, and having his horns tipped with gold or silver, which was to be offered with their first-fruits. They generally had a man to go before them, playing upon a flute or some such instrument, and in that order they marched to Jerusalem, singing some psalm or hymn proper for the occasion. As soon as they came near the gates of Jerusalem, the inhabitants used to go out to congratulate, and bid them welcome. These first-fruits did he was ſpeaking theſe words, he took his baſket off his ſhoulder, the prieſt lending him a hand, and whilſt theſe two held it up, he made an end of his confeſſion in theſe remarkable words preſcribed by Moſes [h], A Syrian ready to periſh was my father, and he went down into Egypt, and ſojourned there with a few, and became there a nation, great, mighty, and populous; and the Egyptians evil entreated us, and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage. And when we cried unto the Lord God of our fathers, the Lord heard our voice, and looked on our affliction, and our labour, and our oppreſſion. And the Lord brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand and with an out-ſtretched arm, and with great terribleneſs, and with ſigns and with wonders; and he hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land flowing with milk and honey. And now behold I have brought the firſt-fruits of the land, which thou, O Lord, haſt given me. After this the baſket was ſet before the Lord by the ſide of the altar, and he offered the burnt-offering and peace-offering which were always to accompany the firſt-fruits, and having paid his devotions to God, he went to make merry with his acquaintance with his ſhare of the peace and meat-offerings. And here he was likewiſe obliged to impart ſome portion of his good chear to the fatherleſs, widows, and to the Levites, that they might rejoice with him. And this the rich, who ſacrificed a bullock, might be the more ready to do, becauſe they were forbid to leave any fragments till the next day [i].

UNDER this head we may add the firſt cake of every lump of dough that exceeded the bulk of forty eggs, of which the woman was obliged to ſet aſide one part, to be did not conſiſt of all the different products of the earth, but only of ſix kinds; namely, barley, wheat, grapes, figs, dates, and olives; to which ſome add apricoct, or peaches, and pomgranates. Theſe firſt-fruits are not indeed called in the text מנחות, Menachoth, or offerings from Minchah mentioned in a former note, nevertheleſs we have ventured to rank them under that claſs, becauſe they were offered up at the altar (95). They add, that after each band had performed their duty in the manner mentioned above, they were to lie one night in the city, and then return to their homes (96).

[h] Deut. xxvi. 4, & ſeq. Vide Munſt. Jun. & al. in Levit. xxii. & xxiii. & Deut. xxvi. [i] Levit. vii. 15, & alib.

(95) Vide Deut. xxvi. 10, & alib. (96) Vide Baſnag. tom. 3. lib. iii. c. 2.

given to the next priests or Levites [k], in order to sanctify the rest. But as Moses did not determine the quantity, it was left to the discretion either of the master or mistress of the house, till the rabbies assigned the twenty fourth part of that which was baked for ones own family, and the forty eighth part of that which was designed for sale [l] (D).

6. FIRST-BORN. The Mosaic law makes a three-fold distinction of these; namely, the first-born of men, of cattle, and of the product of the earth (E). We have already spoken in a former section of the first of these, of the reason of their being consecrated to God, and of their redemption by their parents ‡. And here we must observe, that the word first-born of the males must not be restrained to the eldest son; for he may be eldest, and yet not first-born. And therefore Moses adds, that first opened the womb: so that it was possible among the Jews, where po-

[k] Num. xv. 19, & seq.
[l] Vide Mishn. Tract. חלה, c. 1.
‡ See Vol. II. p. 525.

(D) The Jews we are told, were so scrupulous in this, that if they could come at neither priest nor Levite, they threw the cake into the oven and burnt it to ashes, before they put the bread into it (97). This is one of the three things that are committed to the care of the women, who were to say a blessing at the same time that they separated the paste; and this extended, according to them, to the bread that was made of wheat, rye, barley, wild barley, and oats.

(E) We must remind our English readers, that this expression has no such harshness in the original as it has in ours, and other languages, because the word which in these is rendered first-born, in the original is בכור, Bechor, which properly implies the principal or most excellent of every thing, or creature in its kind, whether in a good or bad sense. Thus God expresses himself concerning David, I will make him my first-born, higher than the kings of the earth (98); where the word means nothing like first-born in a strict sense. On the other hand, a most cruel death is in Job called בכור מות, Becobr-maveth, the first-born of death (99); and Isaiah calleth the poorest, or rather the weakest of all בכורי דלים, Becbore dallim, the first-born of the weak (100). It is therefore probable, that this word was figuratively applied to the first-born, to imply their excellency in strength and dignity, according to Jacob's expression to Reuben his eldest son (1),

(97) Mishn. Tract. חלה, Philo de præm. Sacerd. Hieron. in cap. 45. Ezek. Maim. Leo de Moden. & al. (98) Ps. lxxxix. 27. (99) Job xviii. 13. (100) Isai. xiv. 30.
(1) Gen. xlix. 3.

lygamy

lygamy and polyguny were allowed, for a man to have ſeveral firſt-born, and all to be redeemed at the price of five ſhekels, as ſoon as they were thirty days old; at which time they were preſented to the prieſt, and the mother offered the ſacrifice of her purification, mentioned in a former article; and the price being payed for the child's redemption, he began then to belong to the parents, and not till then [m] (F). How they redeemed them ſince the deſtruction of the ſecond temple is out of our purpoſe. The reader may ſee it in Leo de Modena and other Hebrew rabbies; only we may obſerve, that the children of the prieſts needed not to be redeemed at any time.

THE firſt-born of clean beaſts, ſuch as calves, lambs, kids, and the like, were alſo conſecrated to God; but with this difference, that they could not be redeemed, but were to be brought to the tabernacle or temple, and there killed; the blood was poured at the foot of the altar, the fat burnt upon it, and the reſt of the fleſh was the prieſt's perquiſite; with this precaution however, that if the beaſt had any natural or legal defects, ſuch as blindneſs, lameneſs, the want of a limb and the like, it was not to be ſacrificed: the prieſt took it home, and there killed and eat it; and might invite whom he would to partake of it, as of any other common meat. But if it was an unclean beaſt, ſuch as an aſs, a dog, and the like, the owner was at his [m] Exod. xiii. 2. Num. xviii. 15, & alib.

(F) According to this law we find the virgin Mary redeeming her child Jeſus (2); nevertheleſs it has been much diſputed, whether he was ſubject to this or not, tho' he is allowed on all hands to have been her firſt-born. Some think he was not, becauſe he did not break open the ſeal of her virginity (3). Others, thinking that every male opening the matrix is equivalent to every firſt-born male, maintain, that he was to be redeemed (4). But ſome of the fathers have ſtill improved this argument, affirming, that in ſtrictneſs of ſpeech this law of redemption was only applicable to Chriſt, ſeeing he was the only male child that properly opened the womb of his mother, whereas in other women it was opened already, if not before, yet when the firſt-born was begot. For which reaſon they think this law to have been wholly typical of Chriſt (5).

(2) Luke ii. 22, 23. (3) Cyril. Hieroſol Homil de Occurſ. Domin. (4) Vide Cornel. a lapid. on Exod. xiii. & auct. ab eo citat. (5) Origen, Tertul. Ambroſ. & al. ap. Calm. ſub voc. premier né.

liberty either to redeem it with a lamb, or with five ſhekels of money, or to break the neck of it [n] (G).

As to the firſt product of the trees, all that is meant by it is, that every new-planted tree was to be reckoned uncircumciſed and impure during the firſt three years. It was not lawful to gather, much leſs to eat, the fruit of it; on the fourth year, all that grew upon it was the Lord's, and conſequently the perquiſite of the prieſts, from whom, however, the owner might redeem it, if he thought fit, by an equivalent [o]: but from that time the owner was at liberty to make the ſame uſe of them as he did of his old ones [p].

7. TITHES. Theſe, and the firſt-fruits, and the redemption of the firſt-born, were the moſt conſtant and conſiderable income of the prieſts and Levites; tho' the firſt is by far the moſt antient, as we have ſeen in ſeveral places of this hiſtory *. However, we confine ourſelves to thoſe preſcribed by the laws of Moſes, in which he has been ſo ſtrict, that he ordained, that of all thoſe which conſiſted of clean animals, none ſhould be redeemed at any rate, but that they ſhould all be ſacrificed to the Lord; and that thoſe which conſiſted of the fruits of the earth, ſuch as grain, fruits, and the like, ſhould not be bought off, without paying one fifth part more than their intrinſic value [q]. We need not here obſerve, that they were given to them as an equivalent for their not having any ſhare in the diviſion of the land, nor any portion or inheritance with the reſt of the people (H).

THESE

[n] Vide Num. xviii. 15. & ſeq. Exod. xiii. 13. Deut. xv. 20. & ſeq. [o] Vide præc. affirm. 137. [p] Levit. xix. 23. * See Vol. II. p. 170. note (S), & p. 395. [q] Levit. xxvii. 30, & ſeq.

(G) N. de Lyra, a learned convert from Judaiſm, tells us, that dogs, and ſuch like creatures of no intrinſic value, were never to be redeemed, but put to death, by reaſon of a precept in Deuteronomy, againſt bringing the hire of a whore, or the price of a dog into the houſe of the Lord (6); wherein he is followed by the learned Bochart and others, as the moſt received opinion of the rabbies (7). But we queſtion very much whether the generality of the Jews were ſo exact as to obſerve which came out firſt of a whole litter, it is more likely, that they deſtroyed them all for ſecurity's ſake.

(H) And perhaps too, with a very judicious view of making them more careful to keep up the religious obſervance of God's

(6) Deut. xxiii. 18. (7) Vide Miſhn. Maim. & al. & Munſt. in loc.

laws

THESE tithes were of four ſorts; namely, 1. Thoſe which were thus aſſigned to the tribe of Levi [r] (I), and theſe not being of the higher rank of holy things, all the Levites, men and women, clean or unclean, might eat of them. 2. The tenths of theſe tithes which were aſſigned to the prieſts, for theſe laſt did not gather the tithes themſelves, but that office belonged to the Levites, who were not to touch any part of them, till they had paid that proportion to the prieſts [s], and had ſent it to Jeruſalem. 3. After a layman had payed his firſt tithes, to the Levites, he was obliged to ſet aſide a ſecond tenth, or exchange it for an equivalent in money, with an addition of a fifth part above the value; and this he was obliged to bring to Jeruſalem, and there make a feaſt, and invite, beſides his friends and relations, the prieſts and Levites to it [t] (K). 4. The laſt kind of tithes which Moſes commands, was to be ſet by every third year, and conſumed laws among the people, too prone naturally to backſlide; ſince their income was ſure to riſe and fall according as the ſpirit of religion and obedience proved more or leſs vigorous.

[r] Num. xviii. 20, & ſeq. Deut. xiv. 22, & alib. vide & 2. Chron. xxxi. 4, & ſeq. [s] Num. xviii. 25, & ſeq. [t] Deut xii. 17, 18. xiv. 22. 23.

(I) Some authors have been of opinion, that every man was obliged to bring or ſend by proxy theſe firſt tithes to Jeruſalem (8); but beſides that there doth not appear the leaſt ſhadow of a precept for it, it ſeems rather from the ſecond tithes, which the Levites were to ſend to Jeruſalem (9), to the prieſts, that the firſt was to be payed upon the ſpot, or at fartheſt in the cities of the Levites. And indeed it would have been a terrible trouble and expence, eſpecially for thoſe that dwelt at a conſiderable diſtance from Jeruſalem, to have even ſent them thither. If it be objected, that it was equally ſo to the Levites, the anſwer is obvious, that it was much eaſier for them to ſend a tenth part, than to carry the whole thither, and be forced to bring nine parts back to their reſpective homes.

(K) That this tenth is different from the firſt that was payed to the Levites, whatever ſome commentators have thought to the contrary, is plain. 1. Becauſe the firſt was the hereditary right of the tribe of Levi, which would have ſtarved without it, and this was conſumed by the owners and their friends. 2. The Levites were obliged to refund a tenth part of the firſt, to the prieſts but in this they were only invited as gueſts. 3. The firſt was payed all the land over, but this only at Jeruſalem.

(8) Joſeph. Ant. lib. iv c. 8. Vide Sixt. Amam. de Decim. & auct. ab eo citat. (9) Comp. Deut. xiv. 22, 23, with Nehem. x. 34, & ſeq.

in

in feasts at home, to which they were obliged to invite the Levites, the poor, fatherless, widows, and strangers [u] (L).

WE read indeed of another kind of tithes, such as Samuel threatened the Israelites, that their king, if they persisted in the choice of one, would levy upon them out of their fields, vineyards, and flocks [w]. But as there is nothing of such a right mentioned by Moses, in the rules which he settled for the conduct of their future kings [x], it is likely, the prophet only forewarns them ofwhat they would be apt to, rather than of what they might lawfully, do.

WHAT the first sort of tithes consisted in, which were thus appropriated to the maintenance of the priests and Levites, whether in all great and small cattle, and other kinds of animals, as well as all sorts of grain and fruits, or only in the latter, is not easy to determine. The Jews, if we will believe some of the learnedest among them [y], affirm, that they had no share nor title in the former, and that the flesh of all those creatures that were decimated belonged to the owners; and Obadias de Bartenora adds, that there is not one passage in the whole law that proves, that the priests had a right to any part of it [z]. It is hardly worth the while to dive farther into this matter, because we cannot attain to any certainty about it. As for the manner in which the cattle was usually decimated, we shall give it in Maimon's own words [a]. "A "man, says he, who out of ten lambs, for instance, should "have set aside one, or ten out of an hundred, would not "be reckoned to have paid the tithes of them: the right "way therefore of doing it was as follows. They did shut "up all the lambs, kids, or calves, in a stable, which had "one door so straight that two of them could not get out a-"breast: they then brought their dams to the door, that "their young ones, hearing their voice, might strive to get [u] Deut. xiv. ver. 28, 29. [w] 1 Sam. viii. 15, & seq. [x] Deut. xvii. 14, & seq. [y] Vide. MAIMON, in Bechoroth, c. 6. [z] BARTHENOR. in Zebachim, c. 5, & al. [a] MAIM. ubi sup.

(L) It is, however, more likely that this last tenth differed in nothing from the third, but only in that this was spent at home every third year, and the other at Jerusalem on the other two years; so that there might be properly but three sorts of tithes, that of the Levites, of the priests, and these last, which were rather a kind of eucharistical agapæ, which the Jews therefore called מעשר עני, and the Greeks πλουσιοδεκάτη, the tenth of the poor, and Tobit the third tenth (10).

(10) Tob. i. 8.

" out; purſuant to what is ſaid in Leviticus xxvii. 32. " Whatſoever paſſeth under the rod. Accordingly it was re- " quired, that theſe young ones ſhould come out, of themſelves, " and not be driven out; and as faſt as they came out, one af- " ter another, they that ſtood by told them one, two, three, " and ſo on to ten. This tenth was immediately marked " with red lead, and whether it were male or female, whe- " ther with or without blemiſh; the owner ſaid, this ſhall " be conſecrated to pay the tithes. If it was fit, it was then " to be ſacrificed to God; if not, it might be killed and " eaten where the owner pleaſed; for it could be neither " redeemed nor exchanged [b] (M).

To

[b] Vide BASNAG. Rep. Heb. tom. iii. lib. 33. c. 4.

(M) the reader will not perhaps think it amiſs, if we add ſome few remarks concerning their manner of ſacrificing their living creatures, not ſo much with regard to their ſlaying them, concerning which all that needs be ſaid is, that they were extremely careful to let out all their blood, and to avoid every thing that might ſtagnate it in any part; but with reſpect to ſome ceremonies that were uſed by way of diſtinction, between the ſacrifices of a more, and thoſe of a leſs, ſacred nature. Of the firſt ſorts were all the burnt-offerings and ſacrifices for ſin, and thoſe were always killed on the north ſide of the altar; whereas thoſe of the lower ſort, ſuch as peace, free-will, and all euchariſtical offerings, were killed in any part within the court of the ſanctuary. As for birds, the prieſt pinched their neck with his thumb-nail, and that which was for a burnt-offering had its neck quite pulled off, but that for ſin only broken (11). We have already ſpoken of thoſe victims of the firſt rank, whoſe blood was carried and ſprinkled within the tabernacle; that of the others they only poured at the foot of the altar, except touching the horns with ſome of it, on ſome occaſions (12). The Jews add, that there was a grate through which the blood did fall into a kind of ſewer, which carried it into the brook Cedron (13). However, as for theſe aſperſions they were always to be repeated ſeven times; and from them, as well as the ſeven days of the week, the week of years, and ſeven weeks of years, as likewiſe from the ſeven-fold circumvection of the ark round the walls of Jericho, Naaman's being commanded to plunge ſeven times in Jordan, and many more of the like nature, the Jews, eſpecially the Cabbaliſts, tell us great wonders of the number ſeven, too great indeed for us to enter upon.

The next thing was the ſlaying and dividing of the victims, according to the deſign for which they were offered, wherein we ſhall (11) Levit. i. 15. v. 8. & alib. (12) Levit. xvi. 14, 15 & iv. 7. 34, & ſeq. & alib. (13) Vide Miſhn. Tract. Middoth.

only

To these kinds of offerings we might add some others, such as that of incense, which the priests only were to burn every day only take notice of one circumstance with respect to the burning the fat of them; namely, that if it was a sheep or a lamb, they always burned also the rump (14), because they were commonly very fat; especially in that kind of Syrian sheep whose rump was between two and three cubits long, and weighed as far as 30 or 40 pounds (15). So that not being able to drag them after, without wounding them against the ground, the shepherds laid them upon a kind of sledge, which the creature drew after it. Hence one may understand the meaning of that prohibition in the Mishnah (16), the sheep shall not be sent to pasture on the sabbath, that hath its sledge tyed to it. As to the burnt-offerings of four-footed beasts, the priests were obliged to wash their legs and intestines in water before they burnt them (17). This was done in a place by itself, that the court might not be defiled with their dung. Philo thinks there is a mystery in it, and that it implies, that we ought to wash away all our sinful filth before we present ourselves to God (18). Grotius says almost the same thing concerning the fat of the kidneys, &c. which were not to be eaten, but burned, those parts being the seat of lust (19) But however that be, it is certain, that they were not allowed to eat any fat except that which stuck to the flesh. After these sacrifices were duly dissected and salted, a number of priests brought them upon the altar with the usual quantity of wine and cakes. They were more or fewer, according to the days and the sacrifices, and each carried one piece thither. Thus every common day, at the morning and evening sacrifice, when there were but nine in waiting, the first carried the head and right foot; the 2d the two fore-feet, or hands, as the rabbies call them; the 3d the back-bone, liver, and kidneys; the 4th the breast and neck; the 5th the ribs; the 6th the inwards and legs in a dish; the 7th a cake to be joined to the lamb; the 8th the cake that belonged to the high-priest; and the last brought up the wine for the drink-offering; each having his province decided by lot. All these pieces of the victim were to be set upon the altar, close by one another in the same order as they were in before their being dissected, according to what is enjoined by Moses; and the priests, Aaron's sons shall lay the parts, the head, and the fat, in order, &c. (20); after which the fire was kindled and kept under them till they were consumed. This formality, however, was observed only for those burnt-offerings which were made for the whole people, but not for those which private men offered for themselves. There are many more particularities relating to these and other offerings, the bare mention of which would be too tedious; the (14) Levit iii. 9. & alib. (15) Vide Herodot. lib. iii. Plin. Nat. Hist lib. viii. c. 48, & al. (16) Vide Tract. Sabbath. c. 4. (17) Levit. i. 9. (18) De Anim. Sacr. (19) Com. in Levit. iii. 5. (20) Levit. i. 8.

reader

day upon the altar of perfume (N), before the morning and evening ſacrifice, and the high-prieſt once a year in the holy of holies, both which we have already ſaid ſomething of, and thoſe which were offered on ſolemn feſtivals, new moons, ſabbaths, and the like, beſides ſome others of leſs note; but we have already dwelt too long upon this article, and ſhall only add, that as Jeruſalem became afterwards to the Jews, what the camp was during their abode in the wilderneſs; thoſe victims, which were ordered to be burnt out of the reader may ſee them at full length in the Miſhnah and the two rabbies mentioned above, and more particularly in Cunæus. All that we ſhall add is, that whatever was to be burnt of them upon the altar was to be done, not with common, but with ſacred fire, which was preſerved for that purpoſe (21).

(N) Some authors, who have inadvertently followed St. Auſtin's miſtaken notion, that this altar ſtood in the moſt holy place, have affirmed accordingly, that none but the high-prieſt was to offer it up, and have even maintained, that Zacharias, the Baptiſt's father, was inveſted with that dignity. Theſe have been ſufficiently confuted by Cunæus, among many more. However, there is one expreſſion in Moſes (22), which ſeems to favour that notion, where he ſays, that Aaron ſhall burn therein ſweet incenſe every morning, &c. But the Jews have made it plain, that the high-prieſt never offered it but on expiation-day, and on the firſt day of his inſtallation, on all other days, it was left to the prieſt in waiting, as the lot fell out (23); exclusive of the Levites and all other perſons, under pain of death. This mixture, which our verſion doth ſimply call incenſe, was rather a perfume, the compoſition of which is preſcribed by Moſes, and forbid under pain of death to be uſed by any but prieſts, or any where but in the ſanctuary (24), tho' any other compoſition might be, and was lawfully uſed, as appears by ſeveral places of ſcripture. Thus we read that Hezekiah ſhewed ſeveral ſorts of them among other rarities of his treaſure-houſe, to the king of Babylon's ambaſſadors (25): and king Aſa had ſome ſuch like ſort uſed at his funeral (26).

